<object width="425px" height="360px" ><param name="allowFullScreen" value="true"/><param name="wmode" value="transparent"/><param name="movie" value="http://mediaservices.myspace.com/services/media/embed.aspx/m=20577105,t=1,mt=video,searchID=,primarycolor=,secondarycolor="/><embed src="http://mediaservices.myspace.com/services/media/embed.aspx/m=20577105,t=1,mt=video,searchID=,primarycolor=,secondarycolor=" width="425" height="360" allowFullScreen="true" type="application/x-shockwave-flash" wmode="transparent"/></object>[/dohtml]

http://vids.myspace.com/index.cfm?fuseacti...ideoid=20577105

craig-oxley - December 28, 2008 08:24 AM (GMT)

Greek violence spreads across Europe
http://z10.invisionfree.com/The_Unhived_Mi...?showtopic=5477

craig-oxley - March 1, 2009 03:40 PM (GMT)

You can bet 'The Unhived Mind' has been eyed by MI5 so expect it taken down when the trouble starts. -Craig

MI5 ALERT ON BANK RIOTS

[B]Roit police come under heavy attack from Poll Tax rioters

Sunday March 1,2009
By Geraint Jones Have your say(14)
http://www.express.co.uk/posts/view/86981/...t-on-bank-riots

TOP secret contingency plans have been drawn up to counter the threat posed by a "summer of discontent" in Britain.

The "double-whammy" of the worst economic crisis in living memory and a motley crew of political extremists determined to stir up civil disorder has led to the -extraordinary step of the Army being put on -standby.

MI5 and Special Branch are targeting activists they fear could inflame anger over job losses and payouts to failed bankers.

One of the most notorious anarchist websites, Class War, asks: “How to keep warm -during the credit crunch? Burn a banker.”

Such remarks have rung alarm bells in Scotland Yard and the Ministry of Defence.

Intelligence sources said the police, backed by MI5, are determined to stay on top of a situation that could spiral out of control as the recession bites deep.

The chilling prospect of soldiers being drafted on to the streets has not been discounted, although it is regarded as a last resort.

What worries emergency planners most is that the middle classes, now struggling to cope with unemployment and repossessions, may take to the streets with the disenfranchised.

The source said “this potent cocktail is reminiscent of the poll tax riots which fatally wounded Margaret Thatcher’s government in 1990”.

Last night Scotland Yard vowed it was ready to face any threat. A source said: “We do have a policing plan in place and we have riot police officers trained for such measures.”

But other senior police leaders fear the force will be unable to cope.

Were that to be the case, the -Government has a contingency plan to deploy troops on the streets of Britain’s major cities.

A senior source said: “This is a very real, and very serious, problem.

“I can tell you there have been crisis talks in Whitehall about this.

“Half the senior officers in Britain have been warning the Home Secretary about the dangerous effects that reducing police manpower may have this summer, especially in the industrial heartlands.

“We are not just talking about the problems of immigration and British jobs for British worker. We are also talking about mass unemployment.

“In many of our industrial cities, this will not be measured in the hundreds, but in the thousands. With unemployment, comes the risk of increased crime. Some forces, such as South Wales, have publically -stated they would be swamped.

“Others are keeping it quiet, but you can be sure they are trying to make the Home Secretary listen, -before it’s too late.”

The “protest season” is due to -begin on April 1 with the G20 Summit in London next month, followed by the 60th anniversary of Nato in Strasbourg a few days later. May Day is also - potentially a flashpoint.

Ministers cannot afford to allow -latent public anger at Government policy to get out of hand if they are to maintain credibility through what promises to be -Gordon Brown's most testing period as Prime Minister.

The Stop the War coalition, orchestrating the G20 protest, said: "The first week of April could be a week of world leaders will never forget."

The British authorities want to avoid a repeat of the rioting that scarred British cities in the 1980s Then, as now, the country was in recession with rising unemployment and deep public hostility to perceived social divisions.

Today that anger is focused on the banks, with their bonus culture surviving despite billions being paid in taxpayer bail-outs.

This has fomented in the outrage over news that senior executives will be rewarded for their failure.

Sir Fred Goodwin, former boss of RBS, has refused to hand back his £693,000-a-year-pension even as the ailing bank announced a £24billion loss last year, the single largest loss in British corporate history.

Early warnings of trouble ahead came from the furore over last months "British jobs for British workers" protest and wildcat strikes across the country.

This week Britain's most senior police officer warned that the summer could bring a wave of protests orchestrated by extremists in which ordinary people, fired by their own anger and fear at the economic downturn – became "foot soldiers".

Superintendent David Hartshorn, who heads the Met's public order branch, identified the G20 as the possible start of a "summer of rage".

Murray Benham, head of campaigns at the UK-based World Development Movement, accused Supt Hartshorn of "scaremongering".

"Scaremongering from the police will not stop us because the price for failing is too high.

"People are understandably angry about the impact of the economic crisis on their jobs, savings and plans for the future."

Additional reporting by James Fielding

craig-oxley - March 9, 2009 05:15 PM (GMT)

‘Run on UK’ Sees Foreign Investors Pull $1 Trillion Out of the City

Banking crisis undermines Britain's reputation as a safe place to hold funds

Published on 03-08-2009
http://www.independent.co.uk/news/business...ty-1639413.html

A silent $1 trillion "Run on Britain" by foreign investors was revealed yesterday in the latest statistical releases from the Bank of England. The external liabilities of banks operating in the UK – that is monies held in the UK on behalf of foreign investors – fell by $1 trillion (£700bn) between the spring and the end of 2008, representing a huge loss of funds and of confidence in the City of London.

Some $597.5bn was lost to the banks in the last quarter of last year alone, after a modest positive inflow in the summer, but a massive $682.5bn haemorrhaged in the second quarter of 2008 – a record. About 15 per cent of the monies held by foreigners in the UK were withdrawn over the period, leaving about $6 trillion. This is by far the largest withdrawal of foreign funds from the UK in recent decades – about 10 times what might flow out during a "normal" quarter.

The revelation will fuel fears that the UK's reputation as a safe place to hold funds is being fatally compromised by the acute crisis in the banking system and a general trend to financial protectionism internationally.

This week, Lloyds became the latest bank to approach the Government for more assistance. A deal was agreed last night for the Government to insure about £260bn of assets in return for a stake of up to 75 per cent in the bank. The slide in sterling – it has shed a quarter of its value since mid-2007 – has been both cause and effect of the run on London, seemingly becoming a self-fulfilling phenomenon. The danger is that the heavy depreciation of the pound could become a rout if confidence completely evaporates.

Colin Ellis, an economist at Daiwa Securities, commented: "The outflow of overseas banks' UK holdings is not surprising – indeed foreign investors in general will still be smarting from the sharp fall in the exchange rate last year, as many UK liabilities are priced in sterling terms. That raises the question of what could possibly tempt overseas investors to return to the UK. Further heavy outflows of funds are probably a given."

The Bank of England said that there had been a large fall in deposits from the United States, Switzerland, offshore centres such as Jersey and the Cayman Islands, and from Russia.

Paranoia that the UK could follow Iceland into effective national insolvency and jibes about "Reykjavik on Thames" will find an unwelcome substantiation in these statistics – which also show that stricken British banks are having to repatriate similar sums back to Britain. This is scant consolation for the authorities, however, as it means the UK and sterling are, like some emerging markets and currencies, suffering from a flight of capital. By contrast some financial centres and currencies – notably the US dollar and the Swiss franc – are enjoying a boost as "safe havens" in a troubled world.

The sudden international trend towards financial deglobalisation and the flight of money to "home" bases has nonetheless been dramatic. The Prime Minister has already warned about this drift to "financial protectionism" – even though UK banks brought back almost $600bn in the last months of 2008, as they attempted to repair fragile balance sheets. Mr Ellis added: "These data are consistent with UK banks reducing their overseas holdings, at the same time as overseas banks scale back their presence in the UK. That is not surprising, given that governments around the world are having to prop up their banking sectors, and in turn demanding that national institutions focus on domestic markets. But it does run the risk of being financial protectionism by the back door."

Investment from the West into developing countries has fallen from the level of about $1 trillion a year seen earlier this decade to about $150bn last year. Economies in eastern Europe such as Hungary and the Baltic republics, some in Asia such as Pakistan and developed nations such as Iceland have been severely hit by the collapse in foreign investment.

Like Iceland, the UK has an unusually large banking sector in relation to her national income, with liabilities four times GDP. Should the UK taxpayer have to assume these debts it will represent, in relation to GDP, about double the national debt the nation bore at the end of the Second World War, a near unsustainable burden.

craig-oxley - April 10, 2009 03:05 AM (GMT)

'Will you open fire on UK citizens' Army personnel being asked by IanPJ on Mon 02 Mar 2009 13:52 GMT

http://thejournal.parker-joseph.co.uk/blog.../2/4109792.html

In a stunning conversation with a friend, who is a serving member of the Armed Forces, over the weekend, it was revealed that transfers to regiments and other units in the UK on home duties are being undertaken by the MOD based upon whether an individual was prepared to 'open fire' on UK citizens during civil disturbances.

I found this long and extracted conversation to be both bizarre and frightening. I will state at this point that he is someone that I have known for years, and trust implicitly. The fact that service personnel are actually being asked in special briefing sessions whether they would fire on their own nationals indicates that the rumours about the Army being put on standby are indeed very true.

As if to add weight to this, it was reported yesterday as a tag on a posting about UKIP by Richard North on EUReferendum that plans for Army involvement were well advanced:

Recently, from a confidential source, I received information that the MoD was buying up unusually large quantities of tear gas and other riot equipment. Clearly, it has no intention of being caught out, as it was at the beginning of the Troubles, having to ration tear gas and riot shields. Maybe they might even find a use for all those Snatch Land Rovers, when they are returned from Iraq.

The implications of putting the Army on the streets, though, are horrendous. Currently, the Army is riding on the crest of a wave of public approval but, as it did in Northern Ireland, sentiment can very quickly turn. The ramifications for the campaign in Afghanistan might be significant. An Army which is sent out against its own people is not likely to attract much support for its other activities.

But there is not much prospect of the Army disobeying orders. As we saw in the 2001 Foot and Mouth epidemic, it went to work with a will, engaging in illegal activities, intimidating ordinary people and conspiring with the civil authorities to enforce false arrest. It will do so again if ordered, with the back-up this time of the Civil Contingencies Act which makes legal much of what was illegal back in 2001.

It goes a long way to explain why our servicemen and women are not getting the equipment they need in the war zones, lack of transport, lack of helicopters, lack of personal protection equipment. We know for instance that there are several hundred Italian made soft personnel vehicles in storage in the UK for use here, bought by the MoD to replace the snatch Land Rovers, but never sent to Iraq or Afghanistan, and the fleet of 8 Chinooks that was due to be dispatched this month are now to be kept in the UK.

We believe that this Government is looking for that confrontation with the people in order to invoke the Civil Contingencies Act and make use of the plethora of authoritarian laws it has prepared over the 12 years in control.

It continues to introduce new rules, rulings and guidelines on a daily basis designed specifically to inflame the anger in the population, hoping that they will eventually snap and take to the streets.

Armed with this latest knowledge, I would advise extreme caution and suggest that we heed the words of warning from Leg-Iron.

If we don't riot, Labour are likely to be obliterated in a general election.
If we do riot, there won't be one.

This Government is looking for a fight. Don't give it to them.

This trend needs to be discussed at the highest levels, the very idea that the Government is plotting against its own people is repugnant in the extreme, and I would like to call for confirmation that this disgusting process of briefings is indeed being undertaken.

UPDATE:
The Daily Express is reporting.

TOP secret contingency plans have been drawn up to counter the threat posed by a "summer of discontent" in Britain.

The "double-whammy" of the worst economic crisis in living memory and a motley crew of political extremists determined to stir up civil disorder has led to the -extraordinary step of the Army being put on -standby.

The Questions that really needs to be asked here is this.

Is the Army legally entitled to support a Government no longer wanted by the people?. Would the Army comply with such orders on the British Mainland?

I want to know exactly what this Government has planned for Military deployments in the UK, and whether they would be deployed against their own citizens.

It is known that many of the senior personnel in the MoD have received Common Purpose training. The content and purpose of that secret training now needs explaining.

craig-oxley - April 25, 2009 02:20 AM (GMT)

So this is whats expected here in England soon:

QUOTE

Rent-A-Cops: Cash-Strapped Cities Using Private Armed Guards Instead of Police

Published on 04-21-2009 Email To Friend Print Version
http://online.wsj.com/article/SB124027127337237011.html

OAKLAND, Calif. -- Facing pressure to crack down on crime amid a record budget deficit, Oakland is joining other U.S. cities that are turning over more law-enforcement duties to private armed guards.

The City Council recently voted to hire International Services Inc., a private security agency, to patrol crime-plagued districts. While a few Oakland retail districts previously have pooled cash to pay for unarmed security services, using public funds to pay for private armed guards would mark a first for the city.
Oakland police officers block a downtown street in January amid protests over the bond set for a former transit officer charged with killing an unarmed man on a subway platform on New Year's Day.

Hiring private guards is less expensive than hiring new officers. Oakland -- facing a record $80 million budget shortfall -- spends about 65% of its budget for police and fire services, including about $250,000 annually, including benefits and salary, on each police officer.

In contrast, for about $200,000 a year the city can contract to hire four private guards to patrol the troubled East Oakland district where four on-duty police officers were killed in March. And the company, not the city, is responsible for insurance for the guards.

Oakland is not alone in seeking to improve public safety while reining in spending. This month, the Chicago City Council, facing a possible $200 million budget deficit, proposed expanding the responsibilities of private armed security forces by authorizing them to write traffic citations. In New Orleans, neighborhood committees have sought to expand special tax incentives to pay for private security for neighborhood patrols.

In Oakland -- a city east of San Francisco with about 400,000 people -- hiring security guards is the latest nontraditional measure in its attempt to reduce crime. Last year, Mayor Ron Dellums announced a partnership with the Guardian Angels, a volunteer crime patrol organization, in the midst of a rash of restaurant-takeover robberies. The partnership disbanded after authorities apprehended suspects in the robberies.

Though violent crime in the city was down in the first three months of 2009 from a year ago, the city remains one of California's most violent, with 124 homicides last year and about 25 so far this year. Police also must deal with long-running tensions with residents: The killing of an unarmed man by transit police in January sparked weeks of protests, and two months later the four officers were killed in East Oakland by a parolee.

Oakland police say they consider unarmed guards acceptable, but don't support armed guards. "People want to go with armed guards because they believe it's cheaper, but they lack adequate training [and] background checks," said spokesman Jeff Thomason. "Oakland police are better prepared for this city's streets than a few security guards."

But some local leaders say that with a record budget deficit they have few options to reduce the city's violence. "We need a cost-effective answer to the crime we are facing," said Ignacio De La Fuente, a City Council member representing East Oakland who has led the push for armed guards. He added that he is confident the security company's armed guards -- who will have state-certified public-safety training -- are up to par.

Mr. Dellums's spokesman, Paul Rose, says the mayor is concerned that private guards would lack proper training, putting the city at greater risk of lawsuits stemming from a shooting or other mishap. Mr. Dellums and Oakland's police union support an alternative plan, to be introduced Tuesday, that calls for the $200,000 dedicated for the private guards to be used for overtime for four police officers who would patrol the East Oakland area on foot.

International Services, based in Torrance, Calif., declined to comment for this story. The company's chief executive, Sam Karawia, is a reserve deputy sheriff for the Los Angeles County Sheriff's Department as well as the deputy director for the department's homeland-security-support unit.

When other U.S. cities have hired uniformed guards to patrol downtown districts, they most often have acted more as cleanup crews and neighborhood ambassadors than security officials. In the 1990s, retailers in crime-plagued locales began to organize business improvement districts, which collected fees for area enhancements, including hiring armed guards who functioned as backups to local police.

A February study of the 30 improvement districts in the downtown Los Angeles region said districts with the guards register significantly less crime than areas without them. Conducted by the Rand Corp., a policy research organization based in Santa Monica, Calif., the study found that from 1994 to 2005, violent crime dropped on average 8% more compared with the rest of the city during that period.

Some areas of New Orleans have used armed private patrols since 1997, when residents in an east New Orleans community petitioned Louisiana's Legislature to create a tax on property owners to pay for a private force. About 20 residential tax districts have been established, employing an estimated 100 private guards. This month, seven more neighborhoods voted to create districts.

"The guards are viewed as force multipliers, extra eyes and ears with high visibility, acting in concert with actual police officers," said John Macdonald, the lead researcher on the Rand study and a criminology professor at the University of Pennsylvania.

Mr. Macdonald nevertheless opposes turning to a private security service to take the place of police officers. "If an unfortunate event were to happen," he says, "it could cost the public more in the long term than what the city believes it could save."

Write to Bobby White at bobby.white@wsj.com

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: Libya braces for 'Day of Anger' as protests

Title: Libya braces for 'Day of Anger' as protests
Description: continue throughout Middle East

TheUnhivedMind - February 17, 2011 12:30 AM (GMT)

Libya braces for 'Day of Anger' as protests continue throughout Middle East

Libya is to be hit by a "Day of Anger" on Thursday as protests mount against the rule of Colonel Muammar Gaddafi, the latest leader to be engulfed by a wave of unrest spreading across the Middle East.

By Richard Spencer, Middle East Correspondent 7:22PM GMT 16 Feb 2011
http://www.telegraph.co.uk/news/worldnews/...iddle-East.html

Security forces in Libya's second city, Benghazi, were confirmed to have clashed with protesters who staged a sit-in to highlight the arrest of a lawyer. One hospital said 38 people were injured, none seriously.

The lawyer, Fethi Tarbel, represented some of the families of inmates killed in a notorious prison massacre in which more than 1,000 men died 15 years ago.

But the protest came shortly before a demonstration already announced on Facebook to commemorate the fifth anniversary of another incident, when 14 people were killed in a rally by Islamists, also in Benghazi.

According to one page, the day has been named "The February 17 Intifada: A Day of Strikes in Libya". According to another, it is a "Day of Anger" akin to ones which have already convulsed Egypt and Bahrain.

It is being publicised inside and outside the country, including by an internet rapper known as Ibn Thabit, whose YouTube video calls for an end to the "ignorant colonel".

In an apparent gesture of conciliation, Mr Tarbel was later released, along with 110 Islamist prisoners.

There is no sign of a let-up in the anti-government action facing governments across the region.

In Yemen, marches calling for an end to the regime of President Ali Abdullah Saleh, who has been in power for 32 years, spread from the capital Sana'a, where there have already been angry clashes, to the southern port city of Aden.

Police fired in the air to disperse 500 marchers, injuring two and killing two. Some protesters broke away and set fire to cars and a government building.

In Sana'a, pro-government activists wielding batons and daggers turned on other demonstrators, threatening to "beat them until they returned to reason".

Mr Saleh's regime is notionally democratic, but has had difficulty in retaining authority except through using the country's limited oil income to buy off support from tribal groups. Its western allies fear that its declining ability to exert control will lead to the state falling apart.

Meanwhile in Bahrain, protesters continued to occupy the central Pearl Square, calling for the dismissal of the government and the replacement of the king's uncle as prime minister by an elected politician. Many more took part in the funeral of a man killed by police outside a government hospital on Tuesday, shouting anti-government slogans.

The Bahraini foreign ministry issued a statement saying those responsible for the death, the second in two days, had been arrested. The country's foreign minister Sheikh Khaled bin Ahmed al-Khalifa, another member of the royal family, said that "the protests could happen in any free, democratic country".

In Iran, pro- and anti-government forces clashed at the funeral of one of two men killed in protests on Tuesday. The dead man, Sanee Zhaleh, was said by the government to be a member of the Basij militia killed by opposition demonstrators, but the opposition movement said he was a student protester killed by security forces and hailed him as a "victim of state brutality".

In Egypt, where life was slowly returning to normal after the overthrow of President Hosni Mubarak last Friday, the health ministry said a total of 365 people had died in three weeks of unrest. The figure was higher than that originally estimated by Human Rights Watch.

Mr Mubarak remained at his holiday home in Sharm-el-Sheikh, sick but refusing to leave to take up offers of exile in Oman, the United Arab Emirates, and Saudi Arabia. "He is not dead but is not doing well at all and refuses to leave," one Saudi official was quoted as saying. "Basically, he has given up and wants to die in Sharm."

TheUnhivedMind - February 17, 2011 12:56 AM (GMT)

Libya protests: Second city Benghazi hit by violence

Gaddafi supporters held rallies in Benghazi and other Libyan cities, state TV reported

16 February 2011 Last updated at 22:12
http://www.bbc.co.uk/news/world-africa-12477275

Hundreds of anti-government protesters have clashed with police and government supporters in Libya's second city, in the latest display of unrest in the Arab world.

Dozens of people are said to have been hurt in the clashes in Benghazi.

The overnight unrest followed the arrest of an outspoken government critic, who was reportedly freed later.

State TV showed demonstrations in several cities said to be in support of Libyan leader Muammar Gaddafi.

The unrest comes a day before planned anti-government demonstrations on Thursday, dubbed a "Day of Anger", which are being organised via internet social networks.

Pro-democracy protests have recently swept through several Arab nations, with the presidents of Tunisia and Egypt forced to resign amid growing unrest.

But Wednesday's demonstrations were the first display of defiance in Libya, where dissent is rarely tolerated.
Jail massacre

Witnesses say that at one stage up to 2,000 people were involved in the overnight protests in Benghazi, which saw a march on government offices in the city.
Continue reading the main story
“
Start Quote

Down with the enemies, down with them everywhere; down with the puppets everywhere, the puppets are falling, the autumn leaves are falling!”
Muammar Gaddafi
Libyan leader

The protesters are said to have thrown stones and petrol bombs, and set vehicles alight. Witnesses said police used rubber bullets and water cannon to disperse them.

The protests reportedly began after the arrest of Fathi Terbil, who represents relatives of more than 1,000 prisoners allegedly massacred by security forces in Tripoli's Abu Salim jail in 1996. He was later said to have been freed.

One witness, who did not want to be named, told the BBC: "A couple of people in the crowd started chanting anti-government slogans and the crowd took that on.

"But then there were clashes with pro-government supporters and then after a bit the pro-government supporters dispersed and then the security services arrived and they dispersed the crowds with hot-water cannons."

Footage purporting to show the unrest, with protesters fleeing gunfire and a man being shot, was later posted on the internet and used by the BBC and other news organisations. However, subsequent inquiries suggested this was footage originally uploaded more than a year ago.

Violence also flared in at least two other places, the Associated Press news agency reported.

In Zentan, south of Tripoli, hundreds of people are said to have marched through the streets before setting up tents in the city centre. A police station and security forces premises were reportedly set on fire.

And in Beyida, east of Benghazi, police stations were also set alight by protesters, AP reported.

In a speech broadcast on Wednesday evening, Colonel Gaddafi made no mention of the unrest but said the "revolutionaries" would prevail.

"Down with the enemies, down with them everywhere; down with the puppets everywhere, the puppets are falling, the autumn leaves are falling!" Mr Gaddafi said.

"The puppets of the USA, the puppets of Zionism are falling."

In a statement issued after the Benghazi clashes, a senior Libyan official warned that the authorities "will not allow a group of people to move around at night and play with the security of Libya".

It added: "The clashes last night were between small groups of people - up to 150. Some outsiders infiltrated that group. They were trying to corrupt the local legal process which has long been in place.

"We will not permit that at all, and we call on Libyans to voice their issues through existing channels, even if it is to call for the downfall of the government," said the official, who was not identified.

More than 100 members of a banned Islamist militant group were freed from Abu Salim on Wednesday. It is not clear if the Benghazi clashes and the release of the inmates were connected.

The European Union, meanwhile, has urged Libya to allow "free expression".

"We also call for calm and for all violence to be avoided," said a spokeswoman for EU foreign policy chief Baroness Ashton.
'Police state'

Colonel Gaddafi is the Arab world's longest-serving leader, having ruled oil-rich Libya since a coup in 1969.

He has always insisted that the country is run by a series of peoples' committees, though most outside observers believe it is a police state with him firmly in control, the BBC's Jon Leyne reports.

The Middle East has recently seen a wave of protests fuelled by discontent over unemployment, rising living costs, corruption and autocratic leaderships.

This began with the overthrow of Tunisia's leader, Zine al-Abidine Ben Ali, in January. Last week, President Hosni Mubarak of Egypt resigned.

In recent days there have also been anti-government demonstrations in Yemen, Bahrain, and Iran.

TheUnhivedMind - February 18, 2011 03:19 AM (GMT)

Libya protests: Death in al-Bayda as unrest spreads

Col Gaddafi has been in power for 42 years

http://www.bbc.co.uk/news/world-middle-east-12500476

At least one person has been killed in protests across Libya on Thursday in what anti-government activists described as a "Day of Rage".

Amnesty International says a man was shot dead when security forces opened fire in the city of al-Bayda.

Police and protesters also clashed in Zentan and Benghazi, where one witness told the BBC at least 16 people are believed to have been killed.

This week's protests are the first in Libya, where dissent is rarely allowed.

Pro-government activists were also out on the streets in the capital, Tripoli. They shouted slogans in support of Libya's leader, Muammar Gaddafi.

The demonstrators in Green Square shouted: "We are defending Gaddafi and the revolution!" and "The revolution continues!" Others hurled insults at foreign media.

Pro-democracy protests have recently swept through several Arab nations, with the presidents of Tunisia and Egypt forced to resign amid growing unrest.
Gunfire in Benghazi

Amnesty International says protester Nacer Miftah Gout'ani was shot dead when security forces opened fire on demonstrators in al-Bayda. Dozens more were injured.

However, it said unconfirmed reports suggested as many as 12 people had been killed in the last two days.

Activists used social networking websites such as Facebook and Twitter to call for a "Day of Rage" on Thursday.

One witness, a woman in Benghazi who joined the protests on Thursday, told the BBC she saw hundreds of people taking part in the demonstrations.

She saw police firing their guns and she said they were not just firing into the air, but firing at people as well.

She said the word was that at least 16 people were killed in Benghazi alone.

However, it is impossible to confirm that figure independently.

A regional head of security was removed from his post in al-Bayda after the violence on Wednesday, local media reported.

In Zentan, a number of government buildings were set on fire, including a police station. A semi-independent local newspaper said five people had been arrested, two of them of Tunisian origin.
Wave of protests

Col Gaddafi is the Arab world's longest-serving leader, having ruled oil-rich Libya since a coup in 1969.

He has always insisted that the country is run by a series of people's committees, though most outside observers believe it is a police state with him firmly in control, the BBC's Jon Leyne reports.

The Middle East has recently seen a wave of protests fuelled by discontent over unemployment, rising living costs, corruption and autocratic leaderships.

This began with the overthrow of Tunisia's leader, Zine al-Abidine Ben Ali, in January. Last week, President Hosni Mubarak of Egypt resigned.

In recent days there have also been anti-government demonstrations in Yemen, Bahrain, and Iran.

TheUnhivedMind - February 18, 2011 11:26 PM (GMT)

Libya protests: massacres reported as Gaddafi imposes news blackout

Opposition says 61 killed as diplomats report use of heavy weapons in Benghazi and rumours sweep the country

Ian Black and Owen Bowcott
guardian.co.uk, Friday 18 February 2011 20.41 GMT
http://www.guardian.co.uk/world/2011/feb/1...sacres-reported

Libyans have taken to the streets and buried their dead, accusing government forces of perpetrating massacres in Benghazi and other towns said to have been taken over by anti-regime protesters.

Opposition sources claimed that at least 61 protesters had been killed in three days of unprecedented unrest largely in Libya's impoverished eastern region, though it was not possible to confirm that figure.

Human Rights Watch reported that 24 people had been killed by Thursday.

Diplomats reported the use of heavy weapons in Benghazi, Libya's second city, and "a rapidly deteriorating situation" in the latest Arab country to be hit by serious unrest.

Amid a near-total official news blackout, fragmentary information and a ban on journalists entering Libya, there was a blizzard of rumours and claims about killings by mercenaries and defections by members of the security forces.

In one highly significant development, prisoners were reported to have escaped en masse from al-Jadida jail in the capital, Tripoli, which has so far been calm.

Supporters of a Libyan "day of rage" on Facebook reported that Derna and other eastern towns had been "liberated" from government forces.

Crowds in Tobruk were shown destroying a statue of Muammar Gaddafi's Green Book, and chanting: "We want the regime to fall," echoing the uprising in neighbouring Egypt. The city's airport was closed.

Troops were reported to have landed at Benghazi airport, suggesting a significant move into the city.

Security forces were also reported to be preparing to attack al-Bayda after protesters blocked the airport runway to prevent reinforcements arriving, according to one exile group.

A statement by the country's powerful revolutionary committees promised a "sharp and violent" response to those who dared to cross the regime's "red lines".

A sermon at Friday prayers in Tripoli, broadcast on state TV, urged people to ignore reports in foreign media "which doesn't want our country to be peaceful, which ... is the aim of Zionism and imperialism, to divide our country".

Gaddafi supporters were shown on TV staging noisy demonstrations, with the leader briefly appearing in the early hours of Friday at Green Square in the centre of the city, surrounded by crowds of cheering supporters.

Umm Muhammad, a political activist in Benghazi, told the Guardian that 38 people had died there. "They were using live fire here, not just teargas. This is a bloody massacre — in Benghazi, in al-Bayda, all over Libya. They are releasing prisoners from the jails to attack the demonstrators. The whole Libyan people wants to bring down this regime." Benghazi's al-Jala hospital was appealing for emergency blood supplies to help treat the injured.

Ramadan Briki, the Benghazi-based editor of Quryna newspaper, said 24 people had died. Ashour Shamis, a London-based Libyan journalist, said protesters had stormed the city's Kuwafiyah prison and freed dozens of political prisoners. Escapees set fire to the prosecutor's office, a bank and a police station.

Amateur footage showed buildings burning and protesters who had been shot dead. The pictures, given to al-Jazeera TV, recorded streets empty of police or army units. Much of the violence was blamed on "mercenaries" reportedly brought in from neighbouring Chad.

Amer Saad, a political activist from Derna, told al-Jazeera: "The protesters in al-Bayda have been able to seize control of the military airbase in the city and have executed 50 African mercenaries and two Libyan conspirators. Even in Derna today, a number of conspirators were executed. They were locked up in the holding cells of a police station because they resisted, and some died burning inside the building.

"This will be the end of every oppressor who stands with Gaddafi. Gaddafi is over, that's it, he has no presence here any more. The eastern regions of Libya are now free regions. If he wants to reclaim it, he will need to bomb us with nuclear or chemical bombs. This is his only option. The people have stood and said they will not go back."

Several demonstrations were reported in western Libya. The so-called Khamis brigades, special militia units commanded by one of Gaddafi's sons, broke up a demonstration in Alzentan.

Shamis predicted that the regime might hesitate before using massive force to restore order in Benghazi or elsewhere in the east. Gaddafi, in power for 41 years, is the Arab world's longest-serving leader and presides over one of its most repressive regimes.

Libya, current chairman of the Arab League, announced that it had asked for next month's summit to be postponed "because of the circumstances in the Arab region," the Jana news agency said.

TheUnhivedMind - February 19, 2011 06:13 PM (GMT)

Libyan forces storm protest camp

Military ordered off Bahrain square

19 Feb 2011
http://www.thisislondon.co.uk/standard/art...protest-camp.do

Libyan special forces have stormed a two-day-old protest encampment in the country's second largest city, clearing the area, witnesses said.

Access to the internet was also cut at around 2am local time on Saturday removing one of the few ways Libyans can get out information about the waves of anti-government protests in one of the most isolated and repressive nations in North Africa.

At 5am, special forces attacked hundreds of protesters, including lawyers and judges, camped out in front of the court building in the eastern city of Benghazi, which has been a focus for the anti-government unrest.

"They fired tear gas on protesters in tents and cleared the areas after many fled carrying the dead and the injured," one protester said over the phone from Benghazi.

"This is a ghost city, we are all afraid that something big is going to happen in Benghazi today."

Thousands of protesters are calling for the removal of Muammar Gaddafi, Libya's leader for the past 42 years, mainly in the cities of the country's impoverished east. Their demonstrations have been brutally suppressed with a combination of armed militias and elite forces.

The New York-based Human Rights Watch estimated 84 people have been killed across the east over the last three days, based on reports from hospitals and witnesses.

"The Libyan authorities should immediately end attacks on peaceful protesters and protect them from assault by pro-government armed groups," the organisation said in its statement.

Residents in Benghazi, which has borne the brunt of the casualties, said just hours before the attack on the encampment, the mood was ebullient as protesters torched police stations, government buildings and took over the local radio station.

They had set up tents on the street in front of the city's courthouse, overlooking the sea.

TheUnhivedMind - February 19, 2011 07:39 PM (GMT)

Libya Internet Shut Down Amid Protests, Later Restored (UPDATE)

18 Feb 2011
http://www.huffingtonpost.com/2011/02/18/l...-_n_825473.html

Reports emerged late Friday that Libya appears to have shut down its Internet due to widespread protests, less than a month after Egypt did the same.

The Los Angeles Times was among the first news outlets to report Libya's Internet outage, citing "multiple reports." TechCrunch also posted about Libya's Internet issues.

UPDATE: Internet authority Renesys reported Saturday afternoon that Libya's Internet has been restored after an approximately 7-hour outage.

EARLIER:

Libya first began shutting off social networking sites like Facebook and Twitter and the news website of Al Jazeera before taking down entire Internet providers. Renesys confirmed late Friday "Libya is off the Internet."

When Egypt's Internet went down the morning of Jan. 28, Renesys called it an unprecedented move at the time in the history of the Internet.

"We wondered whether anyone would repeat Egypt's strategy. Tonight, it appears that we have our answer," Internet authority Renesys wrote in a blog post on Libya's Internet outage

TheUnhivedMind - February 19, 2011 07:57 PM (GMT)

[dohtml]<object width="640" height="390"><param name="movie" value="http://www.youtube.com/v/G5xT-Ljepz0&rel=0&hl=en_GB&feature=player_embedded&version=3"></param><param name="allowFullScreen" value="true"></param><param name="allowScriptAccess" value="always"></param><embed src="http://www.youtube.com/v/G5xT-Ljepz0&rel=0&hl=en_GB&feature=player_embedded&version=3" type="application/x-shockwave-flash" allowfullscreen="true" allowScriptAccess="always" width="640" height="390"></embed></object>[/dohtml]

TheUnhivedMind - February 20, 2011 10:22 PM (GMT)

Middle East crisis: Libyan protests move closer to Tripoli

Demonstrators opposed to Colonel Muammar Gaddafi of Libya took large parts of the country's second city Benghazi and were reported to be fighting ever closer to the capital Tripoli last night.

By Richard Spencer, and Nabila Ramdani in Cairo 7:16PM GMT 20 Feb 2011
http://www.telegraph.co.uk/news/worldnews/...to-Tripoli.html

Thousands of Britons began an evacuation from the country as Benghazi was described as a "war zone" by senior figures in the regime.

Hundreds of people died over the weekend as forces loyal to Col Gaddafi, who has ruled Libya for 42 years, used high-velocity sniper rifles, machine guns and even anti-aircraft artillery to fire on protesters.

Estimates of the number of dead vary widely from 173 by Human Rights Watch, to more than 300.

"Benghazi is a war zone – the situation is very tense," said a highly placed source in Tripoli. "Troops including mercenaries are being sent there by plane. The fighting is intensifying.

"Lots of people are being killed, including members of the security forces. The figures are certainly above 200, with many thousands more injured across the country."

Benghazi is 600 miles east of Tripoli, and has always been more hostile to Col. Gaddafi than other parts of the country. Fighting has also broken out in the eastern cities of Al-Bayda, Ajdabiya, Darnah, and Tobruk, with eyewitnesses reporting Molotov cocktails, rifles and even antique Arabic sabres being used by demonstrators.

In Darnah, a group of Islamists seized an arms depot, and were holding civilians and soldiers there hostage last night.

Protesters in Ajdabiya claimed that it was a 'Free City' after the headquarters of Gaddafi's Revolutionary Committee were burned down on Friday, along with 14 other buildings.

But there were also reports of protesters clashing with the authorities in the town of Misrata, just 120 miles to the east of Tripoli.

The breakdown of the authorities' control in Benghazi, where the armed forces were reported to have retreated to their command centre and to be firing indiscriminately on protesters surrounding it, was clear from videos posted on the internet.

One showed the body of a man in blue police fatigues being carried away by demonstrators, who can be heard discussing whether he was one of the "African mercenaries" said to have been recruited by Col. Gaddafi.

A regional medical coordinator told The Daily Telegraph bodies were piling up in hospitals.

"Tanks and helicopter gunships full of foreign mercenaries are fighting gangs of demonstrators," he said. "At least one dead man had been hit by an anti-aircraft missile, while other bodies are riddled with heavy machine gunfire."

One Libyan journalist claimed that a group of women and children jumped to their deaths from a bridge in Benghazi to escape the "mercenaries".

"They're vicious. People are so terrified of them that they've been doing everything possible to get away," he said. "Women and children were seen jumping off the Giuliana Bridge in Benghazi to get away. Many of them were killed by the impact of hitting the water, while others were drowned."

Many of the 3,500 British people living in Libya are preparing to leave. The Foreign Office said 50 Britons living in the east of the country were being helped to find "a place of safety".

Col. Gaddafi has briefly appeared on state television in a pro-government rally, but has otherwise remained silent.

"Gaddafi's fear is that eastern cities will fall, and a full-scale revolt will reach Tripoli," said Omar, 24, a civil servant in Benghazi.

Amid reports that large numbers of soldiers have defected to the protesters, Col. Gaddafi's third son, Saadi, was said to be coordinating the forces ranged against the protesters.

TheUnhivedMind - February 20, 2011 10:47 PM (GMT)

2011 - 2 - 19
© AP

© AP

مضيف الشهيد
علي جاسم
احرار جدحفص
© AP

© Reuters

Qadaf Must NEXT
© AP

© AP

TheUnhivedMind - February 20, 2011 10:50 PM (GMT)

Libya 'uses mercenaries' to keep order on streets as 200 die in violent clashes

TheUnhivedMind - February 20, 2011 11:01 PM (GMT)

Libya unrest: Scores killed in Benghazi 'massacre'

20 February 2011 Last updated at 18:07
http://www.bbc.co.uk/news/world-africa-12517327

Details have emerged of huge casualty figures in the Libyan city of Benghazi, where troops have launched a brutal crackdown on protesters.

More than 200 people are known to have died, doctors say, with 900 injured.

The most bloody attacks were reported over the weekend, as funeral marches were said to have come under machine-gun and heavy weapons fire.

One doctor, speaking amid the sound of fresh gunfire on Sunday, told the BBC that "a real massacre" had happened.

Human Rights Watch says at least 173 people have been killed in Libya since demonstrations began on Wednesday.

Benghazi, the country's second city, has been a leading focus of protests against four decades of rule by Col Muammar Gaddafi.

During a phone conversation with Col Gaddafi's son, Saif Gaddafi, UK Foreign Secretary William Hague spoke of London's "grave concern" at the escalation of violence, a statement said.

Libya's actions were "unacceptable and would result in worldwide condemnation", Mr Hague said.

France was "extemely worried" by events in Libya, Minister for European Affairs Laurent Wauquiez said, criticising Tripoli for a "totally disproportionate" use of force.
'Tense and scary'

In a rare public admission of the unrest in Benghazi, Libyan state TV said on Sunday that an "armed people's base" in the city had come under attack and had its walls breached.

That news emerged as anti-Gaddafi activists on Twitter reported that a barracks in Benghazi had "fallen". There was no way to confirm that report.

Libya is one of several countries in the region to have seen pro-democracy campaigns since the fall of long-time Tunisian President Zine El Abidine Ben Ali in January. Egypt's Hosni Mubarak was forced from power on 11 February.

BBC Middle East correspondent Jon Leyne says the unrest in Libya is the most serious challenge yet to Col Gaddafi.

Reports are difficult to verify as the Libyan authorities have imposed severe media restrictions.

Foreign media are largely absent from the country and internet traffic from Libya has been throttled in recent days, web analysts report.

Libyan activists opposed to Col Gaddafi, as well as Libyans operating from outside the country, are using social networks Twitter and Facebook and video-sharing site YouTube to share information and images of the protests.

But much of their information is extremely difficult to verify. Activists say they are reluctant to provide specific details of new protest locations in case security forces decide to attack their rallies.

Reports are beginning to emerge of protests in the capital, Tripoli, but information is scarce and difficult to confirm.

One woman, Sara Radwan, told the BBC the situation in the city was "very tense and very scary".

"Tripoli is very important, it's got people from all over Libya. Everybody's watching and waiting. Gaddafi makes us sick. This is a war," she said.
'Stop the massacre'

The doctor in Benghazi, known as Braikah, described to the BBC how casualties had been brought to the city's Jala hospital - most of them with gunshot wounds.

"Ninety per cent of these gunshot wounds [were] mainly in the head, the neck, the chest, mainly in the heart," she said.

She said the Jala hospital mortuary had 208 bodies and another hospital had 12. However, it is not clear whether all of these bodies stem from Saturday's violence.

Another doctor told the Associated Press news agency of similar numbers of bodies, but said they had been taken to the morgue since the violence began earlier in the week.

As Brayka spoke to the BBC she said new gunfire was audible within Benghazi, alleging that security forces were firing on crowds of people attempting to bury some of those killed in recent days.

Her account could not be confirmed, but many of Saturday's deaths are thought to have happened in the same way.

The violence escalated on Saturday, when a funeral procession for victims of previous clashes made its way past a major security compound.

Witnesses said troops used machine-guns, mortars, large-calibre weapons, and even a missile, against the mourners.

Opposition supporters said the attack was unprovoked, although security sources suggested some protesters threw firebombs at the compound.

Some described scenes of chaos as army snipers shot from the roofs of buildings and demonstrators fought back against troops on the ground.

The doctor told the BBC that some Benghazi residents had been shot outside their homes by neighbourhood militias and bodies had been dumped on the street.

The Dubai-based Kalam institute has issued an appeal on behalf of a group of religious and clan leaders from across Libya, urging "every Muslim, within the regime" or anyone helping it [the regime]: "Do NOT kill your brothers and sisters, STOP the massacre NOW!"

Most of Benghazi is said to be controlled by anti-government protesters.

There have also been reports of anti-government protests in other eastern cities, including al-Bayda and Dernah, as well as Misrata further west, about 200km (125 miles) from the capital Tripoli.

Austria announced on Sunday that it was sending a military plane to Malta to prepare for the evacuation of Austrian and other EU nationals from Libya or other Arab countries.

TheUnhivedMind - February 21, 2011 12:40 AM (GMT)

Libya: Anti-Gaddafi protests spread to Tripoli

Colonel Gaddafi appeared on state TV on Sunday in bullish mood

20 February 2011 Last updated at 23:02
http://www.bbc.co.uk/news/world-africa-12520366

Anti-government rallies have broken out in the Libyan capital Tripoli for the first time during days of protests against the country's leader, Muammar Gaddafi.

The sound of gunfire can be heard across the city.

Witnesses say tear gas and live ammunition has been used by the security forces.

There are unconfirmed reports of clashes between pro- and anti-Gaddafi protesters in central Green Square.

Reports from the eastern city of Benghazi say more than 200 people have died there after the Libyan military used heavy weapons against protesters.

The brutal suppression of protests in Benghazi has been condemned by the US, UK and other Western nations.

Multiple flashpoints

In Tripoli, protests were reported in four districts of the city late on Sunday.

Gunfire rang out through central areas of Tripoli, accompanied by car horns blaring and people chanting slogans calling for the toppling of the regime.

Credible reports suggested that a police station had been burnt down and a building belonging to the country's ruling party had also been attacked and set ablaze.

In the Gourghi area of the city, witnesses said tear gas and live ammunition were used against anti-government protesters. Tear gas was said to have filled the entire neighbourhood, with those sitting outside their homes forced to to go inside.

The area around Tripoli's largest university was said to be dominated by anti-government protesters calling for the fall of the regime.

Correspondents say the spreading of unrest to Tripoli is a significant blow to Col Gaddafi's attempt to contain the protests in eastern Libya.

Protesters have been demanding an end to Col Gaddafi's four decades in power, after the success of similar rallies in Egypt and Tunisia.
Rare admission

By Sunday evening, reports suggested that anti-government forces in Benghazi had largely won control of the city after two days of brutal suppression by government forces.

Unconfirmed reports said a military garrison there had either fallen to the opposition, or switched sides.

Earlier, in a rare public admission of the unrest in Benghazi, Libyan state TV said on Sunday that an "armed people's base" in the city had come under attack and had its walls breached.

The US state department said it was "gravely concerned with disturbing reports and images coming out of Libya".

France said it was "extremely worried" by events in Libya, criticising Tripoli for a "totally disproportionate" use of force.

But Libya has also tried to use its leverage with the European Union, warning Brussels it could suspend co-operation against illegal migration if the EU encourages pro-democracy protests.

During a phone conversation with Colonel Gaddafi's son, Sayf al-Islam, UK Foreign Secretary William Hague spoke of London's "grave concern" at the escalation of violence.

Verifying information from Libya has been difficult amid a government clampdown on the internet and media communications. Libyan authorities have imposed severe media restrictions.

Foreign media are largely absent from the country and internet traffic from Libya has been throttled in recent days, web analysts report.

Libyan activists opposed to Col Gaddafi, as well as Libyans operating from outside the country, are using social networks Twitter and Facebook and video-sharing site YouTube to share information and images of the protests.

Libya is one of several countries in the region to have seen pro-democracy campaigns since the fall of long-time Tunisian President Zine al-Abidine Ben Ali in January. Egypt's Hosni Mubarak was forced from power on 11 February.

TheUnhivedMind - February 21, 2011 09:25 AM (GMT)

Qaddafi's Son Warns of 'Rivers of Blood,' Calls For Dialogue

Sunday, February 20, 2011
http://www.sfgate.com/cgi-bin/article.cgi?...PH7EQ0QKIOM.DTL

(Adds Qaddafi comments in third paragraph, analyst in 10th. See EXTRA <GO> for more on the Middle East unrest.)

Feb. 21 (Bloomberg) -- Muammar Qaddafi's son called on protesters in Libya to engage in dialogue or face a civil war that risks the country's oil wealth, as a widening revolt posed the most serious challenge to his father's 41 years of rule.

"Instead of weeping over 84 dead people, we will weep over hundreds of thousands of dead," Saif al-Islam Qaddafi said on state television. "Rivers of blood will flow."

He accused Islamists of attacking army positions and said some demonstrators had captured military equipment. Human Rights Watch puts the number of dead at over 200.

Libya, holder of the largest crude oil reserves on the African continent, has become the focal point of region-wide protests ignited by the ouster of Tunisia's president last month and energized by the fall of Egypt's President Hosni Mubarak on Feb. 11. Violence has flared in Yemen, Djibouti and Bahrain as governments have sought to crack down on calls for reform.

Qaddafi, who sported stubble and was dressed in a dark suit and tie, said the Libyan army "is not the army of Tunisia or Egypt," referring to the uprisings that toppled the leadership of those two countries. He said the army should "impose security and get things back to normal, whatever the price."

At the same time he offered to conduct a dialogue with the opposition, engage in national debate on the constitution and amend laws to "open up the realms of freedom." He conceded that the Libyan army had made errors in handling the anti- government protests and pledged to continue plans to increase wages and raise unemployment benefits.

'Oil Will Stop'

If civil war ensued, Qaddafi warned that "oil will stop. Foreign companies will leave Libya tomorrow." He said it would also invite a return of colonial powers: "Do you think Europe, NATO, the U.S. will accept an Islamic emirate in the middle of the Mediterranean," he said.

Oil prices climbed while Asian stocks snapped a three-day rally amid the escalating tensions in the Middle East. Crude for April delivery jumped 1.9 percent in New York to $91.38 a barrel as of 12:30 p.m. in Tokyo, gaining for a fourth day. The MSCI Asia Pacific Index slid 0.2 percent to 139.59. Standard & Poor's 500 Index futures retreated 0.1 percent. U.S. financial markets are shut for a holiday.

Thousands of people demonstrated yesterday in Benghazi, Libya's second largest city. They were met by gunfire from forces loyal to the 68-year-old Muammar Qaddafi, Human Rights Watch said, citing reports from witnesses. Libyan state television broadcast footage early Monday morning of dozens of demonstrators shouting pro-Qaddafi slogans in Tripoli.

'Little Credibility'

"The speed of the whole thing in Libya has surprised most of the specialists because Colonel Qaddafi established a very special repressive system of his own," Amin Saikal, a political science professor and director of the Centre for Arab and Islamic Studies at Australian National University, said in an interview on Bloomberg Television. "Probably the casualties will be extremely high and therefore Qaddafi will be left with very little credibility to really go on and govern the country for much longer."

The U.S. has received "multiple credible reports that hundreds of people have been killed and injured" and delivered its "strong objections" to the use of lethal force against protesters, State Department spokesman Philip J. Crowley said in a statement.

Condemnation

U.K. Foreign Minister William Hague told Saif Qaddafi in a call yesterday that the Libyan government's actions "were unacceptable and would result in world-wide condemnation," according to a Foreign Office statement.

Demonstrations also were reported yesterday in Iran and Morocco and analysts warned of the risk of unrest spreading to Saudi Arabia, the world's biggest oil exporter. Saudi Arabia neighbors Bahrain and has a Shiite Muslim minority population in the east, where most of its oil is produced.

Secretary of State Hillary Clinton discussed "regional developments" in a phone conversation with Saudi Foreign Minister Prince Saud al-Faisal, the State Department said in a statement yesterday. Clinton "underscored the necessity of restraint by the security forces in Bahrain," the statement said.

Persian Gulf shares slumped yesterday, sending Dubai's benchmark stock index down the most this month. Swap contracts for Saudi Arabia, used as a measure of confidence although the country has no debt to insure, jumped 11.5 basis points to 138 last week, the highest since July 2009.

Fracturing Qaddafi's Rule

At least 233 people have died in Libya with hundreds injured in the clashes between Qaddafi's forces and anti- government protesters since Feb. 16, New York-based Human Rights Watch said.

The U.S. issued a travel warning for Libya, citing "violent clashes" in six cities in the east of the country including Benghazi. Libya has barred international media and human rights groups, making the full extent of deaths and injuries unknown, Crowley said.

The demonstrations show signs of fracturing Qaddafi's rule. Libya's representative to the Arab League said he had resigned from his post and had "joined the popular revolution," Egypt's state-run Middle East News Agency reported yesterday.

The violence rippling across the region poses a challenge to American strategic interests in Bahrain and Djibouti, both U.S. allies, as well as in Yemen, whose government cooperates with the Obama administration on anti-terrorism efforts.

Yemen Opposition

"This will be bloody to the last moment but these leaders are finally aware of what is going on," Helmy Sharawy, director of the African Arab Research Center in Cairo, said by phone. "We see it in Yemen, we see emergency meetings in the Gulf. They can't ignore it anymore."

Yemen's main opposition group rejected an offer from President Ali Abdullah Saleh for dialogue with the government as long as protesters are being attacked by security forces and urged people to join in demonstrations. Five people have been killed in 10 days of protest.

In Bahrain, home to the U.S. Navy's Fifth Fleet, seven opposition groups were drawing up demands to put to the government as they discussed the government's call for dialogue, said Ebrahim Sharif, head of the National Democratic Action Society.

Thousands of protesters yesterday poured back into the central square that has become the focus of protest in the Bahraini capital, Manama, after tanks, armored personnel carriers and riot police withdrew on the orders of Crown Prince Salman bin Hamad Al Khalifa. Unions called off a general strike planned for today in response.

Pressure on Bahrain

President Barack Obama and members of his administration have pressured Bahrain's King Hamad Bin Isa Al Khalifa to show restraint. They also have been "encouraging what is now transpiring, which seems to be the pullback of the military forces," Susan Rice, the U.S. ambassador to the United Nations said on NBC's "Meet the Press."

In Iran, one protester was shot dead in Tehran as thousands gathered in main squares in the Iranian capital and clashed with government supporters, Dubai-based Al Arabiya television said. Security forces also clashed with demonstrators in the city of Shiraz, it reported.

Adding to turmoil in the region, two naval ships from Iran will pass through the Suez Canal and on to the Mediterranean Sea tomorrow, Reuters reported, citing an unidentified canal official.

Iranian Warships

Ahmed El Manakhly, head of traffic at the waterway, hasn't received "any notifications about where they are and when they are requesting to cross," he said by phone yesterday, referring to the two ships.

Israeli Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu said Iran is seeking to "exploit the situation to expand its influence" by sending warships through the canal.

"Israel views this Iranian move with utmost gravity," Netanyahu told his Cabinet yesterday, according to an e-mailed statement from his office.

The 120-mile (190-kilometer) Suez Canal carries about 2.5 percent of world oil output, according to Goldman Sachs Group Inc., and is a key route for ships carrying Asian consumer goods to Europe.

Separately, the Tunisian government has presented Saudi Arabian authorities with a formal request to extradite ousted President Zine el Abidine Ben Ali, according to a statement from the Foreign Affairs Ministry.

The statement accuses Ben Ali of various crimes, including committing and inciting manslaughter, and sowing discord among citizens of the country by urging them to kill each other.

Middle East shares dropped yesterday, with the DFM General Index retreating 3.7 percent, the most since Jan. 30, to 1,536.45 at the 2 p.m. close in Dubai. Saudi Arabia's Tadawul All Share Index declined 0.8 percent.

--With assistance from Viola Gienger, Kate Andersen Brower, Terry Atlas and Danielle Ivory in Washington, Joseph Link in New York, Camilla Hall in Dubai, Fiona MacDonald in Kuwait, Vivian Salama, Svenya O'Donnell, Caroline Alexander and Mike Harrison in London, Maram Mazen in Khartoum, William Davison in Addis Ababa, Mohammed Hatam in Sanaa, Salah Slimani in Algiers, Ola Galal in Cairo and Benjamin Harvey in Ankara. Editor: Peter Hirschberg, John Brinsley

Insurgent - February 21, 2011 07:45 PM (GMT)

Libya uses air-force to bomb neighborhoods and protesters. Possibly they had also bombed army installations that had deserted to the other side.

Two Libyan air-force officers refuse the bombings and desert to Malta along with two other helicopters landing in the Valletta airport.

http://www.stuff.co.nz/world/middle-east/4...lt-hits-Tripoli

A Libyan air-force pilot walks next to his Mirage-F1 fighter jet after landing at Malta International Airport outside Valletta.

LATEST: Libyan leader Muammar Gaddafi's four-decade-old rule appeared in increasing jeopardy when days of anti-government protests reached the capital for the first time and security forces killed dozens of people.

Military aircraft fired live ammunition at crowds of anti-government protesters in the capital Tripoli, Al Jazeera television said this morning (NZ time) quoting witnesses.

"What we are witnessing today is unimaginable. Warplanes and helicopters are indiscriminately bombing one area after another. There are many, many dead," Adel Mohamed Saleh, a Libyan resident, told the TV station.

Saleh, who called himself a political activist, said the bombings had initially targeted a funeral procession.

"Our people are dying. It is the policy of scorched earth." he said. "Every 20 minutes they are bombing."

Asked if the attacks were still happening he said: "It is continuing, it is continuing. Anyone who moves, even if they are in their car they will hit you."

No independent verification of the report was immediately available.

Residents said several cities in the east appeared to be in the hands of the opposition as protests spread from Benghazi, the cradle of a popular uprising that threatens to overthrow one of the Arab world's most entrenched governments.

One of Gaddafi's sons said the veteran leader would fight the revolt until "the last man standing."

Protesters rallied in Tripoli's streets, tribal and religious leaders spoke out against Gaddafi, and army units defected to the opposition in a revolt that has cost the lives of more than 200 people.

Some analysts suggested Libya was heading for civil war.

"Libya is the most likely candidate for civil war because the government has lost control over part of its own territory," said Shadi Hamid, director of research at the Brookings Doha Centre in Qatar.

"I think what's going to happen is going to be much more chaotic than what we saw in Egypt or Tunisia. Gaddafi and his sons don't have anywhere else to go...They are going to fight," said North Africa analyst Geoff Porter, contributor to political risk consultancy Wikistrat.

"LAST, DESPERATE ACTS"

Output at one of Libya's oil fields was reported to have been stopped by a workers' strike and some European oil companies withdrew expatriate workers and suspended operations. Most of Libya's oil fields are in the east, south of Benghazi.

Anti-government protests have also broken out in the central town of Ras Lanuf, the site of an oil refinery and petrochemical complex, Libya's Quryna newspaper said on its website Monday.

A Libyan man, Soula al-Balaazi, who said he was an opposition activist, told the network by telephone that Libyan air force warplanes had bombed "some locations in Tripoli."

An analyst for London-based consultancy Control Risks said that indicated the end was approaching for Gaddafi.

"These really seem to be last, desperate acts. If you're bombing your own capital, it's really hard to see how you can survive, " said Julien Barnes-Dacey, Control Risks' Middle East analyst.
Ad Feedback

Foreign Secretary William Hague said earlier that Gaddafi might be heading for Venezuela, which is ruled by his friend President Hugo Chavez, but a senior government source in Caracas denied that.

In signs of disagreement inside Libya's ruling elite, the justice minister resigned in protest at the "excessive use of violence" against protesters. In India, Libya's ambassador said he was resigning in protest at the violent crackdown.

Two Libyan fighter jets also landed unexpectedly in Malta, witnesses said. The office of Malta's prime minister said it was not clear whether the two pilots intended to ask for asylum. They initially had asked to refuel, it said.

European nations watched developments in Libya with a growing sense of alarm after the government in Tripoli said it would suspend cooperation on stemming the flow of illegal immigrants across the Mediterranean.

A coalition of Libyan Muslim leaders told all Muslims it was their duty to rebel against the Libyan leadership because of its "bloody crimes against humanity."

The building where the General People's Congress, or parliament, meets in Tripoli was on fire Monday, as was a police station in one of the eastern suburbs.

Al Jazeera television quoted medical sources as saying 61 people had been killed in the latest protests in Tripoli.

It said security forces were looting banks and other government institutions in Tripoli, and protesters had broken into several police stations and wrecked them.

A Reuters reporter in Tripoli said there were long queues for food and fuel as residents stocked up on essential goods, apparently anticipating new clashes after nightfall.

Gaddafi's son Saif al-Islam Gaddafi appeared on national television Sunday night in an attempt both to threaten and to calm people, saying the army would enforce security at any price to put down the revolt.

"We will keep fighting until the last man standing, even to the last woman standing," he said Sunday.

But people in Tripoli expressed anger at the speech.

A Libyan woman who gave her name as Salma, said: "The speech was very, very bad."

"The speech was very disappointing because he threatened the Libyan people with killing, hunger and burning. He did not offer mercy for the souls of the martyrs who were killed."

PROTESTERS CONTROL BENGHAZI

Gaddafi supporters were in central Tripoli's Green Square on Monday, waving flags and carrying his portrait.

Saif al-Islam's cajoling is unlikely to be enough to douse the anger unleashed after four decades of rule by Gaddafi -- mirroring events in Egypt where a popular revolt overthrew the seemingly impregnable President Hosni Mubarak 10 days ago.

In the eastern city of Benghazi, protesters appeared to be largely in control after bloody clashes with troops and police.

"Youths with weapons are in charge of the city. There are no security forces anywhere," University of Benghazi professor Hanaa Elgallal told Al Jazeera International television.

Salahuddin Abdullah, a self-described protest organiser, said: "In Benghazi there is celebration and euphoria...The city is no longer under military control. It is completely under demonstrators' control."

There were reports that soldiers who refused to fire on civilians were executed by commanding officers in Benghazi.

"We have buried today 11 bodies of soldiers who refused to fire on civilians and were executed by Gaddafi officers.. The bodies were cut, heads in one side and legs in the other...it is a crime what is happening here," said Elsanous Ali Eldorsi, a retired judge in Benghazi.

At least nine towns in the east, including Benghazi, Zuara and Zlitan, were under the control of protesters loyal to tribal groups, the president of the International Federation for Human Rights in France told Reuters.

Human Rights Watch said at least 233 people had been killed in five days of violence, but opposition groups put the figure much higher. Most were in Benghazi, a region where Gaddafi's grip has always been weaker than elsewhere.

Support for Gaddafi, who seized power in 1969, among Libya's desert tribes was also waning. The leader of the Al-Zuwayya tribe in the east threatened to cut oil exports unless authorities halted "oppression of protesters."

Libya is Africa's fourth biggest oil exporter, producing 1.6 million barrels a day. The oil price jumped US$3 to US$89.50 a barrel for US crude on fear the unrest could disrupt supplies.

TheUnhivedMind - February 22, 2011 12:26 AM (GMT)

Gaddafi 'may be going to Venezuela'

Cameron condemns Libya crackdown

21 Feb 2011
http://www.thisislondon.co.uk/standard/art...to-venezuela.do

Colonel Gaddafi may be on his way to Venezuela, Foreign Secretary William Hague has suggested.

Leaving talks in Brussels after agreeing an EU statement demanding restraint and an end to violence by the Libyan regime, Mr Hague said he had no firm knowledge but went on: "I have seen some information that suggests he is on his way there at the moment."

British officials indicated the Foreign Secretary was not referring to any media speculation but other sources.

Earlier Mr Hague said he had phoned Colonel Gaddafi's son Saif al-Islam to object to the use of the force, and added: "The son is clearly very much in Libya, but I have no evidence as to the whereabouts of Gaddafi himself".

During a day of talks on an EU response to the Libyan crisis, all EU foreign ministers were being kept updated, but only Mr Hague seemed confident enough to volunteer a likely bolthole for the Libyan leader.

The Foreign Secretary also spoke of an historic opportunity for the European Union in tackling not just the Libyan situation, but the unfolding chain of popular rebellion across North Africa and the Middle-East.

"This is a major, historic test for the EU.

"Clearly if we can succeed in bringing more democracy and more stability to Northern Africa and the wider Middle East, that will be the greatest achievement for the EU since its enlargement." He was referring to the EU's enlargement to 27 countries, embracing the former eastern Europe.

"If we don't succeed, the dangers for the EU of instability and extremism on our frontiers are immense."

TheUnhivedMind - February 22, 2011 12:30 AM (GMT)

300 DIE AFTER GADAFFI'S 'MERCENARIES' OPEN FIRE WITH ANTI-AIRCRAFT GUNS

Monday February 21 2011 by Rick Senley
http://express.co.uk/posts/view/230284/300...i-aircraft-guns

LIBYA was last night “swimming in blood” with up to 300 people feared murdered by Colonel Gaddafi ’s brutal “shock troops”.

Foreign mercenaries armed with machine guns, high-velocity sniper rifles and even anti-aircraft missiles, committed slaughter as crowds gathered in Benghazi to bury protesters killed in earlier clashes.

There were reports of terrified women and children leaping to their deaths from bridges as they tried to escape battle-hardened mercenaries from neighbouring countries like Chad.

One Libyan journalist said: “The mercenaries are vicious killers.

“People are so terrified of them that they’ve been doing everything possible to get away.

“Women and children were seen jumping off a bridge. Many were killed by the impact of hitting the water, others were drowned.”

The mercenaries do not speak Arabic, said one Benghazi resident, adding: “They don’t ask questions – they just shoot."

Many of the 3,500 British people living in Libya have already left

There are also reports of militias killing people with hammers and swords.

As Libyan authorities declared its second city Benghazi a "war zone", the bloodshed led to worldwide revulsion.

Foreign Secretary William Hague denounced Libya's brutality as "horrifying".

After speaking to Colonel Gaddafi 's second son Saif al-Islam Gaddafi by telephone,

Mr Hague said: "What Colonel Gaddafi should be doing is respecting basic human rights and there is no sense of that in the dreadful response, the horrifying response of the Libyan authorities."

The dictator's third son, Saadi Gaddafi, was said to be co-ordinating the mercenaries to act as "shock troops" with special commandos and Gaddafi loyalists.

The 37-year-old former professional footballer is fi ercely loyal to his father, and a possible heir to take control of Libya.

Sporadic protests in the capital, Tripoli, have been put down by the army.

But 600 miles east, Benghazi is a hotbed of anti-Gaddafi feeling.

Last night, witnesses said helicopter gunships were left locked in battle with demonstrators armed with Molotov cocktails, rifles and even antique sabres.

"Benghazi is a war zone – the situation is very tense," said an ambassadorial source in Tripoli.

Earlier Mr Hague cited unverified reports of 200 deaths.

But an opposition figure, Mohammed Abdullah of the Libyan Salvation Front, quoted hospital offi cials saying the death toll may have reached 300 and there are accounts on Twitter of closer to 500.

One hospital source said bodies were piling up following the shootings – which came as 35 protesters who died last week were being buried on Saturday.

Blood banks at the city's two hospitals are running dry and there are not enough beds for the wounded, say doctors.

As Libya turns into the bloodiest conflict among many uprisings across the Middle East and North Africa, thousands of Britons were being evacuated yesterday from Tripoli.

Many of the 3,500 British people living in Libya have already left. The Libyan government has not made any official comment.

Colonel Gaddafi , facing the most serious threat to his rule since coming to power in 1969, has made it clear that he did not want a repeat of the so-called “Facebook Revolutions” which recently ended the rule of despots in Egypt and Tunisia.

His government has shut down the internet, social networking sites and western news channels, and banned foreign journalists.

Recently seen as a more benign dictator by the West, he is the longest-serving ruler in Africa and the Middle East.

He is also one of the most autocratic. All protests are prohibited, there is no political opposition, housing is in short supply and unemployment is at 30 per cent, even in an oil-rich country.

Yesterday hundreds of British Libyans protested in London and Manchester yesterday, urging Prime Minister David Cameron to act.

Dr Abdelwahb Naas, 56, a doctor working in Birmingham, said: “My country is swimming in a pool of blood.

“People have been massacred openly in the street. It’s a bloodbath.

“Gaddafi has hired mercenaries from Africa. If this is not terrorism, what’s the definition of terrorism?”

TheUnhivedMind - February 22, 2011 01:23 AM (GMT)

Muslim cleric issues fatwa on Gaddafi

From:AFP February 22, 2011 8:44AM
http://www.news.com.au/breaking-news/world...from=public_rss

INFLUENTIAL Muslim cleric Yusuf al-Qaradawi has issued a fatwa that any Libyan soldier who can shoot dead embattled leader Muammar Gaddafi should do so "to rid Libya of him."

"Whoever in the Libyan army is able to shoot a bullet at Mr Gaddafi should do so," Qaradawi, an Egyptian-born cleric who is usually based in Qatar, told Al-Jazeera television.

He also told Libyan soldiers "not to obey orders to strike at your own people," and urged Libyan ambassadors around the world to dissociate themselves from Gaddafi's regime.

Famous in the Middle East for his at times controversial fatwas, or religious edicts, the octogenarian Qaradawi has celebrity status in the Arab world thanks to his religious broadcasts on Al-Jazeera.

He has in the past defended "violence carried out by certain Muslims."

The West accuses the cleric of supporting "terrorism" because he sanctioned Palestinian suicide attacks in Israel. Britain and the United States have refused to grant him entry visas.

The cleric, spiritual leader of Egypt's Muslim Brotherhood and longtime resident of Qatar, heads the International Union for Muslim Scholars.

TheUnhivedMind - February 22, 2011 01:24 AM (GMT)

Oil Majors Stall Libya Drilling, Evacuate Staff

Published: Monday, 21 Feb 2011 | 8:52 AM ET
http://www.cnbc.com/id/41700795

Wintershall, the oil and gas exploration arm of BASF, prepared to shut down its output in Libya and fly out international staff as violence spread in Africa's third-largest oil producer.

Wintershall said on Monday it was winding down Libyan oil production of as much as 100,000 barrels per day (bpd).

Companies including Royal Dutch Shell [RDSA-LN 2173.50 -15.50 (-0.71%)] and OMV said they were withdrawing expatriate staff.

Norway's Statoil, Austria's OMV and Anglo-Dutch Shell acted as scores of anti-government protesters were killed in Benghazi and unrest spread to the capital Tripoli over the weekend.

Wintershall's move would amount to a sizeable drop in supply from Libya, most of whose oil exports flow to Europe and which pumps about 1.6 million bpd of crude oil, making it Africa's third-largest producer after Nigeria and Angola.

Most of Libya's oil production operations are located in the east of the country south of Benghazi — Libya's second city which appeared on Monday to have slipped out of control of forces loyal to Muammar Gaddafi.

Production at the Murzaq oil field run by Spain's Repsol has been unaffected so far, as has output from Eni's operations.

Moving Out Staff

UK oil major BP [BP.L 491.55 -1.45 (-0.29%)], which does not produce oil or gas in Libya but has been readying an onshore rig to start drilling in the west of the country, has suspended operations because of the escalating violence.

"We are looking at evacuating some people from Libya, so those preparations are being suspended but we haven't started drilling and we are years away from any production," a BP spokesman said, adding BP has about 40 staff in the country.

Shell, whose operations in Libya are also limited to exploration, has temporarily relocated the dependents of expatriate staff outside the country, a spokesman for the company said, declining to comment further on operations.

Austrian oil and gas group OMV said none of its operations in Libya have been affected but that it was withdrawing expatriate staff.

Statoil, which participates in land-based oil production and exploration activities in the Mabruk field and in the Murzuk basin with Spain's Repsol, has closed its office in Tripoli and "a handful" of its foreign workers are leaving the country, a Statoil spokesman said.

Oil production from the isolated Murzuq oil field in the desert in the south of the country continues as normal, a spokesman for operator Repsol said on Monday.

Al Jazeera television reported on Monday that production from the Arabian Gulf Oil Company Nafoora oilfield had stopped because workers are striking, as violent unrest spread across the country which produces over one million barrels of oil a day.

TheUnhivedMind - February 22, 2011 01:59 AM (GMT)

U.S. ‘Gravely Concerned’ Over Violence in Libya

By ERIC SCHMITT
Published: February 20, 2011
http://www.nytimes.com/2011/02/21/world/mi...omacy.html?_r=1

WASHINGTON — The Obama administration on Sunday condemned Libya’s use of lethal force against peaceful demonstrators, pointing to what it said were “multiple credible” reports that “hundreds of people” had been killed and injured in several days of unrest.

In the administration’s strongest statement on the escalating violence in Libya, the State Department said that it was “gravely concerned” about the reports and that the number of deaths was unknown because of a lack of access to many parts of the country by news organizations and human rights groups.

Philip J. Crowley, the State Department spokesman, said that the United States has raised “strong objections about the use of lethal force” with several senior Libyan officials, including Musa Kusa, the foreign minister.

“Libyan officials have stated their commitment to protecting and safeguarding the right of peaceful protest,” Mr. Crowley said in a statement. “We call upon the Libyan government to uphold that commitment and hold accountable any security officer who does not act in accordance with that commitment.”

The impact of the administration’s sharp criticism of Libya’s firing on demonstrators was unclear, and stood in contrast to how President Obama’s strong criticism of the use of force by security forces in Bahrain appeared to have pressured its government to withdraw police officers and troops from the main square of that country’s capital, Manama.

On Friday night, Mr. Obama spoke to King Hamad bin Isa al-Khalifa of Bahrain, leaning on the government to show restraint, especially against peaceful protesters, and pressing for meaningful reform. The next day, Mr. Obama’s national security adviser, Thomas E. Donilon, telephoned the crown prince, Sheik Salman bin Hamad al-Khalifa, to underscore Mr. Obama’s message. Mr. Donilon praised the prince’s orders earlier in the day to withdraw security forces.

Administration officials said Sunday that the tough line with Bahrain, home of the United States

Navy's Fifth Fleet and the center of American efforts to contain Iran, had been effective. "We've been very clear with our partners in Bahrain that they ought to exercise restraint, that there is no place for violence against peaceful protesters there or anywhere else, and we've condemned that violence," Susan E. Rice, the American ambassador to the United Nations, said on "Meet the Press" on NBC.

As it did with Iran and Egypt, the administration has responded in different ways to the embattled governments in Libya and Bahrain. "Each of these countries is different," Ms. Rice said. "Each of these circumstances will be decided by the people of those countries. We are not pushing people out or dictating that they stay.

"What we're doing is saying, consistently across the board they are universal human rights that need to be respected."

Senator Lindsey Graham, an influential Republican from South Carolina, offered support on Sunday for the administration's dual approaches. "We should have a policy of urging old friends to do better and replacing old enemies," Mr. Graham said on "Meet the Press."

"I'd like to see regime change in Libya," he said. "I'd like to see regime change in Iran. I think we need to be tougher on companies that do business with Iran. But, generally speaking, the administration, I think, has handled Egypt well and is trying to stay ahead of this when it comes to Jordan, Bahrain and Saudi Arabia."

Meanwhile, Adm. Mike Mullen, the chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, arrived in Saudi Arabia on Sunday for a previously scheduled weeklong trip to the Persian Gulf region. His scheduled stops also include Kuwait, the United Arab Emirates, Qatar and, possibly, Bahrain.

Capt. John Kirby, his spokesman, said in a statement that Admiral Mullen would meet with his counterparts in each country and would "make clear his desire to see that peaceful protest be allowed to continue without threats or violence from any quarter and that restraint is shown by all sides in these disputes."

Middle East security experts say the United States has greater influence over allies like Bahrain than countries with which relations are more strained, including Libya, even though full diplomatic ties were restored in 2009.

In Bahrain's case, the administration is also balancing the interests of Saudi Arabia, another monarchy, which is connected to Bahrain by a causeway. Senior Saudi officials have expressed displeasure that Mr. Obama has allowed the protests to continue, and even grow, by espousing political and economic reforms in the region.

Throughout the region, Ms. Rice said, "there are conditions that are inherently unstable — a youth bulge, high unemployment, a lack of political openness — and we have pressed publicly and privately for the kind of change that is necessary."

Senator Richard G. Lugar of Indiana, the ranking Republican on the Foreign Relations Committee, said that in most of those countries, an aging autocratic leadership was confronting the realities of a youthful population eager for social and economic changes and connected by social networks that were not broadly in use even a few years ago.

"They know they are not getting their fair share, that life is not going to be good for them," Mr. Lugar said Sunday on "State of the Union" on CNN. "As a result, given hunger problems, other economic difficulties, they have come to the fore."

Mr. Lugar continued, "The question is, will, as in the case of the Libyans, the protesters simply be shot?"

TheUnhivedMind - February 23, 2011 05:05 PM (GMT)

The dawn of a new Libya? Gaddafi on the brink as protesters seize control in east and foreigners flee after 1,000 deaths

By Daily Mail Reporter
Last updated at 12:55 PM on 23rd February 2011
http://www.dailymail.co.uk/news/article-13...000-deaths.html

Muammar Gaddafi's control of Libya is becoming increasingly fragile after his number two stepped down and the United Nations called for an end to violence.

The eastern port of Tobruk has declared itself free while Libyan soldiers were quoted as saying they were no longer loyal to the dictator and that the eastern region was out of his control.

An estimated 1,000 people have been killed after the dictator launched a brutal crackdown on protests against his regime. A rambling speech by the ageing leader yesterday was met with fury and dismay by demonstrators.

The North African state is now said to be on the verge of civil war as forces loyal to Colonel Gaddafi pledged to fight for the dictator 'until death'.

Vicious: Video footage shows the so-called 'yellow hat mercenaries' attacking civilian homes and attempting to start fires

Streets of rage: Amateur footage shows mercenaries destroying property in Benghazi

Celebrations: Live footage shows triumphant scenes on the streets of Tobruk after protesters took control

Thousands of them were flooding the streets of Tripoli as they tried to maintain order in the face of pro-democracy demonstrations.

Huge swathes of the country to the east of the capital have fallen to protesters, with Benghazi already declared a free city.

It has led to tanks and other armoured vehicles retreating west, where military loyalists continue to murder opponents under Gaddafi's orders.

'We will fight until death,' said a soldier in his early 20s outside a military compound close to Tripoli's Green Square, which has been cleared of demonstrators.

'The country needs stability at a time like this, and this is what we are providing. The people are on our side.'

Despite such words, bodies continued to pile up in city hospitals following massacres carried out by snipers with high velocity rifles, secret servicemen with machine gun, helicopter gunships, and even fighter bombers.

Tanks are taking positions around major public buildings, including government offices, while sandbags are being used to reinforce defences.

Heavy gunfire broke out in Tripoli as forces loyal to Gaddafi tightened their grip on the Libyan capital while anti-government protesters claimed control of many cities elsewhere and top government officials and diplomats turn against the longtime leader.

While residents of cities in the eastern half of the country celebrated, raising the flags of the old monarchy, the mood in Tripoli was bleak. Residents were afraid to leave their houses, saying pro-Gaddafi forces were opening fire randomly in the streets.

Defiant: Gaddafi declared it was his country and he had no intention of stepping down

Armed uprising: A protester shows spent ammunition casing, which he says are from bullets fired by pro-government soldiers in the past few days

Seizing control: Protesters celebrate in the streets of Tobruk after Gaddafi lost control of the eastern region

The fighting in Tripoli came as the opposition reportedly seized control of Misrata, with witnesses saying people were honking their horns and raising pre-Gadhafi flags from the monarchy to celebrate.

Misrata would be the first major city in the west to fall to anti-government forces, which have mainly been concentrated in the east. Faraj al-Misrati, a local doctor, said six residents had been killed and 200 injured since January 18, when protesters attacked offices and buildings affiliated with Gadhafi's regime.

He said residents had formed committees to protect the city, clean the streets and treat the injured.

'The solidarity among the people here is amazing, even the disabled are helping out,' he said in a telephone interview.

New videos posted by Libya's opposition on Facebook also showed scores of anti-government protesters raising the flag from the pre-Gadhafi monarchy on a building in Zawiya, on the outskirts of Tripoli. Another showed protesters lining up cement blocks and setting tires ablaze to fortify positions on a square inside the capital.

The footage couldn't be independently confirmed.

General Soliman Mahmoud al-Obeidy earlier said Gaddafi was no longer 'trustworthy', adding he decided to switch allegiances after hearing the authorities had given orders to fire on civilians in Benghazi.

'He bombs with airplanes and uses excessive force against unarmed people," he told Reuters.

'I am sure he will fall in the coming few days.'

Residents said Tobruk, site of major battles between German and Allied forces in World War Two, was now in the hands of the people and had been so for about three days Libya has now been suspended from the Arab League and, as thousands of foreign nationals attempt to escape the North African state, the UN has demanded the violence against protesters ends.

The Security Council said the Libyan government should ‘meet its responsibility to protect its population’ and said the regime must respect international humanitarian law.

Triumphant: Tobruk residents said the city was now in the hands of the people and had been so for about three day

Given the boot: Protesters use a shoe to hit a picture of Libyan leader Muammar Gaddafi in the eastern Libyan city of Musaid

Libya's deputy permanent representative to the UN Ibrahim Dabbashi said the council's statement was 'not strong enough' while high-ranking members of the Libyan government have quit.

Key officials have quit the government, with many joining the protesters calling for Gaddafi to step down after 41 years and face justice for crimes against humanity.

Interior minister Abdeh Fattah Younes-al-Abidi, thought of as Gaddafi's second-in-command, has stepped down and urged Libya's armed forces to 'join and heed the people's demands'. Youssef Sawani, a senior aide to Gaddafi's son Saif, sent a text message to Reuters saying he had resigned out of 'dismay' at the violence.

British Foreign Secretary William Hague is among those who have said that there are 'many indications of the structure of the state collapsing in Libya.The resignation of so many ambassadors and diplomats, reports of ministers changing sides within Libya itself, shows the system is in a very serious crisis.'

But, speaking in a televised address on Tuesday evening, Gaddafi vowed to fight on and die a 'martyr' on Libyan soil.

Just as ominously, he urged his supporters to ‘re-win’ the streets today, bathing them in blood if necessary.

In Benghazi, which is now controlled by anti-government protesters, those watching the broadcast on giant screens angrily threw shoes at it.

The Paris-based International Federation for Human Rights says that protesters control Tobruk, Sirte, Misrata, Khoms, Tarhounah, Zenten, Al-Zawiya and Zouara.

The Warfalla tribe, the largest in the country, has also joined calls from other tribes for Gaddafi to stand down.

While a great boost to pro-democracy campaigners, this also raised the worrying prospect of thousands of armed militia heading towards Tripoli to fight the loyalists.

‘It would be an appalling civil war,’ said a pro-democracy campaigner in Tripoli. ‘Libyans will be killing their brothers and sisters because of Gaddafi. The prospect is terrifying.’

Rebelling: Soldiers in the eastern city of Tobruk say they are no longer supporting Gaddafi

Defiant: a Libyan man holding a placard reading in Arabic 'Youth of Libya, 17th February revolution' as he takes part in an anti government gathering in the sea port city of Tobruk

Nationals of Lebanon, Turkey, Syria and Germany have joined thousands of Tunisians leaving Libya by its western land border to escape violent protests, the International Organisation for Migration said on Wednesday.

In a statement released in Geneva, the IOM said many of those arriving in Tunisia from Libya were trying to reach Djerba airport to get flights home. Others are being sheltered in low-cost hotels.

‘In addition to several thousand returning Tunisians, there were some Lebanese, Turkish, Syrian and three German nationals who had arrived asking for onward travel assistance,’ the IOM said, citing its local staff and Red Crescent officials.

The IOM is trying to find new evacuation routes from Libya, which has an estimated 1.5 million foreign nationals, including people working there and those passing through on the way to other destinations.

A Royal Navy warship is on its way to rescue 3,500 Britons trapped in Libya, while a plane has also been chartered to take ex-pats home as the horrifying scale of the violence became clear.

Announcing the rescue mission, the Foreign Secretary said: ‘In light of the fluid and dangerous situation, we are urgently reinforcing our team on the ground with specialist personnel to provide help and assistance to British nationals.

‘The safety of British nationals in Libya is of paramount concern to us.’

He said many of those trying to flee had been thwarted by flight cancellations and closures of airspace.

Gaddafi's overthrow

UNITED STATES
Libya's ambassador calls on Washington to speak up strongly in defence of the Libyan people

PERU
Peru suspends diplomatic relations with Libya

MALAYSIA
Libya's embassy condemn Gaddafi's violent crackdown

AUSTRALIA
Libya's embassy cut ties with Tripoli and say they represent the Libyan people and not the Libyan regime

Source: Reuters

© Reuters

REUTERS

The frigate HMS Cumberland is being redeployed from the eastern Mediterranean to international waters near Libya, Mr Hague said, ‘so that it is pre-positioned in case it is required to play a role in assisting British nationals’.

The situation at Tripoli airport was described as 'total chaos' as foreigners of all nationalities struggled to get out.

Kathleen Burnett, of Baltimore, Ohio, said: 'The airport was mobbed, you wouldn't believe the number of people. It was total chaos. Everybody was being checked out by the police but everyone was very obedient.'

British couple John and Gill Bettison had arrived in Tripoli last Saturday, but quickly realised the situation was becoming more dangerous and managed to get a flight back to the UK on Monday.

The couple told the BBC when they went to Green Square on Sunday, they came across pro-Gaddafi supporters and there was a relaxed 'carnival atmosphere', including women and children.

However, Mrs Bettison said: 'As we were walking away from the square, there were small groups of mainly young men gathering, and as it got dark the atmosphere started to change and once it was dark we started to hear gunfire.'

Mr Bettison said: 'It started off with just minor gunfire and then it went on to bursts of automatic.

'There were a couple of spates of artillery fire that we could hear, and it was a bit concerning as we heard it get nearer and nearer our hotel.'

'Massacre': Egyptians fleeing across the border from Libya claimed 2,000 people had been killed by security forces in second city Benghazi

Mean streets: Men loyal to Colonel Gaddafi are shown on TV to be the only ones left roaming Tripoli after protesters were fired on by security force

We will be free: Protesters chant anti-government slogans while holding a banner depicting Gaddafi in Tobruk yesterday. The banner reads: 'Libya will be free and Gaddafi will be out'

The east of the country including the cities of Tobruk and Benghazi appeared to be under opposition control following a series of defections - including key Gaddafi lieutenant interior minister Abdel Fattah Younes al Abidi.

Non-essential British embassy staff and families are being pulled out.

Turkey has sent two civilian ferries and one military ship to Benghazi, while Serbia, Russia, Italy, the Netherlands and France sent planes to Tripoli.

Italy sent air force transport aircraft to Benghazi to evacuate roughly 100 Italian citizens.

Gaddafi, who vowed to fight to ‘the last drop of blood’, appears increasingly deranged and is losing supporters by the hour.

The Libyan ambassadors to Washington and Paris are the latest diplomats to resign in disgust at his attempts to crush the pro-democracy protests.

Two senior military pilots who defected to Malta – parking their Mig fighter jets alongside an easyJet plane – confirmed their orders had been to bomb civilians on the ground.

An armoured brigade is also said to have swapped sides.

Government buildings and police stations have been burned down, while banks have been looted.

One Al Bayda resident said: ‘This is worse than anyone can imagine, this is something no human can fathom. They are bombing us with planes, they are killing us with tanks.’

Saif Gaddafi, the dictator’s London-educated son, claimed the air force had merely bombarded ‘arms depots far from populated areas’.

Ruined: Gaddafi spoke yesterday from his deserted and almost derelict former Bab al-Aziziya residence, which was bombed in 1986 by U.S. aircraft

'No To Destruction, Yes To Building Our Country': Protesters rip down signs from a building in the coastal city of Tobruk while a demonstrator brnadishes a placard calling for change

International response: Demonstrators opposed to the regime of Gaddafi gather outside Downing Street

Scores of corpses have not been cleared away because residents are fearful of being shot, according to Mohammed Ali, of the Libyan Salvation Front. He quoted eyewitnesses as saying some injured protesters had been left to bleed to death.

Gaddafi has apparently threatened that bodies will not be released unless their loved ones sign ‘confessions’ branding them as traitors.

One protester told Al Jazeera television: ‘Our people are dying. It is the policy of scorched earth.’

And a Tripoli resident who gave his name as Ali said: ‘We knew he was crazy, but it’s still a terrible shock to see him turning mercenaries on his own people and just mowing down unarmed demonstrators.’

There was extra peril for non-Arabs including Britons who risked being revenge targets after word spread that Gaddafi was paying ‘white mercenaries’ to inflict bloodshed on his people.

One witness who had fled Benghazi claimed at least 2,000 people had been killed there – many shot with heavy calibre weapons – though this figure could not be verified.

Despite the brutality, thousands were celebrating there last night as protesters claimed control of the port city.

On tractors and trucks, the first people to escape the murderous two-day rampage reached the safety of Egypt yesterday.

By last night, several thousand had crossed the border to freedom, bringing with them tales of innocent men and women being cut down by Gaddafi's mercenaries.

Hassan Kamel Mohamed, a 24-year-old steel worker from Tobruk, said: 'There were thugs everywhere and they would pull weapons on you at any time.'

Suleiman Al Zugeilil, another anti-government protester, claimed protesters had stood firm.

'After the massacres in Benghazi, the armoured brigade, which has tanks, joined the protesters in sympathy with the people,' he claimed.

In Tobruk, locals burnt the regime's HQ and chanted: 'Gaddafi you are a coward.'

The British armoured carrier on a Libyan street

By JACK DOYLE

This picture is the first evidence that military equipment made in Britain is being used by Colonel Gaddafi against protesters in Libya.

The image is from footage captured by an amateur cameraman and smuggled out of Libya in recent days which shows an armoured personnel carrier speeding past demonstrators.

The vehicle has been identified as British-made. Critics say the picture dramatically exposes the hypocrisy at the heart of Britain's foreign policy: Our ministers offer vocal support to protest movements in the Arab world, but at the same time they are arming their despotic oppressors.

Hypocritical: The British-made carrier in Libya

Across the region yesterday, in the emirate of Abu Dhabi, UK arms companies were busy peddling their wares.

Among the equipment being promoted at the Idex 2011, the Middle East's biggest arms fair, were CS gas shotgun cartridges and stun grenades – precisely the type of weapons used by security forces to try to quell crowds of pro-democracy protesters.

According to ADS, the body that represents UK companies, an estimated £7.2billion worth of British defence exports are sold every year – half of which go to Middle Eastern countries.

Official figures show the UK Government approved at least 75 arms export licences to Libya since 2008, worth between £75million and £100million.

Since the election, British firms have sold crowd sniper rifles, tear gas and ammunition to the Gaddafi regime.

Military export licences from Britain over the first nine months of last year totalled £64.3million to Saudi Arabia, £4million to Egypt, £270million to Algeria and £15.9million to the United Arab Emirates.

We sell combat helicopters, bomb-making parts, missiles, body armour, elements for unmanned drones, military software and heavy machine guns.

Of course Britain is not alone. According to data collected by Forbes magazine, from 2007 to 2010 the Pentagon persuaded Congress to approve $180billion worth of arms sales to the Middle East region with $100billion signed off since President Obama took office.

TheUnhivedMind - February 23, 2011 05:14 PM (GMT)

'I will die a martyr': Gaddafi calls on supporters in furious speech on Libyan TV

Nabila Ramdani
22 Feb 2011
http://www.thisislondon.co.uk/standard/art...-he-has-fled.do

Libyan dictator Colonel Gaddafi vowed to fight on and die a "martyr" this afternoon, as he called on his supporters to take back the streets from pro-democracy protesters in a furious appearance on state TV.

Gaddafi, dressed in brown robes and turban, spoke from a podium in a bombed out building that appeared to be his Tripoli residence - hit by US airstrikes in the 1980s and left unrepaired as a monument of defiance.

He declared himself "a warrior" and proclaimed, "Libya wants glory, Libya wants to be at the pinnacle, at the pinnacle of the world."

"I am a fighter, a revolutionary from tents... I will die as a martyr at the end."

His comments came after Libya's ambassador to the US today called for an end to Gaddafi's "dictatorship regime" as tens of thousands of foreigners fled the country to avoid the violence.

Ali Aujali urged the despot to step aside to avoid further bloodshed as a growing number of ambassadors and high-ranking officials resigned.

Mr Aujali said on ABC's Good Morning America: "I resign from serving the current dictatorship regime, but I will never resign from serving our people until their voices reach the whole world, until their goals are achieved.

"I need the United States to raise their voice very strongly. This regime is shaking and this is the time to get rid of it. Please help the Libyan people. They are burning. We need the world to stand by us."

Thousands of foreigners have left by air and hundreds fled across the border to Egypt. Government forces were reportedly shooting on sight protesters in the capital Tripoli.

In the eastern town of Al Bayda, Marai Al Mahry, 42, told Reuters by telephone that 26 people including his brother had been shot dead by Gaddafi loyalists.

He said: "They shoot you just for walking on the street. The only thing we can do now is not give up, no surrender. This is genocide." There were no reliable figures on casualties but New York-based Human Rights Watch said 233 had been killed before last night when gunships and fighter bombers reduced parts of Tripoli to rubble.

State television showed a bizarre 22-second video last night of Gaddafi denying claims he had fled.

The dictator, apparently relaxed, held an umbrella as he sat in a van.

He said: "I am in Tripoli and not in Venezuela. Do not believe the channels belonging to stray dogs. I wanted to say something to the youths at the Green Square and stay up late with them but it started raining. Thank God, it's a good thing."

Opposition groups said it was unlikely that the video was made in Tripoli. "Gaddafi's forces are mainly using planes to kill people now," said one. "The idea that he would be driving around Tripoli is ridiculous."

Eastern cities including Benghazi are said to be under rebel control. The International Federation for Human Rights said Sirte, Tobruk, Misrata, Khoms, Tarhounah, Zenten, Al-Zawiya and Zouara were in protesters' hands.

UN human rights chief Navi Pillay has called for an international investigation into Libya's use of machineguns, snipers and military planes to suppress the protests and said that "widespread and systematic attacks against the civilian population may amount to crimes against humanity".

TheUnhivedMind - February 23, 2011 05:19 PM (GMT)

Gaddafi gives 15-second "speech" on state TV

[dohtml]<iframe title="YouTube video player" width="640" height="390" src="http://www.youtube.com/embed/weY5Lht2UAI" frameborder="0" allowfullscreen></iframe>[/dohtml]

TheUnhivedMind - February 23, 2011 05:27 PM (GMT)

UN Security Council Meets Today to Discuss Violence in Libya

By Flavia Krause-Jackson and Bill Varner - Feb 22, 2011 8:20 AM GMT+0000

http://www.bloomberg.com/news/2011-02-22/u...e-in-libya.html

The United Nations Security Council will meet today to discuss the situation in Libya, where a violent crackdown on anti-government demonstrators has left hundreds dead.

The consultations are scheduled to start at 9 a.m. in New York. Ibrahim Dabbashi, deputy ambassador and second in command at the Libyan mission, broke with Tripoli and called on the UN to establish a “no-fly zone” around the country to prevent mercenaries and arms from going to the government.

“This is something which the Security Council will have to decide,” Secretary General Ban Ki-moon told reporters in Los Angeles yesterday, according to a transcript of the news conference. In a 40-minute phone conversation with Libyan leader Muammar Qaddafi, Ban “forcefully urged him to stop violence against demonstrators.”

Qaddafi, in comments broadcast on state television today, said he hasn’t fled the country amid an eruption of violence the International Federation for Human Rights says has killed more than 300 people. Planes and helicopters fired on protesters and witnesses reported massacres in two neighborhoods of Tripoli, Al Arabiya TV said.

Dabbashi yesterday called for Qaddafi’s resignation and, in appearances on international television networks, asked for an emergency meeting of the Geneva-based Human Rights Council to investigate alleged human rights violations. He charged the regime with “genocide.”

‘Voice of the People’

“We find it impossible to stay silent,” Dabbashi said. “We have to transfer the voice of the Libyan people to the world. The Libyan mission will be in the service of the Libyan people rather than in the service of the regime.”

Libya, which has Africa’s largest oil reserves, is the latest Arab nation to be rocked by protests ignited by last month’s ouster of Tunisian dictator Zine El Abidine Ben Ali and the Feb. 11 fall of Egyptian President Hosni Mubarak. U.S. Secretary of State Hillary Clinton said “the world is watching the situation in Libya with alarm.”

Crude for April delivery surged 8.3 percent from the Feb. 18 close in New York to $97.18 a barrel as of 5 p.m. in Tokyo. The MSCI Asia Pacific Index lost 2 percent. Standard & Poor’s 500 Index futures sank 1.3 percent from last week.

Dabbashi called on Libya’s neighbors, Egypt and Tunisia, to allow medical supplies to enter the country to treat wounded protesters. He also asked all countries to help prevent Qaddafi from escaping to their territory and to monitor money transfers by the regime.

-- Editors: Jerrold Colten, Louis Meixler

To contact the reporters on this story: Bill Varner at the United Nations at wvarner@bloomberg.net; Flavia Krause-Jackson in Rome at fjackson@bloomberg.net

To contact the editors responsible for this story: James Hertling at jhertling@bloomberg.net; Mark

Silva in Washington at msilva34@bloomberg.net

TheUnhivedMind - February 23, 2011 05:29 PM (GMT)

Clinton Says Safety of U.S. Citizens, Embassy Staff in Libya Is `Priority'

By Indira A.R. Lakshmanan and Kate Andersen Brower - Feb 22, 2011
http://www.bloomberg.com/news/2011-02-22/u...palling-1-.html

Secretary of State Hillary Clinton said today the safety of U.S. citizens in Libya, including embassy employees awaiting evacuation, is the “highest priority” for the Obama administration.

Clinton said the U.S. joins the international community in “strongly condemning” Libyan leader Muammar Qaddafi’s violent crackdown on a week-long uprising that, according to the New York-based monitoring group Human Rights Watch, has left more than 200 dead.

The intensifying violence has driven oil prices to the highest level in more than two years on concern the unrest may disrupt Libyan oil production. Crude for March delivery rose as much as 9.6 percent to $94.49 a barrel before paring gains to settle at $93.57.

While deploring the bloodshed in Libya, U.S. officials said the administration must focus first on the safety of embassy personnel before taking any further actions.

“Now, as always, the safety and wellbeing of Americans has to be our highest priority,” Clinton told reporters at the State Department in Washington.

State Department spokesman Philip J. Crowley said that the government is trying to evacuate U. S. personnel in the next few days. All non-emergency personnel who have been ordered by the U. S. government to leave.
Embassy Evacuation

The U.S. has 35 non-emergency embassy employees and family members who are affected by order, Crowley said. Although they were not moved out today, “we will do our best, working with Libyan authorities, to move them out as quickly as we can,” he said.

Crowley said there are several thousand U.S. citizens in Libya, many of them dual nationals. Of the approximately 600 who have only U.S. citizenship, he said, many work for energy companies and are “shutting down their operations and making their way out of the country today.”

Clinton said “the government of Libya bears responsibility for what is occurring and must take actions to end the violence,” adding that the U.S. is “in touch with many Libyan officials directly and indirectly and with other governments in the region to try to influence what is going on inside Libya.”

The United Nations Security Council is meeting in New York to determine whether there will be an international response.

“As we gain a greater understanding of what actually is happening,” Clinton said, “we will take appropriate steps in line with our policies, our values and our laws. But we’re going to have to work in concert with the international community."

"Appalling" Attacks

President Barack Obama's spokesman called the violence by government forces against Libyan citizens "appalling" and said the U.S. is monitoring the impact of the crisis on oil prices.

"We offer our condolences to the families of the victims in Libya of this appalling violence," White House press secretary Jay Carney told reporters traveling with the president aboard Air Force One. "We call on the governments in the region to listen to and respect the wishes and aspirations of their people" for democratic changes.

Carney said that while the administration is watching the effect on the price of crude oil from the turmoil in Libya, which has the largest reserves in Africa, he "would not speculate on where oil prices will go in the future."

Senator John Kerry, chairman of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, called on the administration to consider reimposing sanctions on Libya that were lifted under former President George W. Bush in 2004.
Libya's Oil

Kerry also urged U.S. and international oil companies to cease operations there. Among the U.S. companies that do business in Libya are Marathon Oil Corp., ConocoPhillips, and Halliburton Co. all based in Houston, New York-based Hess Corp. and Los Angeles-based Occidental Petroleum Corp.

Libya is Africa's third-largest oil producer after Nigeria and Angola. In terms of proven oil reserves, Libya's 44.3 billion barrels is the largest deposit in Africa and 3.3 percent of the world's total, according to BP Plc's Statistical Review of World Energy.

Most of the 1.6 million barrels a day pumped by Libya is exported to Europe, according to Bloomberg estimates. It isn't among the top 15 importers to the U.S., according to the Department of Energy.
Call for Sanctions

Kerry also said in his statement that the UN Security Council should "condemn the violence and explore temporary sanctions, including an arms embargo and protection for Libyan civilian centers."

The Massachusetts Democrat called on the UN to "immediately remove Libya from the Human Rights Commission, appoint a special rapporteur on human rights conditions in Libya, and authorize the distribution of emergency humanitarian supplies."

Carney said the administration was "looking at" Kerry's call to consider sanctions "but right now we're focused on ending the bloodshed" in Libya.

Kerry was among the first prominent U.S. officials to call for Egypt's President Hosni Mubarak to leave office earlier this month as demonstrations erupted there.

To contact the reporter on this story: Indira Lakshmanan in Washington at ilakshmanan@bloomberg.net; Kate Andersen Brower in Cleveland at kandersen7@bloomberg.net

To contact the editor responsible for this story: Mark Silva at msilva34@bloomberg.net.

Insurgent - February 23, 2011 05:34 PM (GMT)

Reports: Libyan aircraft crashes after troops refuse bombing orders

By the CNN Wire Staff

February 23, 2011 12:20 p.m. EST

http://www.cnn.com/2011/WORLD/africa/02/23...dex.html?hpt=T1

Tobruk, Libya (CNN) -- Even as Libyan leader Moammar Gadhafi called on the military to crack down on anti-government protesters, reports came in Wednesday that a military aircraft had crashed because the crew refused to carry out bombing orders.

An opposition figure told CNN the pilot had been ordered to bomb oil fields southwest of Benghazi but refused and instead ejected from the plane.

The Libyan newspaper Quryna reported that two people were on board, and that both -- the pilot and co-pilot -- parachuted out, allowing the plane to crash into an uninhabited area west of Ajdabiya, 160 kilometers (100 miles) southwest of Benghazi. The newspaper cited military sources.

Quryna itself is a sign of changes sweeping through Libya. When protests began last week, it carried regime propaganda. But it later reported on the protests and casualty figures.

CNN could not immediately confirm reports for many areas in Libya. The Libyan government maintains tight control on communications and has not responded to repeated requests from CNN for access to the country. CNN has interviewed numerous witnesses by phone.

In the ninth day of protests that have already cost him control of eastern Libya, Gadhafi faced more defections from within his regime and new international pressure Wednesday to halt military actions against the demonstrators.

TheUnhivedMind - February 24, 2011 01:56 AM (GMT)

Libya: Britain borrows BP jet to evacuate citizens

Britain's embarrassing efforts to evacuate stranded nationals from civil war in Libya were condemned on Wednesday night.

By James Kirkup, Richard Spencer 12:23AM GMT 24 Feb 2011
http://www.telegraph.co.uk/news/worldnews/...e-citizens.html

The Foreign Office finally managed to load 300 Britons onto a plane at Tripoli, but only after it had borrowed the jet from BP.

The plane the Government had intended to use to evacuate Britons waited on the runway at Gatwick airport for 10 hours before taking off late on Wednesday night.

Mr Hague admitted the efforts had been a failure and said he would establish a review to investigate. Portugal, Turkey, France and the EU had already pulled out thousands of citizens.

Mr Cameron was also out of step with international efforts to impose fresh sanctions on the Gaddafi regime. The French president, Nicolas Sarkozy, called for “swift and concrete” measures and the White House said it was ready to reimpose penalties.

However, Mr Cameron said the regime could still respond to calls for change. “Sanctions are always an option for the future if what we’re seeing in Libya continues,” he said.

The attempt to organise an airlift of the 540 Britons stranded in the country stumbled. The first plane the Government chartered was delayed on the runway at Gatwick with a mechanical fault.

A second was due to leave later last night and a third, if necessary, today. HMS Cumberland, a Royal Navy frigate, was on its way to the rebel-held eastern city of Benghazi to rescue Britons trapped there.

But one oil worker said he was stranded in a camp in the middle of the country. “We are living every day in fear of our lives as the local people are armed,” he said. “We are desperate for the British government to come and get us.”

Douglas Alexander, the shadow foreign secretary, said ministers seemed to have been “slow off the mark” and should convene the Cobra emergency committee.

He said British nationals deserved to have had a senior Minister taking a grip of the Government’s response earlier.

Gaddafi’s collapsing regime continued to attack its own civilians, in a desperate rearguard action against the protests sweeping the country. The dictator last night sent elite troops into battle in Tripoli, his capital.

The turmoil helped push crude oil to $110 a barrel, prompting warnings that forecourt petrol prices will rise by up to 5p a litre, pushing a gallon above £6 by the end of next week.

TheUnhivedMind - February 24, 2011 01:56 AM (GMT)

Libya threatens to treat western journalists as 'outlaws'

Warning made as reporters enter Libya through eastern border with Egypt as Muammar Gaddafi loses grip on country

Josh Halliday
guardian.co.uk, Wednesday 23 February 2011 17.18 GMT
http://www.guardian.co.uk/media/2011/feb/2...nalists-outlaws

Journalists from the BBC, CNN and other western media who have entered Libya will be "considered outlaws", the country's deputy foreign minister warned on Wednesday.

Khalid Kayem said that the influx of reporters who have streamed across Libya's border with Egypt in the past 24 hours are there "illegally and will be considered outlaws", according to the news agency AFP.

Journalists from across the world have been entering Libya through its eastern border with Egypt over the past day, as Muammar Gaddafi loses his grip on that part of the country.

Martin Chulov, a Guardian foreign correspondent, is thought to have been the first foreign journalist to report from Benghazi, the country's second-largest city, on Wednesday. The Guardian is part of the group that also publishes MediaGuardian.co.uk.

The BBC's Jon Leyne arrived in eastern Libya late on Tuesday and is understood to be heading towards Benghazi, where many international journalists are now based.

Reporters from US broadcasters CNN and NPR also crossed Libya's border with Egypt late on Tuesday. Lourdes Garcia-Navarro, an NPR reporter, described Libyans in the east as "very excited to see western journalists".

ITN, which produces ITV News and Channel 4 News, deployed a small group of journalists to Libya's eastern border yesterday. Two other ITN reporters entered Libya through its western border with Tunisia earlier today.

However, the Libyan capital, Tripoli, remains inaccessible for foreign journalists as government militiamen clamp down on dissenters.

Jon Williams, the BBC's world news editor, told the Guardian: "Around Tripoli it is still as menacing and arguably more so now than it has ever been."

Williams said it was becoming increasingly difficult to describe Libya as one country. "The eastern province is really like it's not Libya," he told the Guardian, likening the situation to Iraq's self-ruled northern region under Saddam Hussein.

"There is a danger of exaggerating the danger of where they are in [eastern] Libya. But around Tripoli it is still as menacing and arguably more so now than it has ever been," he added.

An ITN spokeswoman said: "ITN has experienced teams deployed across the region to provide comprehensive coverage for ITV News and Channel 4 News viewers. We will not be giving out further details as the safety of our personnel is our first priority."

Large groups of Libya's Egyptian and Tunisian citizens were reported to be crossing the borders back into their native countries, passing international media moving in the opposite direction.

Talking on state TV on Tuesday, Gaddafi left many foreign nationals fearing for their security as he described anti-government protesters as "rats and mercenaries" and vowed to "cleanse Libya house by house" until they surrendered.

TheUnhivedMind - February 24, 2011 01:57 AM (GMT)

Britain sent sniper rifles to Gaddafi just before his troops began killing

Joe Murphy, Political Editor
23 Feb 2011
http://www.thisislondon.co.uk/standard/art...egan-killing.do

Britain approved the export of sniper rifles to Libya just months before marksmen began murdering protest- ers in Tripoli.

An export licence was granted to let "a small quantity" of deadly long-range weapons be shipped out in November for exhibition or testing. Four licences were approved for the rifles, along with assault rifles and semi-automatic handguns, with cleaning kits.

They were signed off by officials in the Department for Business and it was unclear today whether ministers were involved in the decision.

Business Secretary Vince Cable told the Standard: "It is essential to stop arms exports where this could be used to suppress human rights and democratic protests and also fuel regional conflict." He said he was "certainly surprised" about the export licences, particularly in the case of sniper rifles.

He indicated that he would insist on tougher future curbs over exports to controversial regimes, saying: "We are where we are and have to act correctly from here."

Horrific wounds among Libyan demonstrators, including limbs ripped off, are consistent with the impact of a high-velocity round from a sniper rifle.

Following calls from the Standard, the Department for Business was this morning contacting the firms involved to establish whether the British weapons were sent back, as required under the licence conditions.

Last week the department suspended export licences to Bahrain and Libya after concern at attacks of protesters.

These licences included tear gas but the department was unable to say this morning whether tear gas was exported to Libya. The Business Department was unable to give details of who signed the export licences and when. A spokeswoman said she understood that decisions were delegated to officials.

The department would not say which companies were involved as this was "commercially confidential". Britain's top manufacturer of sniper rifles, the Portsmouth-based Accuracy International, said it was not involved.

Labour today called on the Government to freeze Colonel Gaddafi's overseas assets. Shadow foreign secretary Douglas Alexander said an agreement on sanctions should be pursued via the European Union.

"The Government appeared slow to act on freezing assets misappropriated from the Egyptian people," he said. "They should now be urgently seeking agreement in Europe to freeze assets of the Libyan regime."

The Treasury said the Government could freeze assets owned by a foreign leader but only after a United Nations or EU vote to impose sanctions, a request from the country involved or a Home Office decision that action was needed to prevent terrorism against Britons.

TheUnhivedMind - February 24, 2011 01:58 AM (GMT)

Libya protests: Gaddafi battles to control west

Hundreds of families flee Libya for Tunisia

23 February 2011 Last updated at 20:54
http://www.bbc.co.uk/news/world-middle-east-12556005

Libyan ruler Col Muammar Gaddafi is battling to retain control of Tripoli and areas in western Libya as protesters consolidated gains in the east and foreigners continued to flee.

Much of the capital is deserted as pro-Gaddafi gunmen roam the streets, with reports of uprisings in western towns such as Misurata, Sabratha and Zawiya.

Masses of protesters have been celebrating success in eastern towns.

Thousands of foreigners continue to leave, with chaos at Tripoli airport.

At least 300 people have died in the country's uprising.

Col Gaddafi's son, Saif al-Islam Gaddafi, went on television on Wednesday evening to say that everything was "normal", Reuters reported.

"The ports, schools and airports are all open," he said. "The problem lies in the eastern regions. Life is normal. Brothers, Libyans should come together in this national battle."
'Many deaths'

An eyewitness in Tripoli said that the city was virtually closed, with many people hoping protesters and defecting soldiers would arrive from the east to help them.

A text message had been sent out by government officials telling civil servants and other workers to return to their jobs but many people are too scared to go on to the streets.

One Tripoli resident said: "I hope residents don't go to work - this can be our way of a peaceful protest - we will all stay at home indefinitely."

There were reports of gunmen opening fire on Tuesday morning on a queue of people at a bread shop in the Fashloum district, where there has been a heavy military crackdown, with three people killed.

Two naval gunships are reported to have been deployed facing the city.

A Tripoli citizen told BBC Arabic that the only people on the streets were police, soldiers and African mercenaries but that the opposition was in touch with cities in the east that had fallen to protesters and a march was planned for the capital on Thursday.

Another Tripoli resident said: "Anti-government protesters have disappeared. The streets are quiet. There are many, many deaths."

The resident also said doctors were reporting gunmen shooting people in hospitals.

Information from Libya is currently difficult to verify and reports cannot often be independently confirmed.

The BBC's Paul Danahar on the Tunisian border says unconfirmed reports suggest several towns between the border and Tripoli have seen anti-government protests but the roads in between are held by people loyal to Col Gaddafi.

Troops are said to have been sent to Sabratha after demonstrators burned government buildings, according to the Quryna news website.

The pre-Gaddafi Libyan flag was also reportedly raised in Zawiya, 50km (30 miles) west of Tripoli while other unconfirmed reports said protesters had seized control of Misurata, 200km east of Tripoli, after days of fighting.

One Tunisian man who crossed from Libya told our correspondent there was no law in the country and added: "God help them".

TheUnhivedMind - February 24, 2011 04:17 AM (GMT)

Gaddafi's Next Move: Sabotage Oil and Sow Chaos?

By Robert Baer Tuesday, Feb. 22, 2011
http://www.time.com/time/world/article/0,8...2052961,00.html

There's been virtually no reliable information coming out of Tripoli, but a source close to the Gaddafi regime I did manage to get hold of told me the already terrible situation in Libya will get much worse. Among other things, Gaddafi has ordered security services to start sabotaging oil facilities. They will start by blowing up several oil pipelines, cutting off flow to Mediterranean ports. The sabotage, according to the insider, is meant to serve as a message to Libya's rebellious tribes: It's either me or chaos.

Two weeks ago this same man had told me the uprisings in Tunisia and Egypt would never touch Libya. Gaddafi, he said, had a tight lock on all of the major tribes, the same ones that have kept him in power for the past 41 years. The man of course turned out to be wrong, and everything he now has to say about Gaddafi's intentions needs to be taken in that context.
(See "The Rule of Libya's Colonel Gaddafi.")

The source went on and told me that Gaddafi's desperation has a lot to with the fact that he now can only count on the loyalty of his tribe, the Qadhadhfa. And as for the army, as of Monday he only has the loyalty of approximately 5,000 troops. They are his elite forces, the officers all handpicked. Among them is the unit commanded by his second youngest son Khamis, the 32nd Brigade. (The total strength of the regular Libyan army is 45,000.)

My Libyan source said that Gaddafi has told people around him that he knows he cannot retake Libya with the forces he has. But what he can do is make the rebellious tribes and army officers regret their disloyalty, turning Libya into another Somalia. "I have the money and arms to fight for a long time," Gaddafi reportedly said.
(See TIME's special report "The Middle East in Revolt.")

As part of the same plan to turn the tables, Gaddafi ordered the release from prison of the country's Islamic militant prisoners, hoping they will act on their own to sow chaos across Libya. Gaddafi envisages them attacking foreigners and rebellious tribes. Couple that with a shortage of food supplies, and any chance for the rebels to replace Gaddafi will be remote.
(See TIME's exclusive interview with Gaddafi.)

My Libyan source said that in order to understand Gaddafi's state of mind we need to understand that he feels deeply betrayed by the media, which he blames for sparking the revolt. In particular, he blames the Qatari TV station al-Jazeera, and is convinced it targeted him for purely political motivations. He also feels betrayed by the West because it has only encouraged the revolt. Over the weekend, he warned several European embassies that if he falls, the consequence will be a flood of African immigration that will "swamp" Europe.
(Comment on this story.)

Pressed, my Libyan source acknowledged Gaddafi is a desperate, irrational man, and his threats to turn Libya into another Somalia at this point may be mostly bluffing. On the other hand, if Gaddafi in fact enjoys the loyalty of troops he thinks he has, he very well could take Libya to the brink of civil war, if not over.

Baer, a former Middle East CIA field officer, is TIME.com's intelligence columnist and the author of See No Evil and, most recently, The Devil We Know: Dealing with the New Iranian Superpower.

TheUnhivedMind - February 24, 2011 04:20 AM (GMT)

8715

© AP

ثورة الشباب
© AP

© AP

CRAZY
CRAZY
MAUMMAR
© AP

THANK YOU
ALJAZEERA
YOU ARE REAL SUPPORT
TOBRUK YOUTHS
© Reuters

SHEEP!

سجل يا تاريخ
© Reuters

© Reuters

© AP

طرابلس - مباشر

TheUnhivedMind - February 24, 2011 04:21 AM (GMT)

Gaddafis' hidden billions: Dubai banks, plush London pads and Italian water

Libya's oil wealth has been siphoned out of the country by a powerful elite – including Gaddafi and his nine children

Tom Bawden and John Hooper
guardian.co.uk, Tuesday 22 February 2011 21.28 GMT
http://www.guardian.co.uk/world/2011/feb/2...ealth-portfolio

The Gaddafi family could have billions of dollars of funds hidden in secret bank accounts in Dubai, south-east Asia and the Persian Gulf, much of it likely to have come from Libya's vast oil revenues, according to analysis by leading Middle East experts.

Professor Tim Niblock, a specialist in Middle Eastern politics at the University of Exeter, has identified a gap of several billion dollars a year between the amount Libya makes from its oil reserves and government spending – a shortfall he expects has contributed greatly to the wealth of Muammar Gaddafi and his nine children.

"It is very, very difficult to work out with any degree of certainty just how much they have because the ruling elite hides it in all sorts of places," said Niblock, who is also vice president of the British Society for Middle Eastern Studies (BRISMES). "But at the very least it would be several billion dollars, in whatever form and it could potentially be a lot higher although I wouldn't want to predict just how much it might be."

Alistair Newton, senior political analyst at Nomura, the Japanese bank and president of BRISMES, agreed that it was difficult to establish the extent of the Gaddafis' wealth but said he "would be surprised if it didn't run into billions".

Where the Gaddafis have hidden their vast funds is anybody's guess, although Niblock expects that most of it is "in bank accounts and liquid assets in Dubai, the Gulf and south-east Asia" rather than in relatively transparent countries such as the UK, where the Libyan state has invested in London properties and in companies such as Pearson Group, owner of the Financial Times.

In addition to squirrelling away much of their income, the Gaddafis have spent fortunes over the years propping up various African regimes, with Zimbabwe's president, Robert Mugabe, widely acknowledged to be one of the recipients, Niblock said.

In the 1990s Gaddafi is thought to have given money to the Zaghawan tribe in Darfur, "and I suspect some of them are among the African mercenaries fighting the civilians in Libya", Niblock added.

Libya's breakneck growth has enabled the country to build up myriad investments overseas. In addition to the Gaddafis' private holdings, the state is thought to have invested close to £61.8bn in assets across the globe.

Their investments in the UK include an eight-bedroom home in Hampstead, north London, with a swimming pool and suede-lined cinema room. Saif al-Islam Gaddafi, the Libyan leader's second son, bought it in 2009 for £10m.

Most of the state's investments are made by the Libyan Investment Authority (LIA), a "sovereign wealth fund" set up in 2006 to spend the country's oil money, which has an estimated $70bn of assets. LIA bought 3% of Pearson last year for £224m, making it one of the group's biggest shareholders, and had a 0.02% stake in RBS, although this was recently sold.

Its UK property investments include Portman House, a 146,550 sq ft retail complex in Oxford Street, London, which houses retailers such as Boots and New Look, and an office at 14 Cornhill, opposite the Bank of England in the City.

Aside from the Hampstead home, which is not primarily an investment, the only two direct investment projects that the Gaddafi family are known to be involved with both involve water.

In 2009, when Silvio Berlusconi hosted the summit of G8 leading economies, he invited the Libyan leader as a special guest. Speeding towards the earthquake-stricken city of L'Aquila, which Berlusconi had chosen as the venue, Gaddafi's motor cavalcade stopped in a remote town by a river at the bottom of a deep gorge.

Not many people find their way to Antrodoco, let alone a "Brotherly Leader and Guide of the Revolution". Such was the welcome he received that shortly afterwards a Libyan delegation returned to the town to announce that the colonel wanted to plough money into it.

Agreement was reached on a complex involving a luxury spa hotel and water bottling plant. Last September, Antrodocoís mayor, Maurizio Faina, said the €15m (£12.7m) scheme was "firming up".

Whether it survives the current turmoil in Libya, however, remains to be seen. A similar question mark hangs over the established, if struggling, spa town of Fiuggi, south of Rome where pope Boniface VIII, among others, took the waters. In January, the Corriere della Sera reported that Gaddafi's family had formalised a proposal to sink €250m (£211m) into a conference centre with an airstrip and a complex that, once again, involved a spa and a water bottling plant.

The paper said the deal was being brokered, not through Libyan channels, but by the Italo-Iraqi chamber of commerce. Fiuggi's mayor, along with his counterpart from Antrodoco, was a guest at a party thrown by Silvio Berlusconi in honour of the Libyan leader when he visited Rome last September.

Gaddafi and Berlusconi have a famously warm personal relationship. Less well-known, however, is the fact that Berlusconi is in business with one of the Libyan state's investment vehicles.

In June 2009, a Dutch-registered firm controlled by the Libyan Arab Foreign Investment Company, took a 10% stake in Quinta Communications, a Paris-based film production and distribution company. Quinta Communications was founded back in 1990 by Berlusconi in partnership with Tarak Ben Ammar, the nephew of the late Tunisian leader, Habib Bourguiba.

The Italian prime minister has a 22% interest in the company through a Luxembourg-registered subsidiary of Fininvest, the firm at the heart of his sprawling business empire. Last September, the Libyans put a director on the board of Quinta Communications to sit alongside Berlusconiís representatives.

Libyan investors already hold significant interests in several strategic Italian enterprises. They reportedly own around one per cent of Italy's biggest oil company, Eni; the LIA has an acknowledged 2% interest in the aerospace and defence group, Finmeccanica; Lafico is thought to retain more than 2% of Fiat and almost 15% of a quoted telecommunications company, Retelit.

The Libyans also own 22% of the capital of a textile firm, Olcese. Perhaps their best-known investment is a 7.5% stake in the Serie A side Juventus. But undoubtedly the most controversial is another 7.5 per cent interest in Italyís largest bank, Unicredit.

Last September, the bank's chief executive, Alessandro Profumo, walked out after a row over his willingness to let the Libyans build up that stake. The Northern League, Berlusconi's key allies in Italy's rightwing government, was known to be particularly queasy about the emergence of such a powerful Libyan presence.

Experts say if Gaddafi is overthrown, the investments made by Libya's state funds would probably be unaffected, since a new government would have more pressing matters to attend to, and any sudden movements could damage their reputation.

However, it is thought more likely that a new regime in Libya could look to freeze the assets of the Gaddafi family, as the new government in Egypt did with the assets of deposed Hosni Mubarak and his family. Since most of these are held in liquid form – and in country's outside Europe and the US – this would have no significant ramifications for business, they argue.

UK interests

About 150 British companies have established a presence in Libya since the US and Europe lifted economic sanctions in 2004, after the country renounced terrorism, ceased its nuclear weapons programme and handed over two suspects in the Lockerbie bombing case.

The most high profile have been the oil companies, keen to tap Libya's vast reserves of fossil fuels. In a deal brokered in 2007 by Tony Blair, BP signed a £560m exploration agreement allowing it to search for oil and gas, offshore and onshore, in a joint venture with the Libya Investment Corporation. Shell is also exploring for oil in Libya as western companies seek to capitalise on a country with the largest oil reserves in Africa and substantial supplies of gas.

High street retailers such as Marks & Spencer, Next, Monsoon and Accessorize have also set up in the country to serve the growing middle-class population, as oil revenues have "trickled down" into the broader Libyan population.

Companies such as AMEC, an engineering firm, and Biwater, a waste treatment company, have supplied services to Libya, which is using its oil revenues to reshape the country through an infrastructure spending spree that will cost about £310bn over the next decade.

British exports to Libya have soared to about £930m in recent years, while the business momentum in post-sanctions Libya is so great that the economy managed to grow by about 5% last year, while much of the rest of the world struggled.

Many British and foreign companies – including M&S, BP and Shell – are evacuating staff from Libya and it could be some time before they return. Tom Bawden

TheUnhivedMind - February 24, 2011 06:19 PM (GMT)

Remember Gadaffi is a Freemason playing his role in this staged movie script written by the Knights of the Virgin Mary IHS and directed by their Knights of Malta controlling the intelligence networks, media and military. Bin Laden is dead and according to Bhutto before her assassination he was killed. He's either dead from assassination by British Intelligence operatives such as Ahmed Omar Sheikh or by his Kidney disease. Do you realise how bad your Kidneys are if you need Dialysis? Wake up. If Gadaffi was real opposition he'd be mouthing off that its Zionists etc like the leader of Iran usually does.

QUOTE

Gaddafi blames bin Laden for chaos

24 Feb 2011
http://www.thisislondon.co.uk/standard/art...en-for-chaos.do

Libyan leader Muammar Gaddafi has accused al Qaida chief Osama bin Laden of being behind the uprising which has plunged the country into chaos.

He spoke as forces loyal to him struck back against rebels in clashes in cities close to the capital Tripoli.

Army units and militiamen attacked a mosque where many were holding an anti-government sit-in and battled with others who had seized control of an airport. A doctor at the mosque said 10 people were killed.

Col Gaddafi blamed bin Laden for the uprising in a rambling phone call to state TV. The Libyan leader said the more than week-long revolt has been carried out by young men fired up on hallucinogenic pills given to them "in their coffee with milk, like Nescafe".

"Shame on you, people of Zawiya, control your children," he said, addressing residents of the city outside Tripoli where the mosque attack took place.

"They are loyal to bin Laden," he said of those involved in the uprising. What do you have to do with bin Laden, people of Zawiya? They are exploiting young people ... I insist it is bin Laden."

The attacks aimed to push back a revolt that has moved closer to Col Gaddafi's bastion in Tripoli. Most of the eastern half of Libya has already broken away, and parts of Gaddafi's regime have crumbled.

In the latest blow to the Libyan leader, a cousin who is one of his closest aides, Ahmed Gadhaf al-Dam, announced that he has defected to Egypt in protest against the regime's bloody crackdown against the uprising, denouncing what he called "grave violations to human rights and human and international laws".

In Zawiya, 30 miles west of Tripoli, an army unit attacked the city's Souq Mosque, where regime opponents had been camped for days in a protest calling for Col Gaddafi's removal, a witness said.

The soldiers opened fire with automatic weapons and hit the mosque's minaret with fire from an anti-aircraft gun, he said. Some of the young men among the protesters, who were inside the mosque and in a nearby lot, had hunting rifles for protection. A doctor at a field clinic set up at the mosque said he saw the bodies of 10 dead, shot in the head and chest, as well as around 150 wounded.

TheUnhivedMind - February 24, 2011 06:57 PM (GMT)

Gaddafi is hinting to you who's behind this.

QUOTE

Libya: Gaddafi compares himself to the Queen in latest rant

Col Gaddafi compared himself to the Queen on Thursday, saying he would "rule for 57 years" and blamed al-Qaeda for the protests against him in his latest outburst.

4:29PM GMT 24 Feb 2011
http://www.telegraph.co.uk/news/worldnews/...atest-rant.html

The embattled dictator said he was like the Queen, who he says has not been overthrown for 57 years.

"You need to listen to your parents. If people disobey their parents they end up destroying the country, he said. "The same case as in Britain (where) for 57 years the Queen has been ruling. I have been in the same situation.

"I am not in the same position to be able to impose rule on the people. I have become more of a symbolic leader. I have no power, it's the people themselves who have the prerogative."

Gaddafi, speaking by telephone to Libyan television, offered his condolences for those who were killed in the bloodshed and called for calm amongst people he said were fighting amongst themselves and taking hallucinogenic drugs. Saying Osama bin Laden was "the real criminal", Gaddafi urged Libyans not be swayed by the al Qaeda leader.

"Bin Laden ... this is the enemy who is manipulating people," Gaddafi said, adding: "Do not be swayed by bin Laden."

"I only have moral authority," he said

Al-Jazeera television reported heavy fighting there between pro- and anti-government forces and said there had been an undetermined number of casualties.

Ten people were reportedly killed on Thursday and dozens more wounded when pro-government forces attacked the rebellious Az-Zawiyah, around 30 miles from the capital.

A doctor at a field clinic set up at the mosque said he saw the bodies of 10 dead, shot in the head and chest, as well as arond 150 wounded.

The witness said that a day earlier an envoy from Gadhafi had come to the city and warned protesters, "Either leave or you will see a massacre." Az-Zawiyah is a key city near an oil port and refineries.

In the latest blow to the Libyan leader, a cousin who is one of his closest aides, Ahmed Gadhaf al-Dam, announced that he has defected to Egypt in protest against the regime's bloody crackdown against the uprising, denouncing what he called "grave violations to human rights and human and international laws."

TheUnhivedMind - February 24, 2011 07:01 PM (GMT)

© Reuters

© Reuters

© AFP/Getty Images

© Reuters

© Reuters

TheUnhivedMind - February 24, 2011 07:03 PM (GMT)

'Libya is descending into hell... Tripoli airport is absolute chaos'

Benedict Moore-Bridger and Emer Martin
24 Feb 2011
http://www.thisislondon.co.uk/standard/art...solute-chaos.do

Rescued British nationals wept with joy today as they landed at Gatwick airport from Libya and said their ordeal had been "the worst of their lives".

Seventy-eight Britons arrived soon after 7am on a BP-chartered plane, while a Foreign Office-chartered aircraft with 130 adults and two children touched down in Malta this afternoon as it made its way to Britain from Tripoli.

A Ministry of Defence Hercules plane with 51 Britons, a dog, and 13 non-British passport holders was also due to land in Malta later today as the rescue efforts gathered pace.

Passengers on the BP flight described the "hellish" scenes in Libya, and told of "absolute atrocities" being committed. They said thousands were begging to get on flights, with some people camped on the runway in a bid to be first on the rescue planes.

Helena Sheehan, 66, said she had just experienced "some of the worst hours of her life", adding: "Libya is descending into hell. The airport is like nothing I've ever seen in my whole life. It's absolute chaos. There are thousands and thousands of people trying to get out."

Ms Sheehan, a university professor from Dublin, said she had been visiting the country to give a lecture but was "abandoned" by her hosts when trouble broke out.

"Yesterday I heard gunfire and saw burning buildings and I went through Tripoli. I didn't see anyone being killed but I spoke to somebody who said they had buried 17 of their neighbours on Monday and 20 of them on Tuesday."

Jan McKeogh, 63, from Christchurch, New Zealand, said she had heard of "absolute atrocities" being committed that were too upsetting to describe. Ms McKeogh, a teacher at an international school in Tripoli, has suffered massive distress as she tried to contact her family after the devastating Christchurch earthquake as well as escape from Libya. She said: "Monday night was the turning point for us.

Chinooks flew over our house and there were machinegun blasts shortly afterwards. It's usually a very, very safe area but there were absolute maniacs over there. I fear for the people who have been left behind."

Steven and Karen Willoughby from Belfast were on the flight with their seven-month-old son, Darragh. Mr Willoughby, who teaches in an international school in Tripoli, said they had been let down by the Foreign Office.

The scenes in Tripoli were "horrific", he said. "We felt as if we were on our own. It was up to ourselves to get back to London. The Foreign Office kept telling us to get commercial flights but these kept getting cancelled.

"Thousands and thousands are just trying to get home. There was a stampede last night, tear gas was thrown. There has been constant gunfire over the last 72 hours. We didn't feel safe, there were armed men walking the streets and we could hear machineguns. We knew we had to leave."

IT support worker Ewan Black, 51, from Fife in Scotland, slept overnight at Tripoli airport which he described as "a zoo". He said: "The only way of getting official information was through the embassy but the telephone lines were so sporadic that the embassy wasn't always an option.

"I was at the airport for a day and it was a zoo. There were thousands and thousands of people outside trying to get away. I was dragged about by police a bit but I've got here so I'm happy."

Although the British repatriation effort has been widely criticised, scores of Britons have now been evacuated on chartered and military aircraft.

The Foreign Office said fewer than 500 remain in Libya - between 75 and 200 stranded in the desert, fewer than 100 still in Tripoli, and between 100 and 200 in Benghazi waiting to be evacuated by HMS Cumberland which docked there this afternoon.

A spokesman said boarding British nationals "would be a priority", with the plan then to fill remaining spaces with non-British passport holders.

Evacuation efforts

Egypt Plans to send six planes to bring back thousands of its 1.5•million citizens from Libya. Thousands more have returned by land or are waiting to cross border.

China Sent first plane yesterday. Plans under way to bring 2,900 of the 30,000 Chinese in Libya over the border by bus into Tunisia. Three Greek commercial ships were on their way to Benghazi to help evacuate between 13,000 and 15,000 Chinese and 300 Greeks.

Turkey has 25,000 citizens in Libya and is said to be staging its biggest evacuation. A total of 3,000 Turks have been taken on two ships from Benghazi, with 250 taken to Alexandria to fly home.

France Total of 335 citizens and 56 foreigners flown by military planes to Paris. Another plane has been sent to rescue tourists.

TheUnhivedMind - February 24, 2011 07:05 PM (GMT)

Gaddafi's cousin defects to Egypt as Libyan forces attack 'rat protesters'

Nabila Ramdani
24 Feb 2011
http://www.thisislondon.co.uk/standard/art...t-protesters.do

Colonel Gaddafi's cousin defected today in a major blow to the Libyan leader's regime.

As fierce gun battles took place in a key city close to the capital, Ahmed Gadhaf al-Dam, one of the dictator's closest aides and his foreign affairs spokesman, announced that he was deserting to Egypt in protest against the bloody crackdown on civilians, denouncing what he called "grave violations to human rights and human and international laws".

It is the most high level defection to hit the regime so far after several ambassadors, the justice minister and the interior minister all sided with the protesters.

It came as the country descended into civil war with intense fighting in Zawiya, an important oil refinery port 30 miles west of the capital Tripoli.

Gaddafi's forces blasted the minaret of a mosque with anti-aircraft missiles and automatic weapons after scores of anti-government protesters refused to leave the area leading to heavy casualties.

Witnesses reported running gun battles in the streets as the fight for control of Libya edged ever closer to Gaddafi's hold-out in Tripoli. The uprising has seen a large swathe of the eastern half of Libya break away and declare itself free from government control.

In another attack at a small airport outside Misrata, Libya's third largest city 120 miles east of Tripoli, rebels claimed victory over Gaddafi's hired mercenaries.

The dictator's crackdown has so far helped him maintain control of Tripoli, a city that holds about a third of Libya's six million population. But the uprising has divided the country. In the east tribal leaders, residents and military officers have formed local administrations, passing out weapons looted from the security forces' arsenals.

Gaddafi's control has been reduced to the north-west corner around Tripoli, the south-west deserts and parts of the centre.

However the capital is looking increasingly like an armed stronghold. Defences are being built around the city, with tanks moving into strategic positions on all major roads. The majority of the Libyan air force is in the dictator's hands, too.

According to the International Federation for Human Rights, based in Paris, protesters are in control of Sirte, Tobruk, Misrata, Khoms, Tarhounah, Zenten, Zawiya and Zouara.

The Warfalah tribe, one of the country's largest, has backed them with elders denouncing the "hideous crimes of Gaddafi and his regime".

The Libyan People's Committee for General Security broadcast a message on state television in which a loyalist senior officer in Tripoli said: "The cash will be given to anyone who betrays rats trying to bring violence to our country. Our job is to provide stability and security. Our Brother Leader is giving us all the support we need. He wants us to search out the protesters house-to-house and bring them to justice."

The broadcast came as President Barack Obama directed his administration to prepare options, including sanctions to freeze assets and ban travel to the US by Libyan officials.

Nicolas Sarkozy, the French President, raised the possibility of the European Union severing economic ties.

The UN was called on to declare a no-fly zone over Libya to prevent it using warplanes against protesters. The UN High Commissioner for Human Rights, Navi Pillay, said if reports of such air strikes were confirmed then "there's an immediate need for that level of protection".

Meanwhile, Saif al-Islam Gaddafi, the Colonel's son, appeared on state tele-vision to warn Egyptians not to interfere in Libyan affairs. He also said the death toll had been exaggerated and that life in Tripoli was "normal".

TheUnhivedMind - February 24, 2011 07:07 PM (GMT)

PM 'sorry' for Libya rescue delays

24 Feb 2011
http://www.thisislondon.co.uk/standard/art...escue-delays.do

David Cameron has said he he was "extremely sorry" for the delays to the Government's efforts to rescue British nationals stranded in Libya.

Amid heavy criticism of the Foreign Office's slow response to the chaos, the Prime Minister told Sky News: "What I want to say to those people is I am extremely sorry. It is a very difficult picture in Libya. This is not an easy situation."

Mr Cameron offered his apologies as he spoke to broadcasters in Oman on the final leg of a tour of the Middle East this week.

He has been talking to Foreign Secretary William Hague via telephone about the Government's response to the Libya crisis. Mr Hague is chairing a meeting of emergency planning committee Cobra in Whitehall.

In a separate interview with the BBC, the Prime Minister expressed concern for the hundreds of Britons who have been stuck at Tripoli Airport awaiting flights: "Of course I'm incredibly sorry. They've had a difficult time. The conditions at the airport have been extremely poor."

Earlier, the Prime Minister said the world must consider the "full range of options" against Libya if violent repression continues and added that he wanted to tell Colonel Gaddafi: "What on earth do you think you are doing? Stop it!"

Shadow foreign secretary Douglas Alexander said the whole episode had raised "serious questions of ministerial judgment".

The Government should have acted sooner to deploy RAF transport planes to Tripoli and not relied on charter aircraft, he claimed.

He told the BBC: "The first error in the Foreign Office was the assumption that scheduled carriers - that is bmi and British Airways - would continue to fly into Tripoli when all of us could see by Monday evening the deteriorating security situation.

"That meant the British Government didn't act as quickly as other governments to ensure there was a chartered aircraft available to get on to the ground and to get British nationals out."

TheUnhivedMind - February 24, 2011 07:08 PM (GMT)

Obama Sending Clinton to Geneva for Coordinated Response to Libya Uprising

By Nicholas Johnston and Indira Lakshmanan - Feb 24, 2011
http://www.bloomberg.com/news/2011-02-23/o...a-uprising.html

President Barack Obama said the U.S. is examining all options for pressuring Libya to end a violent crackdown on anti-government demonstrators, and he is dispatching Secretary of State Hillary Clinton to Switzerland to work with her counterparts from other nations on a coordinated response.

In his first remarks on the uprising that has split the North African country and prompted a deadly response from Libyan leader Muammar Qaddafi and his loyalists, Obama described “the suffering and bloodshed” as “outrageous” and said those responsible must be held accountable.

“These actions violate international norms and every standard of common decency,” Obama said yesterday at the White House after meeting with Clinton.

While Obama didn't specify what steps he would pursue if Qaddafi doesn't halt reprisals against the opposition, officials at the White House and State Department said earlier they may include punitive measures, such as freezing Libyan assets, that might be taken by the U.S. alone or in conjunction with other nations.

"That certainly includes looking at sanctions that could be imposed, either bilaterally or multilaterally," said Philip J. Crowley, the State Department spokesman. "We believe it's important to coordinate our efforts with the national community, our European allies, the United Nations and organizations like the Arab League."
Geneva Meeting

That is part of the reason for Clinton's trip. Obama said she will attend a session of the United Nations Human Rights Council in Geneva on Feb. 28 to work on a unified approach. Libya is a member of the council, and there have been calls to expel the country from that body.

The U.S. also is continuing to address turmoil elsewhere in the region and is seeking ways to support a peaceful transition in Egypt and Tunisia, where protests have toppled longtime leaders.

The uprising in Libya, which has the largest proven oil reserves in Africa, has been the most violent yet of the anti- government protests that have swept across the Middle East and North Africa over the past six weeks. Clashes between anti- government rebels and Qaddafi's forces have resulted in the deaths of about 300 people, according to Human Rights Watch. Qaddafi warned Feb. 22 that he will fight the rebellion to his death.
U.S. Personnel

The administration hasn't moved yet to take direct action against Qaddafi. That may be because U.S. officials are concerned about possible retaliation against American personnel still in the country, said Elliott Abrams, a deputy national security adviser under President George W. Bush.

The U.S. is rushing to evacuate its citizens from Libya. A ferry scheduled to leave Tripoli yesterday with U.S. diplomats and family members was delayed by bad weather.

Crowley said Assistant Secretary of State Jeffrey Feltman has spoken with Libyan officials in recent days and "requested the Libyan government's cooperation as we remove our citizens and our diplomats and their families from Libya."

Once U.S. personnel are safe, the White House should move against the Qaddafi regime, Abrams said.
Freezing Accounts

Abrams, now a fellow with the Council on Foreign Relations in Washington, said U.S. actions might include freezing the country's bank accounts so Qaddafi loyalists can't raid them, imposing an international arms embargo on Libya and creating a no-fly zone over the country enforced by the U.S. and NATO or European Union air forces.

"I don't see any reason for us not to begin that discussion," Abrams said. "You may run into Russian and Chinese vetoes, but the discussion itself would show how much we are concerned about this use of violence against the population."

Clinton said at a news conference earlier yesterday that “everything is on the table.”

U.S. sanctions on Libya were lifted by Bush in 2004 in return for Qaddafi’s agreement to dismantle his country’s program to pursue chemical, biological and nuclear weapons.

The sanctions, imposed in 1986 because of Libyan involvement in terrorist attacks, limited U.S. oil development there, restricted air service between the two countries and froze about $1.3 billion in Libyan assets.

Business Impact

Among the U.S. companies that do business in Libya now are Marathon Oil Corp., ConocoPhillips and Halliburton Co. all based in Houston; New York-based Hess Corp. and Los Angeles-based Occidental Petroleum Corp. Democratic Senator John Kerry of Massachusetts, chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee, has urged U.S. and international oil companies to cease operations in Libya.

The administration is monitoring oil markets for any effect on prices from the unrest in Libya and its impact on the economy, Austan Goolsbee, chairman of Obama’s Council of Economic Advisers, told reporters today.

Echoing remarks by Treasury Secretary Timothy Geithner made yesterday, Goolsbee said the U. S. recovery can withstand the oil price increases that have occurred so far because of the turmoil.

“Anything like we have seen so far, neither we nor the private sector has forecast that would derail our recovery,” Goolsbee said at a breakfast today organized by the Christian Science Monitor.
Oil Prices

Crude in New York today surged to the highest level in 29 months as Libya’s uprising reduced supplies from Africa’s third- biggest oil-producing country.

Futures climbed as much as 5.4 percent on estimates that the revolt caused Libya to lose as much as two-thirds of its oil output. The cuts create “significant upside risk” to prices and any further disruptions could create severe shortages in global oil markets, Goldman Sachs Group Inc. said.

Crude oil for April delivery rose $1.24, or 1.3 percent, to $99.34 a barrel at 10:14 a.m. on the New York Mercantile Exchange. The contract reached $103.41, the highest intraday price since Sept. 29, 2008. Futures are up 24 percent from a year ago.

Obama said yesterday the U.S. is applying the same “core principles” to Libya as it did in response to the popular uprisings that have toppled leaders in Tunisia and Egypt, as well as protests in nations across the Middle East and North Africa.

Those include condemnation of violence against protesters and support for the right of citizens to gather, speak freely and determine their own destiny, he said.

“These are human rights,” Obama said. “They are not negotiable. They must be respected in every country.”

To contact the reporters on this story: Nicholas Johnston in Washington at njohnston3@bloomberg.net; Indira Lakshmanan in Washington at ilakshmanan@bloomberg.net

To contact the editor responsible for this story: Mark Silva at msilva34@bloomberg.net

TheUnhivedMind - February 24, 2011 07:10 PM (GMT)

Qaddafi Holds Tripoli as Eastern Cities Fall to Opponents

By Benjamin Harvey, Maram Mazen and Massoud A. Derhally - Feb 24, 2011
http://www.bloomberg.com/news/2011-02-24/l...ze-in-east.html

Libya's Muammar Qaddafi, who has lost control of much of the country's oil-rich east, appealed to citizens to end violence as his forces stepped up a crackdown on opponents and more than 100 people were reportedly shot dead.

Qaddafi blamed the uprising against his 41-year rule on "drugged kids" and al-Qaeda, speaking by telephone on state television today for the first time since a Feb. 22 speech in which he vowed to fight "until his last drop of blood." He said he regretted the deaths during the unrest.

"You want to change the government -- you can do it any day through the revolutionary committees," Qaddafi said, referring to his own state structures. He said protesters had no demands of their own and were echoing those of Osama bin Laden.

As he was speaking, anti-government opponents were consolidating their control over eastern cities, while foreign governments began discussing possible actions and advanced efforts to extract their citizens from what fleeing Egyptians said was a bloodbath.

The unrest in Africa's third-biggest oil producer sent crude advancing for a sixth day. Brent crude reached a 30-month high of almost $120 a barrel in London. Crude for April delivery rose to $103.41 on the New York Mercantile Exchange, the highest intraday price since Sept. 29, 2008. The Stoxx 600 capped its longest losing streak in almost five months.

Markets are responding to concern that crude supplies may be further affected if the struggle against Qaddafi becomes more protracted or violent, possibly leading to civil war. Barclays Capital estimated that about 1 million barrels of daily oil production may have been cut.
'A Massacre'

More than 100 people were killed in the western town of Az- Zawiyah as forces loyal to Qaddafi attacked protesters, Al Jazeera television said.

Egyptians returning home through a Libyan checkpoint that had fallen to Qaddafi's opponents said today that his supporters, most of them foreign mercenaries, were attacking anyone out on the streets of the capital, Tripoli.

"It's a massacre in there," Mohamed Yehia, 23, said after entering the Egyptian border town of Salloum. "He is crazy. The world must know what he's doing to his people."

Protesters calling for regime change in Libya and elsewhere in the region have been driven by a combination of economic complaints such as high prices and scarce jobs, and the repression of political and civil rights by leaders in power for decades. In the past month, the presidents of Tunisia and Egypt have been toppled through popular revolts.
Civilian Committees

In the east, Qaddafi's opponents organized committees of civilians to run and defend their cities with the help of troops who deserted his forces. In Benghazi, the country's second- largest city, anti-Qaddafi militias in front of the courthouse were collecting weapons from people who had seized them from army supplies, a local resident said by phone, declining to be identified due to concern over reprisals.

Anti-government protesters appeared to be in control of the entire eastern coastline, Al Jazeera reported today, as clashes between pro- and anti-government forces broke out in other cities, including Sabha in the southwest, and Sabhatha and Az- Zawiyah, both west of Tripoli.

Major General Suleiman Mahmoud, commander of the Libyan army in Tobruk, told Al Jazeera that his forces have deserted Qaddafi and are siding with local residents. "We are supporting the Libyan people," he said in a phone interview with the channel. He said Tobruk was peaceful and that residents were organizing themselves.
Civil War

"The possibility of civil war only exists if Qaddafi stays," Mohammed Ali Abdallah, deputy head of the National Front for the Salvation of Libya, the main exiled opposition group, said today.

Qaddafi has led Libya since coming to power in a military coup in 1969, making him the world's longest-serving non-royal leader. He refers to himself as "leader and guide of the revolution," saying in the Feb. 22 speech that because he isn't a president or head of state, he can't step down.

Qaddafi "has always been an 'unusual' person: erratic, unpredictable and unconventional," George Lane, a former U.S. ambassador to Yemen who had headed the U.S. Embassy's office in Benghazi, said today by e-mail. Lane said he met Qaddafi during the 1969 coup. "In some ways he was 'crazy like a fox.' Now he sounds like he may be out of control," Lane said.

The border crossing at Salloum swelled with people trying to escape the growing violence, including thousands of Egyptians as well as 400 Chinese citizens transported by their government from Libya in buses.
'Killing Anyone'

"The mercenaries are in the streets and they're killing anyone who leaves his house," said Nabil Abdel Raouf, 35, an Egyptian construction worker who lived in the eastern Libyan town of Derna, about 240 kilometers (150 miles) from the border. "My brother and cousins have been trying to leave Tripoli for four days, but they're not able to."

Italian Foreign Minister Franco Frattini told parliament yesterday there are "credible" reports that 1,000 people have been killed. Human Rights Watch says at least 300 people have died in the 10 days since the crackdown on protesters began.

“The danger is Qaddafi refuses to go, holes up somewhere, and a bloody struggle ensues to dislodge him,” said Fawaz Gerges, director of the Middle East Center at the London School of Economics.

The violence in Libya quickly surpassed unrest in other Arab countries engulfed by demonstrations. In his speech this week, the Libyan leader called the protesters “rats” and “cockroaches,” warning them to stay off the streets and reading a litany of offenses that would justify the death penalty.
Envoys Quit

Outside the capital, and in Libyan diplomatic missions around the world, cracks in the regime were widening. More than a dozen Libyan envoys have resigned since the uprising began on Feb. 17, including its chief diplomats to the United Nations and to the U.S. World leaders have begun to join Libyans defecting from the regime in calling for international intervention.

Nuri al-Mismari, Qaddafi’s former protocol chief, told Al Jazeera today that Qaddafi “is trying to divide us so that he can be in power but this will not happen.”

Saif al-Islam Qaddafi, Qaddafi’s second-oldest son, denied on state television today reports that warplanes had been used in attacks. One of his brothers, Saadi, in an interview in the London-based Financial Times, contradicted him, saying ships and aircraft had been used to bombard ammunition depots in Benghazi. The New York Times cited an officer as saying three Libyan naval ships were ordered to sail to Benghazi and attack it, and that the crews were torn over what to do.
Al-Qaeda ‘Emirate’

Deputy Foreign Minister Khalid Kayem warned on state television late yesterday that al-Qaeda was behind killings in Benghazi. He said the group had established an “emirate” in the city of Derna and would attack Europe if not stopped.

The SITE Monitoring Group, which checks the websites of Islamic militant groups, said yesterday that al-Qaeda’s North African arm, Al-Qaeda in the Islamic Maghreb, expressed solidarity with anti-government forces in Libya and urged Muslims everywhere to support the uprising. “We will do whatever we can to help,” SITE quoted the group as saying.

Libya, with a population of about 6.3 million, pumps 1.6 million barrels of oil a day, selling most of it to Europe, according to Bloomberg estimates. That’s about 1.8 percent of world supply. It’s the third-biggest producer in Africa after Nigeria and Angola, while Libyan reserves of 44.3 billion barrels are the continent’s largest, according to BP Plc’s Statistical Review of World Energy.
Bloodshed ‘Outrageous’

President Barack Obama said he’s sending Secretary of State Hillary Clinton to the UN Human Rights Council in Geneva on Feb. 28 to meet with other foreign ministers to work on a coordinated response.

“The suffering and bloodshed is outrageous” and those responsible must be held accountable, Obama said after meeting with Clinton at the White House.

Sanctions will “have to be looked at” if the violence continues, U.K. Prime Minister David Cameron told the BBC today. “Britain, with her allies, should be looking at all of the options for the future.”

Evacuations have been complicated by the closing of all airports in Libya except Tripoli’s and by obstruction by Libyan authorities, who have denied requests for extra flights and prevented evacuees from boarding ships. Rough seas delayed the departure of a U.S.-chartered ferry to evacuate Americans from Tripoli, which was due to leave port yesterday.

Turkish Foreign Minister Ahmet Davutoglu said that Libya denied requests for extra flights to evacuate Turks from the country, prompting Turkey to begin the biggest sea evacuation in its history. Turkey has repatriated 5,516 of its estimated 25,000 citizens from Libya so far, his ministry said today.

Ships Chartered

China chartered four passenger ships from Greece and Malta and 100 buses from Egypt to move 4,600 of its estimated 30,000 nationals away from the violence, its Foreign Ministry said.

Overnight, Cameron ordered a Royal Air Force C-130 Hercules to fly from Malta to Tripoli to collect remaining British citizens from the city. Two planes left Tripoli, with a third to follow, carrying at least 260 people, the Foreign Office said. A Royal Navy frigate was taking Britons from Benghazi to Malta.

Libya is the latest regime in the region to experience a popular uprising following the toppling of governments in Tunisia and Egypt. Demonstrations have also occurred in Yemen and Bahrain, prompting Saudi Arabia, the world’s biggest oil exporter, to introduce moves intended to increase living standards. King Abdullah yesterday announced at least $11 billion in spending increases on social security and housing.

To contact the reporters on this story: Benjamin Harvey in Istanbul at bharvey11@bloomberg.net; Maram Mazen in Salloum, Egypt, at mmazen@bloomberg.net; Massoud A. Derhally in Beirut at mderhally@bloomberg.net.

To contact the editor responsible for this story: Andrew J. Barden at barden@bloomberg.net.

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: Bahrain protests: Demonstrators occupy Pearl

Title: Bahrain protests: Demonstrators occupy Pearl Description: Square

TheUnhivedMind - February 17, 2011 12:57 AM (GMT)

Bahrain protests: Demonstrators occupy Pearl Square

The disturbances in Bahrain are part of a wave of unrest across the region

16 February 2011 Last updated at 17:57
http://www.bbc.co.uk/news/world-middle-east-12477620

Thousands of people have occupied the centre of the Bahraini capital on a third day of anti-government protests.

The numbers of those who had camped out overnight in Manama's Pearl Square were swelled by many who joined the protests throughout the day.

Security forces have pulled back to ease tensions after previous days' clashes left two dead and dozens injured in the Gulf kingdom.

The protesters are calling for wide-ranging political reforms.

Bahrain is a key US ally, hosting the US Navy's Fifth Fleet. The US has expressed concern at the violence and called for restraint.

Wednesday saw more than 1,000 people attend the funeral in Manama of a man who was killed on Tuesday during clashes with police at the funeral of another protester. Mourners chanted slogans calling for the removal of the government.

Police officers are reported to have been detained over the two deaths, with the country's interior minister describing the deaths as "regrettable" and extending condolences to the families of the deceased.

The disturbances in Bahrain - where the Shia Muslim majority has been ruled by a Sunni Muslim royal family since the 18th Century - are part of a wave of anti-government unrest that has swept the Middle East.

The Bahraini demonstrators say they want:
political prisoners to be released more jobs and housing the creation of a more representative and empowered parliament a new constitution written by the people a new cabinet that does not include Prime Minister Sheikh Khalifa Bin Salman Al Khalifa, who has been in office for 40 years

Many had to return to work after Tuesday's public holiday to mark the Prophet Muhammad's birthday, but correspondents say the momentum remains with the protesters so far.

In a rare TV appearance on Tuesday, Bahrain's king, Sheikh Hamad bin Issa Al Khalifa, expressed regret about the deaths of protesters and said he would continue reforms begun in 2002 when the emirate became a constitutional monarchy.
Opposition boycott

Since independence from the UK in 1971, tensions between the Sunni elite and the less affluent Shia have frequently caused civil unrest. Shia groups say they are marginalised, subject to unfair laws, and repressed.

The conflict lessened in 1999 when Sheikh Hamad became emir. He freed political prisoners, allowed exiles to return and abolished a law permitting the government to detain individuals without trial for three years.

He also began a cautious process of democratic reform. In 2001, voters approved a National Action Charter that would transform Bahrain into a constitutional monarchy. The next year, Sheikh Hamad proclaimed himself king and decreed that a National Assembly be formed.

There was also greater protection of democracy and human rights. Although political parties were banned, "political societies" could operate.

Landmark elections were held in 2002, but the opposition boycotted them because the appointed upper chamber of parliament, the Shura Council, was given equal powers to the elected lower chamber, the Council of Representatives.

TheUnhivedMind - February 18, 2011 03:18 AM (GMT)

Bahrain urged to show restraint after bloody clampdown

Protesters prayed for injured comrades outside Salmaniya hospital in Manama late on Thursday

18 February 2011 Last updated at 01:02
http://www.bbc.co.uk/news/world-middle-east-12501277

Washington has urged Bahrain to show restraint in dealing with protesters and called for meaningful reform in the small Gulf state kingdom.

Security forces cleared hundreds of demonstrators from a square in the capital Manama on Thursday, leaving four people dead and hundreds injured.

Prayers and funerals are due to take place in the city on Friday.

A pro-government demonstration is also expected to be held, just hours after Bahrain banned public gatherings.

Tanks prowled the streets of Manama on Thursday as the military was ordered to tighten its grip.

Soldiers would take every measure necessary to preserve security, the interior ministry said.

The use of the military is a course that puts the Bahraini royal family into direct confrontation with members of the Shia Muslim majority who make up the bulk of the protesters, the BBC's Middle East correspondent, Jon Leyne, reports from Cairo.

Since independence from the UK in 1971, tensions between the Sunni elite and the less affluent Shia have frequently caused civil unrest. Shia groups say they are marginalised, subject to unfair laws and repressed.
'Deep concern'
Continue reading the main story
“
Start Quote

The country was walking on the brink of a sectarian abyss, so it [the police operation to clear protesters] was a very important step that had to happen”
Sheikh Khaled bin Ahmed al-Khalifa
Bahraini foreign minister

Washington is watching with growing concern as unrest and violence spread across the Middle East, threatening its regional interests, BBC state department correspondent Kim Ghattas reports from Washington.

While Bahrain is tiny, with a population of less than one million, it is home to the US navy's Fifth Fleet and is near another key US ally in the region, Saudi Arabia.

Because of its Shia majority, it is seen by other Arab Gulf states as vulnerable to influence from Iran.

US Secretary of State Hillary Clinton telephoned her Bahraini counterpart, Sheikh Khaled bin Ahmed al-Khalifa, to tell him of her "deep concern" over events.

She urged him to make sure that the prayers and funerals expected on Friday were not marred by violence.

On a visit to the kingdom in December, Mrs Clinton said she was impressed by the commitment the government had shown to walking on the democratic path.

She has not retracted that statement in the wake of the violence but said Bahrain needed real and meaningful reforms, our state department correspondent notes.

But the Bahraini foreign minister argued that police action was necessary to pull the country back from the "brink of a sectarian abyss".

"Police took every care possible," he told a news conference in Manama.

US Secretary of Defense Robert Gates, for his part, said the US had consistently, publicly and privately encouraged political and economic reform in the Arab world.

Countries, he said, now had to "move on with it".

UK Foreign Secretary William Hague also called on Bahrain's government to exercise restraint, as did UN Secretary General Ban Ki-moon.

The army in Bahrain announced it had taken control of key parts of the capital and restored control after the security forces cleared protesters from the area around Pearl Square.

Abdul Jalil Khalil, a senior member of the main Shia party Wefaq, said the deaths and injuries were an "atrocity".

"Whoever took the decision to attack the protest was aiming to kill," he told Reuters news agency.

Ibrahim Sharif, of Bahrain's secular Waad party, told the BBC protests would continue until the country became a "proper, functioning, constitutional democracy".

"We are going to do what's necessary to change this into a democratic country, even if some of us lose our lives," he said.

TheUnhivedMind - February 18, 2011 03:33 AM (GMT)

Bahrain Army Moves to End Protests as Unrest Spreads

By Glen Carey - Feb 18, 2011
http://www.bloomberg.com/news/2011-02-17/b...groups-say.html

Bahrain’s army deployed yesterday in the capital, Manama, firing teargas shells, buckshot and rubber bullets to quell an uprising by pro-democracy protesters as unrest spread across the Middle East.

At least five people have been killed since demonstrations against the Sunni ruling Al-Khalifa family began on Feb. 14. Bahrain’s foreign minister said protesters were warned before police attacked a rally in the center of the capital.

“They started firing from the bridge without any warning, then they started firing from their cars,” said Hussein Ali, 42, who was at a rally site at 3 a.m. yesterday when security forces arrived. “There were women and children in tents. I saw cars running over tents. It was terrifying, a nightmare. Small children and women were falling over.”

Security forces attacked crowds of mostly Shiite Muslim protesters who had gathered overnight at the city's Pearl Roundabout traffic junction to call for a constitutional monarchy and a change of government. Crude oil rose as much as 1.8 percent yesterday in New York.

"The country was on the brink of a sectarian abyss," Foreign Minister Sheikh Khalid bin Ahmed Al-Khalifa said at a press conference. "It was a very important step that had to happen. Police took every care possible."
He called the deaths "unfortunate."
Bridge Attack

The dissent in Bahrain, home to the U.S. Navy's Fifth Fleet, follows the toppling of autocratic rulers by popular movements in Egypt and Tunisia and marks the spread of unrest into the Persian Gulf, where most of the Middle East's oil is produced. The past week has also seen anti-government protests and clashes in Libya, Africa's biggest holder of crude oil reserves, and Yemen, a producer of liquefied natural gas.

"I was sleeping in a tent when the police started firing teargas," said Raed Abdullah, 31. "They fired from a bridge above us."

The Obama administration said Bahrain must hold accountable those who used violence against protesters demanding more rights.

"The United States believes strongly that violence is not an appropriate reaction" to peaceful demonstrators making "reasonable demands" to participate in the government, White House press secretary Jay Carney, said at a briefing.

Deep Concerns

Secretary of State Hillary Clinton told reporters in Washington yesterday that she called her counterpart in Bahrain and conveyed "deep concerns about the actions of the security forces." She said she emphasized that planned funerals and prayers today should "not be marred by violence."

"I stressed the need to seriously engage all sectors of society in a constructive, consultative dialogue," Clinton said after a closed-door meeting with lawmakers on Capitol Hill. "There have been reform steps taken, which we want to see continue."

U.S. Defense Secretary Robert Gates called his counterpart in Bahrain, Crown Prince Salman bin Hamad Al-Khalifa, to discuss the protests, said Geoff Morrell, a spokesman for the Pentagon. Morrell declined to provide details of the call.

Bahrain's military said it took control of large parts of the city and told people not to congregate in the main public areas.

Last night, hundreds of protesters defied the order and camped in front of the emergency wing of the Salmaniya Hospital, sleeping on cardboard boxes and hospital beds. Others chanted into the night, calling for the fall of the regime. The protesters will join funeral processions today from the hospital at 8 a.m. Bahrain time.
Crude Oil

Crude for March delivery rose $1.37 to settle at $86.36 a barrel on the New York Mercantile Exchange, the biggest one-day increase since Jan. 31. Futures have gained 12 percent in the past year. The cost of insuring Bahrain's debt through credit- default swaps climbed 17 basis points to 285, according to CMA prices. The Bloomberg GCC 200 Index of Persian Gulf shares declined for a fourth day, losing 0.2 percent.

Motor racing series GP2 Asia canceled a planned race at Bahrain's international circuit this weekend after the violence, it said in a statement on its website. The same venue, in the desert south of Manama, is due to host the opening round of the Formula One season next month. GP2 is a junior series with ties to Formula One, the world's most-watched motor racing series.

Bahrain's mainly Shiite Al-Wefaq opposition movement said yesterday it will resign from parliament to protest the police crackdown. Mohamed Almizal, a senior official of the group, said the government should resign after using "brutal violence." About 50 security officers were injured after being attacked by demonstrators, according to the Interior Ministry.
Libyan Deaths

Bahrain's Shiites, who make up about 60 to 70 percent of the Bahraini population, claim discrimination by the country's Sunni ruling family and its supporters.

In Libya, ruled by Muammar Qaddafi for more than 40 years, demonstrators yesterday demanded the government's overthrow and clashed with security forces.

Libyan security forces arrested at least 14 people for trying to organize an anti-government rally, Human Rights Watch said in a statement. Nineteen people have been killed in clashes in Benghazi and Al-Bida in Libya, Al Arabiya television reported yesterday, without saying where it got the information.

Yemen's capital, Sanaa, has been the venue for protests for the past seven days against the president of 32 years, Ali Abdullah Saleh, who has cooperated with the U.S. against al- Qaeda. Algeria, which has also seen anti-government protests, will lift a 19-year-old state of emergency this month, the official Algeria Presse Service said.

Iran Protest

Iran deployed security forces to suppress a Feb. 14 rally by opposition movements to show solidarity with the Arab revolts.

Many Shiite Bahrainis retain cultural and family ties with Iran, while the country's Sunni ruling family has links with Saudi Arabia, Iran's main regional rival and the biggest oil producer. Sunni-ruled Saudi Arabia has a Shiite minority in the Eastern Province, where most of its oil is produced.

Political risks to oil supply are "high and rising" amid unrest in the Middle East, according to a JPMorgan Chase & Co. report. Oil prices also rose following reports from Iranian state-run Press TV that two of the country's warships were heading for Egypt's Suez Canal. The Suez Canal Authority yesterday said that no Iranian naval vessels had been granted permission to sail through the waterway.
Training Exercise

The Iranian vessels are meant to be on a cadet training cruise and have a right to use the canal, Gary Sick, a member of the U.S. National Security Council under presidents Gerald Ford, Jimmy Carter and Ronald Reagan and the principal White House aide on Iran during the 1979-81 hostage crisis, said in a telephone interview.

“As far as I know, this is not an attack on anyone,” he said. “It’s hard to see how two ships on a training cruise through Jeddah and making a stop through the Red Sea is a threat to Israel.” The Israeli foreign minister “would certainly complain if Israel was not allowed to pass through the Suez by a successor government that was very critical of Israeli policies, and he’d be very right,” Sick said.

To contact the reporter on this story: Glen Carey in Riyadh at gcarey8@bloomberg.net

To contact the editor responsible for this story: Andrew J. Barden at barden@bloomberg.net.

TheUnhivedMind - February 18, 2011 11:38 PM (GMT)

Saudi Arabia Risks Shiite Unrest in Wake of Bahrain

By Henry Meyer - Feb 18, 2011
http://www.bloomberg.com/news/2011-02-17/s...or-bahrain.html

Violent unrest in Bahrain provoked by discontent among the majority-Shiite Muslim population risks spilling over to their co-religionists in neighboring Saudi Arabia, which holds one-fifth of the world’s oil, analysts say.

Bahrain, a close Saudi ally which is ruled by the Sunni Muslim Al Khalifa family, has been rocked by protests since Feb. 14 that have led to calls for the government’s dismissal after at least five people died as security forces cracked down on the demonstrators.

Saudi Arabia has a Shiite minority concentrated in its eastern oil-producing hub that also complains of discrimination. Any spread of unrest into the world’s biggest oil exporter risks pushing crude prices above the 2 1/2-year high reached this week. Authorities arrested 38 people after clashes involving Shiite pilgrims in the holy city of Medina two months ago.

A member of the Saudi royal family, Prince Talal Bin Abdul Aziz, warned in an interview with BBC Arabic TV that unless King Abdullah introduces more political participation and human rights, Saudi Arabia may also see protests.

“Unless problems facing Saudi Arabia are solved, what happened and is still happening in some Arab countries, including Bahrain, could spread to Saudi Arabia, even worse,” Prince Talal told the London-based TV broadcaster in an interview aired late yesterday.

Credit-Default Swaps

Credit-default swaps on Saudi Arabia surged today on concern political unrest in Bahrain will spread to the kingdom.

Swaps on Saudi Arabia, used as a measure of confidence in the country although it has no debt, jumped 10.5 basis points to 137, the highest since July 2009, according to CMA. Contracts on Bahrain rose for a fifth day, climbing 18 basis points to 302, the highest in 17 months.

A senior leader of Bahrain's Shiites, Abdulwahab Hussain, said today the government must resign and parliament shut down pending a transition to democracy. He spoke in an address to about 10,000 demonstrators, the biggest crowd in five days of protests.

"There is tension right now and now you have the added situation in Bahrain that may ignite the spark," said Christoph Wilcke, an expert on the country at New York-based Human Rights Watch, by phone from Munich. "This anger has the potential to spill over."
16 Miles Away

Unrest in Bahrain, which is linked to Saudi Arabia by a 26- kilometer (16-mile) causeway and whose capital, Manama, is only a four-hour-drive from its Saudi counterpart, Riyadh, has in the past spread across the border. In 1995, the Saudi government arrested a large number of Shiites in its Eastern Province on suspicion of involvement in protests taking place in Bahrain, according to Human Rights Watch.

Saudi Foreign Minister Prince Saud al-Faisal and counterparts from other members of the six-nation Gulf Cooperation Council pledged to Bahrain they will stand "united in the face of challenges" and wished it "continued progress, security and stability" at an emergency meeting late yesterday in Manama, the official Saudi Press Agency said.

The Saudi benchmark Tadawul All Share Index fell 1.8 percent, the most this month, on Feb. 16 as protests in Bahrain escalated.
'Second-Class Citizens'

"The events in Bahrain are being followed very closely by both the government and the citizens of Saudi Arabia," Ibrahim AlMugaiteeb, president of the Human Rights First Society, in the Saudi city of al-Khobar, said by e-mail. "The Saudi government has to treat the Shiites the same way Sunnis are treated in the kingdom if they want long-term stability."

Tawfiq AlSaif, a prominent Shiite activist from the eastern region of Qatif, called last year for the government to appoint Shiites as ministers and ambassadors as a first step toward ending their treatment as "second-class citizens."

Saudi Arabia's royal family maintains a strict version of Sunni Islam. It prohibits the public observance of other religions and limits the practice of other branches of Islam.

It has a Shiite minority estimated at between 10 and 15 percent of the population, according to Human Rights Watch. Most live in the Eastern Province, where state-owned Saudi oil company Saudi Aramco is based, and in which they constitute 75 percent of the population.
'Significant Discrimination'

The U.S. State Department noted in a human rights report on Saudi Arabia published in 2009 that Shiites in the kingdom face "significant political, economic, legal, social and religious discrimination condoned by the government."

The latest religious violence broke out in Medina on Dec. 16 during the Shiite festival of Ashura, injuring several people. In February 2009, clashes between Shiite pilgrims and religious police led to the arrest of some of the pilgrims and sparked disturbances in towns in the east of the country.

In addition to religious restrictions that forbid them from building mosques and discourage prayer meetings, Shiites are taught only about Sunni Islam at schools, are often disqualified as witnesses in court, can't serve as judges in ordinary courts and are excluded from high-ranking government or security posts, according to Human Rights Watch.

While Saudi King Abdullah has taken some steps by promoting dialogue between the different strands of Islam, he hasn't taken any concrete action to combat discrimination and harassment of the Shiites, said Wilcke. Now that the 86-year-old monarch is out of the country, recuperating after medical treatment in the U.S., Interior Minister Prince Nayef bin Abdulaziz, who is effectively in charge in his absence, could take a harder line, he said.
Iranian Influence

There are concerns that Shiite-led Iran, Saudi Arabia's main regional rival, is backing the protests in Bahrain, Sratfor, an Austin, Texas-based intelligence-consulting group, said in an e-mailed statement yesterday.

Iran has increased its regional influence since a Shiite- led government took power by winning elections in Iraq after the U.S.-led overthrow of Saddam Hussein. Kuwait, which has a 30 percent Shiite minority, last year broke up what it said was an Iranian spy cell, prompting Saudi authorities to call for U.S. allies in the Persian Gulf to step up security cooperation.

Saudi religious leaders have in the past accused Iran of encouraging violence by Shiite minority groups in the region. In November 2009, Saudi Arabia's grand mufti, Sheikh Abdul Aziz al-Sheikh, said the Iranians were "cooperating in sin and aggression" by backing Shiite insurgents in Yemen in a conflict that drew in the Saudi army.

U.S. Diplomats

Still, U.S. diplomats in Bahrain, cited in a 2008 cable released by WikiLeaks, said they had found "no convincing evidence of Iranian weapons or government money here since at least the mid-1990s." They were responding to charges by Bahraini authorities that local Shiite opposition groups were supported by Iran.

Saudi Arabia has condemned popular uprisings against Middle Eastern rulers this year, and backed Egyptian President Hosni Mubarak until he was overthrown by protest movements last week. Iran welcomed Mubarak's fall and also that of Tunisia's Zine el Abidine Ben Ali, whose Jan. 14 flight from the country after a month of demonstrations ignited the unrest in the region.

The potential for protests in Bahrain to oust the kingdom's Sunni rulers is a major strategic threat to Saudi Arabia, said Ayham Kamel, an analyst at the Eurasia Group in Washington, which monitors political risk.

"Inspired by their counterparts in Bahrain, Shias will seek greater social, economic, and religious equality," he said. "Regionally, Saudi Arabia's stability is at risk if the Shia opposition succeeds in toppling the Al Khalifa regime."

To contact the reporter on this story: Henry Meyer in Moscow at hmeyer4@bloomberg.net.

To contact the editors responsible for this story: Willy Morris at wmorris@bloomberg.net; Andrew J. Barden at barden@bloomberg.net.

TheUnhivedMind - February 18, 2011 11:41 PM (GMT)

Bahrain troops 'fire on crowds'

Dr Bassem Deif, an orthopaedic surgeon at Salmaniya hospital, is treating wounded protesters

18 February 2011 Last updated at 22:33
http://www.bbc.co.uk/news/world-middle-east-12509658

Bahraini security forces have opened fire on anti-government protesters, witnesses and opposition activists say.

The protesters were fired on after they had gathered in the capital Manama from the funerals of demonstrators killed in a security crackdown earlier this week.

Witnesses said the army fired live rounds and tear gas, and officials said at least 120 people had been hurt.

In an attempt to defuse the crisis, King Hamad promised a national dialogue "with all parties".

An official statement said that Crown Prince Sheikh Salman bin Hamad al-Khalifa had been given "all the powers to fulfil the hopes and aspirations of all gracious citizens from all sections".

The prince, who is also deputy supreme commander of the army, earlier called for everyone to withdraw from the streets.

Many of the protesters in Manama are calling for the overthrow of the royal family.

Meanwhile, US President Barack Obama said he was deeply concerned about reports of violence in Bahrain, Libya and Yemen.

"The United States condemns the use of violence by governments against peaceful protesters in those countries and wherever else it may occur," he said.

In a separate development, the United Kingdom said it had decided to revoke some of its arms export licences to Bahrain in light of the current situation there.
Sectarian divide

The BBC's Caroline Hawley, in Manama, says the funeral procession of one of the dead protesters turned into another anti-government demonstration.

The mourners were trying to make their way to the Salmaniya Hospital, where their injured colleagues are being treated.

But they came under fire as they passed close to Pearl Square, which has been sealed off by the army for the past day to prevent further large-scale demonstrations.

An eyewitness told al-Jazeera TV that the authorities gave no warning.

"They just started shooting us. Now there is more than 20 injured in the hospital. One guy has already passed away because he got shot in his head," said the witness.

One protester, 27-year-old bank clerk Ali al-Haji, told AP news agency that live ammunition was used.

"People started running in all directions and bullets were flying, I saw people getting shot in the legs, chest and one man was bleeding from his head," he said.

AP earlier reported that soldiers had fired anti-aircraft guns over the heads of the protesters.

Medical officials told the BBC that more than 120 people had been admitted to hospital after the clashes, many suffering the effects of tear gas, some with broken bones and one person who had been shot in the leg.

Bahrain is ruled by a royal family and a Sunni Muslim elite, but has a Shia majority who make up the bulk of the protesters.

International concern

Earlier, the country's most senior Shia cleric Sheikh Issa Qassem described attacks on protesters as a "massacre" and said the government had shut the door to dialogue.

As he spoke at emotionally charged Friday prayers in the Duraz neighbourhood, supporters shouted "victory for Islam", "death for Al Khalifa [the ruling family]" and "we are your soldiers".

Western countries have urged Bahrain to show restraint in dealing with protesters and called for meaningful reform in the small Gulf state kingdom.

The UN's rights chief Navi Pillay condemned the use of force by governments across the region, and singled out the Bahraini authorities for targeting medical workers while they were treating protesters.

"The nature and scope of the human rights violations taking place in several countries in the region in response to those who are largely demonstrating peacefully for their fundamental human rights and freedoms is alarming," she said.

Since independence from the UK in 1971, tensions between the Sunni elite and the less affluent Shia have frequently caused civil unrest. Shia groups say they are marginalised, subject to unfair laws and repressed.

Washington is watching with growing concern as unrest and violence spread across the Middle East, threatening its regional interests, correspondents say.

While Bahrain is tiny, with a population of less than one million, it is home to the US Navy's Fifth Fleet and is near another key US ally in the region, Saudi Arabia.

TheUnhivedMind - February 19, 2011 01:02 AM (GMT)

[dohtml]<object width="640" height="390"><param name="movie" value="http://www.youtube.com/v/qhnjpSJhInY&hl=en_US&feature=player_embedded&version=3"></param><param name="allowFullScreen" value="true"></param><param name="allowScriptAccess" value="always"></param><embed src="http://www.youtube.com/v/qhnjpSJhInY&hl=en_US&feature=player_embedded&version=3" type="application/x-shockwave-flash" allowfullscreen="true" allowScriptAccess="always" width="640" height="390"></embed></object>[/dohtml]

TheUnhivedMind - February 19, 2011 01:02 AM (GMT)

[dohtml]<object width="640" height="390"><param name="movie" value="http://www.youtube.com/v/B3WRKoZPPao&hl=en_US&feature=player_embedded&version=3"></param><param name="allowFullScreen" value="true"></param><param name="allowScriptAccess" value="always"></param><embed src="http://www.youtube.com/v/B3WRKoZPPao&hl=en_US&feature=player_embedded&version=3" type="application/x-shockwave-flash" allowfullscreen="true" allowScriptAccess="always" width="640" height="390"></embed></object>[/dohtml]

TheUnhivedMind - February 19, 2011 01:17 AM (GMT)

Public Worker Protests Spread From Wisconsin to Ohio (Update2)

By Mark Niquette
http://www.bloomberg.com/apps/news?pid=was...id=a6jskX_gPvVc

Feb. 18 (Bloomberg) -- In what union leaders say is becoming a national fight, protests against legislation to restrict public employees' collective-bargaining rights spread from Wisconsin to Ohio.

In Madison, Wisconsin, crowds that police estimated at 25,000 engulfed the Capitol and its lawns yesterday during a third-straight day of protests as Democratic senators fled the legislative session. In Columbus, Ohio, about 3,800 state workers, teachers and other public employees came to the statehouse for a committee hearing. President Barack Obama and House Speaker John Boehner, an Ohioan, argued over whether the bills are "an assault on unions."

Ohio firefighters Dave Hefflinger and Jerry Greer said they were. They stood near hundreds of workers elbow-to-elbow in the statehouse atrium and listened to a Senate hearing through speakers. Chants of "Kill the bill" echoed.

"We're here to support our brothers and sisters," Hefflinger, a 27-year veteran, said in an interview. "They're trying to take away what we fought for all of these years."

Hefflinger, 49, and Greer, 39, members of the department in Findlay, Ohio, drove two hours south to protest the bill. The measure would eliminate collective bargaining for state workers, prevent local-government employees from negotiating for health insurance and replace salary schedules with merit pay.

With states facing deficits that may reach a combined $125 billion next year, Republican governors including Wisconsin's Scott Walker, Ohio's John Kasich and New Jersey's Chris Christie are targeting changes in rules for collective bargaining and worker contributions for health-care coverage and pensions.

Wisconsin Walkouts

In Wisconsin, Walker championed a bill that would make public workers bargain only for wages and require them to pay 5.8 percent of their pension costs; they pay nothing now. They would have to foot 12 percent of their health-care premiums, up from 6 percent. Police and firefighters wouldn't be covered by the measure.

Fourteen Democratic senators disappeared from the Capitol yesterday, just as the Senate was about to begin debating, according to the Associated Press. Their flight brought the debate to a swift halt by denying the chamber a quorum, the news agency said.

'Don't Blink'

Yesterday, University of Wisconsin-Madison students walked out of classes at the urging of student government and campus newspapers and marched to the Capitol, about a mile away. There, they joined protesters who filled the rotunda to chant, bang drums and sing, and spilled outside.

In a telephone interview Feb. 15, Walker said he spoke with Kasich about the demonstrations. When asked for advice, Walker said, "Don't blink."

The White House's political operation, Organizing for America, helped to build crowds using social media, the Washington Post reported today, citing an unidentified Democratic Party official. Obama himself spoke to Milwaukee television station WTMJ.

"Some of what I've heard coming out of Wisconsin, where they're just making it harder for public employees to collectively bargain generally, seems like more of an assault on unions," the president said.

Boehner, a Republican from a Cincinnati suburb, responded with a statement saying he was "disappointed" that Obama criticized Walker.

Dire Challenges

"Republicans in Congress -- and reform-minded GOP governors like Scott Walker, John Kasich and Chris Christie -- are daring to speak the truth about the dire fiscal challenges Americans face at all levels of government, and daring to commit themselves to solutions that will liberate our economy and help put our citizens on a path to prosperity," Boehner said.

The bills are state-level skirmishes in a national battle, and the purpose is to undermine labor unions and the Democrats they support, said John Russo, a professor and co-director of the Center for Working-Class Studies at Youngstown State University in Ohio.

"It's really an ideological battle that's being fought across the country right now," Russo said yesterday in an interview while waiting to testify before the Ohio Senate Insurance, Commerce and Labor Committee. "This is a real teaching moment. Let's have this debate about the role of the public sector."

There were 50 witnesses scheduled, and Chairman Kevin Bacon said the committee would hear them without a break.

“This is a true test of democracy,” Bacon said.

Biggest Crowd

The statehouse spokesman, Gregg Dodd, estimated the crowd at about 3,800 and said it was the largest gathering inside the statehouse since it was renovated in 1996.

Mixing with protesters were members of Tea Party groups who staged their own rally in support of the legislation.

Mike Wilson, who founded the Cincinnati Tea Party, said the bill is an effort to restore balance between governments and their workers, who he said are overpaid.

“This bill is not on attack on public employees; it is not an attack on the middle class,” Wilson, 34, a technology consultant, said at the rally. “This bill is about math.”

Joe Rugola, the former president of the Ohio AFL-CIO who also is executive director of the Ohio Association of Public School Employees, said he represents bus drivers and janitors who earn about $24,000 a year.

“I’m still looking for this privileged class of workers,” Rugola said in an interview while waiting to testify. “This is just part of a national attack on working people.”

To contact the reporter on this story: Mark Niquette in Columbus, Ohio at mniquette@bloomberg.net

To contact the editor responsible for this story: Mark Tannenbaum at mtannen@bloomberg.net
Last Updated: February 18, 2011 10:13 EST

TheUnhivedMind - February 19, 2011 01:20 AM (GMT)

Bahrain protests a worry for US and its fifth fleet

American naval presence in the Gulf is headquartered in the capital, Manama, where deadly clashes are taking place

Mark Tran
guardian.co.uk, Thursday 17 February 2011 13.38 GMT
http://www.guardian.co.uk/world/2011/feb/1...-us-fifth-fleet

The US will be watching developments in Bahrain anxiously as it is the headquarters of the US navy's fifth fleet, which operates at least one aircraft carrier in the Gulf at all times, along with an amphibious group of ships with marines aboard.

The fleet's presence is aimed at ensuring the free flow of oil through the Gulf, as well as monitoring Iran and deterring piracy.

US navy officials have said there is no sign that crowds intend to direct their hostility toward the roughly 4,200 service members who live and work there.

"The protests are not directed at the US military presence," Jennifer Stride, a spokeswoman for US Naval Support Activity (NSA) Bahrain, told the Stars and Stripes, the official paper of the US armed forces. The protests were not taking place in the vicinity of the naval base, she said.

NSA Bahrain occupies 24 hectares (60 acres) in the centre of Manama, the capital. It has 2,250 personnel and civilians who live off the base. There are no plans to withdraw them to the base.

Bahrain has been the headquarters of US naval activity in the Gulf since 1948, with the fifth fleet's area of responsibility covering the Gulf, Red Sea, Gulf of Oman, parts of the Indian Ocean and several important shipping lanes. During the 1991 Gulf war US and Bahraini aircraft flew thousands of sorties against Iraq. At the start of the Afghanistan war Bahrain provided extensive basing and overflight clearances for US aircraft, and the Bahrain monetary agency moved quickly to restrict funds controlled by suspected terrorists.

In 2003, Bahrain was named by George Bush as a major non-Nato ally. The US secretary of state, Hillary Clinton, during a visit to Manama in December, called Bahrain "a model partner", not only for the US but other countries in the region.

"I am impressed by the commitment that the government has to the democratic path that Bahrain is walking on," Clinton said. "It takes time; we know that from our own experience. There are obstacles and difficulties along the way. But America will continue working with you to promote a vigorous civil society and to ensure that democracy, human rights and civil liberties are protected by the rule of law."

TheUnhivedMind - February 19, 2011 06:14 PM (GMT)

Military ordered off Bahrain square

Libyan forces storm protest camp
19 Feb 2011
http://www.thisislondon.co.uk/standard/art...hrain-square.do

Bahrain has ordered its military off the square in the capital that was the heart of an uprising against the Gulf nation's rulers, a key demand by the opposition for starting a dialogue in the political crisis.

Although it was not clear how protest leaders would respond to the move, some jubilant Bahrainis honked car horns, waved flags and flashed victory signs as the armoured vehicles began moving away from Pearl Square.

According to a government statement, the withdrawal order came from Crown Prince Salman bin Hamad Al Khalifa, deputy supreme commander of the armed forces and the member of the royal family who has been designated to open a dialogue with protest leaders.

The statement said he had ordered "the withdrawal of all military from the streets of Bahrain with immediate effect".

"The Bahrain police force will continue to oversee law and order," the statement said.

Thousands of marchers came under fire on Friday as they tried to head toward the square. More than 50 were injured in the second consecutive day of clashes.

Protesters took over Pearl Square earlier in the week, but they were driven out in a deadly assault on Thursday. They had said they were determined to take back the square.

US President Barack Obama discussed the situation with King Hamad bin Isa Al Khalifa, asking him to hold those responsible for the violence accountable. He said in a statement that Bahrain must respect the "universal rights" of its people and embrace "meaningful reform".

Protesters who tried to march to the square described a chaotic scene of tear gas clouds, bullets coming from many directions and people slipping in pools of blood as they sought cover. Some claimed the gunfire came from either helicopters or sniper nests.

The clash came hours after funeral mourners and worshippers at Friday prayers called for the toppling of the Western-allied monarchy in the tiny island nation that is home to the US Navy's 5th Fleet, the centrepiece of the Pentagon's efforts to confront Iranian military influence.

TheUnhivedMind - February 19, 2011 06:24 PM (GMT)

Bahrain's King Seeks Talks With Foes Amid Clashes in Region

By Glen Carey and Terry Atlas - Feb 19, 2011
http://www.bloomberg.com/news/2011-02-17/b...groups-say.html

Bahrain’s authorities backed down from a standoff with protesters in a bid to ease tensions as elsewhere in the region government forces in Yemen, Libya and Djibouti shot at demonstrators, seeking to suppress calls for political change sparked by Egypt and Tunisia.

Protesters poured into Pearl roundabout in downtown Manama, the Bahraini capital, after first tanks and armored personnel carriers, then riot police, withdrew on the orders of Crown Prince Salman bin Hamad Al Khalifa. Speaking on Bahrain TV, he called for a day of mourning and said the country is entering a phase “in which we will discuss all our issues sincerely and honestly. Calm is required so all parties can put forward their views and issues in a responsible and productive way.”

Gunfire broke out in the Yemeni capital today, leaving one man dead after he was shot in the neck by government supporters, as the strife entered the ninth day. Government security forces in Libya have killed at least 84 people in three days of unrest in several cities, Human Rights Watch said in a statement on its website. Libyan special forces stormed a protest camp in the eastern city of Benghazi today, the Associated Press said.

The violence challenges the U.S., which has strategic interests in Bahrain, home to the U.S.

Navy's Fifth Fleet, and in Yemen, whose government cooperates with the U.S. on anti- terrorism efforts. U.S. General James Cartwright, the vice chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, said yesterday the wave of protests sweeping the region reflects frustration among 18- to 35-year-olds who can't get good jobs and see unfair systems.
Fast Pace

"It is moving through Northern Africa, the Middle East at a pace that is just unheard of, and each of those governments and each of those nations is watching it come, trying to figure out what's happening and how they might prevent it," Cartwright told the Economic Club of Florida in Tallahassee, according to the Associated Press.

In Djibouti, Ismail Guedi Hared, president of the Union for a Democratic Alternative, said the situation is "very bad" after police used tear gas and "shot in every direction." The U.S. has its only Africa base in Djibouti, with about 2,000 personnel, while former colonial power France has 3,000 troops in the country, which borders the Red Sea and the Gulf of Aden.

Libya, run for 41 years by the anti-American leader Muammar Qaddafi, has the largest crude oil reserves on the African continent.

U.K. Foreign Secretary William Hague said the coalition government "is deeply concerned by continuing reports overnight of unacceptable violence used against protesters in Libya, Bahrain, and Yemen and the deaths of protesters."

Respecting Rights

Bahrain's government must show restraint in dealing with peaceful protests and hold accountable those responsible for violence, President Barack Obama told King Hamad late yesterday, according to an administration statement issued in Washington.

Obama repeated his condemnation of attacks against demonstrators calling for political change and said Bahrain's stability "depends upon respect for the universal rights of the people," according to the statement.

The cost of insuring Bahrain debt rose for a fifth day, climbing 18 basis points to 302, the highest in 17 months, according to CMA prices for credit default swaps. Fitch Ratings put Bahrain on rating-watch negative on Feb. 17, saying the protests "increase the risks to the sovereign's credit profile."

Swap contracts for Saudi Arabia, used as a measure of confidence although the country has no debt to insure, jumped 10.5 basis points to 137, the highest since July 2009, on concern the unrest may spread to the world's biggest oil exporter, which neighbors Bahrain and has a Shiite minority population in the east, where most of its oil is produced.

Crude Oil

Brent crude for April settlement slipped 7 cents to $102.52 a barrel on the ICE Futures Europe exchange in London, after reaching a 2 1/2-year high this week.

In Bahrain, a Persian Gulf island connected by a causeway to Saudi Arabia, King Hamad Bin Isa Al Khalifa asked his son the crown prince, to try to resolve the conflict, the Bahrain News Agency reported. The prince, who attended the U.S. Defense Department high school in Bahrain and earned a B.A. at American University in Washington, is viewed by American diplomats as part of the “reformist camp within the ruling party,” according to a Dec. 2009 embassy cable made public by the website WikiLeaks.org.

The king’s announcement came after security forces attacked protesters -- many of them majority Shiite Muslims in the Sunni- ruled kingdom -- for a second day. Bahrain’s opposition al-Wefaq party, the largest Shiite opposition bloc in parliament, today rejected an offer of talks with the crown prince.
Army Retreats

Shortly afterward, Bahrain’s army pulled out of Pearl Roundabout, where clashes between government security forces and Shiite demonstrators left several people dead, and were replaced by riot police. Hundreds of protesters began to march from Salmaniya Hospital toward the roundabout after the withdrawal and were confronted by police firing teargas.

Abduljalil Khalil, head of Al-Wefaq bloc in parliament, said the withdrawal of army isn’t sufficient to begin discussions with Bahrain’s rulers.

More than 100 people were being treated at the hospital, Ahmed Jamal, president of the Bahrain medical society, said after yesterday’s clashes. The crackdown took place during a fifth day of protests, drawing the week’s biggest crowd. At least five people have been killed in the turmoil.
Nationwide Strike

Bahrain’s General Federation for Trade Unions will kick off a general nationwide strike tomorrow to protest the government’s violent response to the unrest, said Abdulla Mohammed Hussain, the assistant secretary general for Arab and international affairs at the federation. The federation represents workers in industries including aluminum, oil and transport.

In Yemen, the biggest crowd since unrest began more than a week ago yesterday demanded the ouster of Ali Abdullah Saleh, president for 32 years. Police swinging batons and government supporters hurling rocks were seen attacking demonstrators near Sanaa University.

More than 20,000 people streamed out of Friday prayers and began to march on the presidential palace in what was billed a “Friday of Fury.”

“After Mubarak, Ali,” they chanted, referring to the ousted Egyptian President Hosni Mubarak. Protests were also reported in Aden, Yemen’s Red Sea port city, where people set fire to a council building and a police station.

The U.S. Embassy in Sanaa, in an e-mail statement, cited reports that Yemeni officials were present during attacks on demonstrators. The Interior Ministry denied that undercover security officials are leading pro-government rallies and attacking protesters.
Djibouti Unrest

In Djibouti, as many as 20,000 people joined in the protest, according to opposition leader Mohamed Daoud Chehem, head of the Djibouti Party for Development. The country has a population of about 860,000.

“The police are confronting demonstrators,” he said by phone from the protest yesterday.

Protesters in Bahrain are calling for a constitutional monarchy and a change of government. The prime minister, the focus of the demonstrators' demands, has held the office for four decades.

Saudi Arabia's main regional rival, Shiite-ruled Iran, has also experienced protests this week, and deployed security forces to suppress a Feb. 14 rally by opposition movements to show solidarity with the Arab revolts. Many Shiite Bahrainis retain cultural and family ties with Iran, while Bahrain's Sunni ruling family has links with Saudi Arabia.
Libya Rallies

In Libya, groups of people set fires in the streets of the capital, Tripoli, and the office of internal security was set ablaze in Benghazi, the British Broadcasting Corp. reported yesterday. Pro-government rallies have taken place in Tripoli and Qaddafi has been meeting with tribal leaders to solicit their support, Al Jazeera said.

Violence erupted during "Day of Anger" marches yesterday in five eastern cities, Human Rights Watch said in a statement. There is little independent reporting from Libya because of the country's tight press restrictions. In videos posted on the Internet, demonstrators were shown burning photographs of Qaddafi in unidentified cities and chanting slogans.

Algerian authorities today surrounded about 1,500 protesters in a peaceful sit-in in the capital Algiers. The demonstrators chanted slogans against the Algerian regime and called for democracy in the North African country. Police, who outnumbered the protesters, separated about 50 government supporters carrying portraits of President Abdelaziz Bouteflika from the anti-government demonstrators.

Kuwaiti authorities used tear gas, rubber bullets and water cannons to break up a demonstration by 1,000 stateless residents west of Kuwait City yesterday. The government says there are about 100,000 stateless people in Kuwait and many don't have access to basic services such as medical care and education.

Eight people were injured in Jordan in clashes between government supporters and protesters demanding wider rights and higher living standards, Al Arabiya television said.

To contact the reporters on this story: Glen Carey in Manama, Bahrain, at gcarey8@bloomberg.net; Terry Atlas in Washington at tatlas@bloomberg.net

To contact the editor responsible for this story: Andrew J. Barden at barden@bloomberg.net

TheUnhivedMind - February 19, 2011 06:33 PM (GMT)

[dohtml]<object style="height: 390px; width: 640px"><param name="movie" value="http://www.youtube.com/v/v0OAQRtmdas?version=3"><param name="allowFullScreen" value="true"><param name="allowScriptAccess" value="always"><embed src="http://www.youtube.com/v/v0OAQRtmdas?version=3" type="application/x-shockwave-flash" allowfullscreen="true" allowScriptAccess="always" width="640" height="390"></object>[/dohtml]

TheUnhivedMind - February 19, 2011 06:54 PM (GMT)

Bahrain protest: 'The regime must fall, and we will make sure it does'

Despite the killings after the army fired live ammunition at the crowds, the mood in Manama is one of staunch defiance

Martin Chulov in Manama
guardian.co.uk, Friday 18 February 2011 20.22 GMT
http://www.guardian.co.uk/world/2011/feb/1...sts-regime-fall

Ali Ismail had helped wash the body of a dead protester for burial and he was already talking of more blood. "We will go to them and they will attack us," he said of Bahrain's riot police. Within hours he was proved correct.

Just after 5.30pm on Friday, central Manama again erupted in gunfire and screaming. Up to 200 demonstrators had attempted to march on Pearl Square, the scene of Thursday morning's savage assault that left three dead. Just over a mile from the central Bahrain landmark, soldiers and police opened fire, killing at least one more protester and leaving 50 others wounded.

"We don't care if they kill 5,000 of us," a protester screamed inside the forecourt of the Salmaniya hospital, which has become a staging point for Bahrain's raging youth. "The regime must fall and we will make sure it does."

Just before dusk, riot police advanced on the hospital, apparently chasing protesters who had attempted to link up with the group bound for Pearl Square. Sound grenades cracked in the distance, gradually getting closer as protesters beat a retreat to the only place in Manama where they now feel safe to gather in numbers.

Within minutes, the bitter scent of tear-gas had wafted into the hospital grounds, sparking panic that the riot police were coming for them there as well. The police backed off and the crowd in the hospital swelled to at least 7,000 people, all of them chanting anti-regime slogans that they would not have dared to utter a month ago.

"Down with the king, down with the Khalifas," they cried, referring to the kingdom's ruling family. Anger among the overwhelmingly Shia Muslim demonstrators towards the Sunni dynasty that has ruled Bahrain for more than 200 years is now virulent.

"They have done nothing for us in the past except discriminate against us," said one nurse, sobbing against a hospital gurney. "Now their new trick is to kill us."

Inside the hospital I saw a young man being wheeled into a makeshift trauma room, which is usually used to conduct angiograms. The gurney was soaked in blood and he had been shot in the head.

"There are at least two bullets. I don't think he will live," said a young doctor as he left the room.

He didn't.

The man's death takes to at least five the number killed during clashes with police since Wednesday. Scores more have been injured. Most of those brought to the emergency ward had wounds from rubber bullets, although at least one youth had a gaping wound to his calf that specialists said was caused by a live round.

The early evening clashes brought a dramatic end to a day that had started off with three large funeral rallies through the suburbs of Manama. More than 50,000 demonstrators attended – between 5% and 10% of the tiny kingdom's population.

They were among the biggest public rallies the Arab world's smallest state has ever seen. At the largest of them, in the suburb of Sitra, around 25,000 mourners marched in a long looping column to a graveyard, demanding that the regime be changed.

"No to Sunni; no to Shia," they cried at one point. "We are all Bahraini."

Mahmoud Muhim, the father of one of the dead protesters, took the microphone during the march and said: "Not one person has offered me commiserations. Everyone has said congratulations, because I now have a martyred son. He died for Bahrain."

At the graveyard there was talk of a move to reclaim Pearl Square, which has become for Bahrain what Cairo's Tahrir Square was for Egypt, but not until organisers could figure out a way to deal with a military and police force that had been ordered to show no mercy to dissenters.

"They are not loyal to us – they are loyal to the regime," said Mohammed al-Waeli after Friday prayers near the grave. "We don't have a single weapon anywhere. It is impossible to get one, even if we wanted to."

Plans were made to advance on the square on Saturday morning in a bid to show the government that they have no intention of surrendering. However, the spontaneous rush for the site on Friday night had forced organisers to rethink.

The Bahraini royal family, which on Friday night made several public statements after the latest violence, is also taking stock.

"We need to calm down, all of us," said Crown Prince Salman al Hamad. "I urge you, there should be calm. Now is the time for calm."

The message was not well received in the hospital grounds, where ambulances – those that had been allowed to return from the site of the clashes – were slowly making their way back with more wounded.

"They know they have done too much this time," said Fatima al-Khaled. "And we know that if we back down they will see us as weak."

Late in the afternoon another rally took place in central Bahrain – a pro-government demonstration sanctioned by authorities despite an order from the military banning public gatherings. Government loyalists drove through the streets surrounding the city's largest mosques, waving Bahraini flags and posters of the ruling family.

Government loyalists also filled Manama's grand mosque to hear words of support for the monarchy and take part in a post-sermon march protected by security forces. Many arrived with Bahraini flags draped over their traditional white robes. Portraits of King Hamad bin Isa Al Khalifa were distributed.

"We must protect our country," said Adnan al-Qattan, the cleric leading prayers. He denounced attempts to "open the doors to evil and foreign influences", an apparent reference to suspicions that Iran could take advantage of any gains by Bahrain's Shias, who account for about 70% of the population.

The pro-government gathering had many non-native Bahrainis, including south Asians and Sunni Arabs from around the region.

Bahrain, which hosts the US Fifth Fleet and has traditionallyenjoyed strong relations with Europe and the US, stands to lose a lot from this crisis. The Formula One grand prix, scheduled for 13 March, is already in jeopardy; a decision on its fate will be made by Wednesday.

But of more enduring concern for the ruling elites is strident criticism from the United Nations and biting silence from the Obama White House, which is under increasing pressure to intervene in the crisis, in the same manner as it did in Egypt during Hosni Mubarak's last days in power.

"If the US walks away from us, this regime will continue to come for us," said Ismail in the shadow of the graveyard. "There is no option but to press ahead. This is our moment."

TheUnhivedMind - February 19, 2011 07:25 PM (GMT)

Bahrain uses UK-supplied weapons in protest crackdown

MoD to review arms export licences after Bahrain clears protesters with UK-made crowd-controls weapons such as teargas and stun grenades

Peter Beaumont and Robert Booth
guardian.co.uk, Thursday 17 February 2011 21.38 GMT
http://www.guardian.co.uk/world/2011/feb/1...n-uk-arms-sales

Medical staff receive an injured protester after police cracked down on their encampment, killing at least four and wounding many more Photograph: John Moore/Getty Images

The British government has launched a review of arms exports to Bahrain after it emerged that the country's security forces were supplied with weapons by the United Kingdom.

After a bloody crackdown in the capital, Manama, left up to five people dead and more than 100 injured, Foreign Office minister Alistair Burt said the government will "urgently revoke licences if we judge that they are no longer in line with the [UK and European Union] criteria".

Despite long-running concerns among activists over Bahrain's human rights record, British firms were last year granted licences, unopposed, to export an arsenal of sometimes deadly crowd control weapons. Licences approved included exactly the kind of weapons and ammunition used by Bahraini riot police to clear the Pearl Roundabout protest encampment, including shotguns, teargas canisters, "crowd control ammunition" and stun grenades.

"We closely consider allegations of human rights abuses," said Burt. "We will not authorise any exports which, we assess, might provoke or prolong regional or internal conflicts, which might be used to facilitate internal repression."

Human rights groups called for an immediate suspension of arms supplies to Bahrain and the disclosure of why licences were granted in the first place.

Last night, the Ministry of Defence was unable to say what role the British military has supporting or advising the Bahraini defence forces through secondments or training programmes. Military analysts said the anglophile nature of the Bahraini elite made it likely. "The Bahrain military employs a number of British citizens as advisers on organisation and strategy in the ministry of interior and the ministry of defence," said Jonathan Eyal, the director of international security studies at the Royal United Services Institute.

According to the Foreign Office's own records and the Campaign Against the Arms Trade, the UK has also supplied Libya – which has warned in an SMS message that it will use live ammunition against protesters – with similar weapons and ammunition. Sales to both Bahrain and Libya were actively promoted by the UK government's arms promotion unit, the UK Trade & Investment Defence & Security Organisation.

Despite the widespread unrest throughout the Middle East and North Africa, British arms manufacturers this weekend will be attending IDEX, a major arms fair in Abu Dhabi, to promote sales throughout the Middle East region.

Examination by the Guardian of pictures of the injuries of the dead and injured taken at hospitals in Bahrain showed the tell-tale blast pattern of shotgun pellets, including on a young, seriously injured child who appeared to have been shot in the ribcage at close range. Credible witnesses to both Thursday's assault and a similar attack on a funeral procession in Manama describe police using shotguns, alleged to have been responsible for the death of mourner Fadhel Ali Almatrook.

Other licences granted for export to Bahrain by the UK included small arms ammunition and submachine guns.

Despite the warnings from HRW and other organisations of a worsening rights situation in Bahrain, the Foreign Office's own statistics reveal that the number of arms exports licences continued to increase in 2010 from 34 to 42 with no licences being refused. Arms exports to Libya, where lethal force has already been used against demonstrators, appear to have followed a similar pattern with exports last year including tear gas, and £3.2 million worth of ammunition including for crowd control..

Denis MacShane, a former Labour minister, said: "We should be suspending all arms exports used to repress pro-democracy protests. The idea that British weapons could be used to fire on and injure children makes me feel ill."

TheUnhivedMind - February 19, 2011 07:56 PM (GMT)

[dohtml]<object width="640" height="390"><param name="movie" value="http://www.youtube.com/v/v9ORjEHUpSk&rel=0&hl=en_GB&feature=player_embedded&version=3"></param><param name="allowFullScreen" value="true"></param><param name="allowScriptAccess" value="always"></param><embed src="http://www.youtube.com/v/v9ORjEHUpSk&rel=0&hl=en_GB&feature=player_embedded&version=3" type="application/x-shockwave-flash" allowfullscreen="true" allowScriptAccess="always" width="640" height="390"></embed></object>[/dohtml]

TheUnhivedMind - February 19, 2011 07:56 PM (GMT)

[dohtml]<object style="height: 390px; width: 640px"><param name="movie" value="http://www.youtube.com/v/4-5Ecwo3tgk?version=3"><param name="allowFullScreen" value="true"><param name="allowScriptAccess" value="always"><embed src="http://www.youtube.com/v/4-5Ecwo3tgk?version=3" type="application/x-shockwave-flash" allowfullscreen="true" allowScriptAccess="always" width="640" height="390"></object>[/dohtml]

TheUnhivedMind - February 20, 2011 01:37 AM (GMT)

Obama speaks to Bahrain's king, urges restraint

Feb 18, 2011 9:45pm EST
http://www.reuters.com/article/2011/02/19/...19?pageNumber=2

(Reuters) - President Barack Obama spoke with Bahrain's king on Friday night, urging restraint after the kingdom's security forces ignored Washington's earlier call for calm and opened fire on protesters demanding reforms.

Amid unrest across much of the Middle East, U.S. officials have voiced concern about violence in the island nation in talks with the government of Bahrain, which hosts a big U.S. military base and borders Saudi Arabia, the world's largest oil exporter.

The White House said in a statement that Obama, in speaking with King Hamad bin Isa Al-Khalifa, condemned violence and said Bahrain's stability depended on respect for the rights of its people.

Earlier on Friday, Obama said he was deeply concerned by reports of violence in Bahrain, Libya and Yemen. "The United States condemns the use of violence by governments against peaceful protesters in those countries, and wherever else it may occur," Obama said in a statement.

Democratic Senator Patrick Leahy said he had asked the State Department to probe whether Bahrain had broken a U.S. law he wrote that prohibits aid to foreign security forces that violate human rights. The United States provided around $20 million in military aid to Bahrain in 2010.

Bahraini security forces shot at protesters in the capital, Manama, on Friday, wounding at least 60 people, a day after police swept away a protest camp in the city, killing four people and wounding more than 230.

In Libya, soldiers sought to crush unrest. In Yemen, at least four protesters were killed in clashes between security forces and government loyalists and crowds demanding an end to President Ali Abdullah Saleh's 32-year rule.

Bahrain's crackdown on protesters posed a new dilemma for the Obama administration after a popular uprising in Egypt ousted U.S. ally President Hosni Mubarak a week ago.

A U.S. national security official said Bahrain security forces appeared to be using rubber bullets and live ammunition fired from, but not limited to, shotguns.

'WANT TO AVOID'

"This (violence) is exactly what the administration and the U.S. want to avoid," said Robert Danin, a Middle East expert at the Council on Foreign Relations think tank.

"In the case of Egypt, the goal was to see managed change, (an) orderly transition. But the number-one thing was to ensure that this be done without violence. The minute that there's violence it is very hard to reconcile support for your ally and the aspirations of the demonstrators."

U.S. national security and intelligence agencies expect Bahrain's government to ride out the unrest and that security forces will eventually succeed in containing the protests, a senior U.S. official familiar with government reporting and analysis on Bahrain told Reuters.

The United States views Bahrain, home to the U.S. Navy's Fifth Fleet, as a strategic ally that straddles oil supply lines in the Gulf. As in the case of Egypt and elsewhere in the region, it must balance strategic interests with its support for protesters' demands for economic and political reforms.

Obama's response may be colored by the U.S. view of Bahrain as one of the more progressive Arab states. Secretary of State Hillary Clinton told Bahrain civil society activists during a visit in December their government was moving more quickly than many others in the region to implement democratic change.

Several 2009 cables from the U.S. Embassy in Manama, made available to Reuters, characterized King Hamad as an enlightened and deeply pro-American ruler who, since assuming the throne in 1999, had fostered reconciliation with the Shi'ite Muslim majority and had undertaken serious political and economic reforms.

"The U.S. is in a rather embarrassing position, because officials have tended to give King Hamad far more credit than they should have for political reforms," said Michele Dunne, a Middle East expert at the Carnegie Endowment for International Peace.

The State Department issued a travel warning on Friday for Bahrain, noting clashes between protesters and demonstrators. "Spontaneous demonstrations and violence are expected throughout the next several days," the department said, urging U.S. citizens to defer nonessential travel to the country.

Middle East experts said the Obama administration had little leverage over Bahrain's Sunni Muslim monarchy.

Admiral Mike Mullen, the top U.S. military officer, may be reprising the role he played in the Egypt uprising by keeping channels open to the Bahraini military, they said.

"The options to bring pressure seem extremely limited. Despite the close alliance, Bahrain has been defiant of the United States over the years," said Simon Henderson, a Gulf expert at the Washington Institute for Near East Policy.

(Additional reporting by Andrew Quinn, Susan Cornwell, Mark Hosenball, Tom Ferraro and Steve Holland in Washington and Matt Spetalnick aboard Air Force One; Editing by John O'Callaghan, Eric Walsh and Peter Cooney)

TheUnhivedMind - February 20, 2011 10:23 PM (GMT)

Bahrain king under pressure to sack prime minister uncle

The king of Bahrain came under heavy opposition pressure to prove his newly-stated commitment to reform yesterday by sacking his unpopular uncle, the world's longest-serving prime minister.

By Adrian Blomfield, Manama 7:18PM GMT 20 Feb 2011
http://www.telegraph.co.uk/news/worldnews/...ster-uncle.html

Shia opposition leaders said they would resist a government offer of dialogue until the kingdom's Sunni rulers made a significant gesture by sacrificing Prince Khalifa, who has held his position since Bahrain's independence from Britain in 1971. They also called for the release of political prisoners.

A day after King Hamad was forced to call his army off the streets after a brutal military crackdown that killed at least seven people failed to quell the protests, the opposition has sensed momentum swinging its way.

They are also hoping to take advantage of rumoured rifts in the Al Khalifa dynasty that have pitted hardliners, including the prime minister, against a group of reformists around the king and his son, Crown Prince Salman.

The desire to see Prince Khalifa ousted is almost universally shared by the tens of thousands of protesters that reoccupied Pearl Monument, the symbolic centre of the capital Manama, after the security forces withdrew on Saturday evening.

The prime minister, whose longevity has made him a hugely powerful figure in a royal family that numbers thousands, is widely blamed for the economic and political marginalisation of Bahrain's Shia majority, which accounts for up to 70 per cent of the island kingdom's native population.

Regarded as one of the richest men in the state, many Bahrainis – including some Sunnis – see him as a symbol of the corruption allegations that have blighted the ruling family.

"After 40 years of being in power, the time has come for him to step down," said Jawad Fairooz, a senior member of the main Shia opposition party Wefaq.

"We are in favour of dialogue, but we should have enough confidence that the dialogue will be successful. We want some positive indications and a change of the government should be part of it."

With Hillary Clinton, the US secretary of state, adding her voice to international calls for reform yesterday, King Hamad has instructed the Crown Prince to begin negotiations with the opposition. It is demanding the introduction of a constitutional monarchy, genuine political representation and a fairer deal for Shias, who have largely shut out of jobs in government and the security forces.

Protesters said they would remain at Pearl Monument until such demands were met.

TheUnhivedMind - February 20, 2011 11:02 PM (GMT)

Bahrain opposition set demands for talks with royals

The BBC's Caroline Hawley joins protesters on the ground in Pearl Square

20 February 2011 Last updated at 10:41
http://www.bbc.co.uk/news/world-middle-east-12517291

Opposition groups and anti-government protesters in Bahrain say their demands must be met before they will enter into talks with the Gulf state's monarchy.

They want the government to resign, political prisoners to be released and the deaths of protesters investigated.

Six people were killed and many wounded in the last week as security forces used deadly force to quell protests.

Demonstrators have re-established a protest camp in Manama's central Pearl Square after security forces withdrew.

Hundreds of people spent the night in the square, the focal point of the week's unrest.

A protest camp had been cleared on Thursday with the deaths of four people, but protesters flocked to the square on Saturday after the military left.

They were met by police who fired volleys of tear gas and shotgun rounds, wounding dozens of people, before suddenly withdrawing and leaving the square to the jubilant protesters.
'Terrible tragedy'

The kingdom's crown prince, Sheikh Salman bin Hamad al-Khalifah, has been charged to lead talks. In his capacity as deputy commander-in-chief of the armed forces, he ordered the military to return to their barracks - one of the key demands of the opposition for any talks.

Opposition figures have also said they want political reforms that will lead to a constitutional monarchy.

But some protesters have also called on King Hamad bin Isa al-Khalifah to step down.

Human rights activists are demanding to know what became of 10 people who they say went missing last week.

The BBC understands that the crown prince has made contact with representatives of all of the country's political parties, including the main Shia opposition parties in the Sunni-ruled Gulf state.

"Fellow citizens of Bahrain," the crown prince said in an address on state television.

"I hope that we can join hands, work together and communicate with all political forces in the country. Join us to calm the situation so that we can call a day of mourning for our lost sons."

Speaking on CNN television, he apologised for the deaths.

"I think there is a lot of anger, a lot of sadness, and on that note I would like to extend my condolences to all of the families who lost loved ones and all of those who have been injured. We are terribly sorry and this is a terrible tragedy for our nation," he said.

He said protesters would be allowed to stay in the square, which has become the focal point of the anti-government demonstrations.

They seem prepared for a long stay, setting up a makeshift hospital and erecting tents.

Bahrain is one of several Arab countries to have experienced pro-democracy demonstrations since the fall of long-time Tunisian President Zine El Abidine Ben Ali in January. Egypt's Hosni Mubarak was forced from power on 11 February.

The majority Shia population in Bahrain have long said they are discriminated against when it comes to housing and government jobs. They have also been calling for greater political rights from the Sunni royal family.

But the protesters have been careful to describe their revolt as non-sectarian, chanting slogans such as: "There are no Sunnis or Shias, just Bahraini unity."

TheUnhivedMind - February 22, 2011 12:30 AM (GMT)

THOUSANDS FLEE BAHRAIN TROOPS

Monday February 21 2011 by Rick Senley
http://express.co.uk/posts/view/230283/Tho...-Bahrain-troops

TROOPS in Bahrain opened fire on anti-government protesters hours after calm had returned to the tiny Gulf nation.

The demonstrators were fired on in the capital Manama following the funerals of protesters killed by the authorities last week.

Thousands fl ed from live rounds and tear gas, and officials said at least 120 people were hospitalised.

Troops had earlier withdrawn from Pearl Square after riot police killed four protesters and wounded 231.

Unrest has spread rapidly across the Arab world since Tunisia’s leader was ousted last month, followed by Mubarak in Egypt.

Two protesters have already been killed in Iran.

In Tehran yesterday riot police used tear gas and batons against anti-Ahmadinejad demonstrators who tried to gather in some main squares and outside the state radio and television building to commemorate the deaths of two men killed during in a rally last week.

Troops in Bahrain opened fire on anti-government protesters

In Iraq at least four people were wounded in the northern city of Sulaimaniya as hundreds took to the streets after gunmen set fire to a TV station, shutting down broadcasts of protests across the Arab world.

In Yemen, protesters have been killed. Yesterday protesters chanted for political change outside Sana'a University.

TheUnhivedMind - February 22, 2011 01:26 AM (GMT)

Saudi Arabia says it's ready to help Bahrain's rulers

By Janine Zacharia and Michael Birnbaum
Sunday, February 20, 2011; 11:33 PM
http://www.washingtonpost.com/wp-dyn/conte...er=emailarticle

MANAMA, BAHRAIN - Saudi Arabia said Sunday that it stands ready "with all its capabilities" to shore up Bahrain's ruling royal family if a standoff with the Shiite-led opposition is not resolved soon, underscoring the kingdom's deep concern about its neighbor's ongoing political crisis.

Sunni-led Saudi Arabia props up Bahrain's al-Khalifa family with cash and has long sought to prevent the tiny Persian Gulf state - with its majority Shiite population - from falling into Iran's orbit. With dwindling oil resources, Bahrain relies heavily on Saudi Arabia for money and security.

It was unclear whether the Saudi comments indicated that the country was contemplating possible action in Bahrain or were merely meant to express growing anxiety among Saudi leaders. But some regional experts have long warned that a concerted Shiite challenge to the monarchy in Bahrain might prompt intervention from Saudi Arabia, which has its own restive Shiite minority population. The two countries are connected by a causeway.

The Saudi comments came as an uneasy calm prevailed in Bahrain's capital Sunday. Protesters pitched tents and held a peaceful demonstration at a central square as opposition leaders continued to rebuff the crown prince's invitation to engage in dialogue.

The statements from Saudi Arabia, which had been largely silent on the crisis in Bahrain since protests erupted a week ago, were issued in quick succession. The official Saudi press agency reported that the kingdom was following developments in Bahrain "with concern" and that it hopes to see a "restoration of calm and stability" under Bahrain's "wise leadership."

"The Kingdom of Saudi Arabia stands with all its capabilities behind the state and the brotherly people of Bahrain," the statement added.

Shortly afterward, it was announced that Saudi Arabia's powerful interior minister, Prince Nayef, had called Bahrain's King Hamad bin Isa al-Khalifa to convey the same message.

Kuwait's emir, Sheik Sabah Ahmed al-Sabah, also called the Bahraini king on Sunday and stressed that "the security of Bahrain is the security of the region," reflecting the growing anxiety among gulf monarchies that Bahrain's troubles could have a spillover effect. In Kuwait, protesters have taken to the streets demanding more rights.

'A very, very lucky king'

Saudi Arabia's expression of concern came as Adm. Mike Mullen, chairman of the U.S. Joint Chiefs of Staff, arrived in Riyadh, the Saudi capital, for two days of consultations with the kingdom's leadership, the first stop on a regional tour. The purpose of his mission is to "reassure, discuss and understand what is going on," Mullen told reporters. Bahrain, in addition to its proximity to Saudi Arabia, hosts the U.S. Navy's 5th Fleet, which has served as a hub for operations in Afghanistan and Iraq.

In the Bahraini capital, the Pearl Square roundabout, which had been the site of vicious crackdowns against protesters, again had the feeling of a festival. Families set out picnics, vendors sold tea and pastries and a tight knot of traffic stopped up what is usually one of Manama's most congested areas.

The only noticeable government presence was a string of police officers keeping watch over the area from a nearby highway.

The king "should work for us, not for himself," said Wafi al-Maged, a construction worker. "He's a very, very lucky king to have such peaceful people. Our demands are for jobs, health care, good education - that's it."

A family's bedside vigil

At the Salmaniya Medical Complex, where doctors and staff members said they had been prevented from sending out ambulances after Bahrain's military fired on protesters Friday, pillars near the main entrance bore posters of one of the most seriously wounded, zoo worker Abdul al-Redha.

Inside, Redha, a bullet lodged in his head, clung to life, but doctors said he no longer showed signs of brain function. Family members gathered around his bed, where he was covered in a red-and-white Bahraini flag.

On Sunday, Crown Prince Salman bin Hamad al-Khalifa tried to coax Shiite opposition leaders to meet with him to discuss their demands for democratic reforms.

When asked about Salman's invitation, Jassim Hussain of the Shiite political party al-Wefaq said, "We have not really done anything." Hussain, whose party withdrew from the 40-member lower house of parliament last week, added: "We think the environment must be right for any meaningful dialogue."

TheUnhivedMind - February 22, 2011 02:57 AM (GMT)

Exiled opposition leader to return to Bahrain

By HADEEL AL-SHALCHI and BARBARA SURK, Associated Press – Mon Feb 21, 2:16 pm ET http://news.yahoo.com/s/ap/20110221/ap_on_...ahrain_protests

MANAMA, Bahrain – A prominent opposition figure accused by Bahrain of plotting against the state plans to return from London, an aide said Monday, in a move that could bolster protesters and force authorities into difficult choices.

Hassan Meshaima, head of a group known as Haq, is scheduled to arrive late Tuesday as the embattled monarchy tries to engage demonstrators in talks aimed at easing the week-long series of clashes and marches that have deeply divided the strategic Gulf nation.

A rights activist and supporter, Abbas Omran, confirmed Meshaima's plans, but gave no further details on his objections once he returns after eight months in self-exile.

Meshaima is considered by Bahrain's officials as a potential enemy of the state. He and another London-based opposition leader is being tried in absentia among a total of 25 Shiite activists accused of plotting to overthrow Bahrain's Sunni rulers.

But taking Meshaima into custody risks an angry backlash from protesters, whose uprising forced Formula One organizers to call off next month's Bahrain Grand Prix in a stinging blow to Bahrain's efforts to court top international sporting events.

Meshaima has been in London since June, reportedly receiving treatment for cancer. His group Haq is more considered more radical than the main Shiite political bloc, Al Wefaq, which has so far taken a leading role in the uprising.

It's possible that Meshaima — even if taken into custody — could rally more hard-line elements among the protesters as they struggle to find a common voice.

One group called Monday for the ouster of the entire ruling monarchy. Others, however, have signaled a willingness to let the king and royal family remain but with many of their powers and privileges turned over to parliament.

Tensions are still high in Bahrain after seesaw battles that saw riot police open fire on protesters trying to reclaim landmark Pearl Square last week. At least eight people have been killed and hundreds injured in the clashes since the unrest spilling across the Arab world reached the Gulf last week.

Bahrain holds particular importance to Washington as the host of the U.S. Navy's 5th Fleet, which is the main U.S. military counterweight to Iranian efforts to expand its military influence into the Gulf.

The manifesto from a group calling itself "Youth of Feb. 14" — after the day of the first marches — apparently seeks to raise the stakes of demands ahead of possible talks between the opposition and the monarchy.

"We demand the overthrow of the oppressive Al Khalifa regime," the manifesto said, referring to the ruling royal family. "The people will choose the system they will be subjected to."

To underline their contempt for the monarchy, the protesters set up a chair resembling one belonging to a royal with a sign beneath it that says in Arabic "And does the throne of the oppressor stay?"

It was not clear, however, how much influence the group holds the tens of thousands of protesters that range from students to retirees.

In the statement, the youth group called for authorities to be put on trial for attacks on protesters last week and demanded an elected government. They said the first priority should be the cancellation of citizenship for thousands of foreigners who receive it as part of an effort to change the sectarian balance in the island nation. Few policies anger Bahrain's Shiite majority more than bestowing citizenship to outside Sunnis, mostly Arabs but also from Pakistan and other South Asian countries.

Shiites in Bahrain have often complained of discrimination by the Sunni rulers. The Al Khalifa royal dynasty has been in power for 200 years and has strong backing from other Gulf Arab leaders, who fear that Shiite powerhouse Iran could gain further footholds through the uprising led by Bahrain's Shiites.

The week-long unrest has already affected Bahrain's economy. An international rating agency has cut the government's credit ratings because of concerns about political turmoil and the organizers of the Bahrain Grand Prix canceled the March 13 season-opening race, the kingdom's biggest international event it has hosted annually since 2004.

Crown Prince Salman bin Hamad Al Khalifa — the owner of the F1 contract — said in statement that the kingdom must "focus on immediate issues of national interest and leave the hosting of Bahrain's Formula One race to a later date."

Standard & Poor's cut the ratings Monday for Bahrain's long and short-term sovereign credit ratings, as well as those for the island nation's central bank and the country's sovereign wealth fund.

Hundreds of protesters spent the night in Pearl Square — which has become Bahrain's version of Cairo's uprising hub Tahrir Square — and thousands of government opponents gathered at the site during the day. The mood was upbeat and many appear to be camped there for the long haul, with makeshift kitchens serving meals to those who live in the small tent village.

At several stalls, demonstrators queued for hot tea and joked about the weather, which turned windy and whipped up sand and trash.

Bahrain's rulers have offered talks with opposition groups to try to defuse the showdown, but the opposition appears to be in no hurry to talk with the crown prince who has been delegated by the king to lead the dialogue.

The leaders of the official Shiite opposition said they are not refusing to talk to the crown prince, but want guarantees the rulers' words will be backed by action.

The main opposition demand is the resignation of the government that is responsible for this week's bloodshed and has been led by the same prime minister — the king's uncle — for 40 years.

Other demands include abolishing the monarchy's privileges to set policies and appoint all key political posts, along with addressing longstanding claims of discrimination and abuses against Shiites, who represent about 70 percent of Bahrain's 525,000 citizens.

___

Associated Press writer Brian Murphy in Dubai, United Arab Emirates, contributed to this report.

(This version CORRECTS activist name 2nd paragraph.)

TheUnhivedMind - February 23, 2011 04:15 AM (GMT)

All eyes on Bahrain as Gulf tremors frighten oil markets

Oil analysts are paying very close attention to fast-moving events in Bahrain, fearing that clashes between the island's Sunni elite and an aggrieved Shi'ite majority could embroil the two Gulf giants of Iran and Saudi Arabia.

By Ambrose Evans-Pritchard, International Business Editor 7:39PM GMT 22 Feb 2011
http://www.telegraph.co.uk/finance/finance...il-markets.html

"While events in Libya are undoubtedly of prime importance, they are a red herring for the oil market," said Helima Croft from Barclays Capital. "We believe the unrest in Bahrain may be of far greater importance to the strategic balance in the Middle East and to the oil market."

The risk group Exclusive Analysis said there is a "moderate risk of an extremely violent transition" in Bahrain, the linchpin of stability in the Gulf and host to the US 5th Fleet. "There is a significant probability that the present order is completely overthrown and replaced by a new order aligned with Iran," it said.

Marchers from Bahrain's Shi'ite community, 70pc of the Island's 800,000 population, poured into Manama's Lulu square on Tuesday in another day of civic protest after the royal family promised to call off the bloody crackdown.

King Hamad is under intense pressure from the US to refrain from further bloodshed, but this softly-softly policy contains its own risks. While the centrist Shia party al-Wefaq wants peaceful reform, the more radical Haq movement is less easy to control.

Exiled Haq leader Hassan Meshaima, wanted for alleged sedition, has announced plans to return to Bahrain next week. It is unclear whether he has a green light from authorities hoping to defuse the crisis, or whether he is throwing down the gauntlet in a move with echoes of Ayatollah Khomeini's return to Iran thirty years ago.

"If he is detained on arrival, this is likely to galvanise the opposition and increase the risk of a violent widespread uprising, " said Exclusive Analysis, which sees a one third chance that the 200-year old monarchy will be overthrown.

Gary Sick, a former White House adviser on the Mid-East, said it is "too late for dialogue" after the killing of 10 people, deemed a massacre by Shi'ite clerics. He said the Saudis are "terrified" of contagion and are determined the line drawn in Bahrain before protests spread through the Gulf. "There does not seem to be any happy ending to this story," he said.

Iran is clearly hoping to bring Bahrain into its orbit. An aide to supreme leader Ali Khamenei called three years ago for Bahrain to be absorbed as Iran's 14th province. Manama has repeatedly accused Tehran of inciting revolt.

However, the immediate concern is that Bahrain's troubles will either cause Saudi Arabia to step in directly, or serve as model for revolt in the kingdom's Eastern Province nearby. This region also has a restless Shi'ite majority, and holds a fifth of the world's oil reserves.

There have been low-level clashes been Saudi security and Shi'ite activists in the province over the years, though Riyadh has made efforts to address grievances. A small protest this week in Awwamiya was handled with kid gloves. Three Shi'ite prisoners were released as a goodwill gesture. However, Saudi dissidents are calling for a much bigger 'Day of Wrath' on March 13 to press for political freedoms.

Exclusive Analysis said there is a 25pc chance that the Saudi Kingdom will disintegrate, perhaps into three states. "We don't think it is likely, but it will have a very big impact if it does happen," said Firas Abi Ali, the group's Mid-East strategist.

"The threat to Saudi Arabia is if they have both a Shi'ite uprising and a Hejazi uprising at the same time on the other side of the country. The Saudi royal family depends on Sunni clerics for its own legitimacy. It cannot easily meet the demands of Shi'ite protesters, and is likely to oppose any move by Bahrain to do a deal in order to avoid setting a precedent," he said.

Barclays said the tectonic shifts of the last three weeks will cause "lasting unease in the oil markets", and may push up crude prices to $135 barrel sooner than its 2015 target.

While there is little danger of any country cutting off the oil supplies that generate vital revenues, there is a risk that the turmoil will slow desperately needed exploration and investment. "In a world where demand growth is continuing at a phenomenal pace, these lost barrels of output in the medium term can be extremely precious at the margin of the oil market," said Ms Croft.

The mid-decade crunch is looking ever more certain.

TheUnhivedMind - February 27, 2011 01:13 AM (GMT)

Remember the rulership of Bahrain wouldn't accept bases being used in an attack on Iran from it's land.

TheUnhivedMind - February 27, 2011 01:18 AM (GMT)

MI6 Plot to assassinate Colonel Gaddafi

Police enquiry confirms Plot is not "fantasy"

By David Shayler
http://cryptome.org/shayler-gaddafi.htm

This is the first ever police investigation into an allegation made against MI6. It directly contradicts former Foreign Secretary Robin Cook's claim that the Gaddafi Plot has "no basis in fact" and is "pure fantasy".
There are no charges against David Shayler for perjury or wasting police time, confirming that his detailed sworn statement was honest, reliable and true.
The Crown Prosecution Service has claimed there is not enough evidence likely to secure a conviction of the two MI6 officers responsible for the Plot, three and a half years after David made the initial disclosure and a year after he gave evidence. However, the police did gather 'relevant material'.
Shayler calls for statement from Prime Minister and Foreign Secretary about MI6 funding of groups with connections to Bin Laden who were involved in the attack.

Relevant Detail

In a letter dated 9 November 2001, the Metropolitan Police has confirmed its investigation into the Gaddafi Plot:
"As you know, the Metropolitan Police Service undertook an assessment of the available material and submitted two reports to the Crown Prosecution Service, an interim report in February 2001 and a final report in September 2001. The police enquiry has been extremely thorough, examining all relevant material…

"Final advice from the Crown Prosecution Service has now been received, saying that the material does not substantiate the allegation made by David Shayler."

My comments

"Although the authorities have done their best to spin their way out of the truth, this clearly confirms that the police have gathered evidence -- 'relevant material' -- about the MI6-funded plot to assassinate Colonel Gaddafi of Libya. The work of the police and the Crown Prosecution Service is not to 'substantiate […] allegations' or otherwise. The police gather evidence which they submit to the CPS when they believe they have enough to secure a conviction. The CPS then decides whether to prosecute. In this case, they have concluded that there is not enough evidence to convict the two MI6 officers. It is not a comment or otherwise on the truth of my disclosures but an assessment of the evidence that can be used in court to bring a conviction. Since 'relevant material' from MI6 files will inevitably be subject to PII certificates, this is hardly surprising. The fact that the CPS has not charged me with either perjury or wasting police time indicates that my evidence was honest, reliable and true.

"This is anything but a clean bill of health for the intelligence services and the systems of oversight. I first made the government aware that MI6 had funded the attempted assassination of Colonel Gaddafi on 31st July 1998. As this was an allegation of murder, ministers should have discharged their legal duties and referred the matter to the police to investigate. They did not. In July 1999, I wrote to the Prime Minister, the Home Secretary and the Foreign Secretary to again alert them to the illegal activities of MI6. I received no reply. In November 1999, I sent a statement to former Home Secretary Jack Straw. Again, no action was taken. In March 2000, my partner Annie Machon hand-delivered a statement to the Metropolitan Police Special Branch. The police then tried to avoid investigating the plot claiming that conspiracy to murder did not amount to a crime in Britain. In December 2000, I gave a full statement to DS Gerry Mackinnon and Det Dupt Lewis Benjamin of SO1 of the Met, which I signed in early 2001.

"We also have to ask whether the Crown Prosecution Service is properly independent of government, when it makes decisions about prosecutions which are likely to expose the lies of ministers and undermine the government's public image. In this case, we are currently considering whether we take a judicial review of this decision. In any case, we will ask that the police disclose their evidence to the Foreign Affairs Select Committee so that it can carry its own investigation into the matter. In the meantime, I would ask any policeman who is in a position to do so, to come forward and shed greater light on the plot.

"It is not good enough that the police investigation into conspiracy to murder only began two and a half years after the allegations were originally made and that it took them a year to gather evidence after that. We saw the problems created by police inaction in the investigation into the murder of Stephen Lawrence. Former Foreign Secretary Robin Cook has made it clear that MI6 did not have permission for such an operation. It is now clear that the police have evidence to indicate that there was a plot. We still need to know how far two MI6 officers were operating outside government control.

"We need a statement from the Prime Minister and the Foreign Secretary clarifying the facts of this matter. In particular, we need to know how around £100,000 of taxpayers' money was used to fund the sort of Islamic Extremists who have connections to Osama Bin Laden's Al Qaeda network. Did ministers give MI6 permission for this? By the time MI6 paid the group in late 1995 or early 1996, US investigators had already established that Bin Laden was implicated in the 1993 attack on the World Trade Centre. Given the timing and the close connections between Libyan and Egyptian Islamic Extremists, it may even have been used to fund the murder of British citizens in Luxor, Egypt in 1996.

"Ministers have tried to spin -- or indeed lie -- their way out of this in much the same way that they misled the press over my disclosure that MI5 had failed to react to reliable intelligence warning of an attack on the Israeli Embassy in 1994. When I made the disclosure in the Mail on Sunday, Jack Straw tried to deny it. It was only when the authorities were obliged to disclose a summary of the report to the Appeal Court that I was vindicated. Where there is the slightest risk of embarrassment and bad publicity, Tony Blair and his government cannot be trusted to protect fundamental human rights like the right to life and the right to security of person, both guaranteed under the Human Rights Act.

"When I go around the country giving talks, I get several messages from the British people. They are fed up with the excessive secrecy in this country and they are fed up with the spin, distortion and lies put out by this government. At a time when terrorism is at the centre of public debate, the British people need up-to-date and reliable information about how the intelligence services discharge their duties and spend their taxes, particularly if the money was used to fund enemies of the West.

"This is further evidence that the government will use mealy-mouthed words to escape proper scrutiny, allowing MI6 officers to get away with murder and ministers to pervert the course of justice. This undermines the rule of law, the foundation and protection of our liberties. A semi-literate monkey could decode the heavy-handed spin in the latest official statement on the plot. We all know an assessment of the available criminal evidence is not an assessment of fact. At the same time, we might wonder why it has taken so long for the CPS to come to a decision. It should be obvious to anyone in the media and parliament that this whole thing stinks.

"The whole episode should provide an opportunity for the Intelligence and Security Committee to demonstrate to parliament and the people that it is independent of government and is able to impartially investigate human rights abuses by the intelligence services without government and intelligence service interference.

"Don't forget I was put in prison in France for revealing this crime, even though I used a legal route to disclose my information to government."

Friday, 09 November 2001

[Original document: http://cryptome.org/That-document.doc

Bold numbers keyed to following notes by David Shayler on this "CX document."]

5C2C IDP225 O24276 GG9613 ND0044 04122114 1CA952 91.13

1-> OO GG6 GG9 NDO LOG
.5 G4 LEDGER
LEX095
AAAA
2-> 041807Z DEC 95
3-> FM LONDON
4-> TO PUSD 185 IMMEDIATE
5-> TO RESEARCH DEPT 234 IMMEDIATE TO MOD 913 IMMEDIATE TO CABINET OFFICE 721 IMMEDIATE 6-> TO SECURITY SERVICE 100 IMMEDIATE BT

7-> IMMEDIATE
8-> LEDGER UK S E C R E T/DELICATE SOURCE/UK EYES ALPHA 9-> REQUIREMENTS: 2LIAPX01
LEDGER DISTRIBUTION:
10-> FCO - PUSD

11-> DICTD
12-> NENAD
13-> RAD - ME
14-> MOD - DI(I AND W)
DI (ROW)A 15-> CABINET OFFICE - JIC (ASSESSMENTS STAFF
16-> GCHQ - Z10A2

18-> SECURITY SERVICE - G9A5, G6A5 AND G6A3
BRITISH AUTHORITIES INFORMED:
CAIRO
17-> TUNIS
WASHINGTON

19-> CX 95/53452 (R/ME/C) OF 04 DECEMBER 1995 (GTN [---------] EXT [-------])

/REPORT

PAGE TWO UK S E C R E T/DELICATE SOURCE/UK EYES ALPHA

REPORT NO: 95/53452 (R/ME/C)

TITLE: LIBYA: PLANS TO OVERTHROW QADAHFI IN EARLY 1996 ARE WELL ADVANCED

SOURCE: A NEW SOURCE WITH DIRECT ACCESS WHOSE RELIABILITY HAS NOT BEEN SUMMARY

5 Libyan colonels in charge of plans to overthrow QADAHFI, scheduled to coincide with the next General Peoples Congress in February. Coup will start with unrest in Tripoli, Misratah and Benghazi. Coup plotters are not associated with Islamic fundamentalists.
MUSA QADHAF AL-DAM murdered by coup plotters in June. Attempt to assassinate QADAHFI in August thwarted by security police.

DETAIL

20-> 1. In late November 1995 [Removed to protect TUNWORTH's identity] described plans, in which he was involved, to overthrow Colonel QADAHFI. He said that 5 colonels from various parts of the armed 21-> forces were in charge of the coup plot. These included [blank------
----------blank] The latter was most likely to take overall control.

2. The coup was scheduled to start at around the time of the next 22-> General Peoples Congress on 14 February 1996. It would begin with attacks on a number of military and security installations including the military installation at TARHUNA. There would also be orchestrated civil unrest in Benghazi, Misratah and Tripoli. The coup plotters would launch a direct attack on QADAHFI and would /either

PAGE THREE UK S E C R E T/DELICATE SOURCE/UK EYES ALPHA

95/53452

23-> either arrest him or kill him.

3. The coup plotters had 1275 active sympathisers in the following areas: TRIPOLI 240 persons; BENGHAZI 135; TOBRUK 114;
MISRATAH 148; SIRTE 40; AL-ZAMIYA 180; AL ZUMARAH 300; AL KHUMS 28; GHADAMIS 50. Their occupations ranged from students, military personnel and teachers throgh to businessmen, doctors, police officers and civil servants. The plotters were divided into 5 groups, each with 5 officers in charge. Messages to members of each group were passed via schools and Mosques. The start of the coup would be signalled through coded messages on television and radio.
The coup plotters had sympathisers working in the press, radio and television.

4. The military officer said that the plotters would have cars 24-> similar to those in QADAHFI's security entourage with fake security number plates. They would infiltrate themselves into the entourage in order to kill or arrest QADAHFI.

5. One group of military personnel were currently being trained in the desert area near KUFRA for ther role of attacking QADAHFI and his entourage. The aim was to attack QADAHFI after the GPC, but 25-> before he had returned to SIRTE. One officer and 20 men were being 26-> trained especially for this attack.

6. The coup plotters were not associated with the Islamic fundamentalists who were fermenting unrest in Benghazi. However, 27-> they had had some limited contact with the fundamentalists, whom the military officer described as a mix of Libya veterans who served in Afghanistan and Libyan students. The coup plotters also had limited contact with the Algerian and Tunisian governments, but the latter did not know of their plans.
/7.

PAGE FOUR UK S E C R E T/DELICATE SOURCE/UK EYES ALPHA

95/53452

7. The coup plotters were responsible for the death of [blank,-- Names removed to protect security----------blank] was about to take up the position as head of Military Intelligence when he was forced off the Tripoli-Sirte road and was killed. The 2 coup plotters involved escaped unhurt. In August 1995, 3 army captains who were part of the coup plot attempted to kill Colonel QADAHFI.
However, security police caught them waiting at the roadside on the Tripoli-Sirte road awaiting QADAHFI's entourage. Bothe men escaped to TUNISIA.

8. The plotters had already distributed 250 Webley pistols and 28-> 500 heavy machine guns amongst the groups.

SOURCE COMMENT

A. The coup plotters expected to establish control of Libya by 29-> the end of March 1996. They would form an interim government before discussions with tribal leaders. The group would want rapproachment with the West. They hoped to divide the country into smaller areas, each with a governor and a democratically elected parliament. There would be a federal system of national government.

B. The officer was disclosing this information in the hope that 30-> if the coup was successful, the new government could enlist HMG support. Other plotters were aware of the officer's contact with HMG, but did not entirely approve of it.

GRS C0616

[Original document: http://cryptome.org/Comments-on-MI6-report.doc]
My notes on CX document

[By David Shayler]

1. MI5 copies go to G9, counter middle eastern terrorism, and G6, the international terrorism agent running section. The NDO is the MI5 night duty officer

2. '1807' is the time the telegram arrived on 04 Dec 95. The 'Z' stands for Zulu Time or Greenwich Meantime, as it is better known. I talked of this document long before this material appeared on the Internet. The following is from Secrets and lies, page 24, par 63, published in June 1999:
63 ... In December 1995, MI6 circulated a CX report to Whitehall and the other agencies in which it reported intelligence of a potential coup in Libya. The report also detailed the requirements of the group in terms of equipment and weaponry. The name of the agent and the fact that he was involved in the plot were not made clear in the CX report as is usual in such cases. (If MI6 had not issued the report, it would have been criticised by those not privy to its role in the plot for failing to gather prior intelligence of it).

The equipment requirements are, I believe, further discussed in another more detailed CX report.

3. From London station of MI6, ie MI6 HQ at Vauxhall Cross

4. To the permanent under-secretary's department, telegram no. 185, ie the 185th telegram sent from LONDON to PUSD in 1995

5. Research department of Foreign and Commonwealth Office

6. MI5's name in Whitehall

7. The urgency of this telegram. It ranges from FLASH, the quickest, through IMMEDIATE and

PRIORITY to the lowest, ROUTINE.

8. UK S E C R E T This material can only be seen by UK intelligence personnel. Information cannot be shared with a foreign power

DELICATE SOURCE This indicates that a sensitively placed human source was involved

UK EYES ALPHA Apart from being the title of a book about the services by Mark Urban, intelligence correspondence of the BBC, this indicates that only certain departments within the UK are allowed to see this kind of material

9. This is a code for a particular Joint Intelligence Committee intelligence requirement, like for example, 'Intelligence on internal unrest in Libya'

10. Permanent Under-Secretary's Department. This is the FCO's equivalent of Sir Humphrey Appleby's department. The PUSD is a very senior civil servant who advises the Secretary of State directly

11. Drugs International Crime and Terrorism Department of the FCO. Known to wags as the Crime, Undercover Narcotics and Terrorism Section, this department deals with security and crime issues affecting the foreign office. One of its principle tasks is to advise on the Lockerbie issue.

12. North east and North Africa Department. It is responsible for diplomatic relations, such as they've been, with Libya.

13. Research and Analysis Department - Middle East (an offshoot of the foreign office).

14. Defence Intelligence Staff, the department responsible for central intelligence assessments in the MoD.

15. Joint Intelligence Committee. This is where significant intelligence is collated, assessed and disseminated. The members of the committee include the heads of the intelligence agencies and personnel from departments likely to be affected by threats to the UK, ranging from other Civil Service departments to the Bank of England.

16. Government Communications Headquarters. Z10A2 is the head desk officer responsible for Libya.

17. These are MI6 posts abroad, known as 'CX stations'. Hence the MI6 office in Cairo is known as 'CX CAIRO'. The head of station is known as H/CAIRO. His subordinates are known as CAI/1, CAI/2 etc.

18. G9A5 Me, the co-ordinator of MI5's efforts against the Libyan target

G6A5 MI5 handler of Libyan agents

G6A3 MI5 handler of Libyan agents and one of the most capable officers I met in MI5.

19. CX is the name SIS gives to its intelligence reports. It calls MI5 and GCHQ reports 'FX'.

95/53452 is the unique reference number for this report. R/ME/C is the Libyan requirements officer in MI6. The system works like this: the agent TUNWORTH gives PT16/B, his agent runner (not mentioned in this report), the intelligence. PT16/B passes it to R/ME/C, who writes the report and disseminates it to Whitehall. GTN is the Government Telephone Network

20. I have seen the original of this report. I can confirm that the deletions cover material which might have helped identify TUNWORTH.

21. Names of high ranking Libyan officials who were involved in the plot. I believe they will have been removed to protect them from reprisals after this report entered the public domain

22. This is the period I referred to when I first disclosed details about the plot.

23. "The coup plotters would launch a direct attack on QADAHFI and would either arrest him or kill him." This is confirmation of information that I have already disclosed regarding the plot.

24. "The military officer said that the plotters would have cars similar to those in QADAHFI's security entourage with fake security number plates. They would infiltrate themselves into the entourage in order to kill or arrest QADAHFI." This confirms details that I have already disclosed about the plot.

25. I have disclosed that Sirte was the site of the attack on Qadhafi in February or March 1996. This has been stood up also by the Panorama investigation into the plot.

26. "One officer and 20 men were being trained especially for this attack." By this point, TUNWORTH had already met MI6 at least once. Were these officers already being trained with British money or by British personnel for the specific task of assassinating Qadhafi?

27. In August 1998, I disclosed that the group were linked to a rag tag group of Libyan Islamic extremists.

28. On Newsnight, Tom King, chair of the Parliamentary Intelligence and Security Committee, tried to argue that because the plotters had already tried to assassinate Qadhafi and they already had weapons, it didn't matter that the government might have provided further supplies of ammunition. By this reasoning, any supplier of arms to, for example, the IRA could insist that his support didn't really matter just because the group already has weapons and explosives. It is not an argument which stands up in law.

29. This matches exactly the timing of the plot as I have related it.

30. "The officer was disclosing this information in the hope that if the coup was successful, the new government could enlist HMG support." This at least establishes the principle that the group of coup plotters were looking for support from the government.

[Original document: http://cryptome.org/shaygad1.doc]

Daily Telegraph coverage of Gaddafi Plot

UK News Electronic Telegraph

Monday 10 August 1998
Cook denies MI6 plot to assassinate Gaddafi

By Michael Smith

ROBIN Cook yesterday dismissed claims by a former intelligence officer of an MI6 plot to assassinate the Libyan leader Col Muammar Gaddafi as "pure fantasy".

The Foreign Secretary said he had investigated the claims and was satisfied that his Conservative predecessor, Sir Malcolm Rifkind, had not authorised any plan to kill the Libyan leader. He pointed out that David Shayler, the disaffected intelligence officer who made the claims, was a junior member of the domestic Security Service MI5 with little or no knowledge of secret MI6 operations.

Mr Cook said: "I do wish people would recognise that somebody who has left another service - not the Secret Intelligence Service MI6, he was never in MI6 - is making allegations, no doubt for his own reasons. I have pursued these allegations. I am absolutely satisfied that the previous Foreign Secretary did not authorise any such assassination attempt. I'm perfectly satisfied that MI6 never put forward any such proposal.

"Nor have I seen anything in the 15 months I have been in the job which would suggest that MI6 has any interest, any role or any experience over the decades of any such escapade. There was no Government-inspired plan to assassinate Gaddafi. There was no SIS proposal to do it, and I'm fairly clear there has never been any SIS involvement. I'm perfectly clear that these allegations have no basis in fact. It is pure fantasy."

Many Labour MPs are, however, unhappy with the treatment and pursuit of Shayler, and are calling for more accountability for the secret service. Clive Soley, chairman of the Parliamentary Labour Party, supported Mr Cook's denial, saying the claims were a "ludicrous suggestion". But he said they proved the need for more transparency. He called for public questioning of intelligence chiefs and also reports which were less heavily censored before publication.

Annie Machon, the girlfriend and former MI5 colleague of Shayler, who is being held in a Paris prison awaiting extradition to Britain to face charges under the Official Secrets Act, insisted that his claims were true. She said: "I believe them absolutely. He was a very, very good intelligence officer when he worked in MI5. He's got very good recall, and if he says something happened, then I believe that it did.

"He headed up the Libyan section in MI5 for over two years, so he was very well informed about all matters relating to Libya. He also managed to develop a particularly good working relationship with his opposite number in MI6 and I gather that is how he found out the details of the plot to kill Gaddafi."

Shayler told the New York Times that MI6 paid an Islamic fundamentalist £100,000 to place a bomb under Gaddafi's car but the plot went wrong when the explosives were placed under the wrong car, killing a number of bystanders.

One of the Libyan exile groups that intermittently reports such attempts to depose Col Gaddafi is based in London and may well have contacts with British intelligence, perhaps explaining why Mr

Cook said he was "fairly clear" that MI6 was not involved.

Under the 1994 Intelligence Services Act, MI6 can carry out acts abroad that would be outlawed in Britain providing they are authorised by the Foreign Secretary. But while Col Gaddafi's reputation for backing terrorism is well known, former intelligence officers said the likelihood that MI6 would want to replace him with an Islamic fundamentalist regime would be remote.

The Shayler allegations do bear a close resemblance to an alleged 1996 plot to kill Col Gaddafi by a dissident group of 45 officers, but it apparently took place in September 1996, two months after Shayler left MI5.

8 August 1998: BBC airs Shayler spy claims
7 August 1998: Are Britain's covert operatives messing up? Don't even ask [text of The New York Times article]

UK News Electronic Telegraph

Saturday 8 August 1998
BBC airs Shayler spy claims

An edition of Panorama investigating the claims made by David Shayler, the renegade MI5 officer, of a plot to assassinate Colonel Gaddafi was broadcast last night after a change of heart by the Government.

The BBC said the Government had decided not to use an injunction against Shayler to prevent it from showing the programme. The Government denies his claims. Richard Eyre, deputy chief executive of BBC News, said that the corporation believed that airing the allegations would enable a proper public debate about intelligence service activities.

Transcription and HTML by Cryptome.

TheUnhivedMind - February 28, 2011 03:52 AM (GMT)

Barack Obama backs Bahrain king's pledge to reform

President Obama said he supported a national dialogue initiative led by Crown Prince Salamn bin Hamad al-Khalifa in Bahrain

28 February 2011 Last updated at 02:37
http://www.bbc.co.uk/news/world-middle-east-12593334

US President Barack Obama has expressed his support for the King of Bahrain's affirmed commitment to reform.

Mr Obama welcomed a cabinet reshuffle by King Hamad bin Issa al-Khalifa in which four ministers, including two royal family members, were replaced.

The move followed two weeks of Shia protests against the Sunni-led regime.

President Obama said he supported a national dialogue initiative led by Crown Prince Salman bin Hamad al-Khalifa in Bahrain.

He urged that the process should be inclusive, non-sectarian and responsive to the people of the Gulf Kingdom.

Manama protests

"I welcome the announcement by King Hamad bin Issa al-Khalifa about making important changes to the cabinet and restating his commitment to reform," said Mr Obama in a statement.

Thousands of demonstrators remain camped out on Pearl Square in the capital, Manama, as protests move into a 15th day.

They have called for a genuinely democratic elected parliament and the sacking of Prime Minister Sheikh Khalifa ibn Salman al-Khalifa after 40 years in power.

Shia account for about 70% of the country's 525,000 people.

Bahrain - home to the US Navy's Fifth Fleet - is the first Gulf country to be thrown into turmoil by the wave of unrest sweeping the Arab world.

On Friday, the Chairman of the US Joint Chiefs of Staff Admiral Mike Mullen visited Bahrain and described the country as a critical long-time ally.

TheUnhivedMind - February 28, 2011 05:18 PM (GMT)

Bahrain Crown Prince Accuses Opposition of Harming Economy

By Glen Carey - Feb 28, 2011
http://www.bloomberg.com/news/2011-02-28/b...g-dialogue.html

Bahrain's crown prince accused some opposition groups of hurting the country's economy by declining to engage in a national dialogue, the official Bahrain News Agency reported.

"There are some who do not want to reform or work to obstruct it by unacceptable means," Prince Salman bin Hamad Al Khalifa was quoted as saying by the news service. That is hurting "the interests of the citizens," the financial industry and the economy, he said.

The crown prince called for a national dialogue on Feb. 18 to help end political turmoil and mainly Shiite protests. Seven people have been killed in the demonstrations, which began on Feb. 14, and eased almost a week later after the government removed tanks and armored personal carriers from the streets.

Bahrain's al-Wefaq group, the kingdom's largest Shiite Muslim opposition bloc, wants "significant steps" from the government before heeding its call for national dialogue, Abduljalil Khalil, head of al-Wefaq's bloc in parliament, said in an interview on Feb. 22. Shiites make up between 60 and 70 percent of the population, while the royal family is Sunni.

Thousands of demonstrators are still camped in the central Pearl Roundabout in Manama pressing their demands for democracy, free elections and more job opportunities. Protesters rallied outside the parliament today and marched to the state broadcaster's building, the Associated Press said.

Seeking to assuage opposition demands, King Hamad Bin Isa al Khalifa changed five ministers, including those overseeing housing, labor and health, the government said on Feb. 26.

The country's General Federation for Trade Unions said yesterday that the new appointments don't reflect "the ambitions and popular voices" of Bahrainis. A transitional government must be formed that will meet the "demands of the people" and bring about "real political change," it said in an e-mailed statement.

To contact the reporter on this story: Glen Carey in Manama, Bahrain, at gcarey8@bloomberg.net

To contact the editor responsible for this story: Andrew J. Barden at barden@bloomberg.net

TheUnhivedMind - February 28, 2011 11:26 PM (GMT)

Obama praises Bahrain's king for cabinet overhaul

28 Feb 2011
http://www.google.com/hostednews/ap/articl...9643e1280b3516e

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Barack Obama is praising the king of Bahrain for overhauling his cabinet and making a "commitment to reform."

After two weeks of anti-government protests, King Hamad bin Isa Al Khalifa ousted four cabinet members Saturday, including two members of the royal family.

Obama on Sunday encouraged Bahrain's leaders to lead a "meaningful, inclusive, nonsectarian and responsive" dialogue with their people.

Bahrain is home to the U.S. Navy's 5th Fleet, Washington's main counterweight against Iran's widening military ambitions.

Obama said "Bahrain's stability will be enhanced by respecting the universal rights" of its people, and by launching reforms that "meet the aspirations of all Bahrainis."

TheUnhivedMind - March 1, 2011 01:20 AM (GMT)

Eyewitnesses: 30 tanks spotted en route to Bahrain from Saudi Arabia

Mohamed Al-Mashad
Mon, 28/02/2011 - 23:23
http://www.almasryalyoum.com/en/news/eyewi...in-saudi-arabia

Bahrain--Eyewitnesses have reported seeing an estimated 30 tanks being transported into Bahrain from Saudi Arabia on Monday night at around 6:45pm local time. The tanks were sighted along the King Fahd causeway, which links the small island-nation of Bahrain to Saudi Arabia.

Commuters traveling along the 25-km causeway were held up due to the presence of “15 tank carriers carrying two tanks each heading towards Bahrain.” Civilian eyewitnesses could not, however, confirm whether the tanks belonged to the Saudi military.

The presence of Saudi military hardware in Bahrain is considered highly unusual.

The development comes on the eve of yet another scheduled anti-government demonstration organized by the Bahraini opposition and protesters in Manama's Pearl Roundabout.

Fears of Saudi intervention in the ongoing Bahraini uprising first came to the fore last week when unconfirmed reports emerged on Wednesday that Saudi officials had told US authorities that they were "prepared to intervene" in Bahrain should such a move prove necessary to protect Bahrain's embattled government.

Tomorrow's mass protest will be the first to take place since the arrival to the country of controversial Shia opposition leader Hassan Mosheima from self-imposed exile.

Mosheima arrived on Saturday, using his first speech to call for national unity and to urge protesters to step up demands for the ouster of Bahrain's prime minister of 40 years, Sheikh Khalifa Al Khalifa.

TheUnhivedMind - March 2, 2011 02:30 AM (GMT)

Saudi Arabia sends tanks to riot-hit Bahrain – paper

MOSCOW, March 1 (RIA Novosti)
http://en.rian.ru/world/20110301/162803894.html

Saudi Arabia has sent dozens of tanks to Bahrain, where anti-government protests continue for about two weeks, Egypt's Al-Masry Al-Youm newspaper said on Tuesday.

Eyewitnesses reported seeing "15 tank carriers carrying two tanks each heading towards Bahrain" along the 25-km King Fahd causeway, which links the small island nation of Bahrain to Saudi Arabia.

Protestors are mainly Shiites account for about 70% of the Bahraini population, but have long complained of discrimination and other abuses by the Sunni Khalifa dynasty that has ruled the tiny Gulf nation for more than two centuries.

In the worst unrest in the kingdom since the 1990s, a wave of protests swept across Bahrain in the past weeks. At least six people were killed and hundreds injured in clashes with police.

Opposition threatens to hold more protests and a nationwide strike if the government refuses to resign.

TheUnhivedMind - March 14, 2011 06:40 PM (GMT)

Gulf states send forces to Bahrain following protests

Caroline Hawley says foreign troops have been called in to protect key institutions

14 March 2011 Last updated at 17:53
http://www.bbc.co.uk/news/world-middle-east-12729786

Troops from a number of Gulf states, including Saudi Arabia and the UAE, have arrived in Bahrain at the request of the kingdom, officials say.

It comes a day after the worst violence since seven anti-government protesters were killed in clashes with security forces last month.

Dozens of people were injured on Sunday as protesters pushed back police and barricaded roads.

Bahrain's opposition said the foreign forces amounted to an occupation.

A Saudi official said about 1,000 Saudi Arabian troops arrived in Bahrain early on Monday, and later the UAE said it had sent some 500 police officers.

Witnesses told the Reuters news agency that about 150 Saudi Arabian armoured troop carriers plus other vehicles entered Bahrain on the causeway that links the two kingdoms.

The troops are part of a deployment by the Gulf Co-operation Council (GCC), a six-nation regional grouping which includes Bahrain, Saudi Arabia, Kuwait, Oman, Qatar and the United Arab Emirates.

It is believed they are intended to guard key facilities such as oil and gas installations and financial institutions.

Travel warning

The US said it was aware of the deployment.

White House spokesman Tommy Vietor said: "We urge our GCC partners to show restraint and respect the rights of the people of Bahrain, and to act in a way that supports dialogue instead of undermining it."

The US Navy bases its Fifth Fleet in Bahrain.

There were clashes between police and protesters in Manama on Sunday

The British and Australian governments have warned against all travel to the kingdom.

Bahrain's Shia majority has long complained of discrimination at the hands of the Sunni ruling elite, but large-scale protests broke out last month after the presidents of Egypt and Tunisia were toppled in uprisings.

No dialogue

On Monday, protesters continued their occupation of Pearl Square, near Manama's financial district, and set up roadblocks around the area.

In a statement issued before the arrival of the GCC troops was confirmed, the Shia-led opposition said: "We consider the arrival of any soldier, or military vehicle, into Bahraini territory... an overt occupation of the kingdom of Bahrain and a conspiracy against the unarmed people of Bahrain."

King Hamad bin Issa al-Khalifah has offered dialogue with the protesters, but they have refused, saying they want the government to step down.

Most of the opposition and protesters have said they do not want to overthrow the monarchy, but want the ruling family to give up most of its powers to the elected parliament.

Some, however, have said they want a republic.

The intervention from Bahrain's predominantly Sunni neighbours may deepen the rift between Shia and Sunni Muslims in Bahrain and beyond, says the BBC's Middle East analyst Magdi Abdelhadi.

Saudi Arabia, which has problems with its own Shia minority, has already clamped down on Shia democracy activists, our analyst says.

TheUnhivedMind - March 15, 2011 12:15 AM (GMT)

[dohtml]<object style="height: 390px; width: 640px"><param name="movie" value="http://www.youtube.com/v/a9IcqYASb_Q?version=3"><param name="allowFullScreen" value="true"><param name="allowScriptAccess" value="always"><embed src="http://www.youtube.com/v/a9IcqYASb_Q?version=3" type="application/x-shockwave-flash" allowfullscreen="true" allowScriptAccess="always" width="640" height="390"></object>[/dohtml]

TheUnhivedMind - March 16, 2011 04:31 PM (GMT)

Bahrain: Britons trapped by travel bans may be able to return home

HSBC to ask courts to lift travel bans on 30 customers who owe it money following growing unrest and martial law in the country

Jill Insley
guardian.co.uk, Wednesday 16 March 2011 10.24 GMT
http://www.guardian.co.uk/money/2011/mar/1...uld-return-home

Britons who have been stranded in conflict-stricken Bahrain because they owe money may soon be able to return to the UK.

The ex-pats, whose plight was highlighted in the Observer two weeks ago, have been subject to travel bans preventing them from leaving Bahrain for up to five years. Under Bahrani law anyone with a travel ban is not allowed to renew their residency and work permits, meaning they have effectively been stopped from repaying their loans.

But following growing unrest in the Gulf state this week, HSBC has decided to ask the Bahrain courts to rescind the travel bans on 30 customers that still owe it money, enabling them to leave.

The Foreign & Commonwealth Office is advising against all travel to Bahrain until further notice. A state of emergency has been declared following the deployment of Saudi troops and an escalation in violence in the streets during the past few days.

A spokesman said: "Due to the challenges facing the country, HSBC Bahrain has decided to lift the travel bans on the small number of its customers. Travel bans are enforced by the courts and are imposed as a last resort on customers in default and who refuse to engage with the bank."

Travel bans are common throughout the Gulf, primarily as a result of the high proportion of non-resident workers there. Creditors apply to civil courts for the bans, but before they are imposed the debtor is encouraged to talk to the creditor to resolve the issue.

Steve Vickers, one of those caught in Bahrain by a travel ban, had not heard from HSBC at the time of writing, but said the news was "excellent". He has been stranded since November 2009 and has at times been forced to sleep rough through his inability to work legally.

"I am absolutely delighted that at last I may be able to see my mum and grandma and that the HSBC has shown some commonsense finally," he said. "I was very worried about my situation in Bahrain considering what is happening in the country: I thought I would be trapped here against my will when others would be escaping the troubles.

"I hope that I will have some positive news from the HSBC."

Carol Melrose, who has lived in Bahrain for 20 years, discovered she was subject to a travel ban in February 2009 after trying to fly out of the country for a business meeting. She owes 67,000 Bahraini dinars (£110,000) to three banks - HSBC, Citibank and Standard Chartered - following the collapse of two companies that she had invested in.

She said: "I am a little bit sceptical after fighting this for the last two years and having my hopes high a few times. I know that HSBC are one of the banks that have really tried to work with customers, so hopefully they will lead the changes.

"I have other bans from Standard Chartered and Citibank, and from traders that the business owed money to. But this move is a big start in the right direction."

However she feared HSBC would find it hard to get the ban lifted as the court is not in session.

"Nothing is operating here," she said "Main roads are blocked by protestors, businesses are closed, banks are closed, petrol stations have no gas, schools are closed. You can't get into Manama ,the country is at a standstill. The American Embassy has advised people to leave, and so has the Turkish Embassy, but the British Embassy is still just giving advice for citizens to stay indoors and away from the trouble."

TheUnhivedMind - March 16, 2011 04:45 PM (GMT)

BAHRAIN KING IMPOSES MARTIAL LAW

Wednesday March 16 2011 by Daily Express Reporter
http://express.co.uk/posts/view/234812/Bah...ses-martial-law

BRITAIN yesterday called for restraint from all sides in Bahrain after the declaration of a three-month state of emergency in the Gulf kingdom.

King Hamad bin Isa al-Khalifa imposed martial law by handing sweeping powers to security forces to quell protests. The move came a day after he invited 1,000 Saudi-Arabian troops into his country – shaken by a month of protests by the Shia majority against the rule of the Sunni royal family.

Yesterday there was fierce fighting between protesters and security forces in a Shia village, with 200 wounded and reports of at least three dead. Thousands also marched on the Saudi embassy in the capital Manama to protest at its intervention. Foreign Secretary William Hague said: “Bahrain should respect the right to peaceful protest and respond to the legitimate concerns of the Bahraini people.”

The Foreign Office advises against all travel to Bahrain.

TheUnhivedMind - March 16, 2011 10:44 PM (GMT)

UK government tells Britons to flee Bahrain on Thursday

16 March 2011 Last updated at 22:24
http://www.bbc.co.uk/news/uk-12768184

The UK Foreign Office (FCO) has urged Britons to leave Bahrain on Thursday, amid protests and violence there.

The FCO said it would charter planes to Dubai, to help supplement the number of commercial flights available.

It advised any British nationals without a "pressing reason" to stay to leave via Bahrain International Airport on 17 March on commercial flights.

Security forces with tanks have moved in on anti-government protesters, in the Gulf state's capital Manama.

The protesters have been camped in a square in the city for weeks.

At least three civilians were reportedly killed after police fired on mainly Shia protesters. Officials said three police also died.

Troops have taken over a hospital treating the wounded. Officials have imposed a curfew and banned protests.

The country's Sunni rulers on Tuesday called in Saudi troops to keep order.

TheUnhivedMind - March 17, 2011 03:09 AM (GMT)

'US to lose Fifth Fleet in a few weeks'

March 15, 2011
http://presstv.com/detail/170038.html

The United States will lose its Fifth Fleet base in Bahrain in a few weeks following its support for the embattled monarchy in Manama, a political analyst in Middle East affairs says.

"The US will lose its Fifth Fleet in Bahrain in a matter of weeks because they have sided with the al-Khalifa Monarchy," al-Ahmed said in an interview with Press TV on Monday.

"This issue is already done; the al-Khalifa [dynasty] is over. We are just waiting for a few days or a few weeks," he added.

Ahmed pointed to the presence of the forces of Saudi Arabia and those of several [Persian] Gulf Cooperation Council ([P]GCC) members in Bahrain, saying, "The United States gave the green light to these troops to go into Bahrain because the White House is carrying on the Saudi policy in Yemen and Bahrain."

He warned that if top Bahraini cleric Ayatollah Sheikh Isa Qasim issues a Fatwa waging Jihad against foreign troops in Bahrain, "Bahrain will be burnt and the Saudis and the others will lose."

Ahmed argued that under the international laws, the presence of [P]GCC troops in Bahrain is an act of "aggression" and "occupation" and the leaders of the invading countries are subject to prosecution by international courts.

Accordingly "the Bahraini people have the right to fight against them, to resist them and use violence against them," he pointed out.

On Monday, Bahrain's fellow members of the [Persian] Gulf Cooperation Council — Saudi Arabia, Kuwait, the United Arab Emirates, Oman and Qatar — dispatched their armed forces to the Persian Gulf island at Manama's request to quell nationwide protests against the Sunni-led monarchy's suppression of the Shia majority.

Inspired by the Tunisian and Egyptian revolutions, tens of thousands of Bahrainis have poured into the streets of the capital Manama since mid-February, calling for an end to the Al-Khalifa dynasty, which has ruled the country for almost two centuries.

Demonstrators are keeping vigil in hundreds of tents in Manama's Pearl Square, which has become the epicenter of anti-government protests.

At least 7 people have been killed so far during the government clampdown on the peaceful demonstrations in Bahrain.

TheUnhivedMind - March 17, 2011 03:15 AM (GMT)

U.S. says Saudi forces in Bahrain "not an invasion"

WASHINGTON | Mon Mar 14, 2011
http://www.reuters.com/article/2011/03/14/...E72D6RB20110314

(Reuters) - The United States does not consider the entry into Bahrain of Saudi Arabian security forces an invasion, the White House said on Monday.

Sunni-ruled Saudi Arabia sent about 1,000 troops into Bahrain to protect government facilities after mainly Shi'ite protesters overran police and blocked roads.

"We've seen the reports that you're talking about. This is not an invasion of a country," White House spokesman Jay Carney told a news briefing.

"We urge the government of Bahrain, as we have repeatedly, as well as other GCC (Gulf Cooperation Council) countries, to exercise restraint," Carney added.

The Gulf Cooperation Council comprises Bahrain, Oman, Qatar, Kuwait, Saudi Arabia and the United Arab Emirates.

(Writing by Caren Bohan; editing by John Whitesides)

TheUnhivedMind - March 18, 2011 05:23 PM (GMT)

Foreign Office charters second plane as Bahrain clashes continue

18 Mar 2011
http://www.thisislondon.co.uk/standard/art...hes-continue.do

A second Government charter flight to help British citizens leave Bahrain will depart today after the first landed with no passengers onboard.

Nobody requested a seat on the first flight which the Foreign Office (FCO) said left the stricken Gulf state at 2pm local time before touching down in nearby Dubai yesterday.

The flight had been offered by the Government at a price of £260 per seat to help people wishing to leave the country who could not get places on commercial flights.

But the expected rush for places did not materialise with the majority of people departing on commercial flights.

A second Government charter flight is due to leave Bahrain at midday local time today.

The Foreign Office announced the additional flights on Wednesday after running battles were again fought on Bahraini streets.

Security forces had full control of parts of central Manama, a day after over-running a protesters' camp and clashing with Shiites elsewhere in the country.

At least five people were killed - two policemen and three protesters - in the assault on the encampment in Pearl Square, according to opposition groups and the government.

Prime Minister David Cameron has called on the King of Bahrain to end the violent suppression of street protests.

Foreign Secretary William Hague said: "The UK remains seriously concerned about clashes with protesters and reports of several casualties.

"I call on all parties to engage in an open and constructive national dialogue, so that it is translated as soon as possible into tangible actions that respond to the legitimate aspirations of the Bahraini people."

Meanwhile, US President Barack Obama urged the kings of Bahrain and Saudi Arabia to show restraint in dealing with protesters.

The imposition of martial rule followed the arrival of more than 1,000 troops, at the King's invitation, from neighbouring allies including Saudi Arabia.

In a statement, the Foreign Office said: "The FCO continues to recommend those British nationals who do not have a pressing reason to remain to leave via Bahrain International Airport.

"The UK Government is chartering planes to supplement commercially available options.

"A flight departed Bahrain for Dubai at 1400 local time on March 17. The next flight is being arranged to fly from Bahrain to London at midday on March 18."

It is not known how many Britons are still in the country, but the FCO estimates there are several thousand at any one time.

Those wishing to leave on the Government flights are asked to call +44 20 7008 5900.

Despite the zero take-up for the charter flight, the Government insisted it was better to have empty aircraft than not to provide potential escape routes.

"The security situation in Bahrain is very uncertain so it is impossible to know in advance exactly how much extra capacity is needed to get our people out," a source said.

"Frankly, our priority is ensuring all British citizens are safe, and if that means putting on extra planes, then that's what we will do."

TheUnhivedMind - March 18, 2011 07:00 PM (GMT)

© Reuters

© Reuters

© Reuters

© AFP/GETTY IMAGES

© AFP/GETTY IMAGES

© Reuters

© Reuters

© EPA

TheUnhivedMind - March 19, 2011 12:16 AM (GMT)

Saudi Arabia troops in Bahrain protested in Turkey

The protest came just hours before Saudi Foreign Minister Prince Saud al-Faisal was coming to Turkey on an official visit.

World Bulletin / News Desk
http://www.worldbulletin.net/?aType=haber&ArticleID=71255

A group of Turkish demonstrators protested Saudi Arabia on Thursday for its military intervention in Bahrain to help the Gulf country's leadership suppress opposition protestors.

Around 100 demonstrators gathered outside the Saudi Embassy in Ankara as police took tight security measures around the embassy.

The group wanted to leave an ostrich egg with an illustration of Saudi King Abdullah on it to the entrance of the embassy but police did not allow. A spokesman for the group said they would send the egg to the Saudi Embassy by mail later on.

The protest came just hours before Saudi Foreign Minister Prince Saud al-Faisal was coming to Turkey on an official visit.

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: Malawi riots spread to major cities after troops

Title: Malawi riots spread to major cities after troops
Description: clash with protestors

TheUnhivedMind - July 21, 2011 01:35 AM (GMT)

Malawi riots spread to major cities after troops clash with protesters

Violence erupts in Lilongwe and Blantyre as army and police try to halt anti-government demonstrations guardian.co.uk, Wednesday 20 July 2011 19.04 BST

http://www.guardian.co.uk/world/2011/jul/2...rgas-protesters

Riots have broken out in several cities in Malawi after police and the army tried to disperse protesters demanding the resignation of President Bingu wa Mutharika, whom they accuse of ignoring civil liberties and weakening the economy.

In the capital, Lilongwe, witnesses said smoke was billowing into the sky as demonstrators burnt cars, offices and shops belonging to politicians from the ruling Democratic Progressive Party (DPP).

Troops were deployed in the normally sleepy commercial capital, Blantyre, and police fired teargas at marchers who had gathered outside the stock exchange.

"The earlier injunction has been withdrawn and we're proceeding on the planned route of the demonstration but sadly we're being smoked by teargas," said Gift Makhwawa, president of the Malawi Law Society.

A police spokesman, Willie Mwaluka, said security forces were on high alert to curb the unprecedented wave of unrest in the landlocked former British colony. "We're assessing the situation as it unfolds. Right now I don't have any confirmed figures of arrests, and extent of property damage," he said.

Marchers in the northern city of Mzuzu ransacked the DPP's offices in a rare show of defiance against Mutharika, a former World Bank economist who was first elected in 2004 and who has presided over six years of aid-funded economic growth. His ratings faded this year when he became embroiled in a diplomatic row with Britain, Malawi's biggest donor, over a leaked embassy cable that referred to him as "autocratic and intolerant of criticism".

After the expulsion of its ambassador to Lilongwe, Britain kicked out Malawi's representative in London and suspended aid worth $550m (£341m) over the next four years. The freeze has left a hole in the budget of a country that has historically relied on aid for 40% of its revenues.

Despite mounting commercial pressure on the currency and repeated calls from the likes of International Monetary Fund for a devaluation, Mutharika has vowed to stand firm. "We are not off-track. It is the IMF which is off-track in Malawi," he said in a lecture broadcast on state media on Wednesday. "When other developed countries are receiving bailouts, what we get in Malawi are demands to devalue our currency."

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: Syria unrest: Tear gas fired at Deraa funeral

Title: Syria unrest: Tear gas fired at Deraa funeral

TheUnhivedMind - March 19, 2011 07:18 PM (GMT)

Syria unrest: Tear gas fired at Deraa funeral

19 March 2011 Last updated at 14:50
http://www.bbc.co.uk/news/world-middle-east-12796020

Syrian security forces have fired tear gas to disperse crowds at the funeral of two people killed in anti-government protests on Friday, witnesses say.

Thousands had gathered for the funeral in the southern city of Deraa, and began chanting anti-government slogans.

Rights activists said at least one mourner was arrested by secret police.

Syrian President Bashar al-Assad, whose Baath party has dominated politics in the country for almost 50 years, tolerates no dissent.

Activists said the mourners had been chanting "God, Syria, freedom" before security forces intervened.

Eyewitnesses told the BBC that the mood at the funeral was angrier than during Friday's protest.

The witnesses said the funeral had taken place outside the city, and that the city itself had been sealed off by security forces making it difficult for mourners to get back in.

A rights activist told AFP news agency that several people had been injured as the protesters struggled to run away from the security forces.

Meanwhile, rights groups say a fourth person has died from his wounds after the protests in Deraa on Friday.

They were killed by security forces as protesters demanded political freedom and an end to corruption, eyewitnesses and activists told foreign media.

Al-Watan newspaper, which is close to the government, says the authorities have pledged to investigate the deaths.

The US and UN both condemned the violence and urged the government not to use repression.

TheUnhivedMind - March 20, 2011 07:22 PM (GMT)

Syria: Protesters in south set fire to buildings

Bashar al-Assad has led Syria since 2000, tolerates little dissent

20 March 2011 Last updated at 18:54
http://www.bbc.co.uk/news/world-middle-east-12800243

Demonstrators in the southern Syrian city of Deraa have set fire to several buildings during a third consecutive day of protests, witnesses say.

One report said the buildings targeted included the headquarters of the ruling Baath Party.

Police tried to disperse protesters in the southern city, and one demonstrator was reportedly killed.

Violent clashes between anti-government protesters and security forces on Friday left at least four people dead.

The protests on Sunday came as a government delegation arrived in Deraa to offer condolences for those killed.

The protesters called for an end to Syria's 48-year-old emergency law, and for the dismissal of officials involved in Friday's crackdown, reports said.

Residents told Reuters news agency that protesters had set fire to symbols of President Bashar al-Assad's regime, including the Baath Party building, a courthouse and two branches of a phone company owned by the president's cousin.

Activists were quoted as saying that police had used tear gas and live ammunition to try to clear demonstrators.

Roads into Deraa have been blocked and there have been military helicopters flying over the city, they said.

One activist told AFP news agency that one protester had been shot dead and dozens injured. Residents were also quoted by Reuters as saying one demonstrator had died.
'Children freed'

On Saturday, security forces fired tear gas to disperse crowds at the funeral of two of those who died a day earlier.

Syrian President Assad, whose Baath party has dominated politics in the country for almost 50 years, tolerates little dissent.

The BBC's Owen Bennett-Jones reports from neighbouring Lebanon that Syrian authorities are using a combination of force and concessions to try to prevent further protests.

The government says it has released 15 children arrested for spraying revolutionary slogans on walls in Deraa, and it has announced a three-month reduction in the length of compulsory military service across the country.

The official news agency has tried to explain the security forces' use of live ammunition by saying that instigators impersonating security officials have misled the police into using violence and live bullets.

So far Syria has remained unaffected by demands for change in the Arab world, but it now seems the government is facing a challenge to its authority, our correspondent says.

TheUnhivedMind - March 21, 2011 10:54 PM (GMT)

US urges Syria to show restraint over protests

March 21, 2011 share
http://www.nowlebanon.com/NewsArticleDetails.aspx?ID=252775

The United States on Monday urged Syria to exercise restraint against anti-government demonstrators as it renewed its condemnation of the Syrian government's violent crackdown.

"We condemn the violence by the Syrian government that caused the deaths and injuries of individuals that protested in Syria ...over the past week," Mark Toner, a US State Department spokesperson, told reporters.

"We call on the Syrian government to exercise restraint and refrain from violence against these ... protesters," Toner said.

"We call on the Syrian government to live up to its obligations under the universal declaration of human rights and allow the Syrian people to exercise the universal right of assembly."

Thousands of Syrians Monday marched in the southern town of Daraa, a day after Syrian security forces opened fire on protesters there, with rights activists saying they killed at least one person and wounded more than 100.

A Syrian official denied the reported death.

Meanwhile, an 11-year-old boy injured when Syrian security forces dispersed an earlier protest rally in Daraa died of his wounds on Monday, a human rights activist said.

Four protestors were killed Friday and hundreds wounded by security forces in Daraa, rights groups said, as demonstrations erupted across Syria in the first such show of discontent under Syrian President Bashar al-Assad's rule.

The incidents prompted National Security Council spokesperson Tommy Vietor to say the Washington "strongly condemns" violence by security forces in Syria.

-AFP/NOW Lebanon

TheUnhivedMind - March 23, 2011 05:42 PM (GMT)

Syria unrest: 'Protesters killed' at Omari mosque

23 March 2011 Last updated at 12:30
http://www.bbc.co.uk/news/world-middle-east-12827542

At least six people have died after security forces fired on protesters outside a mosque in the Syrian city of Deraa, human rights activists say.

Hundreds of people had gathered in the streets outside the Omari mosque to prevent troops from storming it.

The mosque has been the focus of anti-government demonstrations - at least 10 people have now been killed in clashes.

Officials blamed Wednesday's violence on an "armed gang" and said there had been weapons inside the mosque.

UN Human Rights Commissioner Navi Pillay earlier urged the Syrian government to end the use of "excessive force".

"People have the legitimate right to express their grievances and demands to their government," she said.

The EU has also strongly condemned the "unacceptable" crackdown.
'Sniper fire'

After four days of clashes, Deraa had been relatively quiet on Tuesday.

Hundreds of people had gathered around the Omari mosque in the Old City, but were dispersed by the security forces.

By the afternoon, some protesters had erected tents outside the mosque - they said they were going to remain there until their demands for greater political freedom and an end to corruption were met.

But shortly after midnight, the power supply and telephone lines to the area were cut.

Witnesses said police released tear gas and fired live ammunition at protesters around the mosque.

Ali Ghassab al-Mahamid, a doctor who had gone to help victims of the violence, was killed, Reuters news agency reported. One witness said he was shot dead by a sniper.

A political activist said the old quarter was in total darkness. "It is still difficult to know exactly what happened," he told Reuters.

One activist told BBC Arabic there was a "massacre" taking place in the country.

"The Syrian authorities are now committing a crime against humanity whose victims are innocent, defenceless and peaceful citizens, who are staging peaceful sit-ins, and who don't even have stones to defend themselves with," said the activist, who did not want to be named.

"These people think that they can kill the democratic protesters without being held to account."
'Arbitrary arrests'

State media said four people had been killed. Officials blamed the violence on an "armed gang", which they said had attacked a medical team in an ambulance, killing a doctor, paramedic and driver. One member of the security forces had also been killed, said the report.

The Omari mosque has been the focus of anti-government protest in recent weeks

"The security forces who were near the area intervened, hitting some and arresting others," the AFP news agency quoted officials as telling state media.

State TV later broadcast images of what it said were weapons which had been seized from inside the mosque.

The government has previously accused protesters of being Israeli agents and infiltrators.

Rights groups say arbitrary arrests of protesters and activists have been taking place across the country.

On Tuesday, the Syrian Observatory for Human Rights said Louai Hussein, a former political prisoner who supported the protesters, was taken from his home in the Damascus suburb of Sahnaya.

However, reports say the governor of the Deraa region, Faisal Kalthoum, has been sacked - one of the demands of the demonstrators.

The authorities have also released the 15 children whose detention for writing pro-democracy graffiti prompted people to march from the Omari mosque after Friday prayers.

The security forces later opened fire to disperse the demonstration, killing four people. The following day, they fired on mourners at two of the victims' funerals, killing another person. An 11-year-old boy died on Monday after suffering the effects of tear gas inhalation.

Although the demonstrators have not demanded the resignation of President Bashar al-Assad, the unrest is the most serious challenge to his rule since he succeeded his father 11 years ago.

The BBC's Lina Sinjab in Damascus says the events are unprecedented in recent Syrian history, and the unrest is certainly making the government very worried.

Syria has been ruled under emergency laws since 1963.

TheUnhivedMind - March 25, 2011 02:12 AM (GMT)

SYRIA FACES A ‘DAY OF RAGE’

Mass demonstrations are expected after Friday prayers in Syria

Friday March 25,2011
By Daily Express Reporter
http://express.co.uk/posts/view/236614/Syr...-a-day-of-rage-

SYRIA was braced for a violent “day of rage” today after security forces left 40 protesters dead.

Mass demonstrations were expected after Friday prayers.

President Bashar al-Assad pledged greater freedom and prosperity for Syrians while facing the biggest challenge to his rule since succeeding his father 11 years ago.

An aide to Assad in Damascus suggested a possible end to 48 years of emergency rule.

In the southern Sunni city of Deraa, a hospital official said at least 37 people had been killed there on Wednesday when security forces opened fire on demonstrators.

At least six civilians were killed during an attack on the city’s Omari mosque on Tuesday.

The funerals of several activists took place yesterday as Syrian forces patrolled the streets wielding Kalashnikovs.

In the Commons yesterday, Foreign Secretary William Hague called for Syria to show restraint and to respect any legitimate demands of its people.

TheUnhivedMind - March 25, 2011 02:25 AM (GMT)

Syria unrest: Government pledges political reforms

Amateur footage purportedly shows recent violence in the city of Deraa

24 March 2011 Last updated at 22:27
http://www.bbc.co.uk/news/world-middle-east-12853634

Syrian leaders have pledged to introduce reforms to meet the demands of protesters, after days of violence in the southern city of Deraa.

Officials promised to study the need for lifting the state of emergency, in place since 1963.

The government also said it would bring to trial those suspected of killing several protesters in Deraa.

President Bashar al-Assad later ordered the release of everyone arrested during the "recent events", state media said.

Presidential spokeswoman Bouthaina Shaaban blamed outside agitators for whipping up trouble, and denied that the government had ordered security forces to open fire on protesters.

Watch: Bouthaina Shaaban said the president expressed his condolences to the people of Deraa

But she said this "did not mean mistakes had not been made".

"We should not confuse the behaviour of an individual, and the desire and determination of President Bashar al-Assad to move Syria to more prosperity," she told a news conference in Damascus.

Relaxing restrictions?

A committee would be set up to talk to "our brothers in Deraa" and bring to justice those responsible for killing protesters, Ms Shaaban said.

She also said the government would raise workers' wages, introduce health reforms, allow more political parties to compete in elections, relax media restrictions and establish a new mechanism for fighting corruption.

Ms Shaaban announced a similar package of reforms in 2005, but critics say her pledges were never enacted.

Opposition groups reacted to the news conference immediately, telling Reuters news agency that the Deraa committee would do nothing to meet the aspirations of the people.

Reuters reported that dissidents in Syria and in exile dismissed the reforms, calling for the immediate scrapping of the state of emergency and freeing of thousands of political prisoners.

Abdul-Karim Rihawi, who heads the Syrian Human Rights League, later said authorities had released several activists including prominent journalist Mazen Darwish and writer Louay Husein.

Ms Shaaban accused international media, including the BBC and CNN, of exaggerating the crackdown on the protesters.

Estimates vary as to how many people were killed in Wednesday's unrest.

Some reports quoting witnesses and activists have put the figure as high as 100; others have claimed about 15 people were killed.

The government said 10 people had died.

Security forces opened fired on crowds three times in Deraa on Wednesday, activists and witnesses said.

The first clashes took place in the early hours outside a mosque. Later, witnesses said crowds at a funeral for those who were killed were themselves fired on.

Later on Thursday, the US issued a strongly worded statement condemning Syria's "brutal repression" of demonstrations.

White House spokesman Jay Carney said the US called on the government in Damascus to "exercise restraint and respect the rights of its people".

President Assad succeeded his father in 2000 and has tolerated little dissent.

TheUnhivedMind - March 26, 2011 02:18 AM (GMT)

Syria: Protests in Deraa, Damascus, Hama and Homs

Amateur footage sent to the BBC showed people chanting pro-freedom slogans at a rally in

25 March 2011 Last updated at 21:37
http://www.bbc.co.uk/news/world-middle-east-12858972

Protests have been staged in towns and cities across Syria, including the capital Damascus, a day after the government announced limited changes.

Unconfirmed reports said a number of people had been killed in at least three separate protests.

Fresh gunfire was also heard in the city of Deraa, which has become the centre of a serious challenge to the regime of President Bashar al-Assad.

Amnesty International fears 55 people have died there in the past week.

The marchers who took to the streets in Deraa on Friday had attended funerals for some of the 25 protesters killed on Wednesday.
'Peaceful, Peaceful'

Some of the protesters started a fire under a bronze statue of Mr Assad's father, the late President Hafez al-Assad, witnesses reported.

Another group of protesters trying to reach Deraa were killed in the nearby village of Salamen when security forces opened fire.

A government official confirmed that at least 10 protesters had died, although witnesses said up to 20 people had been killed.

In Damascus, around 1,000 were reportedly continuing a protest into Friday night, vowing to stay until their demands had been met.

Earlier, hundreds marched on King Faisal Street chanting: "Peaceful, Peaceful, God, Syria, Freedom."

This protest was broken up by security forces and many were arrested, reports say.

Another protest reported to the BBC by an eyewitness took place around al-Rifai near Qasar Sousah Square.

Supporters of Mr Assad were also staging large protests in the capital, and clashes erupted between the two sides.

In the central city of Hama, hundreds of people were said to have gathered on the city streets to chant "freedom".

In 1982, the Syrian army put down an uprising led by the Muslim Brotherhood in Hama. Rights groups believe that tens of thousands of civilians were killed when large parts of the city were destroyed in the military assault.

In Tall, witnesses quoted by the Reuters news agency said about 1,000 people had rallied to show their support for the Deraa protesters, and were chanting slogans denouncing members of the ruling Assad family.

Demonstrations which ended in violence were also reported in the cities of Latakia and Homs. One person was killed in each place, the Associated Press news agency quoted an activist as saying.

There were also protests in Banias and Dahel, AFP reported.
Changes promised

On Thursday, the Syrian government said it would consider political reforms, including the possible ending of emergency laws introduced in 1963.

The government also said it would put on trial those suspected of killing several protesters in Deraa.

Mr Assad later ordered the release of everyone arrested during the "recent events", state media said.

Presidential spokeswoman Bouthaina Shaaban blamed outside agitators for whipping up trouble, and denied that the government had ordered security forces to open fire on protesters.

But she said this "did not mean mistakes had not been made".
'Appalling and brutal'

UN Secretary-General Ban Ki-moon has telephoned Mr Assad to urge restraint and underline Syria's obligation to respect the fundamental rights of its citizens.

In the US, White House spokesman Jay Carney said Washington was deeply concerned at what was happening.

"We strongly condemn the Syrian government's attempts to repress and intimidate demonstrators," Mr Carney said.

Amnesty also condemned the treatment of demonstrators.

"The excessive force apparently again being used by security forces is the latest example of the Syrian authorities' appalling and brutal response to recent dissent, and make their pledge to investigate the violence sound rather hollow," said spokesman Philip Luther.

"If the words we heard from the Syrian government yesterday are to mean anything, they must immediately issue clear orders to restrain the security forces to prevent further loss of life."

Are you in Syria? Have you family in Syria? What is your reaction to the protests? Send us your comments and experiences.

TheUnhivedMind - March 26, 2011 02:32 AM (GMT)

[dohtml]<embed width="320" height="240" quality="high" bgcolor="#000000" name="main" id="main" allowscriptaccess="always" allowfullscreen="true" src="http://video.godlikeproductions.com/modules/vPlayer/vPlayer.swf?f=http://video.godlikeproductions.com/modules/vPlayer/vPlayercfg.php?fid=bbbb361bc368f9b2080" type="application/x-shockwave-flash"/></embed>[/dohtml]

TheUnhivedMind - March 26, 2011 02:32 AM (GMT)

[dohtml]<object width="640" height="390"><param name="movie" value="http://www.youtube.com/v/vcmnKzeFdUQ&hl=en_US&feature=player_embedded&version=3"></param><param name="allowFullScreen" value="true"></param><param name="allowScriptAccess" value="always"></param><embed src="http://www.youtube.com/v/vcmnKzeFdUQ&hl=en_US&feature=player_embedded&version=3" type="application/x-shockwave-flash" allowfullscreen="true" allowScriptAccess="always" width="640" height="390"></embed></object>[/dohtml]

TheUnhivedMind - March 26, 2011 02:37 AM (GMT)

[dohtml]<object width="640" height="390"><param name="movie" value="http://www.youtube.com/v/IV32_uPHMXg&hl=en_US&feature=player_embedded&version=3"></param><param name="allowFullScreen" value="true"></param><param name="allowScriptAccess" value="always"></param><embed src="http://www.youtube.com/v/IV32_uPHMXg&hl=en_US&feature=player_embedded&version=3" type="application/x-shockwave-flash" allowfullscreen="true" allowScriptAccess="always" width="640" height="390"></embed></object>[/dohtml]

TheUnhivedMind - March 27, 2011 12:26 AM (GMT)

Syria turmoil: Fresh protests erupt

Protesters have destroyed a statue of ex-President Hafez al-Assad in Deraa

26 March 2011 Last updated at 17:00
http://www.bbc.co.uk/news/world-middle-east-12871146

Fresh protests have flared in Syria at the end of a week that has seen dozens of demonstrators killed.

Offices of the ruling Baath party were burned down in the southern town of Tafas and coastal town of Latakia, witnesses said, while hundreds renewed demonstrations in Deraa.

The authorities earlier released more than 200 political prisoners in Damascus, a UK-based rights group said.

The protests are a serious challenge to President Bashar al-Assad's regime.

The US and the UN had condemned the Syrian government following reports that troops fired on peaceful protesters on Friday.

However, the political and information adviser to President Bashar al-Assad, Bouthaina Shaaban, has told the BBC it was not security forces that had shot protesters but "armed groups" firing on civilians indiscriminately.
'Downfall'

The biggest protests on Saturday were in Tafas, 18km (11 miles) north of the city of Deraa, which is close to the Jordan border and which has become the centre of the challenge to the 11-year rule of President Assad.

Thousands took to the streets in Tafas to bury three protesters who witnesses said had been killed by security forces on Friday.

Reports of the deaths of protesters in Syria cannot be independently confirmed.

The witnesses said the protesters chanted anti-government slogans and burned the Baath HQ and a police station.

In Deraa on Saturday, hundreds of protesters climbed on to the rubble of a statue of ex-President Hafez al-Assad that was torn down on Friday and resumed anti-government chants.

Some were holding cardboard signs reading "the people want the downfall of the regime", witnesses said.

A human rights activist, Ammar Qurabi, told Associated Press news agency there were also protests in the coastal town of Latakia, with another Baath party office set on fire.

A Syrian official told Agence France-Presse news agency that two people were killed by unidentified snipers in Latakia on Saturday.

Meanwhile, Ms Shaaban told BBC Arabic there were "foreign schemes" aimed at destabilising Syria and that a number of foreign nationals had been detained.

Supporters of President Assad staged large counter-protests in Damascus on Friday

She said Syria respected the rights of people to protest peacefully.

Ms Shaaban also said political reform had been under discussion in Syria for some time and that the authorities intended to put constitutional and party reforms before the people in a referendum as soon as possible.

Earlier, the London-based Syrian Observatory for Human Rights said more than 200 inmates, mostly Islamists, were freed from Damascus' Saidnaya prison.

However, reports about the total number involved differ, with another human rights activist being quoted by Reuters as saying that 70 political prisoners were freed.

The Syrian government has so far made no official comment on the issue but Ms Shaaban said she would be surprised if her country had hundreds of such detainees.

Dozens of people have been killed in protests this week, rights activists and witnesses say, sparking demonstrations on Friday in towns and cities across Syria, including the capital, Damascus.

In Damascus, hundreds marched on King Faisal Street chanting: "Peaceful, Peaceful, God, Syria, Freedom." This protest was broken up by security forces and many were arrested, reports said.

Supporters of President Assad staged large counter-protests and clashes erupted between the two sides.

Other towns witnessing protests on Friday included Tall and Hama.

TheUnhivedMind - March 27, 2011 01:03 AM (GMT)

Syrian protesters torch offices

27 Mar 2011
http://www.thisislondon.co.uk/standard/art...orch-offices.do

Protesters against the government of Syria set fire to offices of the ruling party while hundreds of political prisoners were released in a bid to appease the rioters.

Presidential adviser Bouthaina Shaaban told reporters that demonstrators attacked a police station and offices of the Baath party in the town of Tafas, six miles north of the city of Deraa , epicentre of more than a week of anti-government protests.

The Baath party offices in the Mediterranean city of Latakia had also been targeted.

President Bashar Assad pulled back police and soldiers from Deraa and released hundreds of political prisoners in an attempt to appease demonstrators furious about the violent government crackdown on dissent.

Deraa has been the centre of protests, with more than a week of demonstrations leading to nationwide unrest on Friday when tens of thousands of protesters marched in cities across the country.

Abdul-Karim Rihawi, who heads the Syrian Human Rights League, said that 260 political prisoners had been released.

He said that most of those released were Islamists and 14 Kurdish detainees were also let free. Most had been imprisoned at Saidnaya, a prison in a Damascus suburb that houses political detainees. He said no further details were immediately available and there was no official confirmation.

Mr Rihawi called the move a "positive step" and urged authorities to release all political detainees.

Britain has condemned the violence in Syria with Foreign Office Minister Alistair Burt saying that he was "deeply concerned" by the use of force in Deraa.

He said in a statement: "I have been watching closely the situation in Syria, and am deeply concerned by the use of force against demonstrators. I condemn the violence that has resulted in a large number of deaths in Deraa. All Syrians have a right to express their views peacefully."

TheUnhivedMind - March 28, 2011 02:37 AM (GMT)

© AFP

© Youtube

© Youtube

BIJÎ AZADÎ
© AP

TheUnhivedMind - March 28, 2011 02:38 AM (GMT)

Syrian president blames 'armed gangs' as 12 die in violence

By Daily Mail Reporter
Last updated at 3:53 PM on 27th March 2011

http://www.dailymail.co.uk/news/article-13...e-violence.html

Officials say unknown armed gangs behind killings
They say most of the dead are 'martyred' security officials
More video emerges of protesters being gunned down, as human rights groups say 55 were killed by government in Deraa

Syria today blamed unknown 'armed gangs' for the violence sweeping the country as it said that 12 people had been killed in town of Latakia over the weekend.

A week of political unrest in southern Syria has spread over the last two days to the north western coastal town of Latakia where the streets echoed with gunfire after around 3,000 protesters held a peaceful rally to demand political freedoms.

President Bashir Assad is facing his deepest crisis in 11 years in power - amid growing demands for greater freedom from Syrians who are still ruled under 'emergency' laws imposed in 1963.

Up to 55 demonstrators were shot dead by security forces in the town of Deraa on Friday, according to human rights groups, and videos have emerged showing bodies being carried away as gunfire echoes in the background.

The government's tally of the dead today was the first official account of the scale of the violence in Lataki - but does not mention the events in Deraa on Friday and there is deep suspicion that the true scale of the violence is being hidden.

Opposition groups yesterday siad that six protesters had been shot in Latakia.

The state news agency Sana quoted a government official as saying gunmen fired from rooftops, broke into homes and destroyed public property in Latakia. Their identities remained a mystery.

The dead included security forces and residents of the city alike as well as two members of the shadowy 'armed elements,' the report said. About 200 people were wounded, most of them apparently government security personnel, it said.

'Armed elements roamed the streets, occupied the rooftops of some buildings and opened fire randomly, terrorizing people,' SANA said, quoting the unidentified official.

That matched witness accounts, but left open the question of who was behind the shooting.

As Syria's political unrest spread to Latakia, a religiously mixed city, it seemed to be taking on a sectarian element, even though the crowds of anti-government protesters appeared mixed on Friday.

But there was talk there of possible attempts to divide those residents who are members of the president's minority Muslim Alawite sect - an offshoot of Shiite Islam - and majority Sunni Muslims.

One witness said groups of people drove around in Alawite dominated villages on the city's outskirts, spreading rumors that the Sunnis were about to attack them. "Then they drove to Sunni areas and told them the opposite,' he said.

'How can the government not know who these people are? We demand an immediate investigation and trial of those responsible,' he said.

He said Latakia was a "ghost town" Sunday with people too scared to leave their homes.

He spoke on condition of anonymity for fear of arrest.

After Friday's protests, Syrian soldiers in army vehicles entered the city at night, witnesses and activists said. The deployment capped a chaotic day in which protesters and the government traded accusations of violence and incitement.

"All of a sudden, at sundown, unknown people in cars and on rooftops began shooting randomly at people," said the witness, who attended Friday's protest. "It was total chaos, but how it started and who they are, nobody knows," he said.

"It was terrifying, it was sheer horror," he said.

The government account on the official news agency said the unknown groups of gunmen attacked public and private businesses, destroyed shops and broke into people's homes. They also attacked a hospital and destroyed several ambulances, the report said.

President Bashar Assad's government accused a major Sunni cleric in Qatar for inciting the unrest.

Presidential adviser Bouthaina Shaaban said Qatar-based Sheik Youssef al-Qaradawi had incited Sunnis to revolt with his sermon in Doha on Friday. Al-Qaradawi, who has millions of followers around the world and is seen as one of most influential voices in Sunni Islam, praised the Syrian uprising and criticized the regime.

Shabaan said those words were responsible for the unrest in Latakia.

"There was nothing (in Latakia) before al-Qaradawi's sermon on Friday," she told reporters in Damascus Saturday. "Al-Qaradawi's words were a clear and honest invitation for sectarian strife."

She also accused Palestinians from the nearby al-Ramel refugee camp of involvement in the violence, but did not elaborate.

Sectarian divisions are a deeply sensitive topic in Syria, where Assad has used increased economic freedom and prosperity to win the allegiance of the prosperous Sunni Muslim merchant classes, while punishing dissenters with arrest, imprisonment and physical abuse.

Assad has placed his fellow Alawites, adherents of a mystical offshoot of Shiite Islam, into most positions of power in Syria. He has built a close relationship with Iran, allowing the Shiite powerhouse to extend its influence into Lebanon, where it provides money and weapons to Hezbollah militants.

Demonstrators on Saturday also attacked a police station and offices of the Baath party in the town of Tafas, six miles (10 kilometers) north of the southern border city of Daraa, the epicenter of more than a week of anti-government protests.

An activist in Daraa told AP Sunday that up 1,200 people were still holding a silent sit-in the al-Omari mosque, at the center of the protests there.

He said the army and police were surrounding the area in a tense standoff with the protesters, but reported no violence. "I think they will storm our sit-in very soon," he said on condition of anonymity.

TheUnhivedMind - March 29, 2011 12:49 AM (GMT)

Syrian protesters come under fire from security forces

Thousands demonstrate in Deraa as frustration mounts at Bashir al-Assad's failure to deliver reforms

Katherine Marsh in Damascus
guardian.co.uk, Monday 28 March 2011 20.32 BST
http://www.guardian.co.uk/world/2011/mar/2...come-under-fire Security forces fired shots and used teargas to disperse up to 4,000 protesters in the volatile Syrian city of Deraa on Monday as frustration mounted at the slow pace of promised reforms.

Despite the widespread presence of security forces, protesters appeared to consolidate their positions in Deraa in the deep south and in the northern port city of Latakia, which are the two main fronts in the challenge to the Syrian regime.

According to human rights activists, more than 150 people have been killed in 11 days of unrest, which have seen protesters calling for increased freedoms.

Syria's president, Bashar al-Assad, who has not been sighted during the protests, is expected to deliver a speech within days.

The government has pledged to lift an almost five decade old emergency law, which – among other things – severely limits citizens' rights to demonstrate. That and other reforms are yet to be implemented.

A witness said demonstrators in Deraa had converged on a main square chanting "no to emergency laws".

Speaking on Lebanese Hezbollah's al-Manar television, the vice-president, Farouq al-Sharaa, a reform-minded member of the government from Deraa, said president Bashar al-Assad would announce decisions that will "please the people" in the next 48 hours.

On Sunday, Turkey's prime minister, Recep Tayyip Ergdogan, said he had urged Assad to "listen to the voice of the people", while US secretary of state Hillary Clinton said both parties in the US Congress believed Assad was a "reformer".

In the past few years, Turkey and Syria have enjoyed good relations, with Syria seeking Turkish support as a counterweight to US support for Israel.

Syrian activists expressed anger at Clinton's comments and a lack of trust that reforms would be introduced. The government has announced small reforms and pledges of bigger changes but so far no concrete proposals to enhance freedoms have been made.

"There are so many conflicting messages," said a civil rights activist in Damascus. "The government said there would not be violence any more and that there is a decision to lift emergency law, but they are still arresting so many people and blaming unrest on outside interference. They need to address the problems as they are and put solutions soon if they really want to rally unity."

Other activists said they did not believe any reforms would be made, while some claimed any reforms would not be enough. "Serious reforms won't be made because they would involve sacrificing people in the narrow circle around Assad," said Ziad Malki, a Syrian activist exiled in Switzerland.

He pointed to Rami Makhlouf, the cousin of the president who has been a target of protesters' ire over allegations that his interests have been acquired through corruption.

"Bashar al-Assad could be a very nice person, but it doesn't matter: we want a democratically elected president," said Ausama Monajed, a Syrian activist in the UK who has been circulating a daily email of information on the continuing unrest.

The differing views highlight the lack of clarity about the demands of the various protesters and activists. Political organising has been almost impossible in the country, causing many activists and opposition figures to go into exile.

There is also confusion about those responsible for the deaths of protesters in Latakia on Friday and Saturday. The government claimed gangs carried out the violence but some activists said the gunmen were controlled by the government.

TheUnhivedMind - March 29, 2011 04:37 PM (GMT)

Syrian cabinet resigns amid unrest, says state TV

Mr Otari will stay on as caretaker prime minister

http://www.bbc.co.uk/news/world-middle-east-12897223

The Syrian government has resigned, state-run television has said.

President Bashar al-Assad accepted the cabinet's resignation following a meeting on Tuesday.

The resignation is the latest concession by the government aimed at curbing pro-democracy protests in which dozens of people have been killed.

President Assad is expected to address the nation in the next 24 hours to announce he is lifting the emergency law and restrictions on civil liberty.

The president has appointed outgoing Prime Minister Muhammad Naji Otari as caretaker prime minister until a new government is appointed, the official Syrian news agency has said.

A new government is due to be appointed within 24 hours, but there is word the changes will be "beyond expectations", the BBC's Lina Sinjab reports in Damascus.

The government has little power in Syria, where it is concentrated in the hands of the president, his family and the security apparatus, observers say.

Mr Otari has been prime minister since September 2003, with at least four cabinet reshuffles over the last eight years.

A former parliamentary speaker and long-serving member of the ruling Baath party, he has also served as mayor of his home town and Syria's second city, Aleppo, and as governor of the province of Homs.

Mr Otari's government was a mix of Baathist and non-Baathist ministers, and many are expecting the new government to be of new blood from outside the Baath Party, our correspondent adds.

Tens of thousands of people have been staging a demonstration in central Damascus, as well as in other major cities, in support of the president as he attempts to reassert his authority.

But tension has been rising in the cities of Deraa and Latakia where at least 12 people died over the weekend, our correspondent says.
Longstanding law

There are hopes that President Assad's talk will help to defuse tension, but many are fuelled with anger over the latest deaths, she adds, and there is talk of a bigger "day of rage" on Friday.

Mr Assad is trying to quell pro-democracy protests against his regime that human rights groups say have left more than 60 people dead.

The unrest has become the biggest threat to the rule of the president, who succeeded his father Hafez on his death in 2000.

Syria's emergency law, which effectively suspends most constitutional protections, has been in place since the Baath Party came to power in a military coup in 1963.

Syrian governments have justified the continued imposition of the law by the state of war that exists with Israel, and by threats posed by militant groups.

The current turmoil in the country started earlier this year after the arrest of several teenagers who scrawled anti-government graffiti on a wall in the southern city of Deraa, and quickly spread to other provinces.

TheUnhivedMind - March 29, 2011 04:37 PM (GMT)

Syria's British first lady urges unity as husband fights protesters

Tom Harper
29 Mar 2011
http://www.thisislondon.co.uk/standard/art...s-protesters.do

The west London schoolgirl who became first lady of Syria has called for "empowerment in civil society" - just as her husband unleashed his security forces against thousands of pro-democracy protesters.

Asma Assad, who married dictator Bashar Assad in 2000, has told how Syrians should engage in "active citizenship" and urged them to "take shared responsibility (to move) this country forward".

She added: "We all have a stake in this country; it will be what we make it."

Nicknamed the "Desert Rose" and described as having a "trained analytic mind", Mrs Assad told Vogue magazine she wanted to make Syria a "beacon of culture".

Elite forces are cracking down on dissent around the country, trying to quell a week-long rebellion and defuse the latest revolution gripping North Africa and the Middle East.

Mrs Assad's interview came as police fired live rounds and tear gas at up to 4,000 demonstrators in the southern city of Daraa - and as tens of thousands of flag-waving pro-government supporters gathered in a central Damascus square today for a "loyalty to the nation" march backing her husband. Local reports claim hundreds of protesters have been killed. The Syrian regime says 61 people have died.

President Assad succeeded his father in June 2000 amid claims the election was rigged. However, it had been hoped the ascent of the young president and his glamorous wife, now 35, would herald a new era of openness in Syria as they travelled the world meeting Tony and Cherie Blair and Brad Pitt and Angelina Jolie.

Mrs Assad was born in London to a Syrian Harley Street cardiologist and his diplomat wife, grew up in Acton and forged a high-powered City banking career which she quit to marry.

TheUnhivedMind - March 30, 2011 04:22 AM (GMT)

Syria to get new govt, president to address nation

PTI/ AFP / Damascus March 29, 2011, 18:27 IST
http://www.business-standard.com/india/new...ation/130609/on

The government in Syria, which has been hit by a deadly wave of dissent for two weeks, will resign today and a new one will see the light within 24 hours, a high-ranking official told AFP.

With President Bashar al-Assad facing his worst domestic crisis since succeeding his father when he died in 2000, tens of thousands of Syrians today flooded central Damascus in a show of support for the embattled leader.

Speaking to AFP on condition of anonymity, the official said the government would "tender its resignation today and a new cabinet should be formed within 24 hours."

Prime Minister Mohammed Naji Otri formed his government in 2003. It was last re-shuffled in April 2009.

Syria has been gripped by a wave of increasingly violent protests since mid-March, which have put Assad under unprecedented pressure as protesters call for freedoms and reforms.

Assad is expected to address his people in the coming days to announce the end of a state of emergency, in force since the ruling Baath party took power in 1963.

Protests demanding change have largely centred in the southern governorate of Daraa and the northern port city of Latakia.

Activists say more than 130 people have been killed and scores injured in clashes with security forces at rallies where protesters have demanded more freedoms and reforms.

Officials have accused "armed gangs" and Muslim fundamentalists of aiming to incite the unrest and put the death toll at around 30.

All roads leading to Sabeh Bahrat ("Seven Seas") square in Damascus were cut off today by police armed with batons, as men, women and children raised Syrian flags and pictures of Assad and his father, Hafez al-Assad.

"The people want Bashar al-Assad," they chanted in unison, under a massive picture of their blue-eyed president that had been hoisted on Syria's central bank.

"We are here to show the real will of the Syrian people, and that is to protect and support their president, may God protect him," said a young woman named Raghad, who turned out early for the rally with her sisters.

"This rally is to stop the plot to destroy Syrian unity," said a man who identified himself as Abu Khodr.

"Bashar al-Assad is the spine of Syria. Without him, our country will be pushed into chaos."

The rally comes after a pledge by the authorities to lift the state of emergency as part of a package of reforms.

Buthaina Shaaban, a top advisor to Assad, on Sunday told AFP authorities had decided to end the state of emergency.

TheUnhivedMind - March 30, 2011 10:13 PM (GMT)

Syrian president blames turmoil on 'conspirators'

By ZEINA KARAM, Associated Press
30 Mar 2011
http://news.yahoo.com/s/ap/20110330/ap_on_re_mi_ea/ml_syria

DAMASCUS, Syria – Syria's president dashed expectations that he would announce sweeping reforms Wednesday and instead took a tough line, blaming two weeks of popular fury on a foreign conspiracy.

Bashar Assad's own officials billed his speech as an introduction of major change and the turnaround infuriated protesters who vowed to keep up with their extraordinary cries for reform.

The conflicting messages also raised questions about a possible rift in one of the Middle East's most rigid regimes, where Assad and a tight coterie of family and security services hold all the reins power.

"Syria is being subjected to a major conspiracy," Assad said in his first public comments since the turmoil began, touched off by the arrest of several teenagers who scrawled anti-government graffiti on a wall. Human rights groups say more than 60 people have been killed since March 18 as security forces cracked down on the demonstrations.

Assad made only a passing reference to the protesters' calls for change, saying he was in favor of reform, but acknowledged there have been delays. "The question is what reforms do we need," he said, without offering any specifics.

Radwan Ziadeh, a visiting scholar at the Institute for Middle East Studies at George Washington University, said Assad missed an opportunity to distinguish himself from other dictators in the region who refuse to bow to public demands.

"I think Assad opted not to announce the reform measures in his speech today because he doesn't want to be seen as having succumbed to street pressure," Ziadeh said. "The language he used shows how out of touch he is with his people."

Social networking sites immediately exploded with activists calling on Syrians to take to the streets.

Within hours of Assad's speech, residents of the Mediterranean port city of Latakia said troops opened fire during a protest by about 100 people, although it was not immediately clear whether they were firing in the air or at the protesters. The residents asked that their names not be published for fear of reprisals.

Latakia, which has a potentially volatile mix of different religious groups, already has become a flashpoint for violence that could take on a dangerous sectarian tone in the coming days and weeks.

The anti-government protests and ensuing violence have brought Syria's sectarian tensions into the open for the first time in decades, a taboo topic because Syria has a Sunni majority ruled by minority Alawites, a branch of Shiite Islam.

Assad has placed his fellow Alawites into most positions of power in Syria. But he also has used increased economic freedom and prosperity to win the allegiance of the prosperous Sunni Muslim merchant classes, while punishing dissenters with arrest, imprisonment and physical abuse.

Assad, who inherited power 11 years ago from his father, appears to be following the same strategy of other autocratic leaders who scrambled to put down uprisings by offering minor concessions coupled with brutal crackdowns. The formula failed in Tunisia and Egypt, where citizens accepted nothing less than the ouster of the regime.

Assad fired his 32-member Cabinet on Tuesday in a move designed to mollify the anti-government protesters, but the overture was largely symbolic. Assad holds the lion's share of power in the authoritarian regime, and there are no real opposition figures or alternatives to the current leadership.

Rime Allaf, a Syrian associate fellow at London's Chatham House, said it was clear from Assad's speech that he did not want to show any weakness.

"On the issue of reforms, his message was: 'We will not be pressured, we're doing it anyway and we will let you know when we're ready,'" she said.

When the unrest roiling the Middle East hit Syria, it was a dramatic turn for Assad, a British-trained eye doctor who said in January that his country was immune to such unrest because he is in tune with his people's needs.

Assad does maintain a level of popular support, in no small part because of his anti-Israel policies, which resonate with his countrymen. And unlike leaders in Egypt, Tunisia, Yemen and Jordan, Assad is not allied with the United States, so he has been spared the accusation that he caters to American demands.

State Department spokesman Mark Toner told reporters in Washington that Assad's speech "didn't really have much substance to it."

"We expect (the Syrian people) are going to be disappointed," he said "We feel the speech fell short with respects to the kinds of reforms that the Syrian people demanded, and what President Assad's own advisers suggested was coming."

Although Assad has clamped down on political freedoms, many credit him with modernizing Syria and opening up the economy. He also is seen as relatively vibrant, at age 45. He and his wife, Asma, who recently was featured in a glowing profile in Vogue magazine, are often spotted driving around town, even photographed in Damascus riding bicycles with their three young children.

So far, few in Syria have publicly called on Assad to step down. Most are calling for reforms, annulling emergency laws and other stringent security measures and an end to corruption.

But Syria has a history of brutally crushing dissent — including a notorious massacre in which Assad's late father, President Hafez Assad, crushed a Muslim fundamentalist uprising in the city of Hama in 1982, killing thousands.

The unrest in Syria, a strategically important country, could have implications well beyond its borders given its role as Iran's top Arab ally and as a front line state against Israel.

Philip Luther, Amnesty International's deputy director for the Middle East and North Africa, said pinning the blame on a foreign conspiracy is a snub to the many Syrians who are calling for reform.

"He should be addressing the real problem — which is that his security forces have been firing live ammunition on protesters," Luther said.

___

AP writer Bassem Mroue contributed to this report from Beirut, Lebanon.

TheUnhivedMind - March 31, 2011 12:46 AM (GMT)

Syria's President Assad vows to defeat 'plot'

President Bashar al-Assad: "This is a test for our unity"

30 March 2011 Last updated at 18:37
http://www.bbc.co.uk/news/world-middle-east-12904156

President Bashar al-Assad has told parliament Syria will defeat those behind a "plot" against his country.

"Syria is a target of a big plot from outside," he said in his first speech since anti-government demonstrations erupted two weeks ago.

Mr Assad said he would continue on the path of reform for Syria - but did not announce the lifting of a state of emergency, as some had predicted.

Later, there were reports of protests and gunfire in the city of Latakia.

Reuters reports that hundreds of people chanting "freedom" had taken to the streets of Latakia, and that troops had fired warning shots in an attempt to get them to disperse.

There were also reports of more protests in the southern city of Deraa, where more than 60 people have been killed in unrest during the last two weeks.

In a speech interrupted several times by pledges of support, Mr Assad told parliament that people had been "duped" to go into the streets.

"Deraa is in the heart of every Syrian," Mr Assad said. It was on the front line of Syria's enemy, Israel, he added.

At a crossroads

Mr Assad said reforms were needed in Syria and leaders must listen to the voice of the people.

We have introduced reforms ourselves, but not because of pressure, the Syrian leader said. "Whoever wants reform, we are here," he said.

"Reform is not seasonal. There are no real hurdles to it."

Mr Assad had been expected to announce a lifting of the state of emergency in place for the past 50 years. He did not do so, but said a draft bill on that - along with one on a multi-party system - was taking too long.

Under the current emergency law, security forces have sweeping powers of arrest and detention.

The Syrian government is reported to be studying the liberalisation of laws on media and political parties as well as anti-corruption measures. An easing of restrictions on civil liberties and political freedom is also expected.

One human rights activist, Aktham Nuaisse, said the country stood "at a crossroads".

"Either the president takes immediate, drastic reform measures, or the country descends into one of several ugly scenarios. If he is willing to lead Syria into a real democratic transformation, he will be met halfway by the Syrian people," he told AP.

Analysts say there are divergent views within the Syrian leadership on handing the crisis - one group favours a crackdown on the dissent while the other prefers dialogue.

The unrest has become the biggest threat to the rule of President Assad, 45, who succeeded his father Hafez on his death in 2000.

The turmoil started after the arrest of several teenagers who scrawled anti-government graffiti on a wall in the southern city of Deraa, and quickly spread to other provinces.

On Tuesday, the country's cabinet resigned and huge crowds took to the streets to show support for Mr Assad.

A new cabinet - which will have the role of implementing the expected reforms - is expected to be named by the end of the week.

TheUnhivedMind - March 31, 2011 05:50 PM (GMT)

Syria braced for Friday showdown

Syria is braced for a violent showdown in its most restive cities on Friday as opposition activists vow to defy Bashar al-Assad, their increasingly intransigent president, by bringing hundreds of thousands of supporters onto the streets.

By Adrian Blomfield, Middle East Correspondent 5:45PM BST 31 Mar 2011
http://www.telegraph.co.uk/news/worldnews/...y-showdown.html

As night fell on Thursday, more than 60 military vehicles were seen driving into the southern city of Deraa, where scores of protesters have died at the hands of Mr Assad's security forces since unrest against his regime erupted a fortnight ago.

By word of mouth and on the internet, calls have gone out for a major show of force by protesters in Deraa and other towns and cities across Syria amid mounting anger at the president's refusal to offer anything other than token concessions.

Confounding expectations that he would announce reforms and lift Syria's hated state of emergency, Mr Assad appeared in public for the first time on Wednesday to denounce the protesters as foreign-backed conspirators, paving the way for a violent confrontation after noon prayers on Friday.

The uncompromising address delighted MPs, who praised their president of 11 years with outbursts of apparently spontaneous poetry, but left many Syrians aghast.

Shortly after he finished speaking, thousands took to the streets of the coastal city of Latakia, the scene of earlier bloodshed. In an ominous indication of what could be to come, they immediately came under fire.

According to reports that began to emerge from the city, which has been sealed off by the security forces, up to 25 people may have been killed.

"People were furious after they watched Assad's speech and they came on to the streets to peacefully vent their anger," said a Syrian opposition activist. "But immediately they came under fire from the security forces and from unidentified people in passing cars. We are still trying to establish the death toll, but it was many dead and many wounded."

There were also fears for the safety of a woman, seen on live pictures on state television, who dodged security to press a piece of paper to the side of Mr Assad's car as it drove through adoring crowds. With a scuffle seemingly about to break out, the broadcast was suddenly cut and replaced with pictures of an unidentified cityscape accompanied by music.

TheUnhivedMind - March 31, 2011 11:36 PM (GMT)

Clegg says sees no need for Syria intervention

29 Mar 2011
http://uk.reuters.com/article/2011/03/29/u...E72S6Q220110329

(Reuters) - Deputy Prime Minister Nick Clegg said on Tuesday London does not see a need for international intervention in Syria, where anti-government protests are sweeping the country.

Syrian President Bashar al-Assad accepted his cabinet's resignation on Tuesday after nearly two weeks of pro-democracy unrest that has posed a grave challenge to his 11-year rule.

But this was unlikely to satisfy protesters since the cabinet has little authority in Syria. Power is concentrated in the hands of Assad, his family and the security apparatus.

Clegg, during an official visit to Mexico, described the situation in Syria as "very dramatic." He praised the democratic awakening in the Middle East and said each country should be allowed to decide its own path.

"It is not now the role of the international community to try and intervene directly in every country," Clegg told Reuters when asked whether intervention in Syria was necessary.

Protests exploded into violence in Libya where coalition forces, acting under a United Nations mandate, decided to take military action to protect civilians by enforcing a no-fly zone amid international pressure on leader Muammar Gaddafi to step down.

Clegg did say humanitarian intervention was justified in situations where there is broad international consensus, as was the case in Libya.

"Like most of you, I was a strong opponent of the war in Iraq. It was wrong. But the action being taken in Libya today is right," Clegg said in a speech after meetings with Mexican President Felipe Calderon.

"The lesson of Iraq is not that intervention in support of liberal aims is always wrong. The lesson of Iraq is that any such action must only -- and must always -- be multilaterally sanctioned and driven by humanitarian concerns."

(Reporting by Dave Graham; Editing by Eric Walsh)

TheUnhivedMind - April 1, 2011 12:50 AM (GMT)

PM Erdo•an says Turkey cannot be indifferent to events in Syria

29 March 2011

http://www.todayszaman.com/news-239470-pm-...s-in-syria.html

Prime Minister Recep Tayyip Erdo•an said he spoke to Syrian President Bashar al-Assad twice in the past few days to discuss prospects for reform in his country, insisting that Turkey cannot remain indifferent to what is going on in the neighboring country.

Erdo•an, speaking to reporters on Monday before departing for a visit to Baghdad, said Assad had not given him “a negative answer” when he urged him to listen to his people in two telephone calls over the past three days. “It is impossible for us to remain silent in the face of these events, we have an 800-kilometer border with Syria,” Erdo•an said.

Erdo•an's remarks came hours before Syrian Vice President Farouq al-Shara said Assad would announce important decisions that will "please the Syrian people" in the next two days. Erdo•an said he had suggested that Assad meet some of the demands of thousands of people who have taken part in pro-democracy demonstrations across Syria. “[Assad] said they were working on lifting the state of emergency to meet demands. They told us they were working on political parties.

We hope these measures are actually implemented rather than remaining promises,” Erdo•an said. “We did not receive a negative answer when we urged Mr. Assad to listen to the voice of the people. I hope he makes the announcement today or tomorrow.”

Syria has been rocked by more than a week of demonstrations that began in the southern city of Daraa and exploded across the nation on Friday. Security forces opened fire on demonstrators in at least six places, leaving dozens dead.

Turkish officials have been hesitant to comment on the events in Syria. Relations between the two countries have improved since Erdo•an’s Justice and Development Party (AK Party) came to power, while Turkey’s old friendship with Israel has soured.

Turkey’s ruling AK Party implemented a reform program after coming to power almost a decade ago, trying to strengthen democracy and modernize the economy.
Turkish intelligence chief in Syria

Erdo•an told reporters that he dispatched National Intelligence Agency (M•T) Undersecretary Hakan Fidan to the Arab country to follow the developments, adding that the Ministry of Foreign Affairs is also closely monitoring the events there. Erdo•an said there are “demands that have been building up for years,” which he said he discussed with President Abdullah Gül earlier.

In remarks published by Japan’s Nikkei newspaper on Monday, Foreign Minister Ahmet Davuto•lu said Turkey and Syria maintain deep economic relations and that, using its leverage, Turkey will encourage Syria to make political reforms. The Turkish foreign minister urged Syrian authorities to rapidly implement the reforms to avoid being plunged into tensions like Libya.

Diplomatic sources said Davuto•lu called his Syrian counterpart, Walid al-Moallem, on Saturday after Erdo•an’s talk with Assad, assuring the Syrian foreign minister that Turkey will back Syria’s reform steps, the Anatolia news agency reported.

Davuto•lu reportedly expressed his dismay over the death toll and welcomed the government’s move to prosecute suspects who are involved in killing protesters and release some 260 political prisoners. Davuto•lu also told al-Moallem that Turkey welcomes the start of political, social and economic reform activities that would meet the legitimate demands and expectations of the people.

A frequently quoted statement defining Turkish-Syrian relations is that these two have written one of the most successful reconciliation stories in modern history, forging a strategic partnership despite having been on the verge of war only a decade ago. Turkey and Syria reciprocally lifted visa requirements and their trade volume has risen exponentially.

Davuto•lu stressed during the talk with his Syrian counterpart the importance of the rapid implementation of decisions and pledged Turkey's full support to the Arab country's reform process.

Trade volume between Syria and Turkey now nears $2 billion and both countries enjoy free trade and tourism benefits. Turkish trade associations have already raised concerns over negative sentiments among Turkish investors in Syria, hoping for the urgent settlement of the crisis in the neighboring country.

TheUnhivedMind - April 1, 2011 12:53 AM (GMT)

Venezuela's Chavez offers supports to Syrian leader amid protests, blames US for unrest

By The Associated Press
26th Mar 2011
http://www.google.com/hostednews/canadianp...g?docId=6376723

CARACAS, Venezuela — Venezuelan President Hugo Chavez expressed support for Syria's president on Saturday, calling him a "humanist" and a "brother" facing a wave of violent protests backed by the United States and its allies.

Chavez's support for President Bashar Assad follows his defence of Libyan leader Moammar Gadhafi, who is fighting rebels backed by international airstrikes.

Venezuela's socialist leader accused Washington of fomenting the protests in Syria as a pretext for Libya-style airstrikes.

"Now some supposed political protest movements have begun (in Syria), a few deaths ... and now they are accusing the president of killing his people and later the Yankees will come to bomb the people to save them," Chavez said in a televised speech.

The anti-government protests erupted nationwide in Syria on Friday, and follow unrest in Tunisia, Egypt, Yemen, Bahrain and Libya in what has been called the Arab Spring.

Chavez has developed close ties to Gadhafi and Assad over the years.

"How cynical is the new format the empire has invented, to generate violent conflict, generate blood in a country, to later bombard it, intervene and take over its natural resources and convert it into a colony," he said. Chavez often refers to the United States as the empire.

Chavez said he spoke to Assad late Friday and referred him as our "brother."

Assad, who opponents have called a repressive autocrat, "is a humanist, doctor, educated in London, in no way an extremist; he is a man of great human sensitivity," said Chavez. "We salute him from here."

Syria's administration has promised increased freedoms for discontented citizens and increased pay and benefits for state workers — a familiar package of incentives offered by other nervous Arab regimes in recent weeks.

TheUnhivedMind - April 1, 2011 03:27 AM (GMT)

Australia advises citizens not to travel to Syria

Alexandra Kirk reported this story on Friday, March 25, 2011
http://www.abc.net.au/pm/content/2011/s3174118.htm

MARK COLVIN: The Foreign Minister Kevin Rudd says he holds "grave fears" for the situation in Syria.

His department has upgraded its travel warning, advising Australians to reconsider their need to go to Syria because of the risk of violent protests, a high threat of terrorist attack and unpredictable security.

Mr Rudd says that having approved action to protect Libyan citizens, the United Nations will be closely watching events in Syria.

He spoke to Alexandra Kirk in Canberra.

KEVIN RUDD: Well Syria is of grave concern to us. Syria has been governed by an authoritarian regime for decades, it's been under martial law since 1963 and we are deeply sceptical about the official explanations as to what has happened with the various killings which have occurred in Daraa in the southern part of the country. And we call directly on the Syrian Government to exercise restraint in their response to peaceful protest seeking democratic change.

ALEXANDRA KIRK: The Syrian's President's promised Syrians that he'll look at granting them greater freedom; do you take that pledge seriously?

KEVIN RUDD: I think across the Middle East it's important not just to listen to the public statements of political leaders, particularly those who have run oppressive regimes like the Syrian regime, but to look instead at what they do on the ground in terms of material political change and giving people freedom of expression.

For example what we have seen most recently in Daraa suggests that the reverse has occurred.

ALEXANDRA KIRK: What's your reading of President Bashar al-Assad. He's a 45 year old Western educated doctor; do you think he wants to bring his country out of emergency law?

KEVIN RUDD: Well analysts will conclude that this President Assad is different from his father in some respects, in part because of what you point to, his Western education. But what I would note is that the Syrian security forces are the same security forces that have attended the political needs of his father over many decades and the core fundamentals of martial law have been in place since 1963.

ALEXANDRA KIRK: In other words that he doesn't have control over the security forces?

KEVIN RUDD: The key challenge for the current President Assad is to demonstrate his difference from the repressive regime of his father by enacting political reform. Whether or not the security forces support that or not remains to be seen.

The current President Assad has said that he intends to introduce political reforms to give people greater political say, the test of that will be what actually happens on the ground.

ALEXANDRA KIRK: Well, do you think that he does have that power to do that?

KEVIN RUDD: This remains to be seen on the ground.

ALEXANDRA KIRK: But you have intelligence about what's going on in Syria; does that lead you to believe that he will be able to implement any reform?

KEVIN RUDD: Well you know as well as I do that the Australian Government never comments on intelligence material within its possession.

What I can say to you is that the ball lies squarely in the Syrian regime's court.

ALEXANDRA KIRK: Do you think the time is fast approaching to invoke the United Nations doctrine of responsibility to protect Syrian citizens as has been done with Libya?

KEVIN RUDD: Each of these matters has to be taken case by case. You will have seen in the case of the United Nations Security Council resolution 1973 on Libya, that took weeks to negotiate and happened in response to mass killings.

Under the doctrine of the responsibility to protect, it is these mass killings, mass threats of violence, these crimes against humanity which then invoke that ability for the UN Security Council to intervene internally within states.

Therefore, the UN Security Council will be monitoring very closely what happens on the ground in Syria and in other countries in the Middle East, very mindful of what has unfolded in Libya.

MARK COLVIN: The Foreign Affairs Minister Kevin Rudd speaking to Alexandra Kirk.

TheUnhivedMind - April 1, 2011 04:56 PM (GMT)

Syria unrest: New protests erupt across country

Protesters reportedly chanted "We want freedom!" and "The blood of martyrs is not cheap!"

1 April 2011 Last updated at 16:13
http://www.bbc.co.uk/news/world-middle-east-12938756

New anti-government protests have erupted in several Syrian cities after Friday prayers, despite heavy security.

Witnesses said thousands of people took to the streets chanting "Freedom!" The state news agency said protesters were calling for reforms to be speeded up.

Reports say security forces opened fire on protesters in the Damascus suburb of Duma, killing at least three people.

Activists had dubbed Friday a Day of Martyrs to honour the dozens of people killed during two weeks of protests.

President Bashar al-Assad said earlier this week that demonstrations were part of a foreign "plot".

In a speech on Wednesday, Mr Assad did not announce the lifting of emergency legislation as some analysts had predicted.

However, the president later said he had directed a legal committee to look into lifting unpopular emergency laws - in place since 1963.

Backing for Mr Assad's regime has also been in evidence, with huge crowds joining officially encouraged shows of support for the regime in Damascus on Tuesday.
'Locked in mosque'

On Friday, protesters took to the streets in Deraa, Qamishli, Hassakeh and also Latakia, eyewitnesses said.

The marchers reportedly chanted "We want freedom!" and "The blood of martyrs is not cheap!"

One eyewitness in Deraa told the BBC that the army had used tear gas to disperse the crowds and several people had been injured.

In Duma, at least three people were killed when security forces opened fire on the protesters, reports say. A number of people were also injured.

Syria's Sana state-run news agency confirmed that protests were held in Deraa and Latakia, but said "there were no clashes".

The cities of Qamishli and Hassakeh are in the north-east of Syria. The region is the centre for the Kurdish population, who until now distanced themselves from the protests over the past two weeks, the BBC's Lina Sinjab in Damascus reports.

But in Qamishli and Hassakeh protesters chanted "Neither Arabic, nor Kurdish, we want a national unity" in an attempt to defeat any accusations of trying to make a Kurdish movement, our correspondent says.

She adds that in Damascus there is a heavy security presence around the main mosques - especially the Umayyad mosque where the first anti-government protest began.

Hundreds of security and pro-government gangs gathered around the mosque and later mixed with people praying inside.

The doors of the mosque were closed to prevent any protests, our correspondent says.

People are also reportedly locked in the al-Rifai mosque in Damascus, where some of the worshippers chanted "The one who kills his people is a traitor" and "We are all Syrians".

"We fear being arrested, we only want freedom for those who are detained. They (the government) have security and buses waiting for us outside," one worshipper told the BBC.

Activists and rights groups estimate that between 60 and 130 people have died in clashes in the past two weeks.

Government officials say the death toll is closer to 30.

TheUnhivedMind - April 1, 2011 06:07 PM (GMT)

Syrian TV accuses detained Egyptian American of spying

Mar 31, 2011
http://content.usatoday.com/communities/on...can-of-spying/1

By Douglas Stanglin, USA TODAY
7

Comments
1 Recommend

An Egyptian American accused by Syrian TV of being paid to "destabilize Syria" is under investigation in Syria and is not allowed to leave the country.

Muhammad Radwan, 32, of Houston said on Syria TV that "someone in Colombia" reached him by e-mail and tried to hire him to take photos of events in Syria.

SANA, the Syrian Arab News Agency, says Radwan, who was detained March 25, has given a "preliminary confession" about his activities.

"The television broadcast the confessions of an Egyptian with American nationality who works in Syria," SANA reports. "He said that he visited Israel in secret and confessed to receiving money from abroad in exchange for sending photos and videos about Syria."

Tarek Radwan, Muhammad's brother, tells the Texas A&M newspaper The Battalion that he "was no more an activist in Syria than any other citizen journalist interested in potentially historic events that are happening around him."

"It's not unusual that he would take photos of that, but he would never sell these photos – he would give them away for free," Tarek Radwan says.

Al Ahram Online, an Egyptian newspaper, says Radwan works as an engineer for a Syrian company and expressed no concern to his family shortly before he was detained, telling them that Syria was "quiet" and "very safe."

Radwan's mother says her son, a 2001 engineering graduate from Texas A&M, went to Cairo when the popular uprising broke out in Egypt but is only an "idealist" and not a spy.

CNN says Syrian authorities have not allowed any contact with Radwan from lawyers or Egyptian or American diplomats.

TheUnhivedMind - April 1, 2011 06:09 PM (GMT)

Syria: Thousands protest in 'Day of Martyrs'

Masses rally against Syrian President Bashar Assad's rule in several cities; security forces maintain relative order using crowd-control measures

Associated Press Latest Update: 04.01.11, 19:13 / Israel News
http://www.ynetnews.com/articles/0,7340,L-4050820,00.html

Thousands of Syrians shouting "We want freedom!" marched Friday in a southern city that has become the epicenter of an extraordinary protest movement as security forces deployed across the country, witnesses said.

Activists dubbed Friday a "Day of Martyrs" and called for mass demonstrations to honor more than 70 people killed during two weeks of protests in one of the most authoritarian regimes in the Middle East.

An eyewitness told The Associated Press up to 5,000 people took to the streets in Daraa shouting "We want freedom!" and "The blood of martyrs is not cheap!"

Security forces were heavily deployed in and around the city but did not immediately intervene to stop them, said the eyewitness, who spoke on condition of anonymity for fear of reprisals.

Meanwhile, syrian security forces and Assad loyalists attacked protesters with batons as they left the Rifaii mosque in the Kfar Sousseh district of Damascus after Friday prayers, a witness said.

Later, security forces killed at least four protesters in the southern Damascus suburb of Douma, witnesses said.

The three were among at least 2,000 people who chanted "Freedom. Freedom. One, one, one. The Syrian people are one," at Municipality Square in Douma when security forces opened fire to disperse them, they said.

Protests erupted in Syria on March 18 in the impoverished and drought-stricken south and spread quickly to other areas. Syrian activists have called for massive demonstrations following Friday midday prayers across the nation.

President Bashar Assad dashed expectations he would announce sweeping reforms this week and instead blamed the popular fury that has gripped Syria on a foreign conspiracy. He set up committees on Thursday to investigate the civilian deaths and the possibility of replacing decades-old emergency laws.

The wave of protests has presented the 45-year-old leader with the gravest challenge since he inherited power 11 years ago from his father, taking the helm of one of the Middle East's most authoritarian regimes.

Scores of plainclothes security agents deployed Friday in Damascus near the historic Umayyad mosque, where only last week, pro- and anti-government crowds clashed, hitting each other with leather belts.

As people began leaving the mosque Friday, a crowd of at least 300 people carrying Syrian flags and pictures of Assad broke out into clapping and chants of "Allah, Syria, Bashar!" The chanting lasted for about 10 minutes before the crowds dispersed.

Security forces made no attempt to stop them.

There were reports of other protests in areas surrounding Daraa, as well as the northeastern city of Qamishli, but those reports could not be immediately confirmed.

A Syrian Kurd in Beirut in touch with eyewitnesses there said thousands of people were protesting in Qamishli as well as the nearby towns of Amouda and Derbasiya. He said the demonstrators came out in solidarity with Daraa, chanting "peaceful, peaceful."

The activist said security forces and soldiers were closely watching the demonstrations.

TheUnhivedMind - April 3, 2011 12:35 AM (GMT)

Syria uprising: Dissidents seized from their homes

Suspected dissidents were seized from their homes in Syria on Saturday as the country's Ba'athist regime deployed its feared secret police in an operation to spread renewed fear among opposition sympathisers.

By Adrian Blomfield, Middle East Correspondent and Loveday Morris 7:27PM BST 02 Apr 2011
http://www.telegraph.co.uk/news/worldnews/...heir-homes.html

There were reports of pre-dawn raids across the country, highlighting the risks faced by those who dared publicly to challenge Bashar al-Assad, Syria's president of 11 years, even when they were not braving live fire on the streets.

After days of using his aides to signal his willingness to make concessions, Mr Assad abruptly changed tack on Wednesday in a defiant television address in which he denounced protesters as conspirators in the pay of foreign powers.

The uncompromising new strategy appeared to yield dividends, with fewer taking to the streets on Friday than opposition activists had hoped.

But, showing that the challenge to Mr Assad was far from over, tens of thousands were still willing to defy him in demonstrations across the country despite widespread expectation of savage retaliation from the security forces.

Once again, as has happened so often in over a fortnight of unrest, they were met with violence and live fire by police and military units as well as unidentified loyalists in plain clothes who took up sniper positions on rooftops and balconies.

In a country that has effectively sealed itself off to the outside world, it is nearly impossible to establish an accurate death toll. But opposition activists told of as many as 27 deaths in four different towns and cities.

Testimony emerging from Douma, on the northern outskirts of the capital Damascus, gave a rare insight into the tactics of the police.

A Syrian activist who went to the town said he saw 11 bodies, all victims of pro-Assad forces. "Thugs, supported by the security forces (started) screaming: 'We sacrifice our souls, our blood for the sake of Bashar,'" the activist said. "They attacked the peaceful demonstrators with electrified anti-riot tools, sticks, knives and live ammunition.

"There were many shot people lying on the ground, dead and injured who were pleading while the security (forces) continued the bloody attack."

Even the wounded found no respite. Instead of being loaded into ambulances they were taken away in white security vehicles. Four corpses were also snatched, apparently in an attempt to cover up the death toll.

In the city of Homs, where two people were killed on Friday, at least 21 opposition sympathisers were taken from their homes. There were reports of mass arrests, too, in the southern city of Deraa, where scores have been killed in some of the worst violence of the protests.

Opposition activists said that many of the protests had been infiltrated by regime informers and the detentions seemed to be designed to warn people that they faced prison and possible torture if they took to the streets again.

"The regime is trying to reimpose the fear barrier in Syria," one said. "The greatest threat to Assad is if people are no longer scared of him."

Western officials including Hillary Clinton, the US Secretary of State, say they believe that the reform-minded president's hands are tied by regime hardliners.

But former senior Syrian officials and even members of Mr Assad's family have told The Sunday Telegraph that this perception is a fallacy deliberately fostered by the regime and that, in fact, the president is one of the main enemies of change.

Providing a rare assessment of the inner-workings of the Syrian regime, they said that Mr Assad was more likely than not to side with a group of hardliners led by Rami Makhlouf, his billionaire first cousin, and Assef Shawkat, his brother-in-law.

Others also place the president's brother Maher, the head of the presidential guard who is blamed by many Syrians for the deaths in Deraa, at the heart of a powerful faction of hawks at the centre of power.

For these men, all members of Syria's minority Allawite sect of Shia Islam, the prospect of granting concessions can only result in the weakening of President Assad's hold on power and their fear of the people's vengeance is overwhelming.

"If you are genuinely going to enact change and fight corruption, then some of the first people to be held accountable are going to be come very powerful figures close to the president like Rami Makhlouf," said Ribal al-Assad, a first cousin of the president who is based in London and heads the Organisation for Freedom and Democracy in Syria.

"So obviously they aren't going to want change."

TheUnhivedMind - April 3, 2011 12:36 AM (GMT)

Syria's British-born first lady divides the women of Damascus

Criticism mounts of Asma al-Assad, the fashion pinup at the heart of Syria's repressive elite

Esther Addley and Katherine Marsh in Damascus guardian.co.uk, Friday 1 April 2011 20.01 BST
http://www.guardian.co.uk/world/2011/apr/0...born-first-lady

To Paris Match she was "the element of light in a country full of shadow zones"; to French Elle, the most stylish woman in world politics. Even the Sun was moved to coo over "the sexy Brit bringing Syria in from the cold".

But when American Vogue last month published a glittering profile of Asma al-Assad, calling her "a rose in the desert … glamorous, young and very chic", it seemed the world's patience with fawning paeans to Syria's British-born first lady was beginning to wear thin.

The former banker, 35, who grew up in Acton, west London, has been married for more than a decade to the country's president, Bashar al-Assad, with whom she has three children. She is, said Vogue, "the freshest and most magnetic of first ladies," who combines her passion for Christian Louboutin shoes with a mission "to create a beacon of culture and secularism in a powder-keg region".

Several months into the current "Arab Spring", during which growing calls for reform of Syria's oppressive dictatorship have been met with a brutal police crackdown, critics of the Syrian regime have become increasingly reluctant to allow such remarks to go unchallenged.

"This is the most insulting article ever published by Vogue," read one comment on the magazine's website, representative of many. "She joined a family that is responsible for a history of brutal and repressive dictatorship. She represents everything that is opposite of what you are praising her for."

Observers pointed out that the 97% of the vote that propelled Assad to the presidency, succeeding his father, was probably less "startling" to Mrs Assad than to the Vogue writer, as her husband had been the only candidate and now presides over one of the most brutal regimes in the world.

"Ever wonder what a Marie Antoinette profile might have looked like if Vogue published in 1788?" asked one commentator. "Wonder no more."

Certainly, to admirers and critics, Asma al-Assad is an intriguing figure. The daughter of a former diplomat and a Syrian Harley Street cardiologist, she was raised as a secular Muslim and spoke Arabic at home, but attended a Church of England school in west London, where fellow pupils knew her as Emma. After the private Queen's College girl's school in Marylebone and King's College London, where she studied computer science, she embarked on a brief career as a banker with JP Morgan in London and New York.

Her father, Fawaz Akhras, was a prominent member of the Syrian emigre community in the UK (later founding the British Syrian society) and she and her siblings visited Syria frequently, where Hafez al-Assad, the long-term ruler, was a family friend. She and Bashar, a decade her senior, began dating when she was in her early 20s. The courtship was conducted in absolute secrecy, with neither her colleagues at JP Morgan nor the Syrian press or public knowing anything about it until they married privately in December 2000.

The new president's wife – multilingual and articulate, with a light London accent and warm, easy manners – soon charmed interviewers and statesmen alike. Syrian public opinion was seduced by the story of how she had spent three months before her marriage touring the Syrian countryside incognito, and her subsequent establishment of an NGO aimed at encouraging "empowerment in a civil society". She regularly makes unexpected appearances at charity events and development functions, and mingles easily with crowds, famously driving herself to and from locations.

Her good looks and understated glamour, like that of Diana, Princess of Wales, to whom Syrians often compare her, didn't hurt. High hopes for a new era of political reform were invested in the president, a former eye surgeon, and his charming wife; in the souqs of Damascus and Aleppo posters and magnets of the president, the first lady and their children became popular souvenirs.

But more than a decade into the second Assad regime, those hopes have been frustrated and Syria is in the middle of a gathering crisis. Dozens of pro-democracy protesters have been killed in recent weeks in a violent crackdown on dissent, and although President Assad has offered limited concessions in an attempt to fend off the wave of unrest sweeping the Arab world, he refused this week to lift the hated emergency laws that have permitted Syrian oppression for more than half a century, defiantly blaming "conspiracies" for the unrest.

Some insist that this is not the fault of Assad or his wife, blaming an intransigent old guard and obstructive military hellbent on frustrating the couple's reforming instincts. Unsourced reports suggested Mrs Assad had considered moving back to London, frustrated at the lack of reform.

Others are more sceptical. "What has been holding back reform, if they are committed reformers?" asks Soumaya Ghannoushi, a Middle East commentator based at the university of London. "He has had a long time in government, there were so many hopes pinned on him for reform when he became president. People have given him chance after chance, and nothing has happened.

"There is a mixed feeling in the country towards her. There is a sense of pride, I think, that they have this young, good-looking first lady, westernised and very stylish. But at the same time, they feel she is playing the role of giving a very soft, friendly human image to a regime which is anything but."

Despite the growing political crisis many young women, especially among the urban elite, still express admiration for the first lady.

"She is doing a lot of good," said Nour, a 32-year old office worker in Damascus, pointing to raised awareness on the environment, disabilities and young people. Mrs Assad is also widely credited with a notable rising interest in volunteerism in the last few years.

But among female activists and protesters, Mrs Assad's appeal appears to be fading. "She's a dictator's wife. I don't see how someone married to him can be dubbed a reformer," said one.

The Vogue article "was offensive to Syrians", said a female lawyer in the capital. "Many of my friends were angered by it." She referred specifically to Mrs Assad's boast that she runs her household "on wildly democratic principles" — in sharp contrast to Syria.

"I wonder what she thinks about [the crisis]," said one woman, who asked not to be named. "Surely she wants her children to grow up in a free, democratic country and have the possibilities she had?"

Katherine Marsh is a pseudonym for a journalist working in Damascus

TheUnhivedMind - April 4, 2011 05:41 PM (GMT)

Syria promises to unveil road map to end emergency laws by Friday

Syria authorities will unveil new legislation to replace the country's dreaded emergency laws before the weekend, a newspaper considered close to the government has said.

5:54PM BST 04 Apr 2011
http://www.telegraph.co.uk/news/worldnews/...-by-Friday.html

The al-Watan newspaper reported on Monday that sources in a judicial commission studying the issue had said "it would, by Friday, finish formulating the necessary legislation to replace the emergency law."

Bashar al-Assad, Syria's president, had responded to a wave of violent unrest in the country by setting an April 25 deadline for the commission to study the revocation of the emergency law.

Syria's emergency law, which has been used to impose drastic restrictions on political and personal freedoms ever since the ruling Ba'ath party took power in 1963, was a key demand of protesters who led three weeks of unprecedented pro-reform rallies across the country.

Al-Watan said the commission's work is inspired by the "experience and legal frameworks of the United States, the United Kingdom and France, while taking into account both the dignity and safety of all citizens".

The newspaper also reported that a separate committee investigating the street violence in Deraa and Latakia, where protests were met with deadly force, had questioned "many witnesses and will soon end its work."

Mr al-Assad has already moved to placate protesters by replacing the governor of Deraa, an agricultural town near the Jordanian border where dozens have been killed in two weeks of unrest.

Mohammad Khaled al-Hannus was appointed governor of Deraa in place of the reviled Faysal Kalthum, who was sacked on March 23 at the height of a brutal crackdown on anti-regime rallies that left dozens dead and the governor's residence in flames.

Residents of Deraa had also accused the former governor of undermining their property rights and preventing farmers from drilling water wells for irrigation.

A lawmaker from the region issued a scathing indictment of Mr Kalthum's administration in Syria's parliament, accusing security forces of opening fire "without mercy" and criticising the president for not offering his condolences to the victims.

It is unclear if the regime's actions will help defuse the pro-reform movement, which brought thousands on the streets last Friday. In one sign that the authorities fear further unrest, the Syrian football federation has indefinitely postponed the domestic football league.

TheUnhivedMind - April 8, 2011 05:55 PM (GMT)

Syrian city of Deraa hit by deadly clashes

Lina Sinjab on the reports of shootings at the protests in the Syrian city of Deraa

8 April 2011 Last updated at 18:45
http://www.bbc.co.uk/news/world-13016843

At least 23 protesters have been killed during anti-government rallies in the southern Syrian city of Deraa, witnesses have told the BBC.

There are also unconfirmed reports of deaths in Homs, Duma and Harasta, as protests swept the country.

However, state-run Syrian TV said that 19 members of the security forces had been killed "by armed groups" in Deraa.

Deraa has been a focus of unrest since anti-government protests erupted across Syria in mid-March.

The protests have posed an unprecedented challenge to President Bashar al-Assad's 11-year rule. He has offered to consider reforms, but activists say his proposals do not go far enough.

Thousands are reported to have staged rallies following Friday prayers in Deraa

'Pools of blood'

An activist in Deraa told AFP news agency by telephone that demonstrators leaving from three mosques had marched to the city's main court but were confronted by "security forces dressed in civilian clothing" who fired tear gas to disperse them.

A resident quoted by Reuters reported seeing "pools of blood and three bodies" in the Mahatta area of Deraa.

Also in Deraa, protesters smashed a stone statue of Basil al-Assad - President Assad's late brother - Reuters reported, citing a witness.

Last month, protesters in Deraa tore down a statue of President Assad's father - former President Hafez al-Assad.

An office of the ruling Baath Party in the Mahatta area was attacked on set on fire, the witness added.

State television showed footage from the protests and said that "saboteurs and conspirators opened fire on residents and security forces".

Fresh protests have also been reported in cities including Qamishli, Hasakhe, Idlib, Banyas, Hama and Homs.

The town of Duma, near Damascus, has been sealed off, our correspondent adds, with internet and mobile phone communications blocked.

In Harasta, also on the outskirts of the capital, there are reports of gunfire and of tear gas being fired at protesters.

In northern cities with Kurdish majorities, protesters reportedly chanted "we are calling for freedom and not only for citizenship" in response to President Assad granting citizenship for Kurds in Syria's eastern Hasaka region on Thursday.

In the central city of Homs, thousands are reported to have begun a sit-in. A witness in the coastal city of Latakia said hundreds had taken part in a largely peaceful protest calling for political freedom.

President Assad has offered to consider reforms, but activists say his proposals do not go far enough

In Hama, security forces used water cannon and smoke bombs to break up a 2,000-strong protest in the old quarter of the city, Reuters reported, citing residents.

The BBC's Lina Sinjab in Damascus says protesters in many towns and cities across Syria took to the streets on Friday calling for greater freedom, but after hearing of the deaths in Deraa the calls were for the regime to be toppled.

She says there is frustration that President Assad has so far not implemented reforms. The fear now is that there will be further bloodshed and crackdowns on protesters, she adds.

Activists estimate that more than 130 people have died in four weeks of clashes, mostly in Deraa and Latakia.

Officials say the death toll is nearer to 30 and they blame the violence on armed groups and foreigners seeking to divide the country.

Syria is one of several countries in the Middle East and North Africa to have been hit by a wave of pro-democracy protests following popular uprisings in Tunisia and Egypt that unseated long-standing autocratic rulers.

TheUnhivedMind - April 12, 2011 03:20 PM (GMT)

Iran calls Syrian protests a Western plot

By Hossein Jaseb | Reuters – Tue, 12 Apr, 2011 7:15 AM EDT
http://ca.news.yahoo.com/iran-calls-syrian...041524-209.html

TEHRAN (Reuters) - Anti-government demonstrations in Syria are part of a plot by the West to undermine a government that supports "resistance" in the Middle East, Iran's Foreign Ministry spokesman said on Tuesday.

Unlike uprisings in other parts of the Arab world which Tehran has applauded as an "Islamic awakening" of peoples against Western-backed oppressors, the protests in Syria have received little media attention or official comment in Iran.

But at his weekly news conference on Tuesday, Iran's spokesman said the protests in Syria over the last three weeks, in which 200 people died, according to a rights group, were not a spontaneous event but the result of foreign interference. Syria is Iran's closest Arab ally.

"What is happening in Syria is a mischievous act of Westerners, particularly Americans and Zionists," Ramin Mehmanparast told reporters.

"With the help of their media they are trying to create an artificial protest somewhere or exaggerate a demand of a small group and present it, instead, as the demand and will of the majority."

"No one should be fooled by this trick that Americans are playing."

The Iranian government crushed huge protests after the re-election of President Mahmoud Ahmadinejad in June 2009. Two people were shot dead during a demonstration on February 14 this year, the first attempt by the opposition movement to rally in more than a year.

Iran's leaders have branded opposition leaders "seditionists" backed by its Western enemies and parliament has called for the movement's leaders to be arrested and hanged.

While Bashar al-Assad heads government is secular, it has close ties with Iran's clerical state and both support militant groups Hamas and Hezbollah.

The United States and Israel have accused both countries of trafficking arms to those groups in Lebanon and the Gaza Strip, something both countries deny.

Mehmanparast said Western powers were concerned about losing influence in the reshaped Middle East and sought to hurt Tehran and Damascus.

"They want to avenge some countries like Iran and Syria, which support the resistance, by facilitating small groups," he said. "The Western media tell the world these people are the majority of the society and this is the biggest lie and distortion."

(Reporting by Hossein Jaseb; Writing by Robin Pomeroy; Editing by Jon Hemming)

TheUnhivedMind - April 12, 2011 04:10 PM (GMT)

Merkel calls for end to violence against Syrian opposition

Apr 11, 2011, 12:47 GMT
http://www.monstersandcritics.com/news/eur...rian-opposition

Berlin - Germany called Monday on Syria's government to halt violence against opposition protesters, with Chancellor Angela Merkel saying through a spokesman that they had a right to free opinion.

Merkel also voiced condolences to the families of dozens killed in clashes with security forces.

Her spokesman, Steffen Seibert, accused the government of President Bashar Assad of 'the most serious human rights breaches.' He said Damascus had 'repeatedly' claimed it was moving towards democracy.

'The time has come to follow up these announcements with facts,' he said.

TheUnhivedMind - April 13, 2011 09:00 PM (GMT)

Syrian women march to demand release of men held in security swoop

'We want the men of Baida' chant hundreds in coastal highway protest at mass arrests, as others demonstrate in city of Banias

Haroon Siddique and agencies guardian.co.uk, Wednesday 13 April 2011 16.03 BST
http://www.guardian.co.uk/world/2011/apr/1...omen-block-road

Syrian women and children blockaded a main coastal highway on Wednesday demanding authorities release protesters seized in pro-democracy demonstrations.

Hundreds of Syrian women have marched along the country's main coastal highway to demand the release of men seized from their home town of Baida, human rights activists said.

Security forces, including secret police, stormed Baida, going into houses and arresting hundreds of men, after local people joined anti-government protests, according to the activists.

Video showed a large crowd, mostly women, marching along the road leading to Turkey and chanting: "We want the men of Baida." Witnesses told AP the crowd also chanted: "We will not be humiliated."

Women also demonstrated in the nearby Mediterranean city of Banias, according to the Syrian Observatory for Human Rights, which said 350 men had been arrested in Baida. An activist on Twitter put the number at 800 and said she would release the names of 111 of those detained soon.

In an apparent attempt to calm the women's demonstration, authorities released about 100 of the detainees and brought them to the area where the protesters had gathered, according to a witness, who said the crowd reacted with cheers but intended to continue with their protest until all of the men were released.

Demonstrations have also been held at Damascus University in the capital and Aleppo University, according to activists. Video was posted purporting to show the protest in Aleppo, which would be significant if confirmed, as Syria's second-biggest city had been quiet since the demonstrations against 48 years of autocratic Ba'ath party rule began.

A human rights lawyer in contact with people in Baida told Reuters that security forces had arrested 200 residents in the town, killing two people. "They brought in a television crew and forced the men they arrested to shout 'We sacrifice our blood and our soul for you, Bashar [President Bashar al-Assad]'," the lawyer said. "Syria is the Arab police state par excellence. But the regime still watches international reaction and, as soon as it senses that it has weakened, it turns more bloody."

Tensions have been raised in the mostly Sunni Muslim country ruled by minority Alawites – an offshoot sect of Shia Islam – since protests against the president began.

The Damascus Declaration, Syria's main rights group, says the death toll from the demonstrations, now in their fourth week, has reached 200. Assad has responded to the demonstrations with a combination of some concessions – offered to conservative Muslims and Kurds – and force.

Assad's government has described the protests as part of a foreign conspiracy to sow sectarian strife, blaming unspecified armed groups and "infiltrators" for the violence, and denying a report by Human Rights Watch that security forces have prevented ambulances and medical supplies from reaching besieged areas.

Montaha al-Atrash, board member of the Syrian human rights group Sawasieh, said: "As soon as an area like Baida stands up, they attack it and put out the usual film reel of members of the security forces who died defending stability and order."

State-run television aired purported confessions by three members of a "terrorist cell", saying they received money and weapons from a Lebanese lawmaker to instigate protests in Syria and create chaos across the country.

Activists said Baida was targeted because residents participated in a demonstration in Banias last week in which protesters shouted "the people want the overthrow of the regime" – the rallying cry of the Tunisian and Egyptian revolutions where the leaders were toppled.

One activist said some residents of Baida had weapons and it appeared that an armed confrontation erupted. But Sheikh Anas Airout, an imam in Banias, said Baida residents were largely unarmed.

The protests first erupted in the southern city of Deraa near the border with Jordan and expanded to the suburbs of the capital, Damascus, the northeast, the coast and areas in between.

TheUnhivedMind - April 15, 2011 06:23 PM (GMT)

Syria: Clashes at mass Damascus protest

There have been protests on Friday in a number of Syrian town, including Qamishli in the north

15 April 2011 Last updated at 18:49
http://www.bbc.co.uk/news/world-middle-east-13097926

Tens of thousands of protesters trying to march on the centre of the Syrian capital, Damascus, have been met by security forces firing tear gas.

Witnesses said security forces also beat protesters with batons.

Syria has been shaken by a month of anti-government protests in which about 200 people have been reported killed.

Demonstrations have continued despite President Bashar al-Assad forming a new government and granting amnesties to some of the detained protesters.

Thousands of people were also reported to have demonstrated in a number of other Syrian cities, including Deraa, Latakia and Baniyas - all places where violence has been previously reported.

State media reported that "small demonstrations" had taken place in different parts of the country and security forces did not intervene.
Yellow card warning

The mass protest in the suburbs of Damascus marks a major escalation of Syria's month of unrest, which has largely bypassed the capital.

Analysts said Friday's protests were the biggest since they began in the southern city of Deraa on 15 March.

The unrest is seen as the biggest challenge to Mr Assad, who inherited power from his father in 2000.

The protesters say they want greater freedoms, including a repeal of the decades-old security law, which bans public gatherings of more than five people.

The demonstrators in Damascus held up yellow cards, in a football-style warning to President Assad, AP news agency said.

"This is our first warning, next time we will come with the red cards," one protester said.

Other witnesses said the demonstrators tore down posters of Mr Assad they passed along their route and called for the overthrow of the president.

Reuters quoted a witness who said 15 busloads of secret police had chased people into alleyways north of the city's main Abbasside Square.

The United Nations and a number of Western governments have decried President Assad's use of force to try to quash the protests.

US Secretary of State Hillary Clinton called on Syria's authorities to stop using violence against their own people.

"The Syrian government has not addressed the legitimate demands of the Syrian people," she said after a Nato meeting in Berlin.

"It is time for the Syrian government to stop repressing their citizens and start responding to their aspirations."

Human rights campaigners say hundreds of people across Syria have been arrested, including opposition figures, bloggers and activists.

Mr Assad blames the violence in recent weeks on armed gangs rather than reform-seekers and has vowed to put down further unrest.

US officials have said Iran is helping Syria to crack down on the protests, a charge both Tehran and Damascus have denied.

TheUnhivedMind - April 16, 2011 10:55 PM (GMT)

Syria's al-Assad: Emergency laws 'to end next week'

Bashar al-Assad said he thought the law would be lifted within a week

16 April 2011 Last updated at 21:37
http://www.bbc.co.uk/news/world-middle-east-13105414

Syrian President Bashar al-Assad says he expects a state of emergency to be lifted next week, after weeks of anti-government protests.

He made the comments in a televised speech to his newly formed cabinet.

The lifting of the 48-year-old emergency law has been a key demand of the protesters.

On Friday, tens of thousands of demonstrators rallied in the capital, Damascus, in one of the biggest turnouts since protests began.

While he repeated his view that his country was facing a conspiracy, Mr Assad said he did not believe the lifting of the state of emergency would destabilise Syria.

The Syrian leader told the cabinet a legal commission asked to examine the lifting of the law had come to its conclusions.

"I think the commission has finished its work, on Thursday, and the recommendations will be given to the government so that they become law immediately. I don't know how many days it will take you and I think that the maximum deadline for the lifting of the state of emergency will be next week," he said.

The law bans public gatherings of more than five people.

New security legislation would be introduced in place of the emergency law, he said, adding that the new government should also study ideas for a multi-party system and greater press freedom.

The question now is whether the measures will be enough to persuade the demonstrators to go back to their homes, says the BBC's Owen Bennett Jones in neighbouring Lebanon, or whether they will simply encourage more protests in the hope of securing more reforms.
Batons and tear gas

Friday's protests in Damascus and other cities were among the largest in a month of unrest that has reportedly seen some 200 people killed.

The unrest is the biggest challenge to the rule of Mr Assad, who inherited power from his father in 2000.

Security forces used tear gas and batons to disperse tens of thousands of protesters - some calling for reform, others calling demanding the overthrow of Mr Assad - in Damascus.

Thousands of people reportedly demonstrated in a number of other Syrian cities - including Deraa, Latakia, Baniyas and Qamishli - where violence has been previously reported.

Mr Assad formed a new government on Thursday and pronounced amnesty for an undisclosed number of people detained in the last month.

He has also sacked some local officials and granted Syrian citizenship to thousands of the country's Kurdish minority - satisfying a long-held demand.

The United Nations and a number of Western governments have decried President Assad's use of force to try to quash the protests.

Human rights campaigners say hundreds of people across Syria have been arrested, including opposition figures, bloggers and activists.

Mr Assad blames the violence in recent weeks on armed gangs rather than reform-seekers and has vowed to put down further unrest.

US officials have said Iran is helping Syria to crack down on the protests, a charge both Tehran and Damascus have denied.

TheUnhivedMind - April 18, 2011 03:40 AM (GMT)

Globalist War Machine Fixates on Syria

Tony Cartalucci
April 17, 2011
http://www.infowars.com/globalist-war-mach...xates-on-syria/

With the war in Libya set only to expand, the precedent of attacking a sovereign nation based on unverified reports, to then assist foreign funded, armed insurrection is already being used to lay the groundwork for a similar campaign against Syria. The “Libyan Precedent” was already an articulated doctrine within the corporate-financier think-tanks long before Joe Lieberman and Nicolas Sarkozy began parroting it in speeches and interviews.

In a February 26, 2011 Brookings Institute report titled, “Libya’s Test of the New International Order,” the intervention in Libya was described as “a test that the international community has to pass.” Failure would “shake further the faith of the people’s region in the emerging international order and the primacy of international law.” Succeeding, the report would go on to say, would “demonstrably draw a line in the sand to deter other Arab autocrats who resort to attacking their people rather than dialogue and genuine reforms.” Of course by reforms, Brookings means integration into the “international system” its corporate-financier sponsorship lords over.

In late March after bombing began in Libya, Sarkozy of France would echo Brookings’ sentiments stating, “Every ruler should understand, and especially every Arab ruler should understand that the reaction of the international community and of Europe will from this moment on each time be the same: we will be on the side of peaceful protesters who must not be repressed with violence.” He would go on to say there is a “new post-UNSC 1973 model of “world governance.”"

During a Fox News interview, Joe Lieberman would also threaten Syria with a Libyan-style intervention. What Sarkozy and Lieberman both fail to point out is that the opposition in Syria is funded and supported, as is the opposition across the Arab world, by the same corporate-financier interests that hand them both their talking points. Much of the Syrian opposition is comprised of London-based activists, the Muslim Brotherhood, their “national coalition to support the youth,” and of course the admittedly US trained, funded, and equipped youth activists themselves.

[dohtml]<object width="640" height="390"><param name="movie" value="http://www.youtube.com/v/SiTf0XKSA50&rel=0&hl=en_GB&feature=player_embedded&version=3"></param><param name="allowFullScreen" value="true"></param><param name="allowScriptAccess" value="always"></param><embed src="http://www.youtube.com/v/SiTf0XKSA50&rel=0&hl=en_GB&feature=player_embedded&version=3" type="application/x-shockwave-flash" allowfullscreen="true" allowScriptAccess="always" width="640" height="390"></embed></object>[/dohtml]
Senator Joe Lieberman threatens military intervention in Syria based on the “Libyan Precedent.”

Sarkozy and Lieberman also forget to mention the fact that these protesters are far from merely singing songs and carrying placards. Riots, violence, shootings, arson, and clashes with security forces and residents loyal to the Syrian government are being reported from across the country. In the city of Deraa, protesters torched the Baath Party headquarters and destroyed cars parked along the street, while two protesters were reportedly killed as they attempted to light ablaze another government building in the city of Latakia.

[dohtml]<object width="640" height="390"><param name="movie" value="http://www.youtube.com/v/z97rm5YCPLk&rel=0&hl=en_GB&feature=player_embedded&version=3"></param><param name="allowFullScreen" value="true"></param><param name="allowScriptAccess" value="always"></param><embed src="http://www.youtube.com/v/z97rm5YCPLk&rel=0&hl=en_GB&feature=player_embedded&version=3" type="application/x-shockwave-flash" allowfullscreen="true" allowScriptAccess="always" width="640" height="390"></embed></object>[/dohtml]
The protests are clearly not “peaceful,” rather marked by violence and widespread arson.

It is difficult to understand how any responsible government should be expected to allow foreign funded mobs to commit widespread arson and vandalism with the expressed goal of removing the standing government from power. Doing so would embolden anyone with enough money from abroad to fund those willing to destroy property and risk lives locally in order to extort from the government their demands. It is also difficult to understand how these protesters are continuously labeled as “peaceful” by disingenuous meddlers and war mongers like Joe Lieberman and Nicolas Sarkozy.

The violence exhibited by the protesters is designed to intentionally provoke Syrian security forces attempting to maintain order. As security forces react, the corporate media and puppet politicians abroad attempt to leverage legitimacy away from Syria’s government, citing the violence as a potential impetus for expanded meddling and even military intervention.

To ensure the violence and chaos continues during a color revolution, provocateurs are often employed to kill protesters and security forces alike – as seen in Thailand on April 10, 2010, now with similar mystery gunmen turning up in Yemen and Syria. Secretary of State Hillary Clinton warned Syria yesterday to “refrain from any further violence against their own people,” to further reinforce the official “Libyan-esque” narrative.

As with Libya, we are made to believe our “leadership” is reacting to spontaneous events unfolding on the ground, when in reality they are executing an agenda that has been on the drawing board since at least 1991. We must then look past the puppet politicians and the corporate media who are merely repeating talking points, and instead focus on the corporate-financier oligarchs writing these talking points. We must see them as the problem, and understand that replacing them is the real revolution.

For why these violent “revolutions” are not the answer and what might be a better alternative, read: “The Real Revolution.”

Tony Cartalucci’s articles have appeared on many alternative media websites, including his own at Land Destroyer Report.

TheUnhivedMind - April 18, 2011 09:15 PM (GMT)

Syrian protesters call for end of regime at mass funerals

Demonstrations follow claims that security forces killed at least 25 people in Homs and further five in Talbisseh

Katherine Marsh in Damascus
guardian.co.uk, Monday 18 April 2011 19.07 BST
http://www.guardian.co.uk/world/2011/apr/1...-homs-talbisseh

Thousands of people chanting for the toppling of the Syrian regime took to the streets of the country's third largest city for mass funerals, as activists denied any US role in the uprising.

Rights groups say security forces killed at least 25 in Homs on Sunday night as protests erupted despite president Bashar al-Assad's offers of reforms in a bid to quell unrest.

A further five people were killed on Sunday night in the nearby town of Talbisseh, and there were also unconfirmed reports of four dead in Latakia, rights activists said.

Residents of Homs and Talbisseh told news agencies that the cities were tense following funerals for at least 8 of the victims. The injured were refusing to seek medical treatment for fear of being arrested, they said, while reports suggested a sit-in was being staged.

Despite a reduced level of violence during Friday's protests and a pledge to lift emergency laws within the week, protesters turned out on Sunday for Syria's independence day which commemorates the departure of the last French soldier in 1946.

Protests also took place in Daraa, Duma and Latakia on Sunday, and Daraa again on Monday]. Amateur footage suggests a rapidly growing number of demonstrators are calling for the toppling of the regime rather than freedom.

Amid the funerals, internal activists stressed the grassroots nature of Syria's uprising after the publication of a US embassy cable leaked to Wikileaks on Monday saying that the US had channelled funds to Syrian pro-democracy groups.

The cableclaimed that, since 2006, $6m (£3.6m) had been channelled to groups including the Movement for Justice and Development, a moderate Islamist party based in London, and Barada TV.

The Syrian government – who said one policeman had been killed and 11 injured in Talbisseh at the hands of an armed gang – has repeatedly blamed the past month of protests on armed gangs linked to outsiders, from Lebanese enemies to exiled opposition.

"Even if the US gave money to these groups, it has no bearing on the protests," said one independent activist in Damascus. "It is clear that this movement was started by normal people, not the opposition – which barely exists anyway – and not even us activists."

Ausama Monajed, an activist helping to publicise the protests, is a member of the party, but said his work was run by volunteers only.

Few people in Syria watch Barada TV, preferring the Dubai-based Orient TV or al-Jazeera and al-Arabiya, while Syria's weak, and mostly exiled, opposition has little influence inside the country.

While on Sunday some in the capital expressed positive views over Assad's speech, which was seen as targeting the silent majority who have yet to come out in the centres of Damascus and Aleppo, the renewed use of violence may have caused a resurgence of discomfort.

Since the violence of 8 April, a growing number of women have staged protests. On Saturday an unknown number of Syrian students posted a statement on Facebook condemning the violence used against protesters and calling for a three-day boycott of lectures starting on Tuesday]. Some students have been referred to the punishment committee of Damascus University after a small protest last week.

Katherine Marsh is a pseudonym for a journalist living in Damascus

TheUnhivedMind - April 19, 2011 02:23 AM (GMT)

U.S. secretly backed Syrian opposition: report

WASHINGTON | Mon Apr 18, 2011 10:54am EDT
http://www.reuters.com/article/2011/04/18/...E73H0E720110418

(Reuters) - The State Department has secretly funded Syrian opposition groups, according to diplomatic cables released by WikiLeaks, The Washington Post reported on Monday.

The cables show that the State Department has funneled as much as $6 million since 2006 to a group of Syrian exiles to operate a London-based satellite channel, Barada TV, and finance activities inside Syria, the Post said.

Barada TV began broadcasting in April 2009 but has ramped up operations to cover the mass protests in Syria that began last month as part of a long-standing campaign to overthrow President Bashar al-Assad the Post said.

The U.S. money for Syrian opposition figures began flowing under President George W. Bush after political ties with Damascus were frozen in 2005, the newspaper said.

The financial backing has continued under President Barack Obama, even as his administration sought to rebuild relations with Assad, the Post said. In January, the White House posted an ambassador to Damascus for the first time in six years.

The article said it is unclear whether the United States was still funding Syrian opposition groups, but the cables indicate money was set aside at least through September 2010.

An uprising against Assad's authoritarian rule have spread across large parts of the country. Rights groups put the death toll at more than 200 people. Syrian authorities blame the violence on armed gangs.

The previously undisclosed cables show that U.S. Embassy officials in Damascus became worried in 2009 when they learned that Syrian intelligence agents were raising questions about U.S. programs, The Washington Post said.

An April 2009 cable signed by the top-ranking U.S. diplomat in Damascus at the time read Syrian authorities "would undoubtedly view any U.S. funds going to illegal political groups as tantamount to supporting regime change," the Post reported.

"A reassessment of current U.S.-sponsored programing that supports anti- factions, both inside and outside Syria, may prove productive," the cable said.

The Post said the State Department declined to comment on the authenticity of the cables or answer questions about its funding of Barada TV.

(Reporting by JoAnne Allen; Editing by Philip Barbara)

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: NOW YEMEN DEMONSTRATE AGAINST RUTHLESS GOVERNMENT

Title: NOW YEMEN DEMONSTRATE AGAINST RUTHLESS GOVERNMENT
Description: [Vd]

TheUnhivedMind - January 27, 2011 06:38 PM (GMT)

NOW YEMEN DEMONSTRATE AGAINST RUTHLESS GOVERNMENT

[dohtml]<object style="height: 390px; width: 640px"><param name="movie" value="http://www.youtube.com/v/nlVC43jg96E?version=3"><param name="allowFullScreen" value="true"><param name="allowScriptAccess" value="always"><embed src="http://www.youtube.com/v/nlVC43jg96E?version=3" type="application/x-shockwave-flash" allowfullscreen="true" allowScriptAccess="always" width="640" height="390"></object>[/dohtml]

TheUnhivedMind - February 19, 2011 07:58 PM (GMT)

[dohtml]<object width="640" height="390"><param name="movie" value="http://www.youtube.com/v/CE-WhiqpzSM&rel=0&hl=en_GB&feature=player_embedded&version=3"></param><param name="allowFullScreen" value="true"></param><param name="allowScriptAccess" value="always"></param><embed src="http://www.youtube.com/v/CE-WhiqpzSM&rel=0&hl=en_GB&feature=player_embedded&version=3" type="application/x-shockwave-flash" allowfullscreen="true" allowScriptAccess="always" width="640" height="390"></embed></object>[/dohtml]

TheUnhivedMind - February 19, 2011 07:58 PM (GMT)

[dohtml]<object width="640" height="390"><param name="movie" value="http://www.youtube.com/v/oddzA_R-zaU&rel=0&hl=en_GB&feature=player_embedded&version=3"></param><param name="allowFullScreen" value="true"></param><param name="allowScriptAccess" value="always"></param><embed src="http://www.youtube.com/v/oddzA_R-zaU&rel=0&hl=en_GB&feature=player_embedded&version=3" type="application/x-shockwave-flash" allowfullscreen="true" allowScriptAccess="always" width="640" height="390"></embed></object>[/dohtml]

TheUnhivedMind - February 22, 2011 02:50 AM (GMT)

Yemen's president rejects demands to step down

Published on 02-21-2011 Email To Friend Print Version

http://www.washingtonpost.com/wp-dyn/conte...1022102628.html

Yemeni President Ali Abdullah Saleh rejected demands to resign immediately on Monday, declaring that protesters clamoring for an end to his rule must do so through elections rather than through violence and chaos.

But at the same time, he repeated his offer to hold a dialogue over power-sharing with Yemen's main opposition parties. The parties have rejected his proposal, saying they can't negotiate with a government whose loyalists and security forces have attacked pro-reform protesters with "bullets and sticks and thuggery."

On Monday, Saleh defiantly accused his opponents of also using force and of not listening to the majority of Yemenis who, he said, want peace and stability.

"Yes to reforms," Saleh told a news conference in the capital, Sanaa. "No to coups and seizing power through anarchy and killing.

"If they want power they must reach it through the ballot boxes," he added. "You are calling for the regime to go - then come and get rid of it through the ballot boxes, not through violence."

Saleh is facing mounting pressure to prevent attacks against pro-reform protesters, not only from the streets, but also from close allies such as the United States, which provides hundreds of millions of dollars in military and developmental aid.

On Monday, Saleh said he would order security forces not to fire at anti-government protesters, unless it is in self-defense; on Sunday, he told thousands of supporters that he condemned the violence committed by pro-government gangs, saying that they did not belong to his ruling party.

So far, at least 12 people have been killed nationwide, most of them in the restive southern city of Aden. On Monday, security forces shot dead a teenager there and wounded four others when the youth threw stones at a patrol, Reuters reported.

In an effort to defuse tensions, Saleh has promised to step down from office in 2013 and not to anoint his son as his heir-apparent. But that has not stemmed the growing tide of protesters who have taken to the streets in several cities demanding his ouster. Last week, rock-throwing clashes erupted between rival groups of demonstrators that underscored Yemen's potential to spiral into chaos.

The past two days have been relatively calm in the capital. On Monday, several thousand protesters staged a sit-in in front of Sanaa University, the focal point of the demonstrations in the capital. The protesters included lawmakers from opposition parties, suggesting that some now favored regime change rather than political reforms.

A key reason why Yemen's protests have been small - although Yemenis share the same economic and political grievances as Egyptians, Tunisians and Libyans - is that the opposition has been divided over its goals. While the protesters, mostly young people and activists, want Saleh to step down, his political opponents are seeking to exact concessions, but not his ouster.

Outside the university, the mood was festive, with people singing and chanting over loudspeakers, reminiscent of the gatherings in Cairo's Tahrir Square.

Banners read: "The people want to overthrow the regime."

"Get out Saleh," read another placard, written in 12 languages.

TheUnhivedMind - March 2, 2011 02:31 AM (GMT)

Yemeni president says US and Israel behind unrest

AHMED AL-HAJ, Associated Press
Updated 07:54 p.m., Tuesday, March 1, 2011
http://www.mysanantonio.com/news/article/Y...5657.php#page-2

SANAA, Yemen (AP) — Yemen's embattled president on Tuesday accused the U.S., his closest ally, of instigating the mounting protests against him, but the gambit failed to slow the momentum for his ouster.

Hundreds of thousands rallied in cities across Yemen against the government of President Ali Abdullah Saleh, in the largest of the protests of the past month, including one addressed by an influential firebrand cleric, a former ally of Saleh, whom the U.S. has linked to al-Qaida.

"Go on until you achieve your demands," Sheik Abdul-Majid al-Zindani told tens of thousands of demonstrators in the capital of Sanaa. A former U.S. ambassador to Yemen called al-Zindani's decision to turn against President Ali Abdullah Saleh a major setback for the president.

Some warned that the current political turmoil and possible collapse of Saleh's regime could give a further opening to Yemen's offshoot of the global terror network, al-Qaida in the Arabian Peninsula.

James Jones, former White House National Security Advisor, warned a Washington conference that Yemen's crisis "could deepen the current vacuum of power in Yemen on which al Qaida has thrived."

The Yemen-based al-Qaida in the Arabian Peninsula, believed to have been involved in the attempted 2009 bombing of an American airliner, is seen as particularly active and threatening to the U.S.

Saleh has been a weak but important U.S. ally in the fight against al-Qaida, accepting tens of millions of dollars in U.S. military and other aid and allowing American drone strikes on al-Qaida targets.

Garry Reid, deputy assistant U.S. Secretary of Defense for Special Operations and Combating Terrorism, told the Bipartisan Policy Center, a Washington think tank, that the Saleh government was "the best partner we're going to have ... and hopefully it will survive because I certainly would have to start over again in what we've tried to build."

Secretary of State Hillary Rodham Clinton visited Yemen in January and urged Saleh to do more.

However, on Tuesday, Saleh seemed to be turning on Washington. In a speech to about 500 students and lecturers at Sanaa University, he claimed the U.S., along with Israel, is behind the protest movement.

"I am going to reveal a secret," he said. "There is an operations room in Tel Aviv with the aim of destabilizing the Arab world. The operations room is in Tel Aviv and run by the White House."

Saleh also alleged that opposition figures meet regularly with the U.S. ambassador in Sanaa. "Regrettably those (opposition figures) are sitting day and night with the American ambassador where they hand him reports and he gives them instructions," Saleh said.

The Obama administration rejected these claims. White House spokesman Jay Carney called on Saleh to focus on implementing the political reforms demanded by his people instead of "scapegoating."

Saleh's relationship with the U.S. has been ambivalent, and he has at times attempted to play down his military alliance with Washington. Anti-U.S. sentiment remains strong in Yemen, as elsewhere in the region, and Saleh's comments appeared to be an attempt to discredit the protesters by suggesting they are serving foreign interests.

"Part of this is putting blame on others, part of it is trying to manage the situation," said Christopher Boucek, an analyst at the Carnegie Endowment for International Peace, a U.S. think tank. "He (Saleh) does not want to feed into grievances that gave rise to the opposition against him, such as being too close to the U.S."

Thomas Krajeski, senior vice president of the U.S. National Defense University and former U.S. ambassador to Yemen, gave the Saleh regime a 50-50 chance of surviving the current crisis and he said it's not clear who is likely to succeed him. "We just don't know what comes next," Krajeski told a conference at Washington's Bipartisan Policy Center.

But Krajeski predicted that Yemen's tribes would quickly step in to establish a new government rather than let the country become what he called "an ungoverned mess," like Somalia.

Jonathan Ruhe, a policy analyst for the Bipartisan Policy Center, said: "It's kind of hard to imagine a post-Saleh world. If he should fall, the future is wide open."

In another attempt to silence critics, Saleh fired five of the country's 22 provincial governors Tuesday, including three who had spoken out against the government's at times violent crackdown on demonstrators.

In London, Britain's Foreign Office summoned a senior Yemeni diplomat to express "deep concern" over the deaths of protesters at rallies. "The government of Yemen should listen to the legitimate grievances of the Yemeni people," the Foreign Office said.

The momentum against the president, who refuses to step down until elections in 2013, has kept growing since protests erupted a month ago — inspired by successful uprisings in Egypt and Tunisia. He has lost the support of key tribal chiefs and on Tuesday, opposition parties called their supporters into the streets for the first time. Crowds of tens of thousands each were reported in five areas of the country, including in Sanaa.

Saleh's government is widely seen as corrupt, with relatives of the president holding key positions in government and business. Grievances about the growing disparity between Yemen's poor — nearly half the population of some 23 million — and a small ruling clique have helped drive the protests. Yemen is the Arab world's poorest country.

In the port city of Aden, the scene of deadly clashes between police and demonstrators last week, thousands rallied Tuesday to express their anger. "We are demonstrating and calling for the downfall of the regime because Aden, under Saleh, has turned into a village," said Faiza al-Sharbary, a 45-year-old teacher. "At one time, it was one of the best cities. Therefore this regime has to leave."

In Sanaa, tens of thousands gathered outside the university, the heart of the protests.

Al-Zindani, the influential Islamic cleric, praised the young protesters, saying their rallies are "a new way to change regimes that we did not know 50 years ago."

"Go on until you achieve your demands," he told them. "You have come out demanding changes as a result of desperation."

Al-Zindani's role appeared unclear. Saleh, in power for 32 years, has tried to co-opt the preacher, appointing him last year as a mediator between the government and opposition parties over electoral reform.

However, al-Zindani is also thought by the United States to be a one-time spiritual mentor of Osama bin Laden. He has been placed on the U.S. list of terrorist financiers, and is the subject of travel and financial sanctions by the U.S. and the United Nations.

In the past, the cleric has criticized the U.S.-backed fight against al-Qaida, warning that it could lead to a foreign occupation of Yemen.

Some in Yemen said the current turmoil could strengthen the local al-Qaida branch.

"One of the principal worries of our regional and global partners has been that if Yemen goes into anarchy, the possibility of al-Qaida having easy access should be quite clear," said Mohamed Qubaty, a senior member of Yemen's ruling party.

Krajeski, the former U.S. ambassador to Yemen, said al-Zidani's decision to criticize Saleh and questioned his legitimacy was a major setback for the government. "That's a big deal," he said. "Saleh worked very hard to keep this guy in control. If Zindani is breaking with him that is another knock on his base."

Krajeski added though that he didn't think that radical Islam was a big factor in the current unrest, although it was part of the general opposition to Saleh's government.

Yemen has been the site of numerous anti-U.S. attacks, going back to the 2000 bombing of the USS Cole in Aden harbor, which killed 17 American sailors. Late last year, several CIA operatives were targeted in a failed bombing at a restaurant in a Sanaa suburb. Al-Qaida in the Arabian Peninsula was also thought to be behind the attempted bombing of an American airliner landing in Detroit in 2009.

___

Associated Press writers Matthew Lee and Douglas Birch in Washington, Raphael Satter in London and Karin Laub in Cairo contributed reporting.

TheUnhivedMind - March 2, 2011 02:33 AM (GMT)

Yemen rocked by 'day of rage' demos

Tue Mar 1, 2011 5:58PM
http://www.presstv.ir/detail/167705.html

Tens of thousands of Yemenis have held fresh protests across the country demanding an end to President Ali Abdullah Saleh's three-decade rule in the country.

Saleh's opponents poured into the streets on Tuesday to mark "a Day of Rage" across Yemen, Reuters reported.

In the capital, protesters amassed from early hours of the day in the streets leading to a square near the Sana'a University, where students and anti-government demonstrators have been camped for more than a week.

"The people want Ali Abdullah Saleh to leave. The people want to overthrow the regime," chanted the protesters. Many of the protesters were wearing white shrouds reading, "Either we live happily or we die as martyrs."

Opposition sources and rally organizers described the turnout in the Tuesday protests as unprecedented since the beginning of the sit-in protest near Sana'a University.

The mass demonstrations came as Saleh sacked the governors of five provinces, mostly in the south, where anti-regime protests have been underway for the past two weeks.

At least 24 people have been killed in the clashes between government forces and anti-regime protesters, with violence in the southern province of Aden accounting for most of the deaths.

Saleh has resisted mounting calls to step down but has promised not to seek re-election when his current term expires in 2013.

The out-of-favor earlier offered to form a unity government with the opposition and religious leaders, but the opposition rejected the proposal.

TheUnhivedMind - March 2, 2011 02:33 AM (GMT)

2 killed, 4 injured in southern Yemen

Wed Mar 2, 2011 1:11AM
http://www.presstv.ir/detail/167753.html

Anti-government protesters shout slogans as they wave Yemeni flags during a demonstration demanding the ouster of President Ali Abdullah Saleh outside Sana'a University on March 1.
At least two people have been killed and four others injured in clashes between anti-government protesters and Yemeni security forces in Aden.

Private and public property was burned and damaged in the clashes in the southern Yemeni city, the Press TV correspondent in Aden reported.

The protesters are angry at widespread corruption, as Yemeni university graduates struggle to get jobs without connections and youth unemployment is high.

Northern rebels and southern separatists say they are denied resources and a say in politics.

As oil and water resources dry up, 68-year-old President Ali Abdullah Saleh is less able to pay off allies to keep the peace.

TheUnhivedMind - March 6, 2011 03:30 PM (GMT)

Yemen: US state department upgrades travel warning

Protests continue on and off against the rule of President Ali Abdullah Saleh, in power for 33 years

6 March 2011 Last updated at 09:16
http://www.bbc.co.uk/news/world-middle-east-12658781

The US has warned its citizens to avoid travelling to the Middle Eastern state of Yemen and says those already there should consider leaving.

The state department said the security threat level was "extremely high due to terrorist activities and civil unrest".

The travel warning comes a day after the UK issued similar advice.

There have been many anti-government demonstrations across several cities in recent weeks, with reports of fatal clashes between police and protesters.

Demonstrators want the resignation of President Ali Abdullah Saleh, who has ruled since 1978.

The protesters want more job opportunities, an end to corruption, and a more even distribution of wealth.

The president has said he will not seek another term in office in 2013 but has vowed to defend his regime "with every drop of blood".

Yemen has also been hit by a separatist movement in the south, attacks by a branch of al-Qaeda, and a periodic conflict with Shia tribes in the north.
Evacuation options 'limited'

The US Department of State said it had authorised the voluntary departure from Yemen of family members of US Embassy staff and non-essential personnel.

The upgraded travel warning follows an attack on Sunday by suspected al-Qaeda militants east of the capital Sanaa, in which four soldiers were reportedly killed.

Unidentified men opened fire on the soldiers as they passed in a truck near Marib, about 170km (110 miles) from the capital, a Yemeni official said.

Earlier this week, rebels say the army fired rockets at an anti-government protest in northern Yemen, killing two people.

"Should a crisis occur, evacuation options from Yemen would be extremely limited due to the lack of infrastructure, geographic constraints, and other security concerns," the state department said.

It also said the US Embassy's ability to assist US citizens in the event of a crisis would be "very limited".

Piracy in the Red Sea, Gulf of Aden and Indian Ocean is also a security threat to maritime activities in the region, the state department added.

TheUnhivedMind - March 13, 2011 01:34 AM (GMT)

YEMEN SECURITY FORCES SHOOT PEACEFUL PROTESTERS

[dohtml]<object style="height: 390px; width: 640px"><param name="movie" value="http://www.youtube.com/v/hw0EIYQoBPI?version=3"><param name="allowFullScreen" value="true"><param name="allowScriptAccess" value="always"><embed src="http://www.youtube.com/v/hw0EIYQoBPI?version=3" type="application/x-shockwave-flash" allowfullscreen="true" allowScriptAccess="always" width="640" height="390"></object>[/dohtml]

TheUnhivedMind - March 13, 2011 04:56 PM (GMT)

British commanders draw up plans to evacuate UK nationals from Yemen

British commanders are drawing up plans to launch an emergency rescue of British nationals based in Yemen.

By Sean Rayment, Defence Correspondent 10:00AM GMT 13 Mar 2011
http://www.telegraph.co.uk/news/worldnews/...from-Yemen.html

Senior officers at the Permanent Joint Planning Headquarters, a military command centre in Northwood, are preparing a series of options to evacuate members of the armed forces, consular staff and civilians based in the Arab state if the security situation continues to deteriorate.

Members of the Joint Force Headquarters, the organisation that planned the special forces rescue operation in Libya, have been given the task of ensuring that the evacuation operation can be initiated at short notice.

It is understood that military planners have already secured several of civilian airliners which could be used to conduct the Non-combatant Evacuation Operation (NEO) if the violence, which has claimed more than 30 lives, escalates.

Britain has a counter-terrorist training team based in the country, while the United States has a much larger force, composed of regular and special forces, as well as a large CIA contingent.

Sources have revealed that the Foreign and Commonwealth Office is determined not to be “caught cold” if the country follows Libya and descends into chaos.

One of the main factors complicating the conduct of any military operation in Yemen is the presence of the terrorist group Al-Qaeda in the Arabian Peninsular, the group behind the planting of explosive devices on cargo planes bound for the United States last year. Members of the group are also believed to be behind two attacks aimed at the British embassy.

One source said: “There is lots of contingency planning taking place and the belief is that Yemen will be the next country to fall. It is accepted that UK reacted to slowly to events in Libya and we don’t want that to happen again. It’s not good for national prestige.”

President Ali Abdullah Saleh, who has ruled the Arab state for 32-years, has been reported as rapidly losing control in Yemen despite the escalation of increasingly violent tactics against demonstrators.

Last week security forces opened fire at a large protest outside the university in the capital, Sana'a. At least 80 people were injured, and one subsequently died of his injuries in hospital.

Thousands of people have turned out for regular demonstrations in cities calling for corruption and unemployment to be tackled and demanding the president steps down. The protests have often been met by riot police or supporters of President Saleh armed with knives and batons.

On Friday police opened fire on anti-government demonstrators in several cities across the country in what appears to have been the biggest turn out of protesters in the past month.

TheUnhivedMind - March 18, 2011 04:51 PM (GMT)

Yemen unrest: 'Dozens killed' as gunmen target rally

Doctors said that most of the injuries were to the neck, head and chest of protesters

18 March 2011 Last updated at 15:16
http://www.bbc.co.uk/news/world-middle-east-12783585

Unidentified gunmen firing on an anti-government rally in the Yemeni capital Sanaa have killed at least 39 people and injured 200, doctors told the BBC.

The gunmen, said to be wearing civilian clothes, fired from roof-tops overlooking the central square.

State media say the security forces had nothing to do with the violence and blamed it on "clashes among citizens".

President Ali Abdullah Saleh has declared a state of emergency across the country.

Speaking after a month of violence which rocked Yemen, he reportedly expressed sorrow for the violence in Sanaa, which began after Friday prayers.

Yemen's opposition condemned the shooting and urged Mr Saleh to leave.

"There is no longer any possibility of mutual understanding with this regime and he has no choice but to surrender authority to the people," Yassin Noman, rotating president of Yemen's umbrella opposition group, was quoted by Reuters news agency as saying.

According to Reuters, tens of thousands of protesters also gathered in other cities across the country, from the southern port of Aden to Hodeida in the west.

Popular revolts

"Most of the wounds were to the head, neck and chest," one doctor told AFP about Friday's shooting.

Yemen is one of a number of countries in the region that have seen unrest since the presidents of Egypt and Tunisia were ousted in popular revolts.

Thousands of people have turned out for regular demonstrations in cities including Sanaa, Aden, Taiz and elsewhere, calling for corruption and unemployment to be tackled and demanding the president step down.

Some 40% of the population live on $2 (£1.20) a day or less in the country, and a third face food shortages.

The protests have often been met by riot police or supporters of President Saleh armed with knives and batons.

On 9 March one person was killed and at least 80 were injured when forces opened fire on a similar protest by a group which has been camped out in front of the university since mid-February.

The president has been in power for 32 years, facing a separatist movement in the south, a branch of al-Qaeda, and a periodic conflict with Shia tribes in the north.

He has said he will not seek another term in office in 2013 but has vowed to defend his regime "with every drop of blood".

TheUnhivedMind - March 19, 2011 06:45 PM (GMT)

Yemen protests: Evidence snipers shot to kill

Photographs and amateur video footage have provided the first compelling evidence that professional snipers shot to kill when they opened fire on an anti-government demonstration in Yemen that left at least 52 protesters dead.

By Adrian Blomfield, Middle East Correspondent 6:23PM GMT 19 Mar 2011
http://www.telegraph.co.uk/news/worldnews/...ot-to-kill.html

Image after image of the dead, men and boys, showed that those killed in the most violent day in the capital city Sana'a for 30 years had been systematically shot through the head and neck by gunmen positioned on city rooftops.

Yet even as the international community condemned Friday's violence, Ali Abdullah Saleh, Yemen's president of 32 years, remained unbowed as his security forces visited more bloodshed on protesters in the port city of Aden, a strategic British colony until 1963.

Police used live fire to disperse demonstrators calling for Mr Saleh's resignation. Local human rights groups said that at least four people died, while more than a dozen more were wounded.

Abandoning all pretence of defending his people's legitimate right to protest, a pledge that he had made just a week before, Mr Saleh deployed tanks on the streets of Sana'a after declaring a state of emergency.

But if he hoped to scare the ever-growing movement demanding his overthrow, Mr Saleh appeared to have misjudged the public mood.

On streets still stained with the blood of their comrades, protesters came in their tens of thousands to gather once more along the mile-long stretch of road outside Sana'a' University that has become the symbolic headquarters of the growing insurrection.

Just 24 hours earlier, many had stood defiant at the same spot as bullets flew around them.

Video footage released on Saturday suggested the callousness of a plot that seemed design to kill as many people as possible.

One clip shows smoke billowing from the southern end of the protesters' camp where unidentified men had erected a burning barricade of tyres to prevent the demonstrators, many of whom had been outside the university for days, from escaping.

Suddenly, there is a crackle of gunfire and scores of people duck involuntarily. But even as one man is felled, blood turning his white dishdasha (Italics please) robe white, others around him resume their anti-government slogans undeterred.

On the other side of what the demonstrators have begun to call "Taghyir" or "Change" Square, others stripped off their jackets and advanced towards the ever more relentless gunfire, pointing towards their chests as if in an invitation to shoot.

As the carnage continued, killing 52 and wounding hundreds more, victims were brought to a nearby mosque that had been turned into makeshift hospital.

Photographs showed the dead, identity cards and miniatures of the Koran laid on their corpses, lain in rows across the carpeted floor on an inner prayer room.

One young boy, barefoot and dressed in an Arsenal football club T-shirt, had been shot just above the eye. Another photograph showed a veiled woman cradling the body of her young son, his arms outstretched as if in supplication.

In one video, a man holding the body of his dead brother is shown making a tearful telephone call to his mother to tell her, in a faltering voice, that her son is dead.

Nearly all the bodies in the photographs had bullet wounds either in the forehead, neck or in the back of the head. There seems little doubt that this was the work of trained marksmen.

Yet President Saleh, while expressing his sorrow, claimed that the gunmen were either the demonstrators themselves or irate residents neighbouring the university who had grown tired of the noise of the protests – a claim denied by the residents themselves.

The opposition coalition at the forefront of the protests accused Mr Saleh, a key US ally against al-Qaeda, of perpetrating crimes against humanity.

"It is a massacre," said opposition spokesman Mohammed al-Sabri. "This is part of a criminal plan to kill off the protesters, and the president and his relatives are responsible for the bloodshed."

Much of the sniper fire emanated from a building allegedly owned by a regional governor close to President Saleh, further evidence, the opposition said, of the regime's involvement in the killings.

Video footage showed a masked man crouching behind a balustrade on the building's roof.

As the gunfire continued unabated, a group of protesters stormed the rooftop, braving gunfire to capture 10 of the snipers – seven of whom were said to have possessed government identification papers.

One of the suspected snipers was dragged into the streets, where he was beaten and clubbed by protesters, while a second was allegedly flung off the edge of the building.

Although 20 protesters had been killed in scattered incidents before Friday's violence, the scale of President Saleh's retribution proved too grotesque even for some of his longtime allies.

Three resigned in the aftermath, including one cabinet minister, a prominent ruling party figure who condemned the killings as "totally unacceptable" and Nasr Taha Mustafa, the high-profile head of the state news agency, a major source of regime propaganda.

"Nothing can justify the deaths of scores of youths whose only sin was to exercise the freedom guaranteed by Islam and the constitution to demand change," Mr Mustafa said.

Under the urging of Egypt's new military leadership, Mr Saleh had, before Friday, exercised a week of restraint after initially responding to protests that erupted last month with force.

But he appears to have changed course after hardliners in the Bahrain royal family reversed a policy of tolerance this week to shoot dead over a dozen protesters in this island kingdom before calling for and getting military intervention led by Saudi Arabia.

Backed by Saudi Arabia, and believing the West to be absorbed in implementing a no-fly zone in Libya, Mr Saleh apparently calculated that he could get away with a crackdown on the opposition protest movement, analysts said.

He may also have taken heart from only criticism for the United States, which did not repeat calls made in Egypt, Libya and Tunisia for regime change.

Seeing Mr Saleh as both a bulwark against the growing al Qaeda presence in Yemen and a safeguard against instability in a country plagued by two secessionist rebellions, the United States instead urged the protesters to be more "constructive" and engaged with the president.

In an effort to quell the unrest, Mr Saleh offered a raft of economic and political reforms as well as a pledge not to seek a further term at Yemen's next presidential election in 2013.

But Mr Saleh has promised not to contest elections in the past and few in the opposition trust him to honour his word this time.

With dozens of Mr Saleh's one-time allies deserting him, among them the head of a powerful tribal confederation to which the president belongs, the opposition senses that it now has the advantage.

"Sending tanks to the street is a sign that the regime is in a state of panic," said Mr al-Sabri.

"The widespread killing that took place, followed by the declaration of emergency law, demonstrate that the power of the people on the street has become greater than that of the government."

Although President Barack Obama condemned Friday's violence, Washington is also coming under pressure to take a more robust line with its ally and there have been calls for a suspension of US military aid to Yemen.

"Time and again, President Saleh promises he will stop attacks on peaceful protesters and yet the number of dead keeps rising," said Sarah Lee Whitson, the Middle East director for the New York-based Human Rights Watch.

"The United States should back up its words condemning the carnage with action and halt all military aid to Yemen."

Yet Washington remains uneasy about some of the high-profile figures among the protesters, in particular the prominent cleric Abdul Majeed al-Zindani, who has been termed a "Specially Designated Global Terrorist" by the US treasury department.

Mr Zindani, who is accused of once serving as a spiritual mentor to Osama bin Laden and has links with the radical Islamist cleric Anwar al-Awlaki, has attended the protests to call for the president's resignation and the creation of an Islamist state in Yemen.

Although Mr Zindani is influential, there is no evidence that his vision is shared by the bulk of the protesters, many of whom are lawyers and university professors from Yemen's middle class.

Hillary Clinton, the US secretary of state, has also publicly fretted about possible Iranian influence in the protests because Tehran has offered support to Houthi tribesmen waging a rebellion in the north of Yemen.

The Houthis, however, only represent a tiny fraction of the protests, analysts say.

While Washington's muted reaction has done little to endear it to the protester movement that could well form the next government in a key front line state in the war on terror, European diplomats are privately warning that Yemen could sink into a tribal war if Mr Saleh is not ousted soon.

"We are witnessing ever greater fragmentation within Yemen's all-important tribal structure," one western official said. "Allegiances are shifting quickly and Saleh's hold over the patronage system that keeps Yemen from collapsing is visibly slipping."

"It is not in the West's best interests to see this degenerate into a Libya-style conflict that would play into the hands of Islamist militants, which is why it would be better for Saleh to go sooner rather than later."

TheUnhivedMind - March 20, 2011 07:21 PM (GMT)

Yemeni president fires government

Ali Abdullah Saleh has been in power in Yemen for more than three decades

20 March 2011 Last updated at 18:50
http://www.bbc.co.uk/news/world-middle-east-12800887

Yemeni President Ali Abdullah Saleh has fired his cabinet amid continuing protests against his rule.

The announcement came after tens of thousands of people turned out at funerals for dozens of protesters shot dead on Friday.

Earlier, Yemen's ambassador to the UN became the latest official to resign in protest at the killings.

At least 45 people were killed on Friday after gunmen in civilian clothes fired on an anti-government rally.

Despite firing his government, President Saleh has asked the cabinet to remain in place until a new one could be appointed, Yemen's official news agency reported.

President Saleh has faced a string of resignations over Friday's crackdown, which have caused widespread anger in Yemen.
'Ready for more sacrifices'

The resignation by Yemen's ambassador to the UN, Abdullah Alsaidi, followed those of the ministers for human rights and tourism, several senior ruling party officials, the head of the state news agency, and the Yemeni ambassador to Lebanon.

Mourners in the capital, Sanaa, gathered on Sunday in a square near Sanaa University.

The university was at the centre of Friday's crackdown, and bodies of many of the victims were laid out as people paid their respects.

Opposition parties joining the procession said they had changed their position from a demand for political reform to a demand of President Saleh's departure, the Associated Press news agency reported.

"This is an acknowledgment of the failure of the security in repressing the revolution, and the crowds that came out today are a signal of the readiness to put forth more sacrifices," said opposition spokesman Mohammed al-Sabry.

Demonstrations were also reported in several other regions.

President Saleh declared a state of emergency following Friday's shootings, which he denied had been carried out by his security forces.

But opposition accused the president of presiding over a "massacre".

President Saleh has been in power for 32 years. He has recently been challenged by a separatist movement in the south, a branch of al-Qaeda, and a periodic conflict with Shia tribes in the north.

He has promised political reforms and said he will not seek another term in office in 2013, but has also vowed to defend his regime "with every drop of blood".

Insurgent - March 21, 2011 03:48 PM (GMT)

Following in the footsteps of Libya???

Wave of top Yemen officials and generals quit after crackdown

From Mohammed Jamjoom, CNN
March 21, 2011 -- Updated 1358 GMT (2158 HKT)

http://edition.cnn.com/2011/WORLD/meast/03...dex.html?hpt=T2

STORY HIGHLIGHTS

 A government insider expects military clashes
 At least 22 top officials resign in protest at the crackdown
 A general orders his troops to protect the protesters
 President Saleh sacks his Cabinet after officials resign to protest the deaths of anti-government protesters

(CNN) -- Three top generals in Yemen declared their support for anti-government protests Monday as a wave of officials, including the deputy speaker of parliament, announced their resignations.

One of the generals who broke ranks will order his troops to protect protesters demonstrating against the country's longtime president, he told reporters in Yemen. Maj. Gen. Ali Mohsen Al-Ahmar's announcement ramps up the pressure on President Ali Abdullah Saleh, who is seeing cracks in his support after 32 years in power.

At least 22 top officials announced their support for the "peaceful revolution" on Monday, the official said.

They included a provincial governor, the ambassadors to Japan, Syria and the Czech Republic, and top diplomats in the embassies in Washington and Moscow.

The ambassadors to Pakistan, Qatar, Oman, Spain and the consul general in Dubai announced their resignations together later on Monday. The envoys to China, Saudi Arabia, Kuwait and Algeria also quit, according to a government official who is not authorized to speak to the media and asked not to be named.

But Saleh is not showing any signs of resigning, the source said.

"I'm bracing myself for military clashes," the official said.

TheUnhivedMind - March 21, 2011 06:26 PM (GMT)

WikiLeaks cable links defecting Yemeni general to smuggling rackets

US diplomatic cables reveal powerful army chief behind moves to oust president is seen as unwelcome successor to Saleh

Mark Rice-Oxley
guardian.co.uk, Monday 21 March 2011 13.53 GMT
http://www.guardian.co.uk/world/2011/mar/2...neral-smuggling

The Yemeni general who has thrown his weight behind moves to oust President Ali Abdullah Saleh is a powerful and shadowy figure who has amassed a fortune in arms and fuel smuggling rackets, according to US diplomatic cables released by WikiLeaks.

Major General Ali Mohsen al-Ahmar "is generally perceived to be the second most powerful man in Yemen", but leans closer to radical political Islam than Saleh, according to a cable sent by Thomas Krajeski in 2005 when he was the US ambassador in Sana'a.

"Ali Mohsen's questionable dealings with terrorists and extremists, however, would make his accession unwelcome to the US and others in the international community," Krajeski wrote. "He is known to have Salafi leanings and to support a more radical Islamic political agenda than Saleh. He has powerful Wahhabi supporters in Saudi Arabia and has reportedly aided the [Saudis] in establishing Wahhabi institutions in northern Yemen. He is also believed to have been behind the formation of the Aden-Abyan army, and is a close associate of noted arms dealer Faris Manna."

For years, he acted as Saleh's "iron fist", building a reputation at home that lies somewhere between fear and revulsion, according to Krajeski.

"Ali Mohsen's name is mentioned in hushed tones among most Yemenis, and he rarely appears in public. Those that know him say he is charming and gregarious. As commander of the north-east region and the first armoured division, Ali Mohsen acts as Saleh's iron fist."

The cable said the general had little support from a public which viewed him as cynical and self-interested. The ambassador said that at the time the general was more likely to try to play kingmaker than take the top job for himself.

"Ali Mohsen would likely face domestic as well as international opposition if he sought the presidency," he said. "Mohsen's reputation may have been damaged in some circles by his role in the al-Houthi rebellions," he added, referring to the suppression of an uprising by Shia Zaidis in the north of the country. "Although ultimately successful in quashing the insurgency, the campaign resulted in hundreds of fatalities, months of clashes, and earned the enmity of the northern tribes and traditional Zaydis."

Krajeski said the general had enriched himself through numerous smuggling rackets. "A major beneficiary of diesel smuggling in recent years, he also appears to have amassed a fortune in the smuggling of arms, food staples and consumer products."

In another 2005 cable, a well-placed Yemeni insider told the ambassador that Ali Mohsen was involved in smuggling diesel, "using military vehicles and ... staff to move fuel to markets in Yemen and Saudi Arabia".

TheUnhivedMind - March 21, 2011 06:54 PM (GMT)

Yemen's Saleh Faces Revolt From Within as Generals Defect

By Mohammed Hatem and Vivian Salama - Mar 21, 2011
http://www.bloomberg.com/news/2011-03-20/y...defections.html

Yemeni President Ali Abdullah Saleh faced a growing internal revolt as some army leaders joined ministers and diplomats in abandoning his regime three days after it cracked down on protesters, killing dozens.

Military officers including Ali Muhsin al-Ahmar, commander of the first armored division, and Mohammed Ali Muhssein, commander of the eastern region, have switched sides and vowed to support protesters. Their move was a result of last week's killings, said Mohammed al-Sabri, an opposition leader. Tanks and military vehicles belonging to the Yemeni Republican Guard, headed by Saleh's son Ahmed, were deployed around the presidential palace today.

The decision of Muhssein and other senior commanders to join anti-government protesters "was very significant," Gregory Johnsen, a Yemeni expert with Princeton University, said by telephone from Cairo today. "This is really moving in the direction that would lead to the fall of the regime. Muhssein is trying to get ahead of the curve, taking a page out of what's happening in Egypt."

Army units took up positions around key government buildings and bank offices in the capital, Sana'a, without intervening against protesters. Some soldiers have joined with the demonstrators in Taghyeer Square, the site of the March 18 killing of at least 46 people when police and pro-regime gunmen shot at a crowd of tens of thousands and snipers opened fire from rooftops. French Foreign Minister Alain Juppe said today that Saleh's exit is "becoming unavoidable."
'Coup Plots'

The country's national defense council, chaired by Saleh, met to discuss measures to restore stability. Defense Minister Mohammad Nasser Ali said on state television that opposition leaders had hijacked the will of the people and that no "coup against democracy" would be allowed.

Al-Ahmar, whose military command includes the northwestern region, said the army was united and "sides with the peaceful demands of the people." Speaking in an interview with Al Arabiya television, he said the defense minister had been "forced" to make his earlier comments by "the leadership."

Saleh, addressing a group of religious figures, young people and members from the provincial councils, said today that those calling for "chaos, violence, hatred and vandalism" are the minority and that most people support the constitutional legitimacy of his government, state-run Saba reported today.
Ally Against al-Qaeda

The violence, much of it caught on film and broadcast around the world, was the worst seen in two months of protests against Saleh, a U.S. ally against al-Qaeda, and has intensified opposition efforts to oust him. The crackdown prompted three ministers, including those responsible for human rights and tourism, dozens of members of parliament and at least three diplomats to quit Saleh's regime. Mohammed al-Shadadi, the deputy speaker of parliament, also resigned.

The defections are "a sign that the revolution has won," al-Sabri, a member of the opposition's main six-party coalition, said by telephone today. He ruled out any risk of the army seizing power, and said protesters will stay on the streets "till the revolution achieves its objectives in having a modern and civil state governed by law and order."

Saleh, who said the official security forces weren't responsible for the massacre, yesterday sacked his Cabinet, and prosecutors today issued 10 arrest warrants in connection with the deaths.

Sheikh Sadek Al-Hashid, the head of Yemen's most influential and second-biggest tribe, the Hashid, said today they support the popular revolt against Saleh's regime, according to his assistant Abdulqawi Al-Kaisi.
'Very, Very Bloody'

The course of events may largely depend on the loyalty of people in the central security forces and the republican guard, said Johnsen. "If President Saleh steps down, it'll all go over peacefully," he said. "If he attempts to fight this then it could get very, very bloody."

Yemen, the Arab world's poorest nation, has received U.S. backing to fight al-Qaeda in the Arabian Peninsula, the group responsible for sending two parcel bombs to U.S. synagogues in October and the attempted bombing of a Detroit-bound plane on Christmas Day 2009.

Secretary of State Hillary Clinton, on a visit to Yemen in January, said that Yemen-based terrorists are an "urgent concern" for the U.S. Yemen, which gets about $300 million a year in U.S. security and humanitarian assistance, stepped up operations against al-Qaeda after the attempted Detroit attack, including air strikes targeting the group's camps.

The country is also struggling to quell two internal revolts, and its domestic conflicts have in the past entangled Saudi Arabia, the world's largest oil exporter.
Saudi Intervention

In 2009, Saudi Arabia got drawn into the struggle between Yemen's Shiite Muslim Houthi rebels and the government, after the rebels killed a Saudi soldier during a cross-border incursion. Yemen's government accused the Shiite government of Iran of arming the Houthis.

Saudi Arabia sent troops into another neighbor, Bahrain, last week to help local Sunni rulers repress Shiite-led protests.

Foreign Policy magazine and the Fund for Peace ranked Yemen 15th of 60 countries on their 2010 Failed States Index, saying only Afghanistan, Iraq and Pakistan are in worse shape among nations in Asia and the Middle East.

To contact the reporter on this story: Mohammed Hatem in Sana'a at mhatem1@bloomberg.net.

To contact the editor responsible for this story: Andrew J. Barden at barden@bloomberg.net

TheUnhivedMind - March 21, 2011 07:00 PM (GMT)

Top Yemeni general, Ali Mohsen, backs opposition

Dozens of army officers pledged their allegiance to the revolution in Sanaa

21 March 2011 Last updated at 16:41
http://www.bbc.co.uk/news/world-middle-east-12804552

Key Yemeni General Ali Mohsen al-Ahmar, long close to President Ali Abdullah Saleh, says he is backing the protest movement against the regime.

Two other senior army commanders are also reported to have resigned.

President Saleh said he was "holding out" and the National Defence Council said it would block any "coup".

Tanks were deployed in the capital, Sanaa, apparently to defend key points including the presidential palace, defence ministry and central bank.

BBC security correspondent Frank Gardner says that one by one, the pillars of President Saleh's power are being knocked away.

The military commanders who announced their resignations are from President Saleh's Hashid tribe.

Sadiq al-Ahmar, head of the Hashid tribal federation, told al-Jazeera that it was time for Mr Saleh to make a "quiet exit".

One of the tribe's leaders said the Hashid were rallying behind Gen Ahmar as a possible replacement for President Saleh, the Associated Press reported.

Meanwhile, Yemen's foreign minister was sent to Saudi Arabia with a message from President Saleh to King Abdullah, the state news agency said. The contents of the message were not reported.

'Youth revolution'

Gen Ahmar is the commanding officer of a division of the army which has sent units to a main square in the capital, Sanaa, where protests have taken place.

"The crisis is getting more complicated and it's pushing the country towards violence and civil war," the general - who commands an armoured infantry division - said in a statement broadcast by al-Jazeera television.

"According to what I'm feeling, and according to the feelings of my partner commanders and soldiers... I announce our support and our peaceful backing to the youth revolution. We are going to fulfil our duties in preserving security and stability."

Dozens of officers of various ranks lined up in central Sanaa to pledge their allegiance to the revolution.

The deputy speaker of parliament, the governor of the southern province of Aden, and a number of ambassadors were also reported to have resigned in protest against the violent suppression of anti-government demonstrations.

But President Saleh was defiant. "We're still here," he was quoted as saying. "The great majority of the Yemeni people are with security, stability and constitutional law.

"Those who are calling for chaos, violence, hate and sabotage are only a tiny minority."

A source close to Mr Saleh told the BBC that the president was not stepping down, and that he would call elections later this year.

The source claimed that if Mr Saleh left now, Yemen would descend into inter-tribal fighting within hours, and dismissed Gen Ahmar as someone who had never been close to the president.

The National Defence Council, which includes the military command and President Saleh, indicated in a statement they would oppose any effort to topple President Saleh.

"We will not allow under any circumstances an attempt at a coup against democracy and constitutional legitimacy, or violation of the security of the nation and citizens," the statement said, according to Reuters news agency.

"The armed forces will stay faithful to the oath they gave before God, the nation and political leadership under the brother President Ali Abdullah Saleh."

On Sunday, President Saleh fired his entire cabinet in apparent response to protests against his rule. He asked them to stay in place in a caretaker capacity.
'Massacre'

The president has faced a number of resignations by ministers and officials since the killing of at least 45 people at an anti-government demonstration on Friday.

Gunmen in civilian clothes fired on the rally in the capital's central square, in what the opposition called a massacre.

The killings prompted tens of thousands of people to turn out at the funerals of the victims.

President Saleh declared a national state of emergency but denied his forces were behind the shooting.

Yemen is one of a number of countries in the region that have seen unrest since the presidents of Egypt and Tunisia were ousted in popular revolts.

The president has been in power for 32 years, facing a separatist movement in the south, a branch of al-Qaeda, and a periodic conflict with Shia tribes in the north.

He has said he will not seek another term in office in 2013, but has vowed to defend his regime "with every drop of blood".

TheUnhivedMind - March 21, 2011 10:51 PM (GMT)

اليمن
YEMEN

© Ameen Alghabri
Gabreez Studioz
www.gabreez.com

Masonic Law of Five

TheUnhivedMind - March 21, 2011 10:51 PM (GMT)

[dohtml]<object width="640" height="390"><param name="movie" value="http://www.youtube.com/v/emaVAEGDduk&hl=en_US&feature=player_embedded&version=3"></param><param name="allowFullScreen" value="true"></param><param name="allowScriptAccess" value="always"></param><embed src="http://www.youtube.com/v/emaVAEGDduk&hl=en_US&feature=player_embedded&version=3" type="application/x-shockwave-flash" allowfullscreen="true" allowScriptAccess="always" width="640" height="390"></embed></object>[/dohtml]

TheUnhivedMind - March 21, 2011 10:53 PM (GMT)

[dohtml]<object width="640" height="390"><param name="movie" value="http://www.youtube.com/v/cIA62a3zL8s&hl=en_US&feature=player_embedded&version=3"></param><param name="allowFullScreen" value="true"></param><param name="allowScriptAccess" value="always"></param><embed src="http://www.youtube.com/v/cIA62a3zL8s&hl=en_US&feature=player_embedded&version=3" type="application/x-shockwave-flash" allowfullscreen="true" allowScriptAccess="always" width="640" height="390"></embed></object>[/dohtml]

TheUnhivedMind - March 21, 2011 10:54 PM (GMT)

TheUnhivedMind - March 21, 2011 11:12 PM (GMT)

[dohtml]<object width="640" height="390"><param name="movie" value="http://www.youtube.com/v/22S2TNMf8v4&hl=en_US&feature=player_embedded&version=3"></param><param name="allowFullScreen" value="true"></param><param name="allowScriptAccess" value="always"></param><embed src="http://www.youtube.com/v/22S2TNMf8v4&hl=en_US&feature=player_embedded&version=3" type="application/x-shockwave-flash" allowfullscreen="true" allowScriptAccess="always" width="640" height="390"></embed></object>[/dohtml]

TheUnhivedMind - March 22, 2011 04:20 PM (GMT)

Yemen President Ali Abdullah Saleh warns of coup

President Saleh remains defiant in the face of protests and resignations

22 March 2011 Last updated at 13:49
http://www.bbc.co.uk/news/world-middle-east-12819003

Yemeni President Ali Abdullah Saleh has said there could be a civil war in Yemen because of attempts to stage what he called a coup against his rule.

"Those who want to climb up to power through coups should know that this is out of the question. The homeland will not be stable, there will be a civil war, a bloody war," he said.

Army officers expressed their support for pro-democracy protesters on Monday.

Armoured vehicles from both sides are on the streets.

Two soldiers reportedly died on Tuesday in clashes between the army and the elite Republican Guard in the south-eastern city of Mukalla.

Key Yemeni General Ali Mohsen al-Ahmar, long close to President Saleh, on Monday said he was backing the protesters.

Two other senior army commanders were also reported to have resigned.

There have been weeks of anti-government protests in Yemen.

President Saleh's authority has been further undermined by a string of other resignations since some 50 protesters were shot dead at a demonstration in the capital, Sanaa, on Friday.

The president has remained defiant in the face of protests, with a source close to him telling the BBC on Monday that the president would not stand down - and would call elections later in the year.

On Sunday, he fired his entire cabinet in apparent response to protests against his rule. He asked them to stay in place in a caretaker capacity.

Yemen is one of a number of countries in the region that have seen unrest since the presidents of Egypt and Tunisia were ousted in popular revolts.

The president has been in power for 32 years, facing a separatist movement in the south, a branch of al-Qaeda, and a periodic conflict with Shia tribes in the north.

He has said he will not seek another term in office in 2013, but has vowed to defend his regime "with every drop of blood".

In Moscow on Tuesday, US Defence Secretary Robert Gates said he was concerned about instability in Yemen and feared political unrest in the country could distract from efforts to fight Yemen-based al-Qaeda in the Arabian Peninsula, which the US considers a terror group.

But Mr Gates declined to say whether the US thought President Saleh should step down from power.

"I don't think it's my place to talk about internal affairs in Yemen," he was quoted as saying by Reuters news agency.

TheUnhivedMind - March 23, 2011 04:57 PM (GMT)

Yemen MPs pass emergency laws to quash uprising

Ruling party in Sana'a assembly backs President Saleh's move to suspend constitution, ban protests and allow tougher powers of arrest

guardian.co.uk, Wednesday 23 March 2011 12.27 GMT
http://www.guardian.co.uk/world/2011/mar/2...-emergency-laws

Yemen's parliament has enacted sweeping emergency laws after the embattled president asked for new powers of arrest, detention and censorship to quash a popular uprising demanding he step down.

The move significantly escalates the showdown between US-backed leader Ali Abdullah Saleh and the movement that has unified military commanders, religious leaders and protesting youth behind demands that he quit immediately.

The law suspends the constitution, allows media censorship, bans street protests and gives security forces 30 days of far-reaching powers to arrest and detain suspects.

Its adoption was a virtual certainty because Saleh's ruling party dominates the 301-seat legislature.

The accelerating conflict has raised fears that Yemen could be pushed into even greater instability. Rival factions of the military have deployed tanks in the capital, Sana'a – with units commanded by Saleh's son protecting the president's palace, and units loyal to a top dissident commander protecting the protesters.

Saleh, who has worked closely with a US offensive against the Yemeni branch of al-Qaida, has already dramatically stepped up the crackdown on anti-government demonstrators, with his security forces shooting dead more than 40 protesters on Friday in Sana'a.

On Tuesday he offered to quit by the year's end, but the opposition rejected his offer. He also warned of civil war following the defection of senior army commanders to the opposition.

Tribal leaders, diplomats, politicians, provincial governors and newspaper editors have also joined the opposition.

Saleh, who has ruled Yemen for 32 years, has also called for a dialogue with the leaders of the youth movements leading the protests at a central Sana'a square which has become the movement's centre.

The defection on Monday of Major-General Ali Mohsen al-Ahmar, a high-level regime insider who commands the army's powerful 1st armoured division, has been seen by many as a major turning point towards a potentially rapid end for Saleh.

Clashes broke out late on Monday between Saleh's republican guard and dissident army units in the far east of the country. On Tuesday, republican guard tanks surrounded an important air base in the western Red Sea coastal city of Hodeida after its commander, Colonel Ahmed al-Sanhani, a member of Saleh's own clan, defected to the opposition.

The turmoil rang alarm bells in Washington. The US defence secretary, Robert Gates, said during a trip to Russia that "instability and diversion of attention" from dealing with al-Qaida was a "primary concern about the situation". He refused to discuss whether Saleh should step down.

TheUnhivedMind - March 23, 2011 04:58 PM (GMT)

TheUnhivedMind - March 23, 2011 04:59 PM (GMT)

[dohtml]<object style="height: 390px; width: 640px"><param name="movie" value="http://www.youtube.com/v/LJj1AKa11r8?version=3"><param name="allowFullScreen" value="true"><param name="allowScriptAccess" value="always"><embed src="http://www.youtube.com/v/LJj1AKa11r8?version=3" type="application/x-shockwave-flash" allowfullscreen="true" allowScriptAccess="always" width="640" height="390"></object>[/dohtml]

TheUnhivedMind - March 25, 2011 02:11 AM (GMT)

FLEE YEMEN, BRITONS TOLD

Friday March 25,2011
http://express.co.uk/posts/view/236613/Fle...en-Britons-told

BRITONS were urged to leave Yemen “without delay” yesterday or face being stranded as the country sank into anarchy.

Foreign Secretary William Hague told MPs security on the streets had deteriorated rapidly.

With marches planned for later today in the capital Sana’a, he said a place for every Briton could not be guaranteed if a military evacuation was needed.

Staff at the British embassy in Yemen were being withdrawn with “immediate effect”.

Mr Hague said: “On March 12 we advised all British nationals to leave Yemen as soon as they could. Since the situation has continued to deteriorate since then, I want to make absolutely clear today that all British nationals remaining in Yemen should leave without delay.”

More than 50 protesters were killed in clashes in Sana’a last Friday. Mr Hague’s alert and the contingency plan revealed the Government is anxious to avoid being accused of a delay in evacuating British citizens as it was at the start of the Libya crisis.

TheUnhivedMind - March 26, 2011 02:20 AM (GMT)

Yemen tense as capital Sanaa sees huge rival rallies

A BBC correspondent, who is not being named for security reasons, said the atmosphere was tense and anxious in the capital

25 March 2011 Last updated at 13:31
http://www.bbc.co.uk/news/world-middle-east-12857700

Tens of thousands of people are attending rival mass rallies in Yemen's capital Sanaa, a week after some 50 people were shot dead at a protest.

Protesters predicted their biggest rally yet to demand the resignation of President Ali Abdullah Saleh.

Mr Saleh told a rally of his own supporters he was ready to hand over power, but only to "safe hands".

Soldiers fired in the air to hold back Saleh loyalists when they tried to march on the opposition rally.

In his speech, the president - who has been in office for more than three decades - condemned bloodshed but also urged his supporters to "stand firm".

He earlier denied that government forces had played any part in the shooting of demonstrators last week.

Amnesty International has warned the government against any further use of "deadly force", saying: "The government cannot just shoot its way out of this crisis."

Yemen, the Arab world's most impoverished nation, is a key ally in the US-led fight against al-Qaeda, which has established a strong presence there.

Two recent bomb plots against US targets - two American cargo planes in October and a Detroit-bound airliner in December 2009 - originated in Yemen.
Confrontation fears

Both the government and opposition have set up checkpoints in Sanaa and the streets are full of armed men.

There is real fear of a new confrontation, a BBC correspondent reports from the city.

According to an AFP news agency report, Friday's crowds number in the hundreds of thousands.

President Saleh, dressed in a smart suit and sunglasses, took the microphone before a huge crowd.

"We don't want power but we need to hand power over to safe hands, not to sick, resentful or corrupt hands," he said.

"We are against firing a single bullet and when we give concessions, this is to ensure there is no bloodshed," he added.

"We will remain steadfast and challenge them with all power we have."

Some Saleh loyalists were carrying guns and waving traditional Yemeni daggers at Friday's rally, Reuters news agency reports.

Others rode motorbikes with large posters of Mr Saleh affixed to them, waving flags and playing patriotic music.

"No to chaos, yes to security and stability," banners read.

Mr Saleh has said the unrest risks taking Yemen into civil war. Several senior officials have left his side to go to the opposition.
'This butcher'

Anti-government protesters have been demonstrating for more than a month

In another part of the city, on a square near the university where protesters have been camped out since February, tens of thousands gathered for an anti-Saleh demonstration.

An Associated Press news agency report estimated that the crowd there was bigger than the rally in support of the president, despite attempts by the authorities to restrict access to the city centre.

Demonstrators chanted slogans calling for Mr Saleh's removal and waved red cards emblazoned with the word "leave".

Affrah, a protester and blogger in Sanaa, told the BBC the president could step aside earlier if he chose: "He keeps repeating that violence will happen, chaos will happen. It's really not going to happen, he's the one who will start it."

She said she was determined to carry on fighting for democracy even though she had received threats.

"Someone... sent me a [Facebook] message giving me private details about my mother, my sister and telling me that apparently I don't want to live in security.

"Nevertheless, I am continuing. We deserve a better life than this, we deserve a better life full of democracy and freedom and people speaking their minds without any kind of fear or any kind of limitation."

Student Abdullah Jabali, 33, told Reuters at Friday's rally that he did not believe Mr Saleh's promises to stand down within a year.

"I came here to get rid of this butcher because he killed our comrades," he said.

On Wednesday, Yemen's parliament passed sweeping emergency laws giving the security forces far-reaching powers to detain suspects and prevent demonstrations.

Amnesty International responded on Friday by saying: "After the horrific killing of dozens of protesters last Friday, it is incredibly disturbing that Yemen's leaders have given the security forces more powers through a new emergency law instead of reining them in."

Yemen is one of a number of countries in the region that have seen unrest since the presidents of Egypt and Tunisia were ousted in popular revolts.

TheUnhivedMind - March 26, 2011 02:21 AM (GMT)

Japan investigation into nuclear plant radiation leak

Two nuclear plant workers remain in hospital

25 March 2011 Last updated at 11:15
http://www.bbc.co.uk/news/world-asia-pacific-12859684

An investigation is under way in Japan to establish the source of a radiation leak at the quake-hit nuclear plant, which left two workers in hospital.

The plant's operator says dangerously high radiation levels recorded in water at one reactor raise the possibility its core has been damaged.

Prime Minister Naoto Kan said the situation was "very unpredictable".

It is two weeks since the earthquake and tsunami hit Japan's north-east. The official death toll has passed 10,000.

More than 17,440 people are missing.

Hundreds of thousands of people have been made homeless; an estimated 250,000 people are living in emergency shelters. Food, water and fuel are in short supply.

The Japanese government has put the rebuilding cost at $309bn (£191.8bn).
Safety measures

In a televised address, Prime Minister Kan said: "The current situation is still very unpredictable. We're working to stop the situation from worsening. We need to continue to be extremely vigilant."

He also thanked the workers, firefighters and Self-Defence Forces for "risking their lives" to try to cool the reactors at the Fukushima Daiichi plant.

Japan's chief cabinet secretary Yukio Edano has said a rigorous inquiry is under way to establish the cause of a leak at the plant, after tests showed water in reactor 3 had radiation levels 10,000 times higher than normal.

Japan's Nuclear Safety Agency has reiterated its position that it believes the reactor may have been damaged but it is going no further than that, says the BBC's Mark Worthington in Tokyo.

The agency has denied any suggestion that the reactor core may have cracked, Kyodo news agency reports.

The two affected workers, who remain in hospital, had reportedly not been wearing the correct protective boots and had ignored a radiation alarm at the plant.

A revision of safety measures has been ordered.

The government has asked people still living within 20-30km (12-18 miles) of the nuclear facility to leave voluntarily. Until now, residents in the zone had been advised to stay indoors.

"It is desirable that they voluntarily evacuate. I cannot rule out the possibility that the government will issue an evacuation order for this area if the radiation level goes up further," Mr Edano told a news conference.

Hundreds of thousands of residents were evacuated from within a 20km radius of the plant in the days after its vital cooling systems were knocked out by the tsunami.

Work is continuing at the stricken plant to restart the cooling equipment at the six reactors to avoid a meltdown.

In another development, two Japanese tourists who arrived in China on a flight from Tokyo are being treated in hospital for high radiation levels.

It remains unclear how the two may have become contaminated as neither traveller is reported to have been within 240km of the Fukushima plant, says our correspondent.

Meanwhile, Chinese news agency, Xinhua, has reported that abnormal radiation levels have been detected on a ship arriving from Japan to Xiamen port in Fujian province.
Food fears

Japan has banned shipments of foodstuffs grown in several prefectures around the damaged nuclear plant.

People in Fukushima prefecture have been told not to eat 11 types of green leafy vegetables because of contamination worries.

Prime Minister Kan apologised to the affected farmers and business owners, saying he recognised the "great damage" to their livelihoods".

Importers of Japanese products are finding low levels of radiation in some food stuffs, however the amounts found do not pose a health hazard.

Singapore's Agri-Food and Veterinary Authority said it had found small levels of contamination in Japanese mustard, parsley and two other plants imported from the prefectures of Tochigi, Ibaraki, Chiba and Ehime.

China, Singapore, Hong Kong, and other Asian importers have already placed bans on some imports of vegetables, seafood and milk products.

Australia, the European Union, the United States and Russia have followed suit.

The Fukushima plant is 250km north-east of the capital, Tokyo.

Radioactive iodine was detected in Tokyo's water supply earlier this week. Levels have since fallen, but remain high in other areas of northern Japan.

TheUnhivedMind - March 27, 2011 12:26 AM (GMT)

Yemen's President Saleh 'negotiating' departure

Protests have been going on in the capital and other elsewhere for weeks

26 March 2011 Last updated at 13:48
http://www.bbc.co.uk/news/world-middle-east-12870584

Agreement is close on a transfer of power from Yemen's veteran President, Ali Abdullah Saleh, a government minister says.

After six weeks of protests, Mr Saleh has said he is willing to step down this year.

But the demonstrators want him to go immediately.

This is the first time the government has confirmed that President Saleh is negotiating the terms of his departure, observers say.

They add that amid the growing pressure, many see the statement by Foreign Minister Abubakr al-Qirbi - a close ally of the president - as a clear sign that Mr Saleh's resignation is now a matter of time.

It comes a day after tens of thousands people attended rival mass rallies in the capital Sanaa.

Last week some 50 people were shot dead at an anti-government protest.

In recent weeks, Mr Saleh's power base has been hit by top military figures and tribal leaders joining the opposition.
'Serious dialogue'

"I hope it will be today, before tomorrow," Mr Qirbi told Reuters news agency.

He said he was optimistic the time frame for a transfer of power could be negotiated.

"President Saleh is willing to look at all possibilities, as long as there are really serious commitments by the JMP (opposition) to come and initiate a serious dialogue between them and the ruling party," he said.

On Friday, Mr Saleh told a rally of his own supporters he was ready to hand over power, but only to "safe hands".

A correspondent for the BBC in Yemen says there are, however, many other obstacles that need to be overcome for the crisis to be resolved - the biggest being the actual structure of the power transfer.

Another big issue is the future of Mr Saleh's relatives, some of whom hold powerful government posts, our correspondent says.

Two relatives who are particularly unpopular with the protesters are:
the president's son Ahmed, who is in charge of the Republican Guard his nephew and son-in-law Yahia Saleh, who heads the security forces.

Mr Saleh's ruling party, General People's Congress, said on Saturday that he should serve out his term until 2013, AFP news agency reported.

Yemen, the Arab world's most impoverished nation, is a key ally in the US-led fight against al-Qaeda, which has established a strong presence there.

Two recent bomb plots against US targets - two American cargo planes in October and a Detroit-bound airliner in December 2009 - originated in Yemen.

TheUnhivedMind - April 1, 2011 04:45 PM (GMT)

BRITONS ARE URGED TO LEAVE YEMEN

There are fears mass protests planned in Yemen today could turn violent

Friday April 1,2011
By Daily Express Reporter
http://express.co.uk/posts/view/238048/Bri...-to-leave-Yemen

THE Foreign Office last night warned British nationals to leave Yemen before mass protests planned for today, which it fears could turn violent.

Today's pro-democracy demonstrations are the latest in a series demanding that Yemen's President Ali Abdullah Saleh stands down.

He has agreed to resign by January 2012, but the opposition and protesters want him to leave immediately.

Hundreds of thousands of protesters took to the streets of Yemeni cities on Wednesday.

More than 50 protesters were killed in the capital Sanaa earlier this month when government soldiers opened fire. The protests have grown since the first demonstrations pushing for the President's resignation first erupted in January.

Yesterday the Foreign Office also warned people not to travel to Yemen.

A spokesman said: "In light of the rapid deterioration in the security situation in Yemen and likely protests on April 1, which might result in violent clashes, we strongly urge all British nationals to leave the country now while commercial airlines are still flying."

President Saleh has been in power for 33 years. He has been a key ally for Britain and America in their anti-terror operations against Al Qaeda in the Arabian peninsula, who are based in Yemen.

TheUnhivedMind - April 4, 2011 05:51 PM (GMT)

Yemen troops kill protesters in Taiz

Soldiers use live ammunition on protesters demanding removal of President Saleh, killing six and wounding more than 30

guardian.co.uk, Monday 4 April 2011 12.57 BST
http://www.guardian.co.uk/world/2011/apr/0...protesters-taiz

Yemeni troops have opened fire on crowds of protesters demanding the removal of President Ali Abdullah Saleh, killing six and wounding more than 30 in the second day of clashes in Taiz, witnesses and medical officials said.

The bloodshed in the southern city stoked the uprising that has lasted more than a month against Saleh's 32-year rule. The opposition has held continual protest camps in main squares of cities around Yemen, and on Monday new demonstrations in solidarity with the Taiz protesters erupted in several places.

The violence began when thousands of protesters marched through Taiz toward Freedom Square, where demonstrators have been camped out. As the march passed the governor's headquarters, troops stationed there blocked the procession, and clashes broke out, with some protesters throwing stones, witnesses said.

Troops on nearby rooftops opened fire with live ammunition on the crowd. The marchers then besieged the governor's headquarters, said Bushra al-Maqtara, an opposition activist in Taiz, and other witnesses.

At least six protesters were killed and more than 30 wounded, some with gunshots to the head and chest, said Zakariya Abdul-Qader, a doctor at a clinic set up by protesters in Freedom Square. Other doctors at the clinic confirmed the figure.

The military has clamped down on the city of nearly half a million, about 120 miles south of the capital, Sana'a. For a second day, tanks and armoured vehicles blocked entrances to the city to prevent outsiders from joining the protests. They also surrounded Freedom Square, containing the thousands in the protest camp and arresting anyone who tried to leave.

Saleh's top security official in Taiz, Abdullah Qiran, is accused by demonstrators of orchestrating some of the most brutal crackdowns, particularly in the southern port town of Aden, where he was stationed until his transfer several weeks ago.

Marches in solidarity with the Taiz protesters erupted in the cities of Mukalla, in the east, and Hodeida, on Yemen's western Red Sea coast. In Hodeida, protesters tried to march on a presidential palace in the city but were blocked by security forces, who opened fire with teargas and live ammunition, said activist Abdel-Hafiz al-Abbasi. He said three people were wounded.

TheUnhivedMind - April 6, 2011 05:34 PM (GMT)

Gulf states launch bid to mediate in Yemen crisis

http://www.arabtimesonline.com/NewsDetails...is/Default.aspx

ABU DHABI, April 4, (Agencies): Gulf Arab states have invited Yemeni government and opposition representatives to talks in Saudi Arabia, Kuwait's foreign minister said on Monday, in a bid to end the crisis after weeks of anti-government protest.
Sheikh Mohammad al-Salem al-Sabah told Reuters the offer was extended after a meeting of Gulf Cooperation Council (GCC) foreign ministers in the Saudi capital, Riyadh, on Sunday.
"After Riyadh, on the GCC level, we have decided to invite both the (Yemen) government and opposition representatives to Riyadh to resolve the impasse on some specific issues," he said, declining to provide further details.
"The GCC is talking to both sides but no date has been set."
Police and armed men in civilian clothes opened fire on anti-government demonstrators in the Yemeni cities of Taiz and Hudaida on Monday, as a drive to end President Ali Abdullah Saleh's 32-year rule gathered pace.
The Gulf Cooperation Council is a political and economic bloc made up of Saudi Arabia, Kuwait, United Arab Emirates, Qatar, Oman and Bahrain.
The GCC ministers voiced concern on Sunday over the "deterioration of the security situation and the division in Yemen" and called for a dialogue.
Meanwhile, the US government is dropping its support for Yemen's embattled president and is helping negotiate his departure, the New York Times reported Sunday, citing US and Yemeni officials.
Washington has long supported President Ali Abdullah Saleh, who has been in power since 1978, and the administration of President Barack Obama has largely refrained from criticizing him in public.
But US officials have told allies that they see Saleh's position as untenable due to the widespread protests, and believe he should leave office.

Negotiations over Saleh's departure began more than a week ago, the newspaper reports.
The talks center on a proposal for Saleh to surrender power to a provisional government under his vice-president until there can be new elections. That principle "is not in dispute," an unnamed Yemeni official told the US newspaper, but the timing has to be worked out.
Washington's goal is for the US conterterrorism operation in Yemen to remain unaffected, the Times reported.
The ongoing clashes between Saleh and the protesters "has had a direct adverse impact on the security situation throughout the country," an unnamed US official told the Times.
"Groups of various stripes — al-Qaeda, Houthis, tribal elements, and secessionists — are exploiting the current political turbulence and emerging fissures within the military and security services for their own gain,," the official told the newspaper.
"Until President Saleh is able to resolve the current political impasse by announcing how and when he will follow through on his earlier commitment to take tangible steps to meet opposition demands, the security situation in Yemen is at risk of further deterioration," the US official said.
In Sanaa, Yemeni security forces shot dead 17 anti-regime demonstrators and wounded scores more on Monday, on the second day of lethal clashes in Taez, south of the capital, medics said.
"The death toll has gone up to 17, in addition to dozens wounded," said Sadeq al-Shujaa, head of a makeshift field hospital at a square in central Taez, updating an earlier casualty toll.
The bloodshed came as demonstrators staged a march on the governorate headquarters in the city about 200 kilometres (125 miles) from the capital to demand the ouster of Yemen's embattled President Saleh.
Witnesses said the demonstrators stormed the courtyard of the governorate and that plainclothes gunmen and rooftop snipers opened fire in an attempt to push them back.
The bloodshed, a day after another protester was shot dead in Taez, sent the death toll to more than 100 in a crackdown on protests in the impoverished Arabian Peninsula state since late January.
In the western city of Hudaydah, witnesses said dozens of people were wounded by police gunfire and rocks in clashes on Monday, while hundreds of others needed treatment for tear-gas inhalation.
Thirteen people were shot and wounded in Hudaydah late on Sunday, witnesses said, as police clashed with thousands of demonstrators marching on the Red Sea city's main local government building.
Thirteen were wounded by live bullets, another 30 from injuries sustained by batons and stones, and 400 others suffering tear-gas inhalation, according to witness accounts.
The demonstrations in Taez and Hudaydah, 150 kilometres (100 miles) from Sanaa, form part of a renewed spurt of protests for Saleh to end his three-decade rule.
The Common Forum, an opposition coalition, on Saturday called on Saleh to hand power to Vice-President Abdrabuh Mansur Hadi in a new "vision for a peaceful and secure transition of power".
But the embattled president, a key US ally in Washington's war on al-Qaeda, told the opposition to end protests and remove roadblocks, offering a "peaceful transition of power through constitutional ways".
Youths staging sit-in protests, however, said they would accept nothing short of an end to Saleh's autocratic rule along with the departure of top figures in his regime.
Mustafa al-Sabri, a spokesman for a coalition of opposition parties, said US and European diplomats who had been in contacts with Saleh had asked the opposition for their "vision" for a transition. In response, the opposition over the weekend gave the Americans a proposal that Saleh step down and hand his powers to his vice president, who would then organize a process for rewriting the constitution and holding new elections, al-Sabri said.
But the 65-year-old president has dug in against the idea.
On Sunday, Saleh took a tough line, saying no negotiations could be held without a "halt to all protests and the mutiny by some units in the military."
"We are prepared to explore the peaceful transfer of authority in the framework of the constitution. But arm-twisting will absolutely not work," he said.
He spoke Monday to a gathering of pro-government tribesmen, vowing, "We are standing firm, and we will defend constitutional legitimacy by all means. We will stand as firm as mountains and will remain faithful to the people."

Meanwhile, the White House Monday warned that al-Qaeda could take advantage of a power vacuum in Yemen and said a timetable for transferring power from President Saleh should begin.
"We are obviously concerned that in this period of political unrest that al-Qaeda and other groups will attempt to take advantage of that power vacuum," said White House spokesman Jay Carney.
"That is one of the reasons why we urge political dialogue to take place and a timetable for this transition that President Saleh has talked about to be begun," Carney said.
Yemen has been a vital US partner in cracking down on al-Qaeda in the Arabian Peninsula, which has been blamed for several thwarted attacks directed at the US mainland.
"We believe we can and will work with the government of Yemen on these important matters," Carney said, but significantly did not lock US cooperation onto Saleh.
"We are not focused on one individual," he said.

TheUnhivedMind - April 6, 2011 05:55 PM (GMT)

'CIA involved in Yemen repressions'

Wed Apr 6, 2011 6:45AM
http://www.presstv.ir/detail/173341.html

Interview with Ali al-Ahmed, director of IGA in Washington.

US Deupty National Security Advisor John Brennan is reponsible for foreign policy in Yemen and considered a top anti-terrorism advisor to President Obama.
Al-Qaeda in Yemen has not been held responsible for the death of even one American for the past five years, yet the US continues to play the al-Qaeda card and provide the country's regime with military aid.

In an interview with Press TV, Ali al-Ahmed, director of Intitute (Persian) Gulf Affairs (IGA) in Washington, shares his views on US military aid to Yemen, the exaggerated al-Qaeda connection, and optimal outcomes. The following is a transcript of the interview.

Press TV: What is your reaction toward the Pentagon state secretary saying there is no decision yet in stopping military aid to Yemen and of the US assertion that US weapons are not being used against demonstrators?

They have been used; it is not honest to say that they have not. We know that (there are) special units the US and CIA have been training; perhaps they have not directly taken part in the shooting and killing of demonstrators personally. However, they have displaced other forces, meaning that they freed other forces to do that. There is a direct link between US aid to Yemen and the killings of hundreds of demonstrators.

Press TV: Yemen is a very divided society as you and other analysts have mentioned previously; however, a lot of Yemenis have united for this revolution. Was the US essentially pressed in a corner -- not having a choice, but to continue to provide military aid to Yemen?

No I don't believe that. Saleh is sustaining al-Qaeda to use it as a bargaining chip with Saudi Arabia and the US. Once Saleh is outside of the palace, al-Qaeda's threats will diminish greatly and the US knows this very well; however, they have not called on Abdullah Saleh to resign until recently, for which they want a transfer of power.

Focusing on supporting the people is going to be the best way for the US to diminish the threat of al-Qaeda - supporting these demonstrators. And instead of sending weapons they should send humanitarian aid. They should allow the people to govern their own country in reflection of what the people want, which is not dictatorship. That is the best tool to fight terrorism.

Press TV: What about US negotiations with the opposition?- There is a story that Riyadh may be getting involved in hosting negotiations of some sort. Do you see potential for success through these negotiations? Or is it simply too late for Saleh?

I think it is too late for Saleh to be part of any future plans for Yemen. I am worried and wary of any Saudi role in Yemen because so far, history has proven that Saudi Arabia's role in Yemen has been a negative one. They have supported violence and bombed the country as everybody knows. So they are not a neutral player here. I think other countries, like Egypt, Syria -- or Qatar even -- would be a better choice.

It is a question that I've always asked - the US has been able to bring in coalitions to wage wars and they have not worked to building any coalition to mediate peace between Arab countries with Arab and Muslim majority populations. And that is disturbing.

The US could get a lot accomplished in terms of winning hearts and minds by becoming the peacemaker in Yemen and the other countries in the region. Instead of sending weapons, they could be sending in a delegation with authority, who would mediate between the enemies in the role of a broker just like they did when they mediated the treaty between Egypt and Israel, which was led by Jimmy Carter. Why not mediate between the enemies so that we can have a government that is responsible for the wishes of its people (and) not to the whim of a dictator and his family?

Press TV: Why are the US and a coalition involved now in Libya, but not in Yemen? All this talk about the al-Qaeda bogeyman in Yemen; certainly the al-Qaeda factor is considered highly important to the US, isn't it?

Well, there is a threat of al-Qaeda in Yemen, but I think it has been exaggerated tremendously and so far, al-Qaeda in Yemen has not been able to kill a single American in the past five years so we are not really talking about something that is of catastrophic importance.

In Yemen we don't need to have war. What you need is to apply political pressure on Yemeni parties to come and speak to each other to collaborate in building a government that is modern and responsible to its citizens. It doesn't take a rocket scientist to do that and it would definitely be cheaper than dropping bombs on people like what happened last year in Yemen or what is happening now in Libya.

So there is a cheaper alternative with a much more positive outcome for the US. Rather than flying military jets, the US could be flying in peace envoys to bring the parties together and Yemenis would be shy and embarrassed by the fact that there is an American trying to get them to talk to each other to make peace for them. This is a far better position for the US.

Press TV: You speak of peace envoys being a better choice for the US in Yemen...

It revolves around a Saudi connection. John Brennan in the White House is the American architect of US foreign policy in Yemen and was the former CIA chief in Saudi Arabia so he is influenced by the desires of the Saudi monarchy. He is why we see the Yemen situation getting worse; an American official designing US policy heavily tied to Saudi wishes. His policy is solely been to support Abdullah Saleh and that's all - he should be removed.

The solution is to talk to every party and they are not weak. In fact, Saleh is one of the weaker players.

US policy right now is a failure.

SC/TG/GHN

TheUnhivedMind - April 6, 2011 09:31 PM (GMT)

Yemenis renew call for Saleh ouster

Wed Apr 6, 2011 3:43PM
http://www.presstv.ir/detail/173417.html

Hundreds of thousands of anti-government protesters have poured into the streets in major Yemeni cities, defying a brutal government-led crackdown.

In the capital Sana'a, protesters gathered at Change Square on Wednesday and called for the ouster of despotic President Ali Abdullah Saleh.

The protesters also urged foreign countries to convince Saleh to end his three-decade long grip on power.

"We welcome any initiative or any invitation for Ali Abdullah to leave from any foreign or Arab country, but under the condition that includes the departure of Ali Abdullah Saleh as well as changing the whole regime because it's a corrupt one," AP quoted Khaled Abdul Karim, one of the protesters, as saying.

There were no immediate reports of confrontation between forces loyal to the embattled president and anti-government protesters in the capital.

On Tuesday, at least three people were killed and 15 others were injured after pro-Saleh tribesmen clashed with soldiers backing anti-government protesters in Sana'a.

Massive anti-government protest rallies were also held on Wednesday in the southern city of Taiz, where security forces shot in the air to try to disperse the crowd. There were no reports of casualties.

Taiz demonstrations came hours after Yemeni security forces shot dead one more protester in the city, which was the scene of a deadly crackdown on Monday.

Reports coming from Taiz say Yemeni security forces have surrounded presidential palace and government buildings in the city.

Similar protest rallies were also held in the cities of Aden and Hudaydah.

Since late January, hundreds of thousands of people have turned out for regular demonstrations in main Yemeni cities calling for corruption and unemployment to be tackled and demanding President Ali Abdullah Saleh step down.

The protests have been met by riot police or supporters of President Saleh armed with knives and batons.

Saleh has said he will not seek another term in office in 2013 but has vowed to defend his regime "with every drop of blood."

According to local reports, at least 300 people have been killed and many others injured since the beginning of anti-Saleh demonstrations in the country.

HM/PKH/MB

TheUnhivedMind - April 11, 2011 01:40 AM (GMT)

Massive protests held in Yemen

Sun Apr 10, 2011 5:54PM
http://www.presstv.ir/detail/174128.html

Tens of thousands of protesters have taken to the streets in different cities across Yemen despite the government's brutal crackdown on such demonstrations.

The Sunday rallies were held in Sana'a, the eastern city of Hudaydah along with Taiz and Ibb, both in the southeast part of the country.

The rallies were followed by clashes with security forces, leaving 43 people injured in Taiz and more than 100 in Sana'a.

The victims were mostly wounded by the regime's live rounds, rubber bullets or baton charges. Around 1,200 suffered teargas inhalation.

Violent clashes with the security forces have claimed at least seven lives over the past two days.

The protesters are calling for corruption and unemployment to be tackled and demanding President Ali Abdullah Saleh step down.

Some 40% of the Yemeni population lives on USD 2 a day or less and a third faces food shortages.

The protests have been met by riot police or supporters of President Saleh armed with knives and batons.

Saleh has said he will not seek another term in office in 2013 but has vowed to defend his regime "with every drop of blood".

Local sources say the death toll has surpassed 300 since anti-government protests began in late January.

Volunteers have turned mosques into makeshift hospitals to help treat the victims

TheUnhivedMind - April 19, 2011 09:34 PM (GMT)

Yemeni Police Fire on Demonstrators, Kill 3

Tuesday, April 19th, 2011 at 5:55 pm UTC
http://blogs.voanews.com/breaking-news/201...trators-kill-3/

Witnesses in Yemen say police have fired on anti-government protesters, killing three and wounding several others in two major cities.

Witnesses said police fatally shot one man in the city of Taiz during protests demanding the ouster of President Ali Abdullah Saleh. Medics said two men were killed and dozens were wounded during a similar crackdown in the capital, Sana'a.

Anti-government protesters have been calling for an end to Mr. Saleh's 32-year rule for the past two months. The Yemeni president has indicated he is willing to step down in an orderly transition, but the opposition wants his immediate departure.

The U.N. Security Council plans to discuss the unrest in Yemen for the first time since the protests began. Tuesday's meeting was proposed by Germany's ambassador. Diplomats say the meeting will send a political signal that the unrest and government response is of growing concern to the international community.

Also, a delegation from Yemen's ruling party is expected to meet Tuesday in the United Arab Emirates with mediators from the Gulf Cooperation Council.

Opposition leaders met GCC foreign ministers in Saudi Arabia Sunday without any breakthrough.

Violence between pro-Saleh forces and opposition activists has killed more than 119 people since protests began in late January.

On Monday, at least 80 people were wounded in the Red Sea port of al-Hudaydah when security forces fired on protesters demanding Mr. Saleh's ouster.

Residents say plainclothes police fired live ammunition, while other security officials used clubs and tear gas against demonstrators.

TheUnhivedMind - April 20, 2011 05:21 PM (GMT)

Yemenis demonstrate as diplomats cope with crisis

By the CNN Wire Staff
April 20, 2011
http://edition.cnn.com/2011/WORLD/meast/04...yemen.protests/

Sanaa, Yemen (CNN) -- Casualties mounted in Yemen Wednesday as world powers grappled with the political crisis paralyzing the impoverished and restive nation.

The United Nations Security Council met for the first time Tuesday to tackle the hostilities in Yemen, in which anti-government protesters have clashed with security forces and pro-government demonstrators over the last two months.

The U.N. efforts to deal with the Yemen crisis coincide with the ongoing initiative of the six-nation Gulf Cooperation Council, or the GCC -- a coalition of Gulf Arab nations working to ease tensions between Yemen's government of Ali Abdullah Saleh and a restive opposition.

The Security Council was unable to agree on a joint statement, and it's unclear whether any diplomatic reaction will be forthcoming on Yemen in the coming days.

But one diplomat said it was the first time Yemen was on the agenda of the Security Council and it was "perhaps too early for everyone to agree."

This world and regional diplomatic focus on Yemen comes as protesters took to the streets in the capital of Sanaa and other cities across the country, which the United Nations calls the poorest country in the region.

One death was reported in Hodeida on Wednesday, when security forces in civilian clothing shot and killed a protester, sources said.

Security officials in the Aden province city of Khormaksar said a soldier was killed and three others were wounded. Security forces said they saw at least six local residents armed with machine guns attack security forces.

Eyewitnesses said troops had been antagonizing Khormaksar by setting up checkpoints, questioning people on the streets, and using threatening language.

Thousands of demonstrators took to the streets in Sanaa over the killings of protesters on Tuesday, when at least five people died.

In Taiz, eyewitnesses said four protesters were injured when they attacked government convoys with rocks and gunfire. One of the convoys was from the Taiz governor's office.

Yemen's instability is rooted in grass-roots political and economic grievances, but the country's instability concerns the West. That's because the al Qaeda terror network has a strong presence there. The Saleh government has been a U.S. ally in the fight against Islamic militants there.

At the United Nations, the Security Council was briefed by a senior U.N. political affairs officer and a U. N. envoy to Yemen. Germany and Lebanon introduced a statement on Yemen which would have called for restraint in violence, among other themes.

U.S. Ambassador to the United Nations Susan Rice said the United States and other nations discussed calling for restraint and an end to the violence in Yemen with a credible transition to democracy.

The United States and France wanted to also express support for the efforts of the GCC. Germany voiced concern about the deteriorating situation in Yemen at the meeting and called on all parties to have a dialogue in Yemen. It also expressed support for the GCC.

But one U.N. diplomat said concerns from China and Russia blocked a unified response to the developments, and some countries wanted more time to consult their governments.

Another U.N. agency, the United Nations Children's Fund, said Wednesday that too many children are exposed to danger in Yemen.

UNICEF spokeswoman Marixie Mercado told journalists in Geneva, Switzerland, that at least 26 children have been killed, mainly by live bullets or ammunition over the last two months.

Another 15 children were killed in a large explosion at the Abyan ammunition factory in March "when civilians reportedly looted the facility, which had been previously taken over by militants."

Mercado said more than 80 other children had been injured in beatings, rock-throwings or shootings. She said nearly 800 others had been exposed to tear gas in Yemen.

TheUnhivedMind - April 24, 2011 01:18 AM (GMT)

Yemen leader Saleh agrees to step down under Gulf plan

Protests against Mr Saleh's rule continued in the capital Sanaa on Saturday

23 April 2011 Last updated at 22:59
http://www.bbc.co.uk/news/world-middle-east-13178887

President Ali Abdullah Saleh of Yemen has agreed to step down under a 30-day transition plan aimed at ending violent unrest over his 32-year rule.

Officials in the capital Sanaa confirmed the government had accepted the plan drawn up by Gulf Arab states.

Mr Saleh will hand power to his vice-president one month after an agreement is signed with the opposition, in return for immunity from prosecution.

At least 120 people have died during two months of protests.

The US has welcomed the announcement; a statement from the White House urged all parties to "swiftly" implement a peaceful transfer of power.

Opposition leader Yassin Noman was quoted by Reuters news agency as saying he welcomed news of the handover but would not take part in a proposed national unity government.

The opposition have been insisting they will not accept immunity from prosecution for Mr Saleh and his family.

If Mr Saleh steps down as expected, he will join Tunisia's Zine al-Abidine Ben Ali and Egypt's Hosni Mubarak as the latest Arab leader to lose power because of a popular revolt this year.
Strike action

Tariq Shami, a spokesman for Yemen's ruling party, told Reuters the party had informed the Gulf Cooperation Council "of their acceptance of the Gulf initiative in full".

Under the plan proposed by Saudi Arabia and five other states Within a month of signing an agreement with the opposition, Mr Saleh quits and hands over to his Vice-President, Abdu Rabu Manur Hadi
Mr Saleh appoints an opposition leader to run an interim government tasked with preparing for presidential elections two months later
Mr Saleh, his family and his aides are given immunity from prosecution

Washington has urged Mr Saleh to set about the transition immediately.

"The timing and form of this transition should be identified through dialogue," state department spokesman Mark Toner said.

Hundreds of thousands of people attended a rally in support of Mr Saleh in Sanaa on Friday but comparable numbers turned out for demonstrations against him in both the capital and the southern city of Taiz.

On Saturday, a general strike called by the opposition caused disruption in Taiz, the port city of Aden and other towns, although apparently it had little effect in the capital.
'Loop-holes'

Yemen is the Arab world's most impoverished nation and, even before the current protests, it was becoming increasingly chaotic, with both al-Qaeda and separatist challenges to the government's authority.

Mr Saleh suffered a major political reversal last month when a slew of ministers and ambassadors resigned in protest at the shooting of 45 people at a demonstration in Sanaa.

The president promised earlier not to renew his presidency in 2013 or hand over to his son. He has made - and broken - similar promises in the past.

Members of the opposition coalition say they are wary of loopholes that could keep Mr Saleh, a canny politician, in office.

One opposition leader told Reuters that ending the protests would be a major sticking point.

The opposition, the unnamed leader added, did not fully control the hundreds of thousands of people, many of them youth activists, who have taken to the streets.

TheUnhivedMind - April 25, 2011 02:27 AM (GMT)

Yemen President Ali Abdullah Saleh defiant over exit

President Saleh told the BBC al-Qaeda had infiltrated protest camps

24 April 2011 Last updated at 17:52
http://www.bbc.co.uk/news/world-middle-east-13181324

Yemeni President Ali Abdullah Saleh says any transition has to be done in a constitutional manner, and power cannot just be handed to protesters.

In an exclusive interview with the BBC, Mr Saleh described weeks of protests against his 32-year rule as a "coup".

His comments came after he agreed to a plan that would see him step down, in return for immunity from prosecution.

Opposition parties welcomed the plan, but protesters are still pressing for Mr Saleh's immediate departure.

There were fresh anti-government demonstrations in the capital, Sanaa, and in other parts of the country on Sunday.

"No negotiation, no dialogue - resign or flee," protesters in the capital chanted.

At least 130 people have died during two months of protests in Yemen inspired by uprisings elsewhere in the Arab world.
'Chaos'

Mr Saleh told the BBC continuing protests could escalate the crisis.

"You call on me from the US and Europe to hand over power," he said.

"Who shall I hand it over to? Those who are trying to make a coup? No. We will do it through ballot boxes and referendums. We'll invite international observers to monitor.

"Any coup is rejected because we are committed to the constitutional legitimacy and don't accept chaos."

He also claimed that Islamist extremists had infiltrated protest camps.

"Al-Qaeda are moving inside the camps and this is very dangerous," he said. "Why is the West not looking at this destructive work and its dangerous implications for the future?"

The transition plan was drawn up by Gulf Arab states belonging to the Gulf Co-operation Council (GCC).

Under it, Mr Saleh would hand over to his vice-president one month after an agreement is signed with the opposition, and presidential elections would follow a month later.

Mr Saleh, his family and his aides would gain immunity from prosecution.
'Comprehensive change'

The ruling General People's Congress party accepted the transition plan late on Saturday.

Parliamentary opposition parties welcomed it but said they would not join a transitional government before Mr Saleh left office, as provided for by the plan.

Mr Saleh's opponents have also rejected the idea of immunity for the president and his relatives.

They have also expressed scepticism that Mr Saleh would stick to the agreement.

One prominent activist, Abdulmalik al-Yusufi, said there was a consensus among demonstrators "on rejecting the initiative".

"The Gulf initiative addresses the problem as if it was a political crisis between two parties," he said.

"We have taken to the streets in a revolution that is demanding a comprehensive change."

Abdulhafez Muajeb, the leader of a protest movement in the Red Sea port of Hudaida, told Reuters: "We will escalate our protests until we force the president to step down immediately."

Yemen is the Arab world's most impoverished nation and, even before the current protests, it was becoming increasingly chaotic, with both al-Qaeda and separatist challenges to the government's authority.

Mr Saleh suffered a major political reversal last month when a slew of ministers and ambassadors resigned in protest at the shooting of 45 people at a demonstration in Sanaa.

The president promised earlier not to renew his presidency in 2013 or hand over to his son. He has made - and broken - similar promises in the past.

The US welcomed the announcement of the GCC transition plan. A statement from the White House urged all parties to "swiftly" implement a peaceful transfer of power.

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: Gaddafi removal not being discussed - Tripoli

Title: Gaddafi removal not being discussed - Tripoli

TheUnhivedMind - July 21, 2011 12:43 AM (GMT)

Gaddafi removal not being discussed - Tripoli

Muammar Gaddafi is holding Tripoli and other parts of western Libya

20 July 2011 Last updated at 20:47
http://www.bbc.co.uk/news/world-africa-14225033

Libya's foreign minister has denied that Col Muammar Gaddafi's removal was being considered in efforts to end the country's conflict.

"Gaddafi's departure is not being discussed," Abdelati Obeidi told reporters after talks in Moscow with Russian Foreign Minister Sergei Lavrov.

Last week France said it had been contacted by Libyan envoys saying Col Gaddafi leader was prepared to leave.

Meanwhile fighting has continued between pro-Gaddafi and rebel forces.

There were fierce clashes on Wednesday near the eastern town of Brega - an important oil centre that has changed hands several times during the five-month-old conflict.

In western Libya, rebel forces in Misrata say Nato air support has allowed them to advance further against government forces.

Russia has been trying to mediate a deal to end the conflict.

After Wednesday's talks in Moscow, Mr Obeidi said the Libyan government wanted to end the conflict with rebels seeking to end Col Gaddafi's 41-year rule.

"We must all work on a peaceful solution in which all Libyans would participate and not just the council in Benghazi," he said, referring to the rebel Transitional National Council (TNC) based in the city of Benghazi.

The rebels are holding eastern Libya and pockets in the west, but have so far not made decisive moves towards the capital Tripoli.

On 12 July, French Foreign Minister Alain Juppe said: "The Libyan regime is sending messengers everywhere, to Turkey, to New York, to Paris" offering to discuss Col Gaddafi's exit.

But he added that such contacts did not constitute negotiations.

France played a key role in launching Nato-led strikes in Libya, under a UN-mandated mission to protect civilians.

Coalition countries have insisted that the Libyan leader must stand down for hostilities to end.

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: Half naked protesters attacked by Georgian embassy

Title: Half naked protesters attacked by Georgian embassy
Description: staff in Kiev [Vd]

TheUnhivedMind - July 20, 2011 02:18 AM (GMT)

Half naked protesters attacked by Georgian embassy staff in Kiev

[dohtml]<object style="height: 390px; width: 640px"><param name="movie" value="http://www.youtube.com/v/yq1sqviPYKU?version=3"><param name="allowFullScreen" value="true"><param name="allowScriptAccess" value="always"><embed src="http://www.youtube.com/v/yq1sqviPYKU?version=3" type="application/x-shockwave-flash" allowfullscreen="true" allowScriptAccess="always" width="640" height="390"></object>[/dohtml]

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: Irish police arrest eight people over dissident

Title: Irish police arrest eight people over dissident Description: republican activity

TheUnhivedMind - July 19, 2011 05:42 PM (GMT)

Irish police arrest eight people over dissident republican activity

Bomb disposal team called in after three men are stopped in car in Dublin, while five men are held after raids in Cork

Henry McDonald in Dublin
guardian.co.uk, Tuesday 19 July 2011 16.20 BST
http://www.guardian.co.uk/world/2011/jul/1...blican-activity

Irish police have made a series of arrests across the republic over the past 24 hours aimed at disrupting dissident republican activity.

Five men were arrested in Cork after the Garda Síochána carried out searches at locations in Cork city early on Tuesday morning.

Three men in their 40s, one in his 20s and another in his 50s are being held at Mayfield, Gurranabraher and Togher garda stations in the city.

Three men were arrested in Dublin in the early hours of Tuesday following the discovery of a viable device plus ammunition in two cars stopped in the Irish capital.

An army bomb disposal team was called to the scene on Ballyfermot Road in west Dublin just after midnight on Monday after a police armed emergency response unit stopped and searched the two cars at around 11.20pm.

A suspicious device was recovered during the search operation. It was made safe about 90 minutes later and taken away for further analysis.

Two men in their late 20s and early 30s were arrested at the scene and are being held at Ballyfermot police station. A third man, in his late 20s, was arrested later at a house in the Wheatfield area of the city.

In recent weeks, gardaí have scored a series of successes against republican terror groups who oppose the peace process. Earlier this month, a garda operation thwarted an attempted bomb attack on an unknown target in Northern Ireland after armed detectives raided a farmhouse on the southern side of the Irish border. A large quantity of ammunition was recovered. A man is being questioned at Ronanstown garda station in Dublin.

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: Cairo protest: Police use tear gas on 'day of revo

Title: Cairo protest: Police use tear gas on 'day of revo

TheUnhivedMind - January 25, 2011 04:52 PM (GMT)

Cairo protest: Police use tear gas on 'day of revolt'

The BBC's Jon Leyne describes 'remarkable scenes' in the Egyptian capital

25 January 2011 Last updated at 16:29
http://www.bbc.co.uk/news/world-africa-12272836

Police in Cairo are using tear gas and water cannon to try to quell rare anti-government protests.

Thousands are reported to have joined the protests after an internet campaign inspired by the uprising in Tunisia.

They are marching through Cairo and other areas chanting anti-government slogans, after activists called for a "day of revolt" in a web message.

Weeks of unrest in Tunisia eventually toppled President Zine al-Abidine Ben Ali earlier this month.

Such protests are uncommon in Egypt, which President Hosni Mubarak has ruled since 1981, tolerating little dissent.

The events in Cairo were co-ordinated on a Facebook page - tens of thousands of supporters clicked on the page to say they would take part.

The BBC's Jon Leyne in Cairo says rallies are being held in several parts of the capital, and the turnout so far is more than the organisers could have hoped.

He says there has been a series of violent confrontations, including in front of the parliament building, where police with riot shields, tear gas and water cannon clashed with protesters throwing rocks.

There are also reports of protests in Alexandria and Ismailiya, among others.
'Nothing to fear'

The Associated Press (AP) news agency reports that in Tahrir Square, demonstrators attacked a police water cannon vehicle, opening the driver's door and ordering the man out of the vehicle.

Officers beat back protesters with batons as they tried to break the police cordons to join the main demonstration, it added.

One protester, 43-year-old lawyer Tareq el-Shabasi, told AP: "I came here today willing to die, I have nothing to fear."

The AFP news agency reported that protesters had gathered outside the Supreme Court holding large signs that read: "Tunisia is the solution."

They then broke through lines of police and began to march through the streets, chanting: "Down with Mubarak."

Reuters news agency reported that some chants referred to Mr Mubarak's son Gamal, who some analysts believe is being groomed as his father's successor. "Gamal, tell your father Egyptians hate you," they shouted.

Protesters alluded to the Tunisian uprising - this one using the French word "degage", meaning "out"

The organisers rallied support saying the protest would focus on torture, poverty, corruption and unemployment, calling it "the beginning of the end".

"It is the end of silence, acquiescence and submission to what is happening in our country," they said in comments carried by Reuters news agency.

"It will be the start of a new page in Egypt's history - one of activism and demanding our rights."

George Ishaq, an Egyptian opposition leader, said security forces had been "confounded".

"In the end, we will get our rights because this is just the beginning," he said.

"This will not end. Our anger will continue over the coming days. We will put forth our conditions and requests until the system responds and leaves."
Disillusioned

Egypt has many of the same social and political problems that brought about the unrest in Tunisia - rising food prices, high unemployment and anger at official corruption.

However, the population of Egypt has a much lower level of education than Tunisia. Illiteracy is high and internet penetration is low.

There are deep frustrations in Egyptian society, our Cairo correspondent says, yet Egyptians are almost as disillusioned with the opposition as they are with the government; even the Muslim Brotherhood, the banned Islamist movement, seems rudderless.

While one opposition leader, Mohamed ElBaradei, called on Egyptians to take part in these protests, the Muslim Brotherhood has been more ambivalent.

Our correspondent adds that Egypt is widely seen to have lost power, status and prestige in the three decades of President Mubarak's rule.

TheUnhivedMind - January 25, 2011 05:09 PM (GMT)

[dohtml]<object style="height: 390px; width: 640px"><param name="movie" value="http://www.youtube.com/v/kWr6MypZ-JU?version=3"><param name="allowFullScreen" value="true"><param name="allowScriptAccess" value="always"><embed src="http://www.youtube.com/v/kWr6MypZ-JU?version=3" type="application/x-shockwave-flash" allowfullscreen="true" allowScriptAccess="always" width="640" height="390"></object>[/dohtml]

TheUnhivedMind - January 25, 2011 05:33 PM (GMT)

[dohtml]<object style="height: 390px; width: 640px"><param name="movie" value="http://www.youtube.com/v/fZZw0A7R384?version=3"><param name="allowFullScreen" value="true"><param name="allowScriptAccess" value="always"><embed src="http://www.youtube.com/v/fZZw0A7R384?version=3" type="application/x-shockwave-flash" allowfullscreen="true" allowScriptAccess="always" width="640" height="390"></object>[/dohtml]

TheUnhivedMind - January 25, 2011 11:34 PM (GMT)

Day of anger in Egypt:
http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=6Czslbh_Bnw

TheUnhivedMind - January 25, 2011 11:52 PM (GMT)

Egypt protests: Three killed in 'day of revolt'

Jon Leyne says the anger of protesters took police by surprise (The mobile phone footage in this video was sent to the BBC by members of the public)

25 January 2011 Last updated at 23:10
http://www.bbc.co.uk/news/world-africa-12272836

At least three people are reported to have been killed during a day of rare anti-government protests in Egypt.

In Cairo, where the biggest rallies were held, state TV said a policeman had died in clashes. Two protesters died in Suez, doctors there said.

Thousands joined the protests after an internet campaign inspired by the uprising in Tunisia.

In central Cairo, police starting using tear gas early on Wednesday in an attempt to disperse the crowds.

Thousands of demonstrators remained in the city centre around Tahrir Square late into the night, vowing to camp out overnight and setting the stage for further confrontation.

There were appeals on Facebook for food and blankets for those staying put.

Activists had called for a "day of revolt" in a web message. Protests are uncommon in Egypt, which President Hosni Mubarak has ruled since 1981, tolerating little dissent.

US Secretary of State Hillary Clinton said her administration supported "the fundamental right of expression and assembly" and urged all parties "to exercise restraint".

She added that Washington believed the Egyptian government was "stable" and "looking for ways to respond to the legitimate needs and interests of the Egyptian people".

The events in Cairo were co-ordinated on a Facebook page - tens of thousands of supporters clicked on the page to say they would take part.

Reports said the social networking site Twitter had been blocked in Egypt and that mobile phone networks in the Cairo area were down.

The Swedish-based website Bambuser, which streams video from mobile phones, said it had been blocked in Egypt. On its blog, it accused Egyptian officials of trying to control the news agenda.

The BBC's Jon Leyne in Cairo said rallies had been held in several parts of the capital, and the turnout had been more than the organisers could have hoped.

Police were taken aback by the anger of the crowd and let protesters make their way to the parliament building, he says.

There police regrouped in full riot gear with tear gas and water cannon and temporarily drove the crowd back. However, protesters threw stones and stood their ground, pushing the police back until they were on the run.

Protests also broke out in other areas, including the eastern city of Ismailiya and the northern port city of Alexandria.

In Alexandria, witnesses said thousands joined the protests, some chanting: "Revolution, revolution, like a volcano, against Mubarak the coward."
'Nothing to fear'

In Cairo's Tahrir Square, demonstrators attacked a police water cannon vehicle, opening the driver's door and ordering the man out of the vehicle.

Officers beat back protesters with batons as they tried to break the police cordons to join the main demonstration.

Cairo resident Abd-Allah told the BBC that by Tuesday night some protesters were saying they wouldn't give up until President Mubarak had gone.

"People are behaving as if they are ready to die," he said.

"The atmosphere is very tense, it feels like a revolution. I see people who are determined, people who have nothing to lose, people who want a better future."

Reports said protesters had earlier gathered outside the Supreme Court holding large signs that read: "Tunisia is the solution."

A poster of Hosni Mubarak was defaced by protesters in Alexandria

Some chants referred to Mr Mubarak's son Gamal, who some analysts believe is being groomed as his father's successor. "Gamal, tell your father Egyptians hate you," they shouted.

The organisers rallied support saying the protest would focus on torture, poverty, corruption and unemployment, calling it "the beginning of the end".
Disillusioned

Weeks of unrest in Tunisia eventually toppled President Zine al-Abidine Ben Ali earlier this month.

Egypt has many of the same social and political problems that brought about the unrest in Tunisia - rising food prices, high unemployment and anger at official corruption.

However, the population of Egypt has a much lower level of education than Tunisia. Illiteracy is high and internet penetration is low.

There are deep frustrations in Egyptian society, our Cairo correspondent says, yet Egyptians are almost as disillusioned with the opposition as they are with the government; even the Muslim Brotherhood, the banned Islamist movement, seems rudderless.

While one opposition leader, Mohamed ElBaradei, called on Egyptians to take part in these protests, the Muslim Brotherhood has been more ambivalent.

Our correspondent adds that Egypt is widely seen to have lost power, status and prestige in the three decades of President Mubarak's rule.

TheUnhivedMind - January 26, 2011 05:03 PM (GMT)

Protester stands up to water cannon in Eygpt

In a scene reminiscent of Tiananmen Square, a protester in Cairo has blocked the path of a water cannon during demonstrations.

[dohtml]<object classid='clsid:D27CDB6E-AE6D-11cf-96B8-444553540000' id='TelegraphPlayer-8283767' width='560' height='315' codebase='http://fpdownload.macromedia.com/get/flashplayer/current/swflash.cab'><param name='movie' value='http://www.telegraph.co.uk/telegraph/template/utils/ooyala/telegraph_player.swf'/><param name='allowScriptAccess' value='always'/><param name='bgcolor' value='#000000'/><param name='wmode' value='window'/><param name='salign' value='LT'/><param name='allowFullScreen' value='true'/><param name='scale' value='noscale'/><param name='FlashVars' value='embedCode=9qdWMwMjpyiui41MnE9w4tqzZKzTmtcJ&autoplay=1&offSite=true&showTD=true&thruParamDartEnterprise=site%3Dnews%26section%3Dnews/worldnews/africaandindianocean/egypt%26pt%3Dvid%26pg%3D/news/worldnews/africaandindianocean/egypt/8283767/Protester-stands-up-to-water-cannon-in-Eygpt.html%26spaceid%3Dvid%26ls%3Df%26transactionID%3D1101261659350306%26psize%3D620x415%26view%3Dviral'/><embed type='application/x-shockwave-flash' src='http://www.telegraph.co.uk/telegraph/template/utils/ooyala/telegraph_player.swf' pluginspage='http://www.adobe.com/go/getflashplayer' menu='false' quality='high' play='false' name='TelegraphPlayer-8283767' height='315' width='560' allowScriptAccess='always' bgcolor='#000000' wmode='window' salign='LT' allowFullScreen='true' scale='noscale' flashvars='embedCode=9qdWMwMjpyiui41MnE9w4tqzZKzTmtcJ&autoplay=1&offSite=true&showTD=true&thruParamDartEnterprise=site%3Dnews%

26section%3Dnews/worldnews/africaandindianocean/egypt%26pt%3Dvid%26pg%3D/news/worldnews/africaandindianocean/egypt/8283767/Protester-stands-up-to-water-cannon-in-Eygpt.html%26spaceid%3Dvid%26ls%3Df%26transactionID%3D1101261659350306%26psize%3D620x415%26view%3Dviral'></embed></object>[/dohtml]

26 Jan 2011
http://www.telegraph.co.uk/news/worldnews/...n-in-Eygpt.html

The footage shows an armoured vehicle approaching a pack of protesters before attempting to spray them with water.

Protesters manage to evade the water and start vandalising the pipe so it fires only upwards.

Egyptians have taken to the streets in recent days and demanded an end to the 30-year rule of President Hosni Mubarak.

Three protesters and one policeman have been killed so far.

TheUnhivedMind - January 26, 2011 05:06 PM (GMT)

Egypt's allies warn government must respect democratic rights or face revolt

Egypt's western allies, and its main middle-eastern backer Saudi Arabia, have said its government must respect democratic rights and if it is to stave off a Tunisia-like revolution.

2:00PM GMT 26 Jan 2011
http://www.telegraph.co.uk/news/worldnews/...ace-revolt.html

The criticism came as Egypt banned demonstrations and deployed riot police in an effort to stop the largest and most significant political mobilisation since protests over bread subsidies shook the Arab world's most populous nation in 1977.

In an unusually critical statement, the White House said the Egyptian government had "an important opportunity to be responsive to the aspirations of the Egyptian people, and pursue political, economic and social reforms." The strongly worded statement also expressed support for the "universal rights of the Egyptian people, including the rights to freedom of expression, association and assembly."

The statement was issued hours after Barack Obama, the US President, said in his annual State of the Union address that in Tunisia "the will of the people proved more powerful than the writ of a dictator."

European leaders have echoed Mr Obama's concerns. Catherine Ashton, the EU's foreign affairs chief, called on "Egyptian authorities to respect and to protect the right of Egyptian citizens to manifest their political aspirations." Guido Westerwelle, Germany's foreign minister, also said "basic human rights, civil rights, freedom of opinion and assembly and press freedoms must be respected in Egypt."

Prince Turki al-Faisal, a powerful Saudi Arabian royal who served as its intelligence chief, also had rare words of warning for Egypt's government, saying its survival depended on its ability to understand what the population wanted. "Whether they can catch up as leaders to what the population is aiming (for) is still to be seen," he said.

TheUnhivedMind - January 26, 2011 07:09 PM (GMT)

Hundreds arrested in Egypt protests

Wed Jan 26, 2011 1:41PM
http://www.presstv.ir/detail/162072.html

Opposition groups have called on people to continue protests.
At least 500 people have been arrested in Egypt as protests continue against the government of President Hosni Mubarak.

Security officials said 90 people were arrested in Cairo on Wednesday and 121 members of the opposition Muslim Brotherhood in the southern city of Assiut.

On Tuesday, around 200 people were arrested around the country.

The situation in Egypt remains tense with people pouring into the streets across the country to protest against Mubarak.

Heavily armed riot police have clashed with protesters in major cities as the Interior Ministry said that it would not tolerate demonstrations.

In Cairo, at least one person was wounded when police tried to disperse the angry people.

Mubarak's son and wife have reportedly fled to Britain amid the spreading unrest.

The opposition groups have called on people to take to the streets to continue anti-government protests.

Meanwhile, protest organizers have announced a general strike across the country.

According to the official website of the Muslim Brotherhood, the general strike will be in place on Wednesday and Thursday.

The Egyptian government has banned any demonstrations, warning that protesters would be detained.

Police have reportedly used live bullets against demonstrators. However, the demonstrators have promised to continue protests.

At least four people, including a police officer, have already been killed in anti-government demonstrations across the country.

It comes a day after thousands demonstrated nationwide to demand an end to Mubarak's authoritarian rule of nearly 30 years.

A former Arab League envoy to the United Nations says the Tunisian revolution is inspiring the Arab world, which is worn-out by various dictatorial regimes.

In an interview with Press TV, Clovis Maksoud said Tunisia's revolution "is one of the most inspiring events of the Arab world in the contemporary time."

The revolution "is the prognosis by which many frustrated people in various countries -- suffering dictatorship, poverty, and marginalization, are now being empowered," said the former ambassador to the United Nations.

TheUnhivedMind - January 26, 2011 07:30 PM (GMT)

Egyptian protesters turn tables on police by forcing water cannons onto THEIR wagon

Egyptian president's son 'flees to England'

Three demonstrators and one police officer die in clashes
Protests over 30-year rule of President Hosni Mubarak

By Daily Mail Reporter
Last updated at 6:07 PM on 26th January 2011
http://www.dailymail.co.uk/news/article-13...ro-streets.html

Angry Egyptian demonstrators being targeted with water cannon retaliated by turning one of the powerful hoses back onto the security forces.

Egyptian police were attempting to disperse the crowds protesting against the 30-year rule of President Hosni Mubarak and the country's grinding poverty in the centre of Cairo.

But the crowd fought back.

It was a small victory against the security forces who have also used rubber bullets, batons and tear gas to try to control the protesters.
Scroll down to view video

Defiant: It was a small victory against the security forces who have cracked down on the protesters with rubber bullets, batons and tear gas. Separately, a driver's door was forced open and he was ordered out of the truck

So far, three people - two protesters and one policeman - have been killed in the clashes and 250 others have been injured.

Thousands of demonstrators were back on the streets again today, despite a government clampdown.

There were violent clashes between demonstrators and police as they fought pitched battles in Cairo.

Yesterday 20,000 demonstrators took to Cairo's main Tahrir (Liberation) Square.

Mobilised largely on the internet, the waves of protesters joined forces to hurl rocks and climb on top of armored police trucks.

'Down with Hosni Mubarak, down with the tyrant, we don't want you,' screamed the protesters as thousands of riot police were deployed in a massive security operation.

It is believed that the Egyptian president's son, who is considered as his successor, has fled to Britain along with his family.

The plane with Gamal Mubarak, his wife and daughter on board left for London yesterday from an airport in western Cairo, the U.S. based Arabic website Akhbar al-Arab said.

As night fell yesterday, thousands of demonstrators stood their ground for what they vowed would be an all-night sit-in in the square just steps away from parliament and other government buildings - blocking the streets and setting the stage for even more dramatic confrontations.

A large security force moved in around 1am today arresting people, chasing others into side streets and filling the square with clouds of tear gas. Protesters collapsed on the ground with breathing problems amid the heavy volleys of tear gas.

The sound of what appeared to be automatic weapons fire could be heard as riot police and plainclothes officers chased several hundred protesters who scrambled onto the main road along the Nile in downtown Cairo.

Some 20 officers were seen brutally beating one protester with truncheons.

'It got broken up ugly with everything, shooting, water cannon and (police) running with the sticks,' said Gigi Ibrahim, who was among the last protesters to leave the square.

'It was a field of tear gas. The square emptied out so fast.'

Ibrahim said she was hit in her back with something that felt like a rock. 'Some people were hit in their faces,' she said.

Some protesters turned violent amid the crackdown. They knocked down an empty white police booth and dragged it for several yards before setting it on fire, chanting that they wanted to oust the regime.
A police pickup truck was overturned and set ablaze behind the famous Egyptian Museum. Protesters also set fire to a metal barricade and blocked traffic on a major bridge over the Nile.

The violent scenes were inspired by protests in Tunisia which overthrew the government earlier this month

Police at the bridge fired tear gas and protesters mounted a charge, forcing officers to retreat, though they quickly regrouped. Two protesters with bleeding head wounds were carried off in ambulances.

Well after midnight, the smell of tear gas drifted throughout central Cairo and riot police remained deployed in large numbers. Tahrir Square looked like a battlefield covered with rocks and debris. The gates of the ruling party headquarters near the square were smashed.

Nearly half of Egypt's 80 million people live under or just above the poverty line set by the United Nations at 2 dollars a day.

Poor quality education, health care and high unemployment have left large numbers deprived of basic needs.

Soon after the removal on January 14 of Tunisia's president Zine El Abidine Ben Ali, all eyes focused on Egypt, with observers wondering if the dramatic events in the North African nation could spur unrest against another entrenched Arab regime.

Meanwhile, in Lebanon, a prime minster backed by pro-Iranian Hezbollah was appointed sparking angry street protests and fears the move would plunge the country into a new crisis.

Billionaire businessman and former premier Najib Mikati, Hezbollah's chosen candidate, moved immediately to try and reassure the country declaring : 'My hand is extended to all Lebanese, Muslims and Christians, in order to build and not to destroy.'

But thousands of demonstrators took to the streets of major cities on what they also called a 'day of rage', accusing Hebzbollah of engineering the collapse of the previous unity government of outgoing Premier Saad Hariri.

It was Hezbollah that was behind the kidnap of Western hostages, including Terry Waite and John McCarthy in the 1980s, as well as an attack on U.S. marines in Beirut that killed 241, and their control over the government for the first time will sound alarm bells in Washington and Israel and raise concerns in moderate Arab states.

The vote caps the Shia organisation's steady rise over the past few decades from a resistance group fighting Israel to Lebanon's most powerful military and political force.The shift in the balance of power drew warnings from the U.S. that its support for Lebanon could be in jeopardy, demonstrating the risks of international isolation if Hezbollah pushes too far.

Many fear Lebanon's political crisis could re-ignite sectarian fighting similar to Shiite-Sunni street clashes that killed 81 people in Beirut in 2008. Hezbollah's rise also looked likely to also raise tensions with Israel, which borders Lebanon to the south.

Protesters roll an overturned police box into the middle of a bridge over the Nile river to make a barricade during the clashes

TheUnhivedMind - January 26, 2011 07:32 PM (GMT)

© EPA

© EPA

© AP

© Reuters

MAHRABEL TRAVEL
© EPA

© EPA

Go Away
Mubara
© Reuters

© EPA

© EPA

هاردیز Hardee's
© AP

© AP

© AP

TheUnhivedMind - January 26, 2011 07:32 PM (GMT)

[dohtml]<object style="height: 390px; width: 640px"><param name="movie" value="http://www.youtube.com/v/kWr6MypZ-JU?version=3"><param name="allowFullScreen" value="true"><param name="allowScriptAccess" value="always"><embed src="http://www.youtube.com/v/kWr6MypZ-JU?version=3" type="application/x-shockwave-flash" allowfullscreen="true" allowScriptAccess="always" width="640" height="390"></object>[/dohtml]

TheUnhivedMind - January 26, 2011 07:37 PM (GMT)

LATUFF INSPIRES EGYPTIAN PROTESTERS

January 26, 2011 at 09:25 (Activism, Associate Post, Cartoons, Egypt, Tunisia)
http://desertpeace.wordpress.com/2011/01/2...ian-protesters/

Demonstrations were held in Cairo yesterday demanding the ouster of President Mubarak and calling for reforms. This was inspired by recent events in Tunisia and by the works of our talented Associate, Carlos Latuff. Carlos' works were featured on many of the placards carried in the event.

Photo- Mohamed Abed, AFP

Egyptian demonstrators hold up placards during a protest in central Cairo to demand the ouster of President Hosni Mubarak and calling for reforms on January 25, 2011. The protesters, carrying flags and chanting slogans against the government, rallied in a protest inspired by the uprising in Tunisia which led to the ouster of Zine El Abidine Ben Ali.

Photo- Monasosh

A video of the demonstration, courtesy of Al Jazeera, can be seen here….

[dohtml]<object style="height: 390px; width: 640px"><param name="movie" value="http://www.youtube.com/v/_2VsGQpNnqA?version=3"><param name="allowFullScreen" value="true"><param name="allowScriptAccess" value="always"><embed src="http://www.youtube.com/v/_2VsGQpNnqA?version=3" type="application/x-shockwave-flash" allowfullscreen="true" allowScriptAccess="always" width="640" height="390"></object>[/dohtml]

TheUnhivedMind - January 26, 2011 11:10 PM (GMT)

[dohtml]<object width="640" height="390"><param name="movie" value="http://www.youtube.com/v/0WNTE_uqHqw&hl=en_US&feature=player_embedded&version=3"></param><param name="allowFullScreen" value="true"></param><param name="allowScriptAccess" value="always"></param><embed src="http://www.youtube.com/v/0WNTE_uqHqw&hl=en_US&feature=player_embedded&version=3" type="application/x-shockwave-flash" allowfullscreen="true" allowScriptAccess="always" width="640" height="390"></embed></object>[/dohtml]

TheUnhivedMind - January 26, 2011 11:11 PM (GMT)

[dohtml]<object width="640" height="390"><param name="movie" value="http://www.youtube.com/v/C8GnQ0tGsBI&hl=en_US&feature=player_embedded&version=3"></param><param name="allowFullScreen" value="true"></param><param name="allowScriptAccess" value="always"></param><embed src="http://www.youtube.com/v/C8GnQ0tGsBI&hl=en_US&feature=player_embedded&version=3" type="application/x-shockwave-flash" allowfullscreen="true" allowScriptAccess="always" width="640" height="390"></embed></object>[/dohtml]

TheUnhivedMind - January 26, 2011 11:18 PM (GMT)

Heavy police deployment in Cairo after protests

AP foreign, Wednesday January 26 2011
HADEEL AL-SHALCHI
http://www.guardian.co.uk/world/feedarticle/9469451

Associated Press= CAIRO (AP) — Egyptian activists on Wednesday used social networking sites to call for a fresh wave of demonstrations, a day after they staged the biggest protests in years in Egypt to demand the end of President Hosni Mubarak's nearly 30-year rule.

However, the Interior Ministry warned that police would not tolerate any gatherings, marches or protests, suggesting that security forces would immediately crackdown at the first sign of protesters gathering.

Across the Egyptian capital on Wednesday, thousands of riot police were deployed in anticipation of fresh anti-government, Tunisia-inspired protests. A day earlier, tens of thousands demonstrated in Cairo and several other Egyptian cities to call for Mubarak's ouster and a solution to rampant poverty, rising prices and high unemployment.

Two protesters and a policeman were killed in Tuesday's protests and some 250 were wounded, including 85 policemen, when riot police used tear gas and batons to disperse protesters shortly after midnight. Medical officials said a third protester died Wednesday from injuries sustained a day earlier.

Activists organized Tuesday's protests, dubbed "day of revolution against torture, poverty, corruption and unemployment," on the social networking site Facebook, and word demonstrators spread word of where to gather on Twitter.

"All of Egypt must move, at one time," the Facebook group organizing the demonstrations said in a posting Wednesday in which it listed a number of spots in Cairo and around the country where demonstrators should gather.

Thousands of policemen in riot gear and backed by armored vehicles took up posts on bridges across the Nile, at major intersections and squares as well as outside key installations like the state TV building and the headquarters of Mubarak's ruling National democratic Party in central Cairo.

The capital remained quiet in the early afternoon with no sign of fresh protests.

Tuesday's unrest led the Egyptian stock market to tumble by more than 4 percent on Wednesday, the first concrete sign that the demonstrations have impacted the country's economy. The benchmark EGX30 index was down 4.63 percent, to 6,411.94 points by 10:45 a.m. local time Tuesday.

Security officials, meanwhile, said up to 200 protesters were detained early Wednesday during clashes between police and protesters in Cairo and elsewhere in this Arab nation of some 80 million people.

More were likely to be detained as authorities review police video tapes of the protests, the officials said, speaking on condition of anonymity because they were not authorized to speak to the media.

The protests were Egypt's biggest in years and are likely to fuel dissent in a presidential election year. Mubarak, 82, has yet to say whether he plans to run for another six-year term in office. He is thought to be grooming his son Gamal to succeed him, a prospect that is opposed by many Egyptians.

"Down with Hosni Mubarak, down with the tyrant," chanted the crowds in Cairo on Tuesday. "We don't want you!" they screamed. One sign carried by protesters on Tuesday said: "Gamal, take your dad and go."

Associated Press reporters Maggie Michael and Tarek el-Tablawy contributed to this report.

TheUnhivedMind - January 27, 2011 06:37 PM (GMT)

Egypt unrest: ElBaradei 'ready' to lead transition

Mohamed ElBaradei: "If the regime was to use force it would be completely counter-productive"

27 January 2011 Last updated at 16:53
http://www.bbc.co.uk/news/world-africa-12300164

Nobel peace laureate and Egyptian opposition leader Mohamed ElBaradei says Egypt must change and he is ready to lead the transition if asked.

Mr ElBaradei spoke at Vienna airport as he prepared to return to Cairo to join street protests there.

Meanwhile, security forces have shot dead an anti-government protester in the Sinai region, witnesses say.

The government says the protests are illegal. Up to 1,000 people have been arrested.

The shooting in Sinai brings the death toll to seven since the protests began on Tuesday.

The governing National Democratic Party (NDP) of President Hosni Mubarak says it is willing to listen to the public about grievances such as high unemployment. But it warned protesters to remain peaceful.

"They are free to express their demands and we are here to meet their needs," said NDP secretary general Safwat al-Sherif.

"I hope that all preachers at Friday prayers tomorrow are calling people to be peaceful in a clear, ritual way that never plays upon people's feelings to achieve an undesirable target."
Unrest spreading

Mr ElBaradei, formerly the head of the UN nuclear watchdog, the IAEA, said the government should not use violence against the demonstrators.

"I continue to call on the regime to understand that they better listen and listen quickly, not use violence and understand that change has to come. There's no other option," Mr ElBaradei told journalists at Vienna airport.

"If [people] want me to lead the transition, I will not let them down," Mr ElBaradei told journalists at Vienna airport.

Police and demonstrators have again clashed in Cairo and Suez, and the unrest has now spread to the industrial city of Ismailiya.

Thursday's protests in Cairo have been on a much smaller scale than the thousands seen on Tuesday and Wednesday. However, in Suez, police fired rubber-coated bullets, tear gas and water cannon, witnesses said.

Reports from Suez said a fire station had been set alight by demonstrators.

In Ismailiya, hundreds of protesters fought with police, who used batons and tear gas to disperse them.

The Egyptian stock exchange suspended trading temporarily after a sharp drop within minutes of opening, but its benchmark index has fallen further since re-opening.

The unrest began on Tuesday in what anti-government activists called a "day of revolt", inspired by the uprising in Tunisia which ousted President Zine al-Abidine Ben Ali.

On Wednesday night, activists remained on the streets of the capital, Cairo, and of Suez, defying official warnings.

The BBC's Jon Leyne in Cairo says that while the protesters are still only a minority, they show no sign of fading away and there is a chance that many more people will join once the working week finishes on Thursday.

The protest organisers have urged people to come out in force again after attending prayers in mosques and churches on Friday, stressing that the religion of protesters is not relevant.

The Muslim Brotherhood has given its backing to the planned protests. Despite an official ban, it remains Egypt's largest and most organised opposition movement.

The government appears to have no answer to the anger and disappointment being expressed on the streets, our correspondent adds - its only response so far has been to crack down on demonstrators and increase security.

Egyptian President Hosni Mubarak, 82, has not been seen in public since the protests began on Tuesday.

The Egyptian government tolerates little dissent and opposition demonstrations are routinely outlawed.

US Secretary of State Hillary Clinton has called on Egypt to "respond to the legitimate needs" of the people.

In addition to the five people killed in protests, a policeman and a protester were reported killed in Cairo late on Wednesday, although the authorities said this was not related to the demonstrations.

In the eastern city of Suez, at least 55 people were injured.

Sites including Facebook and Twitter have been key tools in organising the protests, but are reported to have been blocked across the country at times.

The BBC's Paul Adams in Washington says the US is clearly watching events on the streets of its most populous Arab ally with growing concern, fearing the potential of violent unrest at the heart of the Arab world.

TheUnhivedMind - January 27, 2011 06:38 PM (GMT)

EGYPTIAN RIOTS INCREASE IN INTENSITY 27 JAN 201

[dohtml]<object style="height: 390px; width: 640px"><param name="movie" value="http://www.youtube.com/v/mJJYXyC5IQ0?version=3"><param name="allowFullScreen" value="true"><param name="allowScriptAccess" value="always"><embed src="http://www.youtube.com/v/mJJYXyC5IQ0?version=3" type="application/x-shockwave-flash" allowfullscreen="true" allowScriptAccess="always" width="640" height="390"></object>[/dohtml]

TheUnhivedMind - January 27, 2011 06:39 PM (GMT)

EGYPTIAN REVOLUTION 25 JAN 2011-TAKE WHAT'S YOURS!

[dohtml]<object style="height: 390px; width: 640px"><param name="movie" value="http://www.youtube.com/v/gFFKFfuvDUY?version=3"><param name="allowFullScreen" value="true"><param name="allowScriptAccess" value="always"><embed src="http://www.youtube.com/v/gFFKFfuvDUY?version=3" type="application/x-shockwave-flash" allowfullscreen="true" allowScriptAccess="always" width="640" height="390"></object>[/dohtml]

TheUnhivedMind - January 27, 2011 06:47 PM (GMT)

[dohtml]<object style="height: 390px; width: 640px"><param name="movie" value="http://www.youtube.com/v/nckF2FXbdhE?version=3"><param name="allowFullScreen" value="true"><param name="allowScriptAccess" value="always"><embed src="http://www.youtube.com/v/nckF2FXbdhE?version=3" type="application/x-shockwave-flash" allowfullscreen="true" allowScriptAccess="always" width="640" height="390"></object>[/dohtml]

TheUnhivedMind - January 27, 2011 07:23 PM (GMT)

Mubarak's defense minister bids for US backing in Washington

DEBKAfile Special Report January 27, 2011, 10:15 AM (GMT+02:00) Tags: Egyptian
http://www.debka.com/article/20590/

Egyptian President Hosni Mubarak has sent his defense minister Field Marshal Mohamed Hussein Tantawi to Washington with an urgent request for US backing for his embattled regime against the street protest movement which gained in violence on its second day, Wednesday, Jan. 26. debkafile's Washington sources report that in secret meetings, the Egyptian defense minister put the situation before President Barack Obama and a row of top US political, military and intelligence officials. He warned them that by advocating a soft hand with the demonstrators and responsiveness to their demands, American officials were doing more harm than good. Without a crackdown, he said, the regime was doomed.

Tantawi also warned that the radical Muslim Brotherhood, which has stood aside from the opposition protests, was merely biding its time for the right moment to step in and take over. He asked the Obama administration for an urgent airlift of advanced riot control equipment.

The American response to the case presented by Tantawi is not known. Disclosure of his trip to Washington might well add fuel to the fires of disaffection burning in cities across Egypt. The protests are spearheaded by a youth opposition coalition whose members are proud of their Arab and Egyptian identity. Evidence of the regime's collaboration with a foreign power may well heighten their resolve to battle the regime and the million security services agents which Mubarak put on the streets Wednesday.
Slogans of "US out" and "Death to the US" have begun to appear on anti-Mubarak placards.

Wednesday night, debkafile reported:
The level of anti-government protest and violence escalated in the streets of Egyptian cities Wednesday night, Jan. 26 even after President Hosni Mubarak ordered a million security officers to back up the police and for the first time open fire on rioters in the town of Suez, leaving scores of dead and wounded. Western sources told debkafile that security forces lost control of the situation in the main Suez Canal port after protesters managed to break through a line of police defending the suburb housing government institutions and set them on fire.

They torched police headquarters and the regional premises of Mubarak's ruling NDP.

The president who has not been seen in public since the outbreaks broke out Tuesday has placed four armored divisions on emergency standby and cancelled all leaves – two on operational preparedness outside Cairo and two near the towns on the banks of the Suez Canal. Officers and men on furlough were ordered back to their bases.

Security forces have made some 2,500 arrests of opposition activists without managing to quell the unrest. debkafile's sources report that the situation in Cairo Wednesday was extremely tense after thousands of demonstrators poured into the streets and made for the Tel Talat Harb Square on the way to Liberation Square city center, where 30,000 protesters gathered Tuesday. A demonstrator and a policeman were killed in clashes, raising the number of fatalities in two days to six, as police failed to stem the advancing tide.
Our sources also report from Western sources in Cairo that some 500 journalists are locked in the building of the press association in the capital, including many foreign correspondents. Security officers burst into the building, collected the journalists in the lower flowers of the building and prevented them from covering events, reporting or taking photos.

TheUnhivedMind - January 27, 2011 11:20 PM (GMT)

EGYPTIAN PROTESTERS CHASING THE EGYPTIAN RIOT POLICE

[dohtml]<object style="height: 390px; width: 640px"><param name="movie" value="http://www.youtube.com/v/OPe8uuT_kOs?version=3"><param name="allowFullScreen" value="true"><param name="allowScriptAccess" value="always"><embed src="http://www.youtube.com/v/OPe8uuT_kOs?version=3" type="application/x-shockwave-flash" allowfullscreen="true" allowScriptAccess="always" width="640" height="390"></object>[/dohtml]

TheUnhivedMind - January 28, 2011 12:29 AM (GMT)

Cairo protests were 'beyond what I imagined'

Tunisia encouraged Egyptians to take to the streets, writes Mostafa Hussein. Police brutality will outrage even more

Mostafa Hussein
guardian.co.uk, Wednesday 26 January 2011 21.34 GMT
http://www.guardian.co.uk/world/2011/jan/2...-marcher-writes

I first joined protests in 2005 after a friend of mine was injured following a violent attack in a demonstration against constitutional amendments. I joined after witnessing and experiencing years of corruption everywhere, failing universities and public hospitals that lacked the most basic thing: dignity.

As a doctor, I was outraged at the idea that the state is prepared to hire thugs and beat people in the streets for calling for their political rights.

I later joined several protests, including ones against police brutality and torture and ones following the presidential elections. I also worked as a psychiatrist in a rehabilitation centre for torture victims for three years. There I became confident that torture is systematic and it's the only way the police gathers intelligence – bad intelligence. Not only that, if you are male below 40 and live in a poor neighbourhood there is a very high chance that the police will abuse you. For intimidation, for a third party or any other reason they wish, and under total impunity.

The numbers yesterday were beyond what I imagined. I was going down to join a protest where 300 or so protesters would be kettled for eight hours without access to a bathroom and repeatedly beaten or detained, like they often are. But I arrived to find a sea of people coming from the north of Tahrir Square marching hurriedly, while the police had totally lost control. Line after line of Central Security Force conscripts were broken by angry young men chanting against Mubarak.

People marched across the capital. They passed by the ruling party's offices twice. And other state buildings as well. The marches finished in Tahrir Square where they joined other protesters and tried to reach the parliament building.

This protest was full of young people who had never been to protests before. All chanting against Mubarak and his regime. They had expressed their wishes on the internet but now they've decided to express them in the streets.

Yesterday, dozens were injured across the country by the government people have had enough of. Tunisia provided a nudge to people to go down and take the streets. The brutality of the police against their friends will make more people outraged and motivated to tell Mubarak to leave.

Mostafa Hussein is a 30-year-old physician from Cairo

TheUnhivedMind - January 28, 2011 12:29 AM (GMT)

Mass Street Protests In Egypt

By Stephen Lendman
1-27-11

An August 2009 Council on Foreign Relations Steven Cook report headlined, "Political Instability in Egypt," saying:

Facing possible instability, (m)ost analysts believe that the current Egyptian regime will muddle through its myriad challenges and endure indefinitely (with) enough coercive power to ensure" it.

It's also "entering a period of political transition. President Hosni Mubarak is (81) and reportedly" ill. His (46 year old) son Gamal "is evidently being groomed to succeed him." However, the "process could prove difficult."

"Thus, while Egypt on the surface appears stable, the potential for growing political volatility and abrupt discontinuities (ahead) should not be summarily dismissed."

Cook suggested two possible scenarios:

-- contested succession resulting in military intervention; or

-- "an Islamist push for political power."

One indicator to watch for, he suggested, would be "the number of protestors in the streets....in response to a leadership transition," not public anger against high unemployment, extreme poverty, and Mubarack's dictatorship, inspired by mass protests ousting long-time Tunisian despot Zine El Abidine Ben Ali, what some observers thought impossible until it happened and began spreading across the region. More on that below.

US Government Responses

Note: Egypt is the largest, most significant Arab state, vital to US regional interests. After Israel, it receives more aid than any other nation, nearly $2 billion annually. Around two-thirds is for military use, including repressing dissent. The rest is economic for neoliberal reforms, including privatizing state resources.

Washington worries that Egypt's uprising may grow if not stopped. It won't tolerate revolutionary change that potentially could spread globally, including on US streets where millions face depravation levels unseen since the Great Depression.

Yet a January 25 White House press release said:

"As we monitor the situation in Egypt, we urge all parties to refrain from using violence, and expect the Egyptian authorities to respond to any protests peacefully. We support the universal rights of the Egyptian people, including the rights to freedom of expression, association and assembly."

A same day PJ Crowley State Department statement said:

"We are monitoring the situation in Egypt closely. The United States supports the fundamental right of expression and assembly of all people. All parties should exercise restraint, and we call on the Egyptian authorities to handle these protests peacefully."

Secretary of State Clinton added:

"Our assessment is that the Egyptian government is stable and is looking for ways to respond to the legitimate needs and interests of the Egyptian people."

Don't be fooled. Her message is harsh and clear. Washington tolerates no dissent and will help Egypt crush it brutally. In fact, working with local police, Washington does it domestically against global justice and other protests, including during 2000 and 2004 presidential political party conventions brutally.

Media and Analyst Responses

On January 25, New York Times writers Kareen Fahim and Mona-El-Naggar headlined, "Violent Clashes Mark Protests Against Mubarak's Rule," saying:

"Tens of thousands of people demanding an end to (his) 30-year rule....filled (Cairo, Alexandria, Suez, and other Egyptian streets), in an unusually large and sometimes violent burst of civil unrest that appeared to threaten the stability of one of" America's closest regional allies.

Amr Hamzawy, Carnegie Middle East Center research director said:

"The big, grand ideological narratives were not seen today. This was not about 'Islam is the solution' or anything else." It's about people fed up with a repressive, corrupt dictatorship, wanting democracy, jobs and poverty relief. It's about Mubarak denying them for decades.

Protest organizers coordinated online for a "Day of Revolution against torture, poverty, corruption and unemployment," on a day honoring police used by dissidents to protest their brutality.

Drivers and others joined protesters, chanting, "The people want the downfall of the regime....Freedom, freedom, freedom!"

According to American University of Cairo Professor Mustapha Makel al-Sayyid:

"I think it is the beginning of (broader social unrest). Some of the demonstrators are still in (Cairo's) Tahrir (Square) and said they will not leave until their demands are met by the government." After police forced them out, al-Sayyid added, "Their demands will not be met....but they will not give up."

On January 26, London Independent long-time Middle East observer Robert Fisk headlined, "A new truth dawns on the Arab world," saying:

"(T)he Egyptian people are calling for the downfall of President Mubarak, and the Lebanese are appointing a (Hezbollah-allied) prime minister....Rarely has the Arab world seen anything like this....(A)cross the Middle East, we are waiting to see the downfall of America's friends. In Egypt, Mr. Mubarak must be wondering where he flies to. In Lebanon, America's friends are collapsing....We do not know what comes next." Neither does Washington and regional despots, perhaps arranging their own safe havens.

On January 25, Al Jazeera headlined, "Egypt protesters clash with police," saying:

Some "hurl(ed) rocks and climb)ed) atop an armored police truck" chanting anti-Mubarak slogans. Police responded with water cannons, tear gas, and attacking crowds with batons. Several deaths were reported and dozens of arrests. Al Jazeera's Rawya Rageh called the protests "unprecedented," especially after authorities warned about not emulating Tunisia, and Egypt bans all demonstrations without permits rarely given - never for large numbers..

Egyptian blogger Hossam El Hamalawy spoke for many saying:

"We want a functioning government. We want Mubarak to step down. We don't want emergency law. We don't want to live under this kind of oppression anymore. Enough is enough. Things have to change and if Tunisia can do it, why can't we?"

Online, a domino effect spread similar sentiment. El Hamalawy said Facebook organizers wrote:

"People are fed up with Mubarak and his dictatorship and his torture chambers and his failed economic policies. If Mubarak is not overthrown tomorrow then it will be the day after. If it's not the day after it's going to be next week."

Egypt's state-owned Al Ahram quoted Said Hossam Zaki, Ministry of Foreign Affairs spokesman saying Egyptian demonstrations aren't new, without explaining state restrictions or Mubarak's policy to target dissent. Instead he said:

"It is incumbent on everyone to realize that there is a new law against terrorism, which replaces the emergency law applied until now, but what should be emphasized is that people who want to go out to the streets to voice their demands" may do it.

Wednesday night, January 26, Al Jazeera reported "running clashes throughout Cairo." More protests are expected as demonstrators show "no signs of stopping so far."

Al Ahram also said 90 were arrested in Cairo, more elsewhere, and many others targeted for investigations perhaps leading to imprisonment, torture and death. An independent lawyer coalition reported six deaths and said at least 1,200 were detained. For sure many more will be as protests continue.

On January 25, University of Wisconsin Professor Seif Da'Na headlined, "The Mideast: 'A New Era' from Cairo," saying:

"Repercussions of the Tunisia example will be deep and significant and will be felt throughout the region. The uprising signifies not only the failure of the neoliberal model that Arab regimes pursued, but also the futility of political oppression to enforce this model in the long run. The event signifies the beginning of a new era that must be seen as a process of change and might lead to the creation of a new region."

Possibilities are, in fact, breathtaking and broad, embracing political, economic, and social demands "signifying the dead-end of a system that employed excessive political oppression to enforce destructive neoliberal economic policies. Privatizing the public sector essentially reversed the post independence economic achievements of these countries," creating inequality and intolerable conditions for most people. Now they're reacting, inspired by early Tunisia successes that continue demanding ouster of all former government officials.

Most interim cabinet members, including acting Prime Minister Mohamed Ghannouchi, are regime holdovers. For days, police showed restraint. On January 24, they changed tactics with tear gas, razor wire barriers, and other measures against protestors refusing to disperse, defying curfew orders by camping out peacefully all night, demanding a new government.

Twenty-two year-old Othmene spoke for others, saying; "We will stay here until the government resigns and runs away like Ben Ali." Teachers and civil servants went on strike joining them, assuring protests continue.

Potentially the entire region is affected. Other protests erupted in Algeria, Yemen and Jordan, at times met with deadly force. On January 22, AP said over a dozen people were killed in Algiers, Algeria's capital. Protesters said dozens more were injured. Said Sadi, head of the Rally for Culture and Democracy (RCD), said the group's leader, Othmane Amazouz, was arrested.

On January 21, RCD, the Algerian League for the Defense of Human Rights (LADDH), the Socialist Forces Front (FFS), and four trade unions formed a national democracy movement for change.

In a region with endemic poverty, Yemen is the Arab world's poorest country with extreme depravation and youth unemployment levels, an explosive mix fueling unrest. On January 22, around 2,500 demonstrated at the University of Sanaa. Others occurred in Aden, Lahj and elsewhere. Police and military forces responded repressively with tear gas, live fire and mortars, arresting dozens and causing at least one death.

On January 21, thousands protested in Amman and other Jordanian cities demanding "bread and freedom," as well as ouster of government officials, chanting: "(Prime Minister Samir) Rafia, out, out! People of Jordan will not bow!"

Throughout the region, common interests drive protests, including state repression, mass unemployment and poverty, rising food and fuel prices, malnutrition, and for some starvation, a neoliberal caused catastrophe erupting regionally for change.

Today, in the Middle East. Tomorrow perhaps globally given growing levels of human depravation everywhere, including in developed countries like America.

Stephen Lendman lives in Chicago and can be reached at lendmanstephen@sbcglobal.net. Also visit his blog site at sjlendman.blogspot.com and listen to cutting-edge discussions with distinguished guests on the Progressive Radio News Hour on the Progressive Radio Network Thursdays at 10AM US Central time and Saturdays and Sundays at noon. All programs are archived for easy listening.

http://www.progressiveradionetwork.com/the...sive-news-hour/.

TheUnhivedMind - January 28, 2011 12:30 AM (GMT)

Protesters set fire to government buildings in Egypt

Foreign Secretary William Hague and US Secretary of State Hilary Clinton have urged peace as violent protest against President Mubarak in Egypt run into a second day.

27 Jan 2011
http://www.telegraph.co.uk/news/worldnews/...s-in-Egypt.html

Thousands of Egyptians have vented their rage against President Hosni Mubarak's autocratic government over two days of protests that defied a ban on public gatherings.

Baton-wielding police responded with tear gas and beatings in a crackdown that has shown no tolerance for dissent.

Egypt's largest anti-government protests in years echo the recent uprising in Tunisia.

TheUnhivedMind - January 28, 2011 12:30 AM (GMT)

ElBaradei back home as Egyptians brace for Friday protests

By the CNN Wire Staff
January 27, 2011 4:59 p.m. EST
http://www.cnn.com/2011/WORLD/africa/01/27...dex.html?hpt=T1

Cairo, Egypt (CNN) -- On the eve of massive displays of anti-government ferment across the world's most populous Arab nation, opposition leader Mohamed ElBaradei arrived in Cairo and said "there is no going back" on change.

ElBaradei, the Egyptian Nobel laureate, said people have taken to the streets because they "realize the regime is not listening, not acting."

"The barrier of fear is broken," ElBaradei said after he arrived in Egypt from Europe on Thursday. "And it will not come back."

The county has been bracing for a huge outpouring of protests after Friday prayers.
Egyptian protesters online
Egypt cracks down on protesters
Egyptian protests got 'so big so fast'
Egypt: Worst case scenario RELATED TOPICS
Mohamed ElBaradei
Egypt

The Muslim Brotherhood has called for its followers to demonstrate after the weekly Muslim prayers, the first time in the current round of unrest that the largest opposition bloc has told supporters to take to the streets.

Now ElBaradei has said he will take part in the protests and passed along "advice to the regime: It's now the time to listen to the people. Make an innocent collective change."

He called for demonstrations to be peaceful and for the government of President Hosni Mubarak to stop detaining and torturing people. He said that a violent response from the government is "counterproductive" and that the regime should promote democracy and social justice.

"I am asking the regime to listen to the people before it is too late," the opposition leader said, adding that he hopes to help broker a peaceful resolution to the unrest.

The U.S. Embassy in Cairo issued a message Thursday telling Americans that "areas where people congregate after Friday prayers should be avoided."

"While many of the demonstrations have focused on the downtown Cairo/Tahrir Square area, violent confrontations have occurred at other locations both in the Cairo metropolitan area and in Alexandria, Suez, and other cities," it said.

President Barack Obama urged the Egyptian government and demonstrators to refrain from violence.

"It is very important that people have mechanisms in order to express legitimate grievances," he said Thursday.

With all eyes in the country focused on the protests, some events have been suspended. The Egyptian football federation has decided to postpone games scheduled for Friday and Saturday until further notice, according to Egypt's official news agency.

There was still a smattering of street protesters on Thursday after massive public protests on Tuesday and Wednesday calling for the ouster of Mubarak convulsed the nation and prompted a tough security crackdown.

Cairo was quiet Thursday compared with previous days, but there appear to have been smaller skirmishes, and more are anticipated as night comes.

In Suez, the port city east of Cairo on the Gulf of Suez, people congregated to demand the release of those detained, and clashes broke out between demonstrators and security forces. The city has long been home to resentment against the government for economic and social reasons.

Hani Abdel Latif, an Interior Ministry official, said that 50 people demonstrated peacefully in Ismaeliya. But there were news reports of clashes there.

In Egypt's Sinai region, there were clashes between security forces and protesters, television footage of the scene showed.

Egypt briefly closed its stock market Thursday after it fell sharply. It reopened about an hour later.

At the same time, Egypt's ruling National Democratic Party made reference to the discontent on the streets. Secretary-General Safwat al-Sherif said the party wants to talk with the youths who have been at the forefront of the protests.

The protest movement in Egypt has been fueled by blogs and social media sites like Twitter and Facebook. ElBaradei, who is also the former head of the United Nations' nuclear watchdog agency, has been posting messages of support for the demonstrators on Twitter.

"We shall continue to exercise our right of peaceful demonstration and restore our freedom & dignity. Regime violence will backfire badly," he said in one of his latest tweets.

A Facebook page devoted to Friday's planned protests had more than 80,000 followers as of 2 p.m. ET Thursday, compared with 20,000 the previous day.

As he was waiting to leave Vienna, Austria, ElBaradei said he was going to Egypt to "make sure that things will be managed in a peaceful way."

"I have to give them as much support, political support, spiritual, moral support, whatever I can do, you know," he said. "I will be with them. They are my people, and I have to be there, and I'd like to see Egypt, a new Egypt."

In an interview Tuesday on CNN's "Connect the World," ElBaradei disputed a recent comment by U.S. Secretary of State Hillary Clinton that the Egyptian government is stable.

"Stability is when you have a government that is elected on a free and fair basis. And we have seen, you know, how the election has been rigged in Egypt. We have seen how people have been tortured," he said.

ElBaradei was asked whether he would run for the presidency of Egypt.

"The priority for me," he said, "is to shift Egypt into a democracy, is to catch up with the 21st century, to get Egypt to be a modern and ... moderate society and respecting human rights, respecting the basic freedoms of the people.

"Whether I run or not, that is totally irrelevant. And I made it very clear, I will not run under the present conditions, when the deck is stacked completely."

The outpouring of protests has led to unprecedented violence this week.

Police turned water cannons and tear gas on protesters Wednesday to try to break up anti-government demonstrations as the Interior Ministry warned it "will not allow any provocative movement or a protest or rallies or demonstrations."

In the heart of Cairo, people were being beaten with sticks and fists and demonstrators were being dragged away amid tear gas. Witnesses saw security forces harassing journalists and photographers. Demonstrations continued into the nighttime hours.

In Suez, state-run Nile News TV reported violent clashes Wednesday night between security forces and protesters.

At least 27 people were wounded, Nile News said, most of them police officers. Quoting provincial officials, the station said most of the clashes took place in the Alarbeen neighborhood and that looters attacked some shops.

The Muslim Brotherhood said 35 people were injured in Suez and that security forces in the city had implemented a curfew there Wednesday night.

Families and friends of people slain in Suez said angry demonstrations occurred because police didn't hand over the bodies of those killed.

TheUnhivedMind - January 28, 2011 01:06 AM (GMT)

Internet A Battlefield In Egypt

By Jesse Emspak | January 26, 2011 6:44 PM EST
http://www.ibtimes.com/articles/105506/201...le-in-egypt.htm

The internet has become a venue for battles between the Egyptian government and protesters, through social networking sites such as Facebook and the home pages of groups such as Anonymous and the People's Liberation Front.

Facebook has at least two pages, Operation Egypt and one titled Egypt's Protests. The former carries calls to arms, asking for volunteers to mount distributed denial of service attacks. The latter has posted messages and videos, such as one that said the Ministry of Awqaf which is in charge of religious endowments, might work with the Ministry of the Interior to stop Friday prayers.

Web sites run by the Egyptian government, notably the Ministry of Communications and Information Technology and the Ministry of the Interior, experienced sporadic problems. Twitter was reportedly down in Egypt and a message posted to the Operation Egypt page says Facebook is unstable.

Must Read
Sarah Palin slams Obama's State of the Union speech
Most Anticipated Tech Of 2011

But it is not clear if that is due to action from the government or from the people performing DDoS attacks. A DDoS attack can sometimes shut down large parts of a communications infrastructure, as routers attempt to offload traffic that overwhelms them. One problem with DDoS attacks, says Barry Greene, president of the Internet Systems Consortium, is the collateral damage - sometimes in an attempt to shut down the Ministry of the Interior, for example, the communications infrastructure of the protesters could be affected as well.

The People's Liberation Front page called for a fax/email bomb - basically deluging the email servers and fax machines with traffic. It is not known if any such attacks were mounted or if they had any effect.

The Anonymous collective, linking from the Operation Egypt page, has asked in the IRC chat rooms that users access a web-based version of a program called Low Orbit Ion Cannon or download it, according to reports from netcraft.com, which publishes news on online security. The software stages DDoS attacks and was originally written as a stress-testing application.

TheUnhivedMind - January 28, 2011 02:02 AM (GMT)

UPDATE: (7:35 p.m. ET) AFP reports that cell phone text messaging also appears to be down in Egypt.

TheUnhivedMind - January 28, 2011 02:03 AM (GMT)

Man shot dead:

http://video.ap.org/?f=None&pid=oT7qj_wiVH...cwok4_irYjJ2R8Z

TheUnhivedMind - January 28, 2011 02:03 AM (GMT)

[dohtml]<embed width="320" height="240" quality="high" bgcolor="#000000" name="main" id="main" allowscriptaccess="always" allowfullscreen="true" src="http://video.godlikeproductions.com/modules/vPlayer/vPlayer.swf?f=http://video.godlikeproductions.com/modules/vPlayer/vPlayercfg.php?fid=07eb89d841848236675" type="application/x-shockwave-flash"/></embed>[/dohtml]

TheUnhivedMind - January 28, 2011 02:08 AM (GMT)

Breaking Intelligence on the Suez Situation – Get This Out!

Arabic Language video describing mass shootings in Suez city on the evening of the 26th January 2011 with text translation.

Philip Brennan | PhilipBrennan.net | 27 January 2011:
http://theintelhub.com/2011/01/27/breaking...n-get-this-out/

I have finally managed to get a translation / transcript in English of a very important video from last night, so I am posting it up now and I ask that you make this go viral.

[dohtml]<object width="640" height="390"><param name="movie" value="http://www.youtube.com/v/BWONR4AT8N0&hl=en_US&feature=player_embedded&version=3"></param><param name="allowFullScreen" value="true"></param><param name="allowScriptAccess" value="always"></param><embed src="http://www.youtube.com/v/BWONR4AT8N0&hl=en_US&feature=player_embedded&version=3" type="application/x-shockwave-flash" allowfullscreen="true" allowScriptAccess="always" width="640" height="390"></embed></object>[/dohtml]

Translation / Transcript:

The anchor: Secretariat of the national assembly for change Ahmad … Mister Ahmad: Can you describe what is happening in suez now ?

Mr Ahmad: What is happening now in Suez goes beyond the imagination of logic and mind. What is happening in Suez now is a real streets war with all what it means .. Now on the ground, there are tens of rallies in the streets of Suez.. Now there are tens of people on the ground some injured and some killed .. There is burning of the headquarters of Arbaeen neighborhood, and the police station of Muthallath .. There is burning of the headquarter of the national party in Arbaeen .. There is an unprecedented kind of violence. The police is hitting by live and rubber bullets since yesterday.

We counted today morning 4 victims, but now the number exceeds this a lot ,, a lot more .

The anchor: Did you observe these numbers or you have numbers from hospitals or more trusted sources ?

Mr Ahmad: There is a lot of chaos that doesn't allow you to get the exact numbers. The situation is out of control and can't be measured by logic .. There is unprecedented violence on the ground done by the security forces in Suez . Yesterday, the rallies continued from 12 till 6:25 .. Tens of thousands of Suez citizens went out on one of the finest peaceful demonstrations. The demonstrations went on for 6 hours and not a single stone was thrown. Not even a single glass board was broken .. Till 6:25 we were leading a peaceful rallies in Suez .. We were calling for the departure of Moubarak and the necessity of political amendments .. At 6:25 the security started to clash with the citizens in a very dangerous way .. The politics was out and the issue turned into mutual violence .. In this mutual violence live and rubber bullets were used ,, The police haven't used live bullets in any of the governorates except in Suez .. We appeal to the whole world , we appeal to the conscience, what is happening in Suez is a crime.

The anchor: OK time ran out , Mr Ahmad, the head of the Secretariat of the national assembly for change , thank you.

Major Hat Tip: gerrard2785882

Please disseminate this video with the text translation / transcript far and wide and let's blow the Suez Massacre wide open. The translator is trustworthy as a personal friend of mine, and I will vouch for the veracity of the above translation / transcript personally.

Man Shot At Egypt Protests

Suspected Massacre in Suez, Egypt — Martial Law?
http://theintelhub.com/2011/01/27/sus…

Breaking Intelligence on the Suez Situation — Get This Out!
http://theintelhub.com/2011/01/27/bre…

Violent protests escalate outside Egypt's capital http://news.yahoo.com/s/ap/20110127/a…

Booming city of Suez microcosm of Egypt's anger http://www.google.com/hostednews/ap/a…

Egyptians torch police post in Suez http://af.reuters.com/article/topNews…
Egypt: Riots resume in Suez, north Sinai http://www.ynetnews.com/articles/0,73…

Arab rights group slams Egypt government's "siege" on Suez http://www.monstersandcritics.com/new…

Egypt unrest day three: Riots in Suez and ElBaradei urges Mubarak to retire http://www.haaretz.com/news/internati…

[dohtml]<object width="640" height="390"><param name="movie" value="http://www.youtube.com/v/hm7XLsSbJhA&hl=en_US&feature=player_embedded&version=3"></param><param name="allowFullScreen" value="true"></param><param name="allowScriptAccess" value="always"></param><embed src="http://www.youtube.com/v/hm7XLsSbJhA&hl=en_US&feature=player_embedded&version=3" type="application/x-shockwave-flash" allowfullscreen="true" allowScriptAccess="always" width="640" height="390"></embed></object>

<object width="640" height="390"><param name="movie" value="http://www.youtube.com/v/DW5UCuwGi1g&hl=en_US&feature=player_embedded&version=3"></param><param name="allowFullScreen" value="true"></param><param name="allowScriptAccess" value="always"></param><embed src="http://www.youtube.com/v/

DW5UCuwGi1g&hl=en_US&feature=player_embedded&version=3" type="application/x-shockwave-flash" allowfullscreen="true" allowScriptAccess="always" width="640" height="390"></embed></object>[/dohtml]

TheUnhivedMind - January 28, 2011 02:09 AM (GMT)

Egypt Internet Goes Down, According To Reports

First Posted: 01/27/11
http://www.huffingtonpost.com/2011/01/27/e...-_n_815156.html

Reports are emerging that Internet has gone down in Cairo and perhaps throughout Egypt, only hours before the largest planned protests yet.

According to a report from The Arabist, "Egypt has shut off the internet."

Multiple Internet Service Providers are affected according to the report, which states:
I just received a call from a friend in Cairo (I won't say who it is now because he's a prominent activist) telling me neither his DSL nor his USB internet service is working. I've just checked with two other friends in different parts of Cairo and their internet is not working either.

The news of the Internet outage came minutes after the Associated Press published a video of an Egyptian protestor being shot.

CNN reporter Ben Wedeman confirmed Internet is down in Cairo and writes, "No internet, no SMS, what is next? Mobile phones and land lines? So much for stability. #Jan25 #Egypt"

The Los Angeles Times is also reporting that BlackBerry Internet has been taken offline in Egypt.

UPDATE (7:05 p.m. ET) Reuters confirms "major network disruptions" for Egypt Internet users at this time, with reports in Cairo that there is no Internet altogether. A top state official declined to comment.
Advertisement

UPDATE: (7:30 p.m. ET) The Associated Press also confirms widespread Internet outages in Egypt. Italy-based Seabone, a major Internet service provider for Egypt, reported early Friday there was no Internet traffic going into or out of the country after 12:30 a.m. local time.

UPDATE: (7:35 p.m. ET) AFP reports that cell phone text messaging also appears to be down in Egypt.

UPDATE: (7:45 p.m. ET) Independent citizen media organization Global Voices just posted a report on Egypt's "Internet black hole" and notes it will attempt to file future reports from Egypt via phone calls and other communication methods.

TheUnhivedMind - January 28, 2011 02:11 AM (GMT)

matiaswork: Egypt Situation Gets Worse, People Reporting Internet And SMS Shutdown http://goo.gl/fb/kpEgm less than 20 seconds ago via Google

Police in #Egypt use deadly force trying 2 put down 3days of protests, yet the ppl continue 2 march 4 jobs & more. Our lead story on #CNN less than 20 seconds ago via web

TheUnhivedMind - January 28, 2011 02:12 AM (GMT)

Egypt Leaves the Internet

By James Cowie on January 27, 2011 7:56 PM | No Comments | No TrackBacks
http://www.renesys.com/blog/2011/01/egypt-...-internet.shtml

Confirming what a few have reported this evening: in an action unprecedented in Internet history, the Egyptian government appears to have ordered service providers to shut down all international connections to the Internet. Critical European-Asian fiber-optic routes through Egypt appear to be unaffected for now. But every Egyptian provider, every business, bank, Internet cafe, website, school, embassy, and government office that relied on the big four Egyptian ISPs for their Internet connectivity is now cut off from the rest of the world. Link Egypt, Vodafone/Raya, Telecom Egypt, Etisalat Misr, and all their customers and partners are, for the moment, off the air.

At 22:34 UTC (00:34am local time), Renesys observed the virtually simultaneous withdrawal of all routes to Egyptian networks in the Internet's global routing table. Approximately 3,500 individual BGP routes were withdrawn, leaving no valid paths by which the rest of the world could continue to exchange Internet traffic with Egypt's service providers. Virtually all of Egypt's Internet addresses are now unreachable, worldwide.

We will continue to dig into the event, and will update this story as we learn more. As Friday dawns in Cairo under this unprecedented communications blackout, keep the Egyptian people in your thoughts.

TheUnhivedMind - January 28, 2011 02:15 AM (GMT)

RT @alshaheeed: SOS: Internet & Landlines cut. They will massacre us.

RT @monaeltahawy: I'm an #Egyptian who lives in NYC. Pls spread far and wide: EGYPT IS ON INFO LOCKDOWN. #MUBARAK REGIME HAS SHUT DOWN THE INTERNET

Internet - •••••••••••••• ••••••••••• Social Network ••••••••••• •••••••••• Egypt •• Twitter •••••••••••••••••••••

RT @habibh: SOS: Police are setting cars in streets on fire. No one knows why. Everyone sure there'll be a massacre tmr #Jan25 #Egypt (via @Heba_S09) enigmaticevil: RT @alshaheeed: Police agents are pouring petrol in all main squares to light them up during protests. Please retweet & Share #Egypt #Jan25 ivanpaya: RT @alihabibi1: CNN confirms internet is down in ALL of Egypt. Egypt now is total blackhole... plz spread the word

Butterflymom611: RT @Bamyabombom: @Dima_Khatib Recieved informationl that there have been massive arrests of about 350 political activists mainly from MB #Jan25 #Egypt mrtylermartins: RT @RevDebra: wowRT @ smoricebrubaker Egypt update:internet shut down, SMS and Blackberry down, plainclothes police setting cars on fire sarahnoellee: Cops in plain clothes igniting shit with petrol in Egypt. Damn.

nickmendez: RT @blogsofwar: So egypt goes into total blackout on the eve of what may be a revolution and not a single 24/7 news network is talking about it. Really?

kalongi - January 28, 2011 12:18 PM (GMT)

Egypt Braces for Massive Riots after Friday Prayers

by Maayana Miskin
Published: 01/28/11, 12:55 PM
http://www.israelnationalnews.com/News/News.aspx/142010

Egypt is bracing for major riots Friday, with demonstrations planned throughout the country after Friday morning prayers. Three people were killed this week in the largest demonstrations in Egypt in 25 years.

The major protests follow the recent successful revolt in Tunisia. Demonstrators are calling on Egyptian President Hosni Mubarak to step down from power and allow open and fair elections.

The country's four primary Internet providers all cut service shortly after midnight. Mobile phone signals were disrupted as well, in an apparent attempt by authorities to make it more difficult for protesters to organize or to get footage of the demonstrations out of the country.

Organizers have switched to contacting friends abroad on landlines. Footage and reports from protests earlier in the week were online almost instantly as demonstrators updated their pages on social networking sites such as Twitter and Facebook while riots were ongoing.

Muslim Brotherhood Joins the Fray

The latest government crackdown may be a response to the Muslim Brotherhood's announcement on Thursday that it will join Friday's demonstration. The Brotherhood is Egypt's largest opposition group, and its participation could give the counter-government rallies new strength.

One Brotherhood leader told reporters, "Tomorrow is going to be the day of the intifada." He predicted that many of the Brotherhood's younger members, some as young as 15, would take part in Friday's demonstrations.

Leading opposition member Mohamed ElBaradei has also thrown his weight behind the protests.

Overthrow Planned in Detail

According to a report in the Hebrew-language daily Maariv, Mubarak has reason for concern, as those organizing the demonstrations have planned his overthrow in detail. Documents spelling out how to revolt against the administration reportedly include satellite images of strategic sites and major intersections.

The documents, given to activist leaders, also include instructions on how to seize Mubarak's presidential palace, television and radio stations, and the seats of local government throughout the country, according to the report.

TheUnhivedMind - January 28, 2011 05:27 PM (GMT)

BLACK POPE VISITS EGYPT, THEN ALL HELL BREAKS LOOSE:

http://z10.invisionfree.com/The_Unhived_Mi...showtopic=51389

kalongi - January 28, 2011 05:53 PM (GMT)

Military deployed on streets of Cairo as clashes continue

Mubarak orders military reinforcement for first time since anti-gov't protests began; ruling party headquarters goes up in flames in Cairo; 2 killed in clashes hours earlier, ElBaradei under house arrest.

By JPOST.COM STAFF AND ASSOCIATED PRESS
01/28/2011 19:09
http://www.jpost.com/MiddleEast/Article.aspx?id=205661

CAIRO — Egypt's military on Friday deployed on the streets of Cairo for the first time since anti-government protesters took up their challenge to the regime of President Hosni Mubarak four days ago.

Parts of the ruling party headquarters in Cairo were going up in flames apparently set by enraged protesters demanding Mubarak's ouster.

One woman was killed in Cairo, and another man was shot to death in Suez on Friday in the mass protests against the government.

The Egyptian government imposed a curfew from 6 pm to 7 am, in the cities of Cairo, Alexandria, and Suez after violent demonstrations there.

The decree was handed down by Egyptian President Hosni Mubarak who ordered the Egyptian army to give reinforcement to police to quell the protests, reported al-Jazeera.

Also Friday, police placed Nobel Peace laureate Mohamed ElBaradei under house arrest.

Earlier, after joining the latest round of protests, ElBaradei and his supporters were forced to hide inside a mosque while hundreds of riot police laid siege to it, firing tear gas in the streets around so no one could leave.

One of the leaders of the opposition, Ayman Nour of the “El-Ghad” movement, also sustained a head injury from a stone, said al-Jazeera.

Friday’s protests saw tens of thousands of anti-government demonstrators pouring into the streets of Egypt, stoning and confronting police who fired back with rubber bullets and tear gas in the most violent and chaotic scenes yet in the challenge to President Hosni Mubarak’s 30-year rule.

Groups of thousands of protesters, some chanting “out, out, out,” gathered at different venues across Cairo, some marching toward major squares and across scenic Nile bridges. Security officials said there were protests in at least 11 of the country’s 28 provinces.

The protesters have said they are emboldened by the uprising in Tunisia, another north African Arab nation. Egypt is Washington’s closest Arab ally, but Mubarak may be losing US support. The Obama administration has publicly counseled Mubarak to introduce reforms and refrain from using violence against the protesters.

The United States said the situation in Egypt is of “deep concern” and called on Egyptian authorities to enact reforms and allow peaceful protests and open communication as anti-government street protests swell.

State Department spokesman PJ Crowley said Friday that Egypt must respect the “fundamental rights” of its people and avoid violence. He also said reform is vital to the country’s long-term stability and security, and urged the government to view its people as a partner and not a threat.

Crowley’s comments were posted on Twitter, which has been blocked by Egyptian authorities. Secretary of State Hillary Rodham Clinton is expected to address the developments in Egypt later Friday.

Mubarak has not been seen publicly or heard from since the protests began Tuesday. While Mubarak may still have a chance to ride out this latest challenge, his choices are limited, and all are likely to lead to a loosening of his grip on power.

Mubarak has not said yet whether he will stand for another six-year term as president in elections this year. He has never appointed a deputy and is thought to be grooming his son Gamal to succeed him despite popular opposition. According to leaked US memos, hereditary succession also does not meet with the approval of the powerful military.

Mubarak and his government have shown no hint of concessions to the protesters who want political reform and a solution to rampant poverty, unemployment and rising food prices.

TheUnhivedMind - January 28, 2011 10:50 PM (GMT)

Egypt: Mubarak sacks cabinet and defends security role

Tens of thousands took part in the protests in Cairo and other cities

28 January 2011 Last updated at 22:42
http://www.bbc.co.uk/news/world-middle-east-11777943

President Hosni Mubarak has defended the role of Egypt's security forces in suppressing anti-government protests which have rocked the country.

Mr Mubarak also dismissed his government and said a new cabinet would be announced on Saturday.

It was his first statement since the protests - in which at least 26 have died with hundreds injured - began.

Tens of thousands took part in protests in Cairo, Suez, Alexandria and other cities.

Protesters set fire to the headquarters of the governing NDP party and besieged state TV and the foreign ministry.

At least 13 people were killed in Suez on Friday, while in Cairo, five people died, according to medical sources.
Set ablaze

The authorities announced a curfew from 1800 to 0700 local time (1600-0500 GMT) which was immediately and widely flouted.

The headquarters of the governing NDP party has been set ablaze, while protesters also besieged the state broadcaster and the foreign ministry.

Mr Mubarak was speaking for the first time since the crisis began Internet and phone services - both mobile and landline - have been severely disrupted, although protesters are using proxies to work around the restrictions.

Correspondents in Cairo say military helicopters have been circling overhead.

The US, which counts Egypt as a key ally, has appealed for calm from both sides, saying it has urged President Mubarak to enact reforms.

However, White House spokesman Robert Gibbs said Washington would review its aid to Egypt based on events in the coming days.

Britain, the US and France are advising against non-essential travel to Egypt.

TheUnhivedMind - January 28, 2011 11:31 PM (GMT)

Egypt protests: America's secret backing for rebel leaders behind uprising

The American government secretly backed leading figures behind the Egyptian uprising who have been planning “regime change” for the past three years, The Daily Telegraph has learned.

By Tim Ross, Matthew Moore and Steven Swinford 9:23PM GMT 28 Jan 2011
http://www.telegraph.co.uk/news/worldnews/...d-uprising.html

The American Embassy in Cairo helped a young dissident attend a US-sponsored summit for activists in New York, while working to keep his identity secret from Egyptian state police.

On his return to Cairo in December 2008, the activist told US diplomats that an alliance of opposition groups had drawn up a plan to overthrow President Hosni Mubarak and install a democratic government in 2011.

He has already been arrested by Egyptian security in connection with the demonstrations and his identity is being protected by The Daily Telegraph.

The crisis in Egypt follows the toppling of Tunisian president Zine al-Abedine Ben Ali, who fled the country after widespread protests forced him from office.

The disclosures, contained in previously secret US diplomatic dispatches released by the WikiLeaks website, show American officials pressed the Egyptian government to release other dissidents who had been detained by the police.

Mr Mubarak, facing the biggest challenge to his authority in his 31 years in power, ordered the army on to the streets of Cairo yesterday as rioting erupted across Egypt.

Tens of thousands of anti-government protesters took to the streets in open defiance of a curfew. An explosion rocked the centre of Cairo as thousands defied orders to return to their homes. As the violence escalated, flames could be seen near the headquarters of the governing National Democratic Party.

Police fired rubber bullets and used tear gas and water cannon in an attempt to disperse the crowds.

At least five people were killed in Cairo alone yesterday and 870 injured, several with bullet wounds. Mohamed ElBaradei, the pro-reform leader and Nobel Peace Prize winner, was placed under house arrest after returning to Egypt to join the dissidents. Riots also took place in Suez, Alexandria and other major cities across the country.

William Hague, the Foreign Secretary, urged the Egyptian government to heed the “legitimate demands of protesters”. Hillary Clinton, the US Secretary of State, said she was “deeply concerned about the use of force” to quell the protests.

In an interview for the American news channel CNN, to be broadcast tomorrow, David Cameron said: “I think what we need is reform in Egypt. I mean, we support reform and progress in the greater strengthening of the democracy and civil rights and the rule of law.”

The US government has previously been a supporter of Mr Mubarak’s regime. But the leaked documents show the extent to which America was offering support to pro-democracy activists in Egypt while publicly praising Mr Mubarak as an important ally in the Middle East.

In a secret diplomatic dispatch, sent on December 30 2008, Margaret Scobey, the US Ambassador to Cairo, recorded that opposition groups had allegedly drawn up secret plans for “regime change” to take place before elections, scheduled for September this year.

The memo, which Ambassador Scobey sent to the US Secretary of State in Washington DC, was marked “confidential” and headed: “April 6 activist on his US visit and regime change in Egypt.”

It said the activist claimed “several opposition forces” had “agreed to support an unwritten plan for a transition to a parliamentary democracy, involving a weakened presidency and an empowered prime minister and parliament, before the scheduled 2011 presidential elections”. The embassy’s source said the plan was “so sensitive it cannot be written down”.

Ambassador Scobey questioned whether such an “unrealistic” plot could work, or ever even existed. However, the documents showed that the activist had been approached by US diplomats and received extensive support for his pro-democracy campaign from officials in Washington. The embassy helped the campaigner attend a “summit” for youth activists in New York, which was organised by the US State Department.

Cairo embassy officials warned Washington that the activist’s identity must be kept secret because he could face “retribution” when he returned to Egypt. He had already allegedly been tortured for three days by Egyptian state security after he was arrested for taking part in a protest some years earlier.

The protests in Egypt are being driven by the April 6 youth movement, a group on Facebook that has attracted mainly young and educated members opposed to Mr Mubarak. The group has about 70,000 members and uses social networking sites to orchestrate protests and report on their activities.

The documents released by WikiLeaks reveal US Embassy officials were in regular contact with the activist throughout 2008 and 2009, considering him one of their most reliable sources for information about human rights abuses.

TheUnhivedMind - January 28, 2011 11:44 PM (GMT)

Mubarak defends protests crackdown

28 Jan 2011
http://www.thisislondon.co.uk/standard/art...ts-crackdown.do

Embattled President Hosni Mubarak has appeared on television for the first time since protests erupted demanding his ousting, and he said he will press ahead with social, economic and political reforms.

He defended the security forces' crackdown on protesters.

Protesters have seized the streets of Cairo, battling police with stones and firebombs, burning down the ruling party headquarters, and defying a night curfew enforced by a military deployment.

Mr Mubarak later said he asked his Cabinet to resign. He called anti-government protests part of a plot to destabilise Egypt and destroy the legitimacy of his regime.

Earlier, Egypt's military deployed on the streets of Cairo to enforce a night-time curfew as the sun set on a day of rioting and violent chaos that was a major escalation in the challenge to authoritarian President Mubarak's 30-year rule.

Thousands in the capital still defied a nationwide curfew and were trying to storm two major government buildings - the state TV headquarters and the Foreign Ministry. Others were praying on the streets after nightfall.

Flames rose up across a number of cities from burning tyres and police cars.

Even the ruling party headquarters in Cairo was ablaze in the outpouring of rage, bitterness and utter frustration with a regime seen as corrupt, heavy handed and neglectful of grinding poverty that afflicts nearly half of the 80 million Egyptians.

Hundreds were looting television sets and electric fans from the burning complex of buildings used by the ruling party.

One protester was killed in demonstrations that stretched across nearly half the provinces in Egypt, bringing the death toll for four days of protests to eight.

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: Tunisian police fire in air to disperse rioters

Title: Tunisian police fire in air to disperse rioters

TheUnhivedMind - July 19, 2011 02:28 AM (GMT)

Tunisian police fire in air to disperse rioters

Tunisian police fired into the air to disperse rioters in the capital early on Sunday, and were attacked by crowds throwing petrol bombs in another city, in the most violent clashes yet involving Islamists.

6:15AM BST 18 Jul 2011
http://www.telegraph.co.uk/news/worldnews/...se-rioters.html

The rioting is the starkest sign to date of the friction between Tunisia's secular establishment and Islamists who have been growing more assertive since the country's autocratic leader was ousted in a revolution six months ago.

Sunday's violence was sparked by an incident on Friday when police, trying to break up an anti-government demonstration in the centre of Tunis, fired tear gas inside a mosque.

In the Intilaka district in the west of Tunis, about 200 youths - many of them with the beards typical of Islamists - set fire to a police station.

Police responded by shooting into the air and using tear gas, while a police helicopter hovered over the district, according to a Reuters reporter who witnessed the clashes. The clashes continued until about 3:00 a.m. (0200 GMT).

People in the crowd chanted "Allahu Akbar!" or "God is greatest!" They also shouted "You attacked Islam!" and "We are not afraid of your police!"

In the town of Menzel Bourguiba, about 70 km (45 miles) north of Tunis, four police officers were wounded in clashes with rioters, a police source told Reuters.

"Angry youths threw stones and Molotov cocktails at the police before heading to a police station to set it on fire," said the police source, who spoke on condition of anonymity.

"It was a terrible night ... We don't know what caused it but it is clear that among them (the rioters) there were lots of people with beards," said the source.

Tunisians overthrew autocratic leader Zine al-Abidine Ben Ali in a revolution in January that electrified the Arab world and inspired uprisings in Egypt and elsewhere.

Since then the caretaker authorities, who say they are committed to dismantling Ben Ali's repressive rule, have lifted a ban on Islamist parties and released hundreds of their followers from prison.

But the Islamists' resurgence has led to friction with the country's establishment and some people, who believe the Islamists are becoming too powerful and could undermine the country's secular values.

Anti-government activists not linked to the Islamists called for further demonstrations for later on Sunday in Tunis, and the provincial cities of Gafsa and Gassrine.

The secular opposition activists say the caretaker government has not made a clear break with Ben Ali's rule and that it is back-tracking on commitments to build a democratic system.

"This is our opportunity to renew the revolution," wrote one person on a Facebook page used by opposition activists. "It is time for the revolution to succeed."

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: Russia criticises US for recognising Libyan rebel

Title: Russia criticises US for recognising Libyan rebel Description: government

TheUnhivedMind - July 18, 2011 05:08 PM (GMT)

Russia criticises US for recognising Libyan rebel government

Decision to designate national transitional council as legitimate government is taking sides in civil war, says Moscow

guardian.co.uk, Monday 18 July 2011 11.17 BST
http://www.guardian.co.uk/world/2011/jul/1...ognition-russia

Russia has criticised the US and other countries for recognising the Libyan rebels' national transitional council as a legitimate government, saying they are taking sides in the civil war.

"Those who declare recognition stand fully on the side of one political force in a civil war," the Russian foreign minister, Sergei Lavrov, told reporters.

The US secretary of state, Hillary Clinton, announced the recognition of the rebels on Friday when she was in Turkey for a meeting of an international contact group on Libya.

The major diplomatic step could unblock billions of dollars in frozen Libyan funds for the campaign to end the 41-year rule of Muammar Gaddafi, who has resisted Nato bombing for nearly four months.

Russia, along with China, has taken a softer line towards Gaddafi. They were both invited to the Istanbul contact group meeting but did not attend.

"Supporters of such a decision are supporters of a policy of isolation, in this case the isolation of those forces that represent Tripoli," said Lavrov, adding that Moscow was in contact with both Tripoli and the rebels.

Russia abstained from voting on a resolution that authorised western force against Gaddafi to protect civilians. It has increasingly criticised the scope of the Nato campaign as well as the role of the Libya contact group.

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: Four dead in attack on Chinese police station

Title: Four dead in attack on Chinese police station

TheUnhivedMind - July 18, 2011 05:03 PM (GMT)

Four dead in attack on Chinese police station

At least four people died on Monday in western China's restive Xinjiang in what state media said was an attack on a police station, though an exile group said the incident started when police fired on protesters.

4:15PM BST 18 Jul 2011
http://www.telegraph.co.uk/news/worldnews/...ce-station.html

The violence was the worst Xinjiang has experienced in about a year. Last August, seven Chinese military police were killed when a member of the Uighur minority rammed them with an explosives-laden vehicle in the Xinjiang border region.

State television said the latest incident happened in the desert city of Hotan when a mob attacked a police station, taking hostages and setting it on fire.

Two hostages, a paramilitary policeman and a guard died in the violence, as well as several of the attackers, it reported. Six hostages were freed.

The situation has now been bought "under control", it said, and a team from the state anti-terrorism office was on its way to the scene. The attack took place in the city of Hotan.

The Xinjiang government was not immediately available for comment.

Dilxat Raxit of the Germany-based World Uyghur Congress said residents in Hotan had told his group that police opened fire on a peaceful protest, leading to fighting between the two sides.

"The people cannot stand the government's repression any longer," he said by telephone. Reuters was not able to independently verify his account.

Beijing often blames what it calls violent separatist groups in Xinjiang for attacks on police or other government targets, saying they work with al Qaeda or Central Asian militants to bring about an independent state called East Turkestan.

Many Uighurs – a Muslim, Turkic-speaking people native to the region – chafe under rule from Beijing and restrictions on their language, culture and religion.

They now make up less than half of Xinjiang's population after decades of immigration by the majority Han from other parts of China.

In July 2009, Xinjiang's capital Urumqi was rocked by violence between majority Han Chinese and minority Uighurs that killed nearly 200 people.

Since then, China has executed nine people it blamed for instigating the riots, detained and prosecuted hundreds of others and ramped up spending on security, according to state media and overseas rights groups.

Last month, Kazakhstan extradited a Uighur schoolteacher who had been granted U.N. refugee status to face charges of terrorism in China, brushing off concerns he could be tortured and that the charges against him were trumped up.

Xinjiang is strategically vital to China and Beijing has shown no sign of loosening its grip.

A vast swathe of territory, accounting for one-sixth of China's land mass, Xinjiang holds oil, gas and coal deposits and borders Afghanistan, Pakistan, India and Central Asia.

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: Fresh protest rallies hit Moroccan cities

Title: Fresh protest rallies hit Moroccan cities

TheUnhivedMind - July 18, 2011 03:33 AM (GMT)

Fresh protest rallies hit Moroccan cities

Mon Jul 18, 2011 1:0AM
http://www.presstv.ir/detail/189561.html

Protesters take part in a rally organised by the February 20 opposition movement in Casablanca July 10, 2011.

Thousands of Moroccan demonstrators have once again taken to streets in several cities to demand greater political reforms and social justice.

Peaceful rallies were held in the capital Rabat as well as the cities of Casablanca and Tangiers on Sunday, Reuters reported.

Several thousand protesters gathered in Casablanca's Sidi Othmane suburb and chanted slogans to demand "a democratic constitution" and "greater social justice."

Demonstrations have continued despite a referendum in which 98 percent of voters approved constitutional reforms that are aimed at limiting the powers of King Mohammed VI.

The opposition group which has held protest rallies in the North African nation for several months has expressed strong disapproval to the new changes in the country's constitution, calling them window-dressing.

The approved reforms include giving the government more executive authority. However, the charter will keep the cabinet, army and the judiciary in control of the king.

The February 20 Movement, the organizer of Sunday rallies, has vowed to continue the protests until more political reforms are introduced.

The protests are inspired by the Arab Spring movements that have toppled regimes in Tunisia and Egypt and shaken long-time autocracies elsewhere in the Arab world.

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: The fight to rescue the Arab spring

Title: The fight to rescue the Arab spring

TheUnhivedMind - July 18, 2011 01:22 AM (GMT)

The fight to rescue the Arab spring

Across the Arab world, protesters show fury at the resistance to change shown by interim authorities as well as old regimes

Ghaith Abdul-Ahad, Jack Shenker, Nour Ali, Martin Chulov and Ian Black guardian.co.uk, Friday 15 July 2011 19.51 BST
http://www.guardian.co.uk/world/2011/jul/1...ewed-protesters

The historic revolutions that have rippled through the Arab world this year were in danger of eclipse on Friday night as protesters returned to the streets to profess their disgust at how the movement is being stymied by regimes old and new.

Six months after the Arab spring claimed its first dictator, the main squares of Cairo and Tunis were again alive with protest, teargas and fury at the resistance to change shown by interim authorities. In Syria activists said at least 19 people had been killed in the latest crackdown against protests that have convulsed the country for more than four months. At least seven people were killed in Yemen amid a political limbo that appears no closer to resolution. And in Jordan a heavy security presence policed pro- and anti-reform demonstrations which turned violent.

The scenes served as a reminder that following the euphoria of the Arab spring, little concrete progress towards reform has been made. Elections in Tunisia and Egypt have been postponed. Offers of reform in Yemen and Syria have been rejected as inadequate.

Egypt

Thousands of demonstrators descended on public squares around the country to offer a

"Friday of final warning" to the ruling military junta, amid fears that the revolution which toppled Hosni Mubarak is being betrayed by conservative forces.

Rallies and hunger strikes were reported from Alexandria on the Mediterranean coast all the way down to Luxor in the south and Suez in the east, with the main focus once again on Cairo's Tahrir Square where a large sit-in is now over a week old and shows no sign of ending.

Protesters accused the Supreme Council of the Armed Forces (SCAF), which assumed power in the aftermath of Mubarak's fall and promised to make way for a democratically-elected civilian government later this year, of stifling revolutionary demands and working to shield elements of the old regime from grassroots political change.

"As many have been saying on Facebook, the relationship between the people and SCAF is the same as the relationship between a wife and a husband who she knows is being unfaithful," said Shady Alaa El Din, a demonstrator in Tahrir.

"She tolerated it at first in an effort not to destroy the family and hurt the children, but eventually she realised the husband doesn't really care about the family at all, so now she has dropped her act and is taking him on directly," he added.

"At first we lied to ourselves, we wanted to believe they were with us. But now the street has woken up and it is saying to SCAF 'we are the rulers, and you follow our orders – not the other way round. We are the fucking red line, you do not cross us.'"

In common with most protesters, El Din was infuriated this week by an address from SCAF spokesman General Mohsen El-Fangari, in which he warned against those seeking to "disrupt public order" and adopted a tone reminiscent of Mubarak in his final speeches to the nation. Pressure is now mounting on interim prime minister Essam Sharaf, who appears unable or unwilling to force through meaningful policy changes in the face of the generals' intransigence and is now being urged to resign by many of his original supporters.

Tunisia

For anyone new to the Tunisian capital, it was almost as though the past six months had never happened. Balaclava-wearing riot police armed with batons, teargas launchers and dogs squared up against a small crowd of demonstrators who had gathered to express a sentiment widely felt in the city: that the revolution has run into the sand, stymied by a caretaker administration that they say has done little to implement revolutionaries' demands.

The central government square or Qasbah was protected by coils of barbed wire and armoured vehicles, as demonstrators waving Tunisian flags chanted "peaceful, peaceful". Then the trouble started. The first gas canister spewed a thick white smoke and was quickly followed by many others. Protesters ran for cover into dark shadows against a white gas screen.

Two men held their ground, kneeling bare-chested and facing the charging police. A third stopped a canister that whirled past, picked it up and threw it back at police lines. As the fumes dispersed, the demonstrators returned, their numbers now swelled into the hundreds. Some began pelting police with small rocks.

"The people who tortured me are still there," said Malek Khudaira pointing at the ministry where he was held for 10 days during the uprising that toppled the former dictator Zine al-Abidine Ben Ali.

"How can I feel there is change and it's a full revolution if everything is the same, I see those torturers walking in the streets every day."

For hours a game of attack and counter attacked ensued. Demonstrators would march, police would fire hails of canisters into their midst. One man in black trousers, white shirt and sunglasses stood facing the police when they fired a small canister point blank at his belly. He fell where he stood. Others helped him away.

The organisers labelled the event as "the Qasbah 3". Number 1 was the uprising that toppled Ben Ali and forced him to flee and number 2 was the sit-in that toppled the first caretaker government a month later.

Syria

Activists reported at least 19 deaths across Syria and dozens of injuries as people gathered for the main weekly prayers, which have been used as a launching pad for dissent for more than four months.

Heavy clashes took place in parts of the capital, according to activists and state media, who offered widely diverging accounts. At least seven protesters were shot dead in neighbourhoods of Damascus as some of the largest crowds since the uprising poured on to the streets.

Security forces have generally used batons and teargas in Damascus to avoid inflaming protests in the heartland of the regime's power. Elsewhere, scores of wounded were reported in the cities of Aleppo, Deraa, Idleb and Homs.

Syrian officials again blamed armed gangs for the violence – an indirect reference to Islamists who it claims are trying to ignite sectarian chaos. However, activists said unarmed demonstrators were again attacked by soldiers firing live rounds.

The use of violence has been unpredictable, changing by week and location. In Homs, one resident in the well-off neighbourhood of Inshaat said security forces appeared to be trying to avoid deaths. "They have been shooting but seemed to be aiming at the legs rather that the heads."

Two of the biggest protests took place in Hama and Deir Ezzor, on a day when activists estimated that up to 1 million people may have openly defied the regime nationwide.

Jordan

Ten people, mostly journalists, were injured on Fridaywhen Jordanian police tried to intervene in clashes between pro-reform demonstrators and government supporters in Amman.

Hundreds of protesters calling for political changes and an end to corruption gathered in the centre of the capital but it was not clear whether they would ignore official warnings against holding a sit-in of the types seen in Egypt and Bahrain.

Jordan has seen sporadic unrest since January but only on a small scale. Opposition demands – supported by youth groups, civil society organisations and Islamists – are for changes within the framework of the Hashemite monarchy. King Abdullah has pledged to pursue reforms that would allow the formation of future governments based on an elected parliamentary majority but gave no date.

The slogan "the people want the reform of the regime" was in striking and deliberate contrast to demands elsewhere for the "overthrow" of rulers.

The Amman protest was held with a heavy security presence, with police, gendarmerie and special forces surrounding the area, the Ammon News website reported.

Rallies for reform and against "rampant corruption" also drew hundreds of demonstrators in the southern cities of Tafileh, Maan and Karak, and in Irbid and Jerash in the north.

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: Jordan police attack anti-govt. march

Title: Jordan police attack anti-govt. march

TheUnhivedMind - July 16, 2011 02:04 AM (GMT)

Jordan police attack anti-govt. march

Fri Jul 15, 2011 4:21PM
http://www.presstv.ir/detail/189246.html

Jordanian police beat a protester during an anti-government demonstration demanding reforms and the resignation of the prime minister, in Amman, Friday July 15, 2011.
At least ten people have been injured after Jordanian police attacked anti-government protesters demanding reforms in the capital, Amman.

The unrest took place as hundreds of demonstrators shouting anti-government slogans tried to march from the al-Husseini mosque to the city hall on Friday.

Most of the injured are reported to be journalists.

"We were beaten by police, although we were wearing special press vests. We thought we would be safe when we stood next to the police and away from the clashes," said an AFP photographer who was injured by Jordanian police.

Some reports, however, suggest that police armed with batons got involved after pro- and anti-government supporters clashed.

Jordanian protesters demand political and economic reforms and an end to corruption. They have also called for the resignation of Prime Minister Marouf Bakhit's and his cabinet and dissolution of the parliament, which they see as a puppet of the regime.

"Rulers, we want to reform the regime. We want the palace to hear the voices of Jordanians," the demonstrators chanted on Friday.

"We need political, economic and social reforms for future generations," and "It's our right to fight corruption," read banners carried by anti-government protesters in Amman.

Similar anti-government protest rallies were also held in the southern cities of Tafileh, Man and Karak, as well as Irbid and Jerash in the north.

Jordan has faced anti-government rallies demanding reforms and an end to corruption since January.

Last month, in a bid to appease protesters, King Abdullah II announced some concessions, including the formation of future governments that were based on an elected parliamentary majority rather than one appointed by the monarch.

But he later said it may take two to three years to put an elected government in place.

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: Sectarian trouble flares at east Belfast's Short Title: Sectarian trouble flares at east Belfast's Short Description: Strand

TheUnhivedMind - June 20, 2011 11:52 PM (GMT)

Sectarian trouble flares at east Belfast's Short Strand

The BBC's Mark Simpson on the events in east Belfast

21 June 2011 Last updated at 00:00
http://www.bbc.co.uk/news/uk-northern-ireland-13851316

Homes in east Belfast's Short Strand area have been attacked by a large group of masked men, Sinn Fein has said.

Crowds were still at an interface on the lower Newtownards Road and Bryson Street in the early hours of Tuesday.

Lord Mayor of Belfast Niall O Donnghaile, a Sinn Fein councillor for the area, was at the scene.

He told the BBC that 60-100 masked men fully dressed in camouflage gear have been attacking homes.

The attacks were carried out at the Mountpottinger Road as well as the lower Newtownards Road, Mr O Donnghaile said.

Police are at the scene and community and youth workers have been trying to defuse the situation.

'Residents injured'

"It's a tense and dangerous situation," Mr O Donnghaile said.

"They've hit homes with paint bombs, pipe bombs and petrol bombs.

"A pipe bomb-type device has gone off. There's a number of Short Strand residents who are injured and a number of homes have been damaged."

Police have confirmed that a large number of people had gathered in Bryson Street and that petrol bombs have been thrown.

Ulster Unionist MLA Michael Copeland said several hundred people "were involved in hand-to-hand fighting".

"You have two sides to these stories. My understanding is that homes on the Newtownards Road have been attacked from Strand Walk and the grounds of St Matthew's in the last couple of nights," he said.

"It really doesn't really matter who is responsible at this stage. It's getting it stopped that is the problem."

TheUnhivedMind - June 21, 2011 06:37 PM (GMT)

Short Strand: Police say riot was 'orchestrated' by UVF

The BBC's Mark Simpson reports from lower Newtownards Road in east Belfast

21 June 2011 Last updated at 13:13
http://www.bbc.co.uk/news/uk-northern-ireland-13854027

A senior police officer has described shots aimed at officers during rioting in east Belfast on Monday night as "attempted murder".

Violence erupted at a sectarian interface on the lower Newtownards Road and Mountpottinger Road around 2100 BST.

Chief Superintendent Alan McCrum said the trouble was "orchestrated" by the loyalist paramilitary group, the UVF.

Two men are being treated in hospital for gun shot wounds.

In all 11 shots were fired - six from the nationalist side and five from loyalists.

Two shots hit a police landrover. Police said it was "clearly an attempt to murder police officers".

Petrol bombs, fireworks, bricks, stones and smoke bombs were thrown and homes were damaged during the disturbances.

The PSNI said between 400 to 500 people were involved in the disorder.
Sectarian interface

Chief Supt McCrum said the trouble started after a group of young men came out of the loyalist Mount and Castlereagh Street areas, and made their way into the Catholic enclave of Short Strand.

"That precipitated a response from the community in the Short Strand, and then we were left with two communities, who for the next four hours were seeking to involve themselves in conflict across what was, and continues to be a very challenging interface in the city."

The riot in east Belfast was another reminder that Northern Ireland has a peace process but it does not have peace.

The number of walls between Protestant and Catholic areas has risen in recent years rather than fallen.

Outbreaks of violence are relatively rare these days, but tension in some areas continues to simmer.

One night of rioting normally leads to another in Northern Ireland. The challenge facing the police is to stop an isolated problem escalating.

Chief Supt McCrum said police believed that members of the east Belfast UVF were involved in the trouble.

"It would be a line of investigation to establish whether that was a co-ordinated and organised 'organisational' position (by the UVF leadership)," he said.

"But at this point we are satisfied that at the very least members of east Belfast UVF were involved in organising the disorder."

The senior officer said police officers were initially "far outnumbered" by hundreds of people who were "hell bent" on disorder.

"We had additional resources in the Short Strand on Monday night, but no-one could have anticipated the scale of the disorder that took place," Chief Supt McCrum said.

"No-one could have anticipated that hundreds of people would be on the street and that petrol bombs, blast bombs, sticks and bottles would be thrown over four to five hours."
Gunfire

The PSNI said there was nothing to suggest that members of the Provisional IRA (PIRA) had fired shots and it was too early to say if dissident republicans were involved as their investigations were continuing.

Presbyterian Minister, Reverend Mervyn Gibson heard two bursts of gunfire after midnight.

"Two young men on the Protestant side were injured, both shot in the legs," he said.

"I was with them both and helped others to arrange to get them to hospital.

"It really was a serious scene. I haven't seen trouble like this for maybe 10 years in the area."

Sinn Fein MLA Alex Maskey was also on the ground during the disturbances.

Missiles were thrown at police trying to restore calm to the area

"The PSNI told me that they had injured people with plastic bullets on the loyalist side, people who were clearly the aggressors. I have no idea who else was injured," he said.

Mr Maskey claimed members of the loyalist paramilitary group, the Ulster Volunteer Force (UVF) took part in the attack on the Short Strand.
UVF attack

"I am very clear in what I am saying," he said.

"I am making a very serious statement and as far as people in the Short Strand are concerned, the UVF launched an attack on the Catholic community in this area. I think it's absolutely disgraceful."

Laser pens were used to try and 'blind' police. One officer was treated for an eye injury in hospital.

Police said they are also investigating a report of an attempted hijacking of a bus.

TheUnhivedMind - June 22, 2011 06:09 PM (GMT)

Police say dissidents behind photographer shooting

BBC's Mark Simpson: "There is a loyalist pro-British paramilitary faction called the UVF who seem to want to cause a lot of trouble at the moment"

22 June 2011 Last updated at 14:45
http://www.bbc.co.uk/news/uk-northern-ireland-13873307

Police have said they believe dissident republicans were responsible after a photographer was shot during violence in east Belfast on Tuesday.

It happened during a second night of trouble at a sectarian flashpoint on the Lower Newtownards Road.

Police said the trouble was orchestrated by the loyalist paramilitary group, the UVF.

NI First Minister Peter Robinson has offered to try and resolve the situation.

Police have told the BBC that detectives believed dissidents were responsible after a Press Association photographer suffered a gun shot wound to his leg.

He underwent surgery on Wednesday. Talks have been taking place throughout the day between community and political leaders in an attempt to defuse tensions.

Mr Robinson told the BBC that if people felt they need to have issues addressed "I will meet them".

He said people were horrified at what had happened and recognised the "reputational damage" it was doing to the economy.

The trouble erupted again at 2045 BST on Tuesday.

PSNI Assistant Chief Constable Alistair Finlay: "These are the wrong headlines about Northern Ireland being flashed around the world" Injuries

A barrage of petrol bombs, missiles and fireworks were thrown at police lines for a second night, in what is being reported as the worst trouble in the area for a decade.

Two other men were injured. They are believed to have suffered burn injuries.

Police fired 66 plastic bullets during the disturbances.

A 20-year-old woman was arrested on suspicion of possessing an offensive weapon and assaulting police.

"Whether they have lost the influence to stop it, I don't know, but there certainly seems to be nothing to suggest that our position has changed, that the bulk of this violence is coming from the loyalist community and the UVF in east Belfast does have a role to play in that," he said.

Just before midnight, a number of shots were fired and the photographer was injured.

Another photographer was standing with other media, near police landrovers on the Lower Newtownards Road when the shooting happened.

"I looked back and there was somebody peering over the wall and he shot about five or six rounds," he said.

"We were all just running.
Blood

"The next thing I know a colleague of mine, he yells, 'I've been shot, I've been shot', and I looked back and his leg on the bottom part, I don't know if he was grazed, or if the bullet went in or what, but I looked at his trousers and his trousers were all stained.

"It was wet, it was obviously blood."

The photographer said he had been in contact with his injured colleague.

"He's doing fine," he said.

"I just got a text from him. He's going into surgery this morning. The bullet went in and came out, so it is not life-threatening."

It was initially reported that 700 people were involved in the riots on Tuesday night but police have now said it was between 350 to 400.

The MP for the area, Naomi Long, told the BBC a man who was struck with a brick on Tuesday night had suffered a fractured skull.
'Step back'

She described the trouble as a "very serious situation" and said appeals from political representatives for calm had fallen on "deaf ears".

"People need to step back from this situation," she said.

"We have had another round of gunfire on Tuesday night, we have had someone else injured with a bullet wound.

"When you have guns back on streets, it is very clear that the intent here is to take life.

"There is no other reason why people would bring a gun onto the street, and I think that people need to take a step back and really think about what they are doing."

There was a large police presence, following Monday's sectarian clashes, and two water cannon vehicles were deployed.

TheUnhivedMind - June 26, 2011 01:23 AM (GMT)

East Belfast riots: Police say 16-year-old was shot

Police came under attack for three nights in a row

24 June 2011 Last updated at 18:37
http://www.bbc.co.uk/news/uk-northern-ireland-13910940

Police have revealed that a 16-year-old boy was one of two people shot during trouble in east Belfast in the early hours of Tuesday morning.

A PSNI spokesperson said the youth was shot at 0036 BST. A 25-year-old man was shot in the foot just after midnight.

Both were shot in the Lower Newtownards Road area.

Area commander for East Belfast, Chief Inspector Mark McEwan, has appealed for witnesses to come forward.

Trouble at the Short Strand interface has been described as the worst in the area in a decade.

Police have said the violence was orchestrated by the UVF and both loyalists and republicans had fired shots during the unrest.

"Significant public disorder was taking place in the early hours of Monday morning in the Lower Newtownards Road and Short Strand area," Chief Inspector McEwan said.

"At 2355 police received reports of gunfire which resulted in two males being shot.

"At present we are treating both of these incidents as attempted murder."

Police have also made a number of appeals in relation to other incidents on Monday and Tuesday.
Reports that a cyclist who inadvertently came upon the disorder on Monday was struck on the back of the the head and then assaulted by masked men.
He was taken to hospital with a head wound and cuts to the rest of his body following the incident at the junction of Albertbridge Road and Mountpottinger Road.
Reports a man had been assaulted in the grounds of St Matthew's Church on the Newtownards Road. It is understood he is in hospital being treated for a fractured skull.
The shooting of a press photographer who was hit in the leg just before midnight on Tuesday.

Police have said a number of items relating to the incidents have been been removed for further forensic investigation.

A team of investigators is reviewing all CCTV footage available.

TheUnhivedMind - July 2, 2011 06:07 PM (GMT)

Police say Belfast trouble was 'not orchestrated'

The BBC's Alexandra Mackenzie: "The community... want order to be maintained"

2 July 2011 Last updated at 13:28
http://www.bbc.co.uk/news/uk-northern-ireland-13999319

Police say they do not believe paramilitaries were behind trouble in east Belfast on Friday night.

Six officers were injured as missiles were thrown and vehicles were damaged following a "mini Twelfth" parade.

Officers fired plastic bullets and used a water cannon to disperse the crowd. Seven people have been arrested for riotous or disorderly behaviour.

The trouble was not as serious as rioting which broke out in the same area nearly two weeks ago.

Chief Inspector Mark McEwan said tensions in the area had been heightened since that rioting.

"The parade itself passed off peacefully," he said.

"There were a number of minor incidents, one assault in particular seemed to be the catalyst for more intense, spontaneous disorder. The disorder was not orchestrated."

Police said the rioting seen two weeks ago had been orchestrated by loyalist paramilitary group the UVF.

Friday night's trouble erupted in Castlereagh Street and Albertbridge Road.

Police moved in to prevent skirmishes between small groups of nationalists and loyalists on the Albertbridge Road, close to the Catholic enclave of Short Strand.

Larger crowds then gathered and the PSNI used Land Rovers as a barrier.

Loyalists threw stones and bottles at police in riot gear and at one stage water cannons were deployed as officers pushed the troublemakers back.

Ch Insp McEwan said police on the ground were in constant communication with community workers to try to calm the situation.

"Despite the best efforts of community workers in the loyalist community, there was an element within that crowd who were determined to carry out violent disorder and the police in Castlereagh Street became the focus of that attack," he said.

"I would appeal to the wider community to take a step back and reflect on what has happened and keep a cool head as we move forward over next couple of weeks."

None of the injuries sustained by police officers are said to be life-threatening.
Tension

BBC Ireland correspondent Mark Simpson said even after the trouble eventually stopped, a large police presence was required overnight to keep the peace.

Chief Inspector Mark McEwan: "The disorder was spontaneous"

Jim Wilson, a community worker on the loyalist side, said it was hard to convince some youths that disorderly behaviour was "not productive".

"Tensions have been pretty high, but we marshalled the parade last Sunday that went straight up the opposite side of the road as it did last night and there wasn't a stone thrown, there wasn't so much as a crossed word," he said.

"When you get big crowds it's harder to manage, and sometimes when people have drink in them the sensibility goes out the window.

"You try to talk to young lads who would reason with you in a normal state, but when they get a bit inebriated you become the devil and they become right in everything that they do."

Mr Wilson added that in the run-up to July 11 and 12, community workers on both the loyalist and republican sides, along with the PSNI, had to work together to ease tensions in the area.

Two weeks ago petrol bombs and other missiles were thrown at police over two nights.

Three shots were fired during the second night of disturbances. A photographer was shot in the leg in some of the worst rioting in the area for a decade.

Northern Ireland's First Minister Peter Robinson said he was prepared to get "directly involved" in attempts to resolve the trouble in his east Belfast constituency.

TheUnhivedMind - July 3, 2011 02:31 AM (GMT)

Six riot police injured by youths hurling masonry as more violence hits Belfast

Last updated at 10:20 AM on 2nd July 2011
http://www.dailymail.co.uk/news/article-20...ts-Belfast.html

Police regained order in the streets of Belfast this morning after six officers were injured and seven people arrested during rioting.

Rubber bullets and water cannon were used to disperse crowds in Castlereagh Street and Albertbridge Road, east Belfast, following yesterday's 'mini Twelfth' parade.

Police vehicles were damaged and missiles were thrown at officers trying to quell the 'significant disorder'.

Wet and wild: Rioters in east Belfast are hosed with water cannon by police after the troublemakers threw masonry and bottles

[im]http://i.dailymail.co.uk/i/pix/2011/07/02/article-2010495-0CD452D300000578-395_468x299.jpg[/img]
Confrontation: Officers charge rioters in east Belfast after more rioting broke out

The officers were hit by youths hurling masonry, but none of their injuries were said to be life threatening.

A spokesman for the Police Service of Northern Ireland said it was working with the community to end the violence.

The rioting was reportedly less severe than an outbreak of violence last month in the city when a photographer was shot in the leg.

Hard-line: Police used rubber bullets and water cannons to break up the violence

TheUnhivedMind - July 10, 2011 10:43 PM (GMT)

Northern Ireland: bus hijacked and cars set on fire as rioting breaks out

Rioting has broken out in Northern Ireland, with a bus hijacked and petrol bombs thrown at police.

10:38AM BST 10 Jul 2011
http://www.telegraph.co.uk/news/uknews/nor...breaks-out.html

Five officers were injured after the bus was smashed into a police car during a bout of “serious public disorder” in Ballyclare, County Antrim.

Around 100 people began throwing missiles and petrol bombs at police in the Doagh Road area and on the Grange Estate at around 11.30 on Saturday night, police said.

Riot officers returned fire with baton rounds and deployed a water as they attempted restore order in what is thought to be a riot by loyalists.

A spokeswoman for the Police Service of Northern Ireland said: "While it is believed people were struck we have no reports of any injuries at this stage."

Disturbances were also reported in Carrickfergus, Newtownabbey and Magherafelt after a large bonfire was started.

A 27-year-old man was arrested in connection with the disturbance at Magherafelt.

Although police said calm was restored in Ballyclare by 2.30am, a number of vehicles were also hijacked in Carrickfergus and Newtonabbey.

Last month, large-scale rioting broke out in east Belfast, leaving a press photographer shot in the leg.

TheUnhivedMind - July 12, 2011 06:21 PM (GMT)

Bus hijacked and 22 police injured in Ulster rioting

Tom Harper
12 July 2011
http://www.thisislondon.co.uk/standard/art...ster-rioting.do

Northern Ireland was in lockdown today after a night of violence saw police come under attack from youths hurling stones and petrol bombs.

Twenty-two officers were injured in riots before today's Twelfth of July celebrations.

A double-deck bus was hijacked by a 200-strong mob in Belfast and driven at police who fired 51 plastic bullets and used water cannon.

Children as young as 14 were spotted in the riots, which police said were worse than previous years. The anniversary of William of Orange's 1690 victory at the battle of the Boyne over the Catholic James II is the most divisive day in the Northern Ireland calendar with Protestant marches across the province.

Sinn Fein's Jennifer McCann said: "Children were terrified in their homes, people fearful that their cars might be hijacked, that their homes might be attacked."

TheUnhivedMind - July 12, 2011 06:38 PM (GMT)

Belfast riots: Appeals for calm after night of violence

The BBC's Andy Martin said youths hijacked a bus and drove it at police lines

12 July 2011 Last updated at 17:46
http://www.bbc.co.uk/news/uk-northern-ireland-14130190

Police and community representatives are appealing for calm after trouble in west and north Belfast on Monday night in which 22 officers were injured.

An investigation is under way into the possibility that shots were fired in west Belfast during the trouble.

An ambulance and a fire engine were also attacked.

Community worker Robert McClenaghan, from the Falls Residents Association, said the violence was organised by nationalist youths.

More than 40 petrol bombs were thrown at police, who said crowds of about 150-200 people were involved in the violence at Broadway and about 200 in both the Oldpark and New Lodge areas of north Belfast.

Crowds of nationalists threw petrol bombs and masonry at police who fired 51 plastic bullets in the Broadway and Oldpark areas.

Mr McClenaghan said the violence was "nothing but thuggery".

"There was no provocation. There was nothing from the Protestant, loyalist, unionist community. Broadway interface was quiet," he said.

"What you had was 100 or 150 of these young people all tooled up and masks around their faces.

"They were armed with petrol bombs, they were armed with sticks and stones. They had wheelie bins with extra ammunition that they were pulling behind them."

A bus was hijacked and driven at police during the disturbances which occurred before the annual loyalist Twelfth of July demonstrations

A number of arrests were made.

Police said an ambulance crew was attacked while attending a hoax call in Brighton Street off the Falls Road.

A fire engine had its windscreen smashed by youths throwing bricks and bottles whilst attending a fire at the side of the Glen Road in west Belfast.

While four officers received hospital treatment, none of the injuries are believed to be life-threatening.

'Havoc'

On the Falls Road, in the west of the city. A driver was dragged from his bus and the passengers ordered off.

Debris from rioting still smouldered on Broadway on Tuesday morning

It was then driven at police lines on Donegall Road, but crashed a short distance away. A van was also set alight on the Donegall Road.

Assistant Chief Constable Dave Jones praised his officers for their "skill and professionalism" in dealing with the violence.

"Unfortunately 22 officers sustained injuries while delivering this protective service," he said.

"We would appeal for everyone to do everything they can to help ensure all areas are calm and peaceful over the next 48 hours. Violence does not need to be inevitable."

Sinn Fein MLA Jennifer McCann was at Broadway for several hours during the trouble. She believes that those taking part in the rioting were not from the area.

"Mostly what I saw was people who came from other parts of Belfast, who would be known as anti-social elements, who had taken a lot of drink and were attacking the police," she said.

"I am appealing to young people who may be caught up in this behaviour to stay away from Broadway, Ardoyne or anywhere else there may be a chance of trouble."

TheUnhivedMind - July 13, 2011 04:17 AM (GMT)

Petrol bombs thrown at police in Ardoyne

The BBC's Andy Martin: "We're hearing petrol bombs have been thrown"

12 July 2011 Last updated at 23:45
http://www.bbc.co.uk/news/uk-northern-ireland-14128807

Petrol bombs and other missiles have been thrown at police during rioting in the Ardoyne area of north Belfast.

The trouble broke out after police in riot gear took up position ahead of an Orange parade walking past the Ardoyne shops.

Stones, bottles and fireworks were thrown at police. Water cannon were used to push back the crowd.

The police also fired a number of plastic bullets.

A car was set alight nearby on the Crumlin Road.

The Greater Ardoyne Residents Collective (GARC) which opposes the Orange parade passing through the nationalist Ardoyne held a protest in response to the Parades Commission, decision to allow the march to pass the shops.
The Orange parade has now passed through the area.

Last year, there were several days of rioting after the parade was allowed to walk past the shops.

There has also been some minor disorder in east Belfast.

A number of youths have been throwing stones and missiles at police in Stewart Street. A car was set on fire.

The police said there had also been outbreaks of violence in Londonderry, Armagh and Antrim.

A 14 year old boy was arrested in the Fahan Street area of Derry city following disturbances there. A crate of petrol bombs were also recovered.
'Challenging time'

In Armagh, there have been reports of public disorder in the Friary Road and Killylea Road areas. And in Ballymena a car was burnt out in Dunclug.

PSNI Assistant Chief Constable Alistair Finlay said the past 24 hours had "been a very challenging time".

"My colleagues are working around the clock to protect the community right across Northern Ireland and we have sufficient resources in place to do this," he added.

"We have unfortunately witnessed first hand this evening how violence damages people's homes and businesses, it sets back relationships and leaves wounds which take time to heal."

He said police would carry out a rigorous investigation, which would include the examination of CCTV footage.

On Monday night, 22 police officers were injured during serious rioting in several nationalist areas of west and north Belfast.

An investigation is continuing into the possibility that shots were fired during the trouble in west Belfast.

An ambulance and a fire engine were also attacked.

More than 40 petrol bombs were thrown at police, who said crowds of about 150-200 people were involved in the violence at Broadway and about 200 in both the Oldpark and New Lodge areas of north Belfast.

Crowds of nationalists threw petrol bombs and masonry at police who fired 51 plastic bullets in the Broadway and Oldpark areas.

TheUnhivedMind - July 14, 2011 02:50 AM (GMT)

[dohtml]<object width="640" height="390"><param name="movie" value="http://www.youtube.com/v/k3ihFIVK8DQ&hl=en_US&feature=player_embedded&version=3"></param><param name="allowFullScreen" value="true"></param><param name="allowScriptAccess" value="always"></param><embed src="http://www.youtube.com/v/k3ihFIVK8DQ&hl=en_US&feature=player_embedded&version=3" type="application/x-shockwave-flash" allowfullscreen="true" allowScriptAccess="always" width="640" height="390"></embed></object>[/dohtml]

TheUnhivedMind - July 14, 2011 03:05 AM (GMT)

Riots erupt in Nothern Ireland after Protestant marches

Wed Jul 13, 2011 3:15am EDT
By Conor Humphries and Ian Graham http://ca.reuters.com/article/topNews/idCA...0110713?sp=true

BELFAST (Reuters) - Police fired plastic bullets and water cannon at Catholic youths in Northern Ireland's provincial capital Belfast on Tuesday after rioting erupted when a Protestant parade passed their estate.

Sporadic violence erupted across the British-ruled province on the culmination of a season of parades by pro-British Protestants to mark a 17th-century military victory, a tradition many Catholics say is provocative.

Around 200 people threw bottles, slates and petrol bombs in the mainly Catholic Ardoyne area of Belfast after police moved in to prevent them confronting the passing Orange Order parade.

Two cars were set on fire and dozens of rounds of plastic bullets were fired. Police said a number of officers were injured.

Most of the 500 or so parades across the province passed peacefully, but police reported rioting in Londonderry, Newry and Armagh as well as the Markets area in central Belfast.

Three decades of fighting between mostly Protestant loyalists who want Northern Ireland to remain part of the United Kingdom and Irish nationalists, mainly Catholics, who want it to be part of a united Ireland tore the province apart during a three-decade period known as the "Troubles."

A 1998 peace agreement paved the way for a power-sharing government of loyalists and nationalists. Violence has subsided, but police say the threat from dissident groups opposed to the peace deal is higher than it has ever been since it was signed.

A small Orange Order parade passed the Ardoyne estate in near silence with one drummer keeping time after a government commission ordered marchers not to play their traditional drums or flutes.

A few dozen residents held a silent protest as they passed, while a small group of women sang the Irish national anthem.

But hundreds of others were pinned by police vans and officers in riot gear into an estate a hundred meters (yards) from the marchers, a move residents said was heavy-handed.

"It's the same thing every year. It's aggravation," said Jim, a 47-year old health worker watching the parade. "We're surrounded up here. It's no wonder the kids have so much hatred."

Marchers were marking King William of Orange's victory over the Roman Catholic King James at the Battle of the Boyne in 1690, which helped to secure Protestant supremacy in Ireland.

Pipe bands and drummers from Scotland joined local groups decked in orange banners and British flags for hundreds of marches across the province.

"It's a celebration, we don't want any trouble," said Eddie Whyte, 42, as he marched past Belfast City Hall on Tuesday morning. "If they are offended by the British flag, maybe they shouldn't be living in this country."

Two dozen police officers were injured in nationalist rioting on Monday night as Protestant youths lit hundreds of bonfires, many draped in Irish flags, to mark the July 12 holiday.

Catholic and Protestant politicians have called for calm in recent days and urged people not to go into the streets to protest against the parades.

"We must not allow the progress that has been made to be thwarted by those who want to drag us back to the past," Northern Ireland's First Minister Peter Robinson said.

Police said they had also come under attack on Tuesday evening in the mainly Catholic Markets area of Belfast, with rioters throwing bricks and fireworks and setting a car on fire. A car was hijacked and set alight in Armagh.

(Reporting by Ian Graham and Conor Humphries, Editing by Michael Roddy)

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: Vietnam Forcibly Breaks Up Anti-China Protests

Title: Vietnam Forcibly Breaks Up Anti-China Protests

TheUnhivedMind - July 12, 2011 11:29 PM (GMT)

Vietnam Forcibly Breaks Up Anti-China Protests

July 10, 2011
http://www.voanews.com/english/news/asia/V...-125286753.html

In this image made from video, a protester is dragged to a bus by police officers during an anti-China rally near Chinese Embassy in Hanoi, Vietnam, July 10, 2011

Security forces in Vietnam forcibly broke up an anti-China rally in Hanoi Sunday by detaining protesters and journalists covering the event.

As soon as protesters gathered within sight of the Chinese embassy in Vietnam's capital, police herded them onto buses, along with journalists and cameramen recording the rally.

Authorities have allowed the rallies on five previous Sundays in a row.

The move to crack down on the protests comes two weeks after officials from Vietnam and China met in Beijing and said they had agreed to negotiate to peacefully resolve a territorial dispute in the South China Sea.

Vietnam says Chinese boats have hindered oil exploration within its economic exclusive zone, 300 kilometers off the coast.

Beijing accuses Vietnam of endangering Chinese fishermen in a contested area near the Spratly islands, which are claimed all or in part by both countries and several other Asian nations.

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: Malaysia's leader warned: reform elections or risk

Title: Malaysia's leader warned: reform elections or risk
Description: revolution

TheUnhivedMind - July 11, 2011 05:14 PM (GMT)

Malaysia's leader warned: reform elections or risk revolution

Najib Razak's administration urged by protesters to implement reforms and crack down on corruption

Kate Hodal in Kuala Lumpur guardian.co.uk, Sunday 10 July 2011 20.31 BST
http://www.guardian.co.uk/world/2011/jul/1...ions-revolution

Malaysia's top opposition leader has warned the government that it may face a "hibiscus revolution" unless activists' demands are met for electoral reform and an end to "dirty politics".

Anwar Ibrahim's comments came a day after an estimated 20,000 people took to the streets to protest against alleged vote-rigging and other electoral abuses, defying a government ban and widespread use of teargas and water cannon filled with chemically laced water to deter the crowds.

More than 1,400 people were arrested and 12 injured — including Anwar — as clashes between police and protesters broke out in Malaysia's biggest protest since 2007.

Speaking to a small group of young graduates on Sunday, the People's Justice party leader warned prime minister Najib Razak's government: "We will have to pursue – in parliament and outside of parliament – free and fair elections, even by rallying unless they change the electoral vote."

When asked whether Malaysia was in the middle of its own revolution, Anwar said: "We have no confidence left [in the government], so it is important for Najib to consider seriously that we are close [to that]."

Najib, whose ruling party Barisan Nasional (National Front) has been in power since 1955, has dismissed Anwar as an opportunist who "will do everything, good or bad" to become prime minister himself. He has also claimed that Anwar might have been using Saturday's rally – organised by the Coalition for Clean and Fair Elections, a loose group of 62 non-governmental organisations – for his own political gain.

Najib's government took extreme measures to prevent people from attending Saturday's protest, including a city-wide lockdown that saw police suspend public transportation, seal off main roads, and threaten to arrest anyone wearing yellow, the colour of the coalition.

Amnesty International denounced the government's actions as "the worst campaign of repression we've seen in decades".

But Najib has since warned activists not to take to the streets again and claimed that his party, Umno, far outnumbered opposition groups.

"Don't doubt our strength," he said. "If we want to create chaos, we can. Umno has 3 million members. If we gather 1 million members, it is more than enough. We can conquer Kuala Lumpur."

Such comments – along with images and videos of police brutality against peaceful protesters – are undermining the BN's future, some say.

"They made a very big mistake on Saturday, by assuming that arresting more people would make the rest of us scared," said youth leader Khairul Anuar. "Actually, it has just made us more brave."

A similar rally in 2007 is widely credited with spurring on Malaysia's opposition movement, which won a landslide victory in the 2008 elections.

Many are hoping that Saturday's rally could potentially topple the BN entirely in the next election, slated for as early as this year. But some analysts say the government may hold off in order to smooth things over.

"From Najib's perspective, holding elections any time soon would be a mistake because of the damage that has been done," Bridget Welsh, Malaysia specialist at Singapore Management University, told Reuters.

"The fact that such a large crowd turned up despite a crackdown shows that voter anger is deep and this is going to push a lot of people who are in the middle towards the opposition."

TheUnhivedMind - July 12, 2011 01:03 AM (GMT)

Globalist Sedition takes to Malaysian Streets

Corporate-owned media obfuscates protest's overt ties to Washington.

Tony Cartalucci, Contributing Writer
Saturday, July 9, 2011
http://www.activistpost.com/2011/07/global...-malaysian.html

Bangkok, Thailand July 9, 2011 - Calling themselves "Bersih, or the "Coalition for Clean and Fair Elections," the so-called civic group has attempted to rally in the streets of Malaysia's capital, Kuala Lumpur, only to meet a wall of resistance from a government more than aware of their true intentions. According to the Australian Broadcasting Corporation (ABC), Ambiga Sreenevasan, the head of the Bersih group said, "we are fighting for free and fair elections." Undoubtedly Bersih's rank and file believe this to be true, but the Malaysian government insists that Bersih is a front group for Malaysia's opposition parties led by dedicated globalist Anwar Ibrahim.

Photo: Foreign-funded mobs are now turning up in the streets of Southeast Asia. Here, "Bersih 2.0" mobs clog the streets of Malaysia's capital, Kuala Lumpur. If the US-engineered "Arab Spring" was meant to leverage China's dependency on foreign oil against it, this latest move to destabilize nations is meant to reassert Washington's influence throughout China's own backyard.

Confirming the Malaysian government's statement, at least 5 members of the opposition front "Pakatan Rakyat" were arrested while participating in the rally, along with Bersih leader Ambiga Sreeneyasan. Also present was globalist-stooge Anwar Ibrahim himself, leading a throng of protesters before being injured supposedly by a tear gas canister. Just as the Malaysia government has insisted, this is not a spontaneous protest led by concerned citizens, rather a foreign-funded protest mobilized by political opposition groups merely duping well-intentioned citizens to join with their cause.

Anwar Ibrahim himself was Chairman of the Development Committee of the World Bank and International Monetary Fund in 1998, held lecturing positions at the School of Advanced International Studies at Johns Hopkins University (a rock where the worst examples of humanity constantly crawl out from beneath), and a consultant to the World Bank. In 2007, Anwar was a panelist at the Neo-Con lined National Endowment for Democracy's "Democracy Award" and a panelist at a NED donation ceremony.

Photo: Anwar Ibrahim, Malaysia's opposition leader amidst throngs of "Bersih" protesters. While the foreign press attempts to portray Bersih as a grassroots NGO organization, in reality it is a foreign-funded mob working in support of Anwar, who in turn is a longtime globalist-stooge.

....

It should come as no surprise then that his street-front, "Bersih," is likewise entwined with foreign money and foreign interests. The same Ambiga Sreenevasan who claimed "we are fighting for free and fair elections," also admitted on at least one occasion that her Bersih movement received money from the United States government via the National Democratic Institute (NDI), a National Endowment for Democracy (NED) subsidiary, as well as from globalist bankster George Soros' Open Society. The NDI website had until recently posted information confirming this, but has since removed it. Only a Google cached version of the original information can be seen (as of July 9, 2011).

Photo: A screen-grab of NDI's website before taking down any mention of their funding, training, and support of globalist-stooge Anwar Ibrahim's "Bersih" street-front. (click to enlarge)
....

It should be noted that while NED, and its subsidiaries like NDI, Freedom House, and the International Republican Institute (IRI), claim to promote "democracy" internationally, their boards of directors are lined with an almost cartoonish lineup of villains, dengerate big-business interests, warmongers, and war criminals. Francis Fukuyama, Zalmay Khalilzad, Frank Carlucci (2002), Will Marshall, and Vin Weber populate the board of directors of NED, while Kenneth Adelman, Max M. Kampelman, Donald Rumsfeld (formally), Paula Dobriansky, Leonard Sussman, and Ellen Bork are on the board of trustees/executive committee of Freedom House. Additionally, certified warmongers John McCain and Lindsey Graham pollute IRI's board of directors. It is absurd to suggest men like Donald Rumsfeld, Vin Weber, Frank Carlucci, John McCain, or Kenneth Adelman have any interest in "human rights," "freedom," or "democracy" beyond what they can gain by disingenuously leveraging these noble values. In fact, these very people have been the architects and perpetrators of darkest chapters in recent human history.

John McCain's "sincerity" in democracy and the role his organization played in training and equipping Egyptian protesters to overthrow the Mubarak regime culminated in a recent trip to Cairo, where he was accompanied by Fortune 500 officers seeking to promote "private enterprise." Indeed, this is the final goal of US-funded "democratization," the complete destruction of nationalism along with the economic liberalization and strip mining of the world's various economies.

[dohtml]<object style="height: 390px; width: 640px"><param name="movie" value="http://www.youtube.com/v/akB2T3Z3Occ?version=3"><param name="allowFullScreen" value="true"><param name="allowScriptAccess" value="always"><embed src="http://www.youtube.com/v/akB2T3Z3Occ?version=3" type="application/x-shockwave-flash" allowfullscreen="true" allowScriptAccess="always" width="640" height="390"></object>[/dohtml]

Video: Anwar Ibrahim, leader of the foreign-funded "Bersih 2.0" movement, berates the Malaysian government for reacting to his recent bout of foreign-funded sedition.
....

Of course, while all of this is documented fact, corporate-funded news outfits like the New York Times prey on the ignorance of their readers by not mentioning Malaysia's opposition front at all during their coverage of the Bersih rally. Instead, they insist it was merely a "coalition made up of 62 nongovernmental organizations" seeking "election reform." Mention of Anwar Ibrahim's presence at the rally is not mentioned, nor is the fact that other members of his opposition front were participating and leading the rally. The New York Times also dutifully cites Ford Foundation/Soros' Open Society-funded Human Rights Watch and Soros-funded (page 10) Amnesty International who have predictably "condemned the recent arrests, and called on the government to stop harassing those associated with [Soros-funded] Bersih."

A pattern of foreign-funded organizations carrying out foreign-backed sedition within a target country, in turn backed by the corporate-owned media and "independent," "international" organizations funded by the exact same money can be seen clearly in practice on Kuala Lumpur's streets. What is also interesting is that NED-funded operations outside of Malaysia have also been directed to support Bersih.

Thailand's NED-funded Prachatai propaganda outfit dutifully reported in their article, "Solidarity protest for clean and fair elections and immediate release of Bersih activists," that on July 1, "students, activists and press gathered outside the Malaysian Embassy, Bangkok, in response to the Malaysian Government’s arrest of more than a hundred members of the coalition network Bersih 2.0 consisting of various Malaysian human rights organizations campaigning for reforms in the electoral system." Joining the protest, according to the Bangkok Post, was the People's Empowerment Foundation, yet another National Endowment for Democracy-funded front group.

Washington and London funded organizations like NED, IRI, NDI, Freedom House, and others are creating a global homogeneous NGO, "civil society" underlay that is centrally funded and centrally controlled. They operate in nearly every nation on Earth and they work in tandem with their regional doppelgangers toward a singular goal. It was recently reported in the New York Times that these very organizations had been training and preparing for the "Arab Spring" for years before it unfolded. The feigned surprise by Western governments as their insidious plan came to fruition was merely rhetorical fodder designed for the most ignorant members of their target audiences. The "Arab Spring" is now admittedly a gambit of Western design. These organizations and the networks they form are nothing less than a modern reincarnation of the British Empire's imperial networks. These organizations are led by immensely disingenuous characters for overtly self-serving agendas.

It is not that the "free and fair" elections many Bersih members are fighting for aren't a legitimate cause. It is the fact that the leadership of Bersih are disingenuously harnessing the good intentions, energy, and resources of their naive followers to carry out foreign-funded sedition and regime change that will result in a dismal future for all Malaysians. Surely the ancestors of today's Bersih protesters didn't struggle and fight for Malaysian independence just so a foreign-backed stooge like Anwar Ibrahim could worm his way back into power, and with him bring back the same slouching degenerate bankers, merchants, and monied elite who had despoiled Malaysia and her riches for centuries.

For more information, please also see, "CIA Coup Army Uncovered in Asia."

Tony Cartalucci's articles have appeared on many alternative media websites, including his own at Land Destroyer Report.

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: Malaysia fires tear gas at protest, arrests 1,667

Title: Malaysia fires tear gas at protest, arrests 1,667

TheUnhivedMind - July 10, 2011 03:50 AM (GMT)

Malaysia fires tear gas at protest, arrests 1,667

7/9/2011 10:44:31 AM ET
http://www.msnbc.msn.com/id/43694046/ns/wo...s-asia_pacific/

KUALA LUMPUR, Malaysia — At least 20,000 Malaysians defied government warnings by marching for electoral reforms Saturday, as police fired tear gas and detained more than 1,600 in the country's biggest political rally in four years.

The crackdown on the opposition-backed demonstration in Malaysia's main city, Kuala Lumpur, triggered criticism that Prime Minister Najib Razak's long-ruling coalition was unwilling to allow public dissent or make election laws fairer ahead of national polls widely expected by mid-2012.

Najib's administration declared the rally illegal and warned people repeatedly over the past month to avoid it. Officials insisted it was simply an opposition scheme to spark chaos and stir anti-government sentiment, while activists accused authorities of being afraid of a protest that could undermine their authority.

Authorities blocked roads, shut rail stations and deployed trucks with water cannons near the Independence Stadium in downtown Kuala Lumpur where activists sought to gather. More than 200 activists had been arrested over the past two weeks for promoting the rally.

The large number of demonstrators who showed up despite the threat of arrests and the disruptions in transport links bolstered claims by activists that the government had misjudged public opinion by not allowing what they insisted would have been a peaceful rally.

The crackdown "stirred a sense of outrage against the exhibition of raw power by our government," said Ambiga Sreenavasan, head of the Bersih coalition of civic groups that organized the rally.

"What is the necessity for a show of might against right? No matter what, right will always prevail," she said.

Police said in a statement that they detained 1,667 people Saturday in a clampdown called "Operation Erase Bersih." Those arrested included several senior opposition officials. Some were released after several hours, with police indicating that most would not be held overnight.

Thousands tried to reach the stadium from various parts of Kuala Lumpur, chanting "Long live the people" and carrying yellow balloons and flowers as they marched.

Police fired numerous rounds of tear gas and chemical-laced water in repeated attempts to disperse the crowds, causing demonstrators to scatter into nearby buildings and alleys before they regrouped. Police helicopters flew overhead as a brief downpour failed to deter the protesters.

Witnesses said riot police armed with batons charged at some protesters and dragged them into trucks. Some were seen bleeding, but police could not confirm any injuries.

Anwar Ibrahim, Malaysia's top opposition figure, was being treated at a hospital for a "minor injury" he said he received when his group was hit by tear gas. The Malaysiakini news website said he had a knee injury.

"We were attacked from both corners but what was horrifying is that the police shot directly at the protesters, some of them clearly aimed at me personally, so my security assistants had to cover me and one was badly injured because the canister was shot direct, he is badly injured," Anwar told Associated Press Television News. "This is a simple portrayal of the extent of desperation of brutal action approved by the Prime Minister Najib."

The demonstrators dispersed after a five-hour standoff with police. Only several hundred reached the stadium.

Prime Minister Najib insisted Saturday the protesters only represent a minority, and that most Malaysians support his administration.

"If there are people who want to hold the illegal rally, there are even more who are against their plan," the prime minister was quoted as saying by the national news agency, Bernama.

Organizers said 50,000 took part in the rally, but police claimed there were only up to 6,000. Other observers and participants said the total was between 20,000 and 30,000, noting that it was highly unlikely that police could have arrested a quarter of the demonstrators. An accurate count was impossible because they were scattered in various areas.

The rally has galvanized the opposition and has been credited for a surge in political awareness among the public in recent weeks.

Opposition leaders accuse Najib's National Front coalition of relying on fraud to preserve its 54-year grip on power, which has been eroded in recent years amid mounting complaints about corruption and racial discrimination. The government insists the current electoral policies are evenhanded.

The activists' demands include an overhaul of voter registration lists, tougher measures to curb fraud and fairer opportunities for opposition politicians to campaign in government-linked media. The National Front's mandate expires in mid-2013 but many analysts expect elections to be called by next year.

Supporters of the Bersih coalition were also planning solidarity marches over the weekend in foreign cities, including in Australia, Britain, France, Hong Kong, Indonesia, Japan, the Philippines, South Korea, Thailand and the United States.

In Washington, State Department spokeswoman Victoria Nuland said the U.S. has been communicating to Malaysia the importance of respecting human rights, including freedom of expression and assembly.

"We consider it incumbent on all sides to refrain from violence," she told a news conference Friday

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: Syria: Thousands protest in restive city of Hama

Title: Syria: Thousands protest in restive city of Hama

TheUnhivedMind - July 8, 2011 06:24 PM (GMT)

Syria: Thousands protest in restive city of Hama

Hama was the scene of a brutal crackdown by the government in 1982

8 July 2011 Last updated at 17:43
http://www.bbc.co.uk/news/world-middle-east-14083087

Hundreds of thousands of people have attended an anti-government protest in the Syrian city of Hama, activists say.

The demonstrators signalled their rejection of the government-organised national dialogue conference on Sunday.

At least 14 people were reportedly killed at other protests nationwide, including six in a Damascus suburb.

Earlier, the US and French ambassadors visited Hama to show their solidarity. The Syrian authorities called it an incitement to further aggression.

Tanks were deployed on the outskirts of Hama last weekend after the central city witnessed the largest protest since anti-government demonstrations began in March.

At least 22 people in Hama have since been shot dead by security forces.

"No-one can predict what is going to happen in the next few days," one resident told BBC Arabic. "Many families have left Hama for the neighbouring villages."
'Incitement'

While there were protests throughout Syria, most attention was focused on Hama, where once again huge numbers turned out on the streets after Friday prayers, demanding the overthrow of President Bashar al-Assad and rejecting an offer of dialogue.

Rami Abdul Rahman of the Syrian Observatory for Human Rights told the AFP news agency as many as 450,000 people were taking part.

A witness told the Associated Press that many protesters were carrying olive branches and chanting: "We only kneel to God".

"There was no violence. As long as we have no security forces, we have no violence," another said.

One person told BBC Arabic that thousands of people from nearby villages had been prevented by security forces from entering Hama and joining the march.

The US and French ambassadors to Syria, Robert Ford and Eric Chevallier, travelled to the city on Thursday as acts of solidarity, but left before Friday's protests began, according to officials in Washington and Paris.

But the Syrian interior ministry said Mr Ford's visit, for which he did not seek the permission of the authorities in Damascus, was an act of incitement.

"The ministry wondered at the US ambassador's arrival in Hama contrary to the diplomatic norms and despite the roadblocks set up by the saboteurs to prevent citizens from reaching their jobs," state media quoted it as saying.

The ministry said Mr Ford had met "a number of the saboteurs and incited them to more violence and protest and to refuse dialogue".

It added that the ambassador, "under the cover of visiting some hospitals", had met other people in an attempt to encourage further violence and instability, to sabotage national dialogue, and to deepen discord and sedition among the Syrian people "who strongly reject and condemn such foreign instigation".

On Thursday, a US state department spokeswoman said Mr Ford had "spent the day expressing our deep support for the right of the Syrian people to assembly peacefully and to express themselves". He also visited a hospital where some injured protesters were treated this week.

A French foreign ministry spokesman said: "France recalls its concern for the inhabitants of Hama and its condemnation of the violence in Syria perpetrated by authorities against protesters."

Hama was the scene of a brutal crackdown in 1982 ordered by Hafez al-Assad, the president's late father, which left at least 10,000 dead.

At least 60 people were shot dead in Hama during protests on 3 June.
'Disgrace'

There were also mass demonstrations in other towns and cities across the country on Friday.

Activists said security forces shot dead six people in the western Damascus suburb of al-Dumair, two in the capital's central Midan district, and at least three others in the central city of Homs.

Three protesters were also killed in Maarat al-Numan, not far from the restive north-western town of Jisr al-Shughour, they added.

Overnight, three people were killed at a demonstration in Harasta, another of the capital's suburbs, activists said.

The death toll could not be independently confirmed as international journalists have been denied access to Syria.

Meanwhile, a spokesman for the Local Co-ordination Committees, which represents many protesters, insisted that they would send no-one to the government's national dialogue conference on Sunday and Monday.

"Dialogue with this regime is out of the question as we cannot talk to murderers," Mohammed al-Abdullah told al-Jazeera. "This is being declared by the rebels in the street."

"The city of Hama is being massacred and besieged, the Syrian people are being tortured, and therefore talk of any dialogue with the regime is a disgrace to the blood of the martyrs."

He added: "We do not believe that there are any members of the regime who believe in dialogue."

Officials have said there will be more than 200 delegates, including people from the opposition, the ruling Baath Party, and independents.

State media have reported that amendments to the constitution will be on the agenda at the meeting, including Article 8, which grants the Baath Party unique status as the "leader of state and society".

Participants will also reportedly examine proposed new laws on political parties, elections, local administration and the press.

Human rights activists say more than 1,400 civilians and 350 security forces personnel have been killed across the country since March.

The government has blamed "armed criminal gangs" for the unrest.

TheUnhivedMind - July 8, 2011 11:01 PM (GMT)

Syria condemns US ambassador's 'provocative' visit to Hama

Damascus officials say trip to rebellious city proves US is working to undermine President Assad

Martin Chulov
guardian.co.uk, Friday 8 July 2011 12.39 BST
http://www.guardian.co.uk/world/2011/jul/0...ador-visit-hama

Syria has reacted with anger to a visit by the US ambassador to the besieged city of Hama, where a standoff between the army and protesters has gone on for five days.

Officials in Damascus claimed the visit by Robert Ford was a provocation, which added weight to its claims that the US was working to undermine President Bashar al-Assad and his regime.

"The presence of the US ambassador in Hama without previous permission is obvious proof of a clear evidence of the United States' involvement in current events in Syria and its attempt to incite an escalation in the situation, which disturbs Syria's security and stability," the Syrian foreign ministry said.

The US state department said in response that its embassy had advised the foreign ministry that diplomats would travel to Hama on Wednesday: "The fundamental intention was to make absolutely clear with his physical presence that we stand with those Syrians who are expressing their right to speak for change," it said.

Ford intends to stay in Hama until Friday – the first day of the weekend in Syria and the day on which most of the violence of the past four months has occurred. Ford's security convoy travelled through Syrian military checkpoints to reach Hama, and he is believed to have met residents and business owners inside the city centre.

The show of solidarity with protesters has added another dimension to the tension between Hama and the Syrian military, which seems unsure about how to deal with the long-rebellious city.

Another large rally has been planned in Hama a week after more than 200,000 people turned out for an anti-regime protest after Friday prayers. That mass show of dissent was the largest yet seen in the Syrian uprising.

Syrian officials have insinuated that Islamists are agitating among protesters with legitimate grievances and that the protest movement is being hijacked by Sunni militants bent on sectarian division. Hama residents have repeatedly derided the claims.

Protests continued in Damascus last night, with reports of three people killed inside a mosque in the Harasata area.

Rights groups report that more than 1,400 people have been killed during the violence. The Syrian government claims that more than 300 of its security forces have also been killed.

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: U.S. Defense Secretary In Saudi Arabia To Discuss

Title: U.S. Defense Secretary In Saudi Arabia To Discuss Description: Mideast Unrest

TheUnhivedMind - April 6, 2011 05:55 PM (GMT)

U.S. Defense Secretary In Saudi Arabia To Discuss Mideast Unrest

April 06, 2011
http://www.rferl.org/content/gates_saudi_arabia/3548577.html

U.S. Defense Secretary Robert Gates visited Saudi Arabia today to discuss with Saudi King Abdullah the unrest sweeping Arab countries.

Saudi Arabia, the world's top oil exporter and a major U.S. ally in the region, has not seen the same degree of popular protests that have toppled Arab leaders in Tunisia and Egypt and have others battling for their political lives.

There have been only limited peaceful protests, mainly by Shi'ites in the east of the country. Last month, the Saudis sent 1,000 troops into Bahrain, at the Bahraini government's insistence, to help contain Shi'ite unrest in the neighboring island kingdom.

The visit to Saudi Arabia is Gates' third visit to the region in the past month.

State Department spokesman Geoff Morrell told reporters that Iran's missile and nuclear programs, as well as concerns that it is seeking to exploit political upheaval in the Arab world, will be "a major focus" of Gates' talks with the Saudi king.

compiled from agency reports

TheUnhivedMind - April 12, 2011 04:24 PM (GMT)

Obama dispatches top aide to Saudi, UAE

11 Apr 2011
http://www.google.com/hostednews/afp/artic...948acfab92b.521

WASHINGTON — US President Barack Obama is sending a foreign policy aide to key Gulf allies Saudi Arabia and the United Arab Emirates this week amid concern over the turmoil sweeping the Middle East.

National Security Advisor Tom Donilon will leave on Monday on a three-day trip during which he will meet Saudi King Abdullah in Riyadh and Crown Prince Sheikh Mohammed bin Zayed al-Nahayan in Abu Dhabi, the White House said.

"The National Security Advisor's visit underscores the importance of our relationship with these two key partners," a written statement said.

Saudi Arabia's intervention last month in Bahrain amid Shiite-led opposition violence has exposed festering political differences between Riyadh and the United States over the revolts rocking the Arab world.

US Secretary of Defense Robert Gates held talks in Riyadh on Wednesday with King Abdullah, with both sides concerned as well by Iranian intentions in the region and spiraling unrest in Yemen.

Boosted by the arrival of a Saudi-led Gulf forces contingent, Bahraini security forces smashed a month-old protest mid-March in central Manama by Shiites, leaving three protesters and two police dead.

The surprise Saudi decision to lead a regional mission into the strife-torn and strategic kingdom ruled by a Sunni minority also reflected the deep shadow cast by Iran in the instability testing US-allied leaders across the Gulf.

Washington appeared to have had little if any advance notice of what was a potentially embarrassing move for the United States, which has led a prolonged effort to prod Bahrain towards political reforms.

Saudi Arabia and other Gulf Arab states have traded accusations with Iran of meddling and interference, especially over Bahrain, which lies off the eastern Saudi coast and is home to the US Fifth Fleet.

"We already have evidence that the Iranians are trying to exploit the situation in Bahrain and we also have evidence that they're talking about what they can do to create problems elsewhere," Gates said after Wednesday's meeting in Riyadh.

King Abdullah's return home in February after months of treatment abroad for a back ailment came amid mounting international anger over bloodshed in the kingdom's southern neighbor Yemen.

Yemeni President Ali Abdullah Saleh, a close US and Saudi ally, has faced months of protests calling for his departure, in which around 125 people have been killed.

Dozens of anti-regime demonstrators were shot Sunday in the latest clashes with security forces, sparking charges of "massacre," as Yemen's worried Gulf neighbors gathered in Riyadh to work out a transition plan.

The United States announced last year that it plans to offer Saudi Arabia $60 billion worth of hi-tech fighter jets and helicopters, in the largest US arms deal ever.

TheUnhivedMind - April 21, 2011 02:19 AM (GMT)

Fear and loathing in the House of Saud

By Pepe Escobar
http://atimes.com/atimes/Middle_East/MD21Ak01.html

To follow Pepe's articles on the Great Arab Revolt, please click here.

Early last week, US President Barack Obama sent a letter to Saudi King Abdullah, delivered in person in Riyadh by US National Security Advisor Thomas Donilon. This happened less than a week after Pentagon head Robert Gates spent a full 90 minutes face to face with the king.

These two moves represented the final seal of approval of a deal struck between Washington and Riyadh even before the voting of UN Security Council resolution 1973 (see Exposed: the Saudi-US Libya deal, Apr 1, Asia Times Online). Essentially, the Obama administration will not say a word about how the House of Saud conducts its ruthless repression of pro-democracy protests in Bahrain and across the Persian Gulf. No "humanitarian" operations. No R2P ("responsibility to protect"). No no-fly or no-drive zones.

Progressives of the world take note: the US-Saudi counter-revolution against the Great 2011 Arab Revolt is now official.

Those 'pretty influential guys'
The wealthy, truculent clan posing as a perpetual absolute monarchy that goes by the name House of Saud wins on all fronts.

Last month's "Day of Rage" inside the kingdom was ruthlessly preempted - with the (literal) threat that protesters would have their fingers cut off.

With the price of crude reaching stratospheric levels, and with Saudi refusal to increase production, it's a no brainer for Riyadh to dispense with a few billion dollars in pocket change to appease its subjects with some extra 60,000 "security" jobs and 500,000 low-rent apartments.

King Abdullah also recently "received a verbal message" from the emir of Bahrain, Sheikh Hamad bin Khalifa, on the thriving "bilateral issues" - as in Saudi Arabia ruthlessly repressing the pro-democracy protests in Bahrain by invading their neighbor and deploying their "security" advisers.

The House of Saud's violent reaction to the peaceful protests in Bahrain may have been a message to Washington - as in "we are in charge of the Persian Gulf". But most of all it was dictated by an absolute fear of Bahrain becoming a constitutional monarchy that would reduce the king to a figurehead; a nefarious example to the Saudi neighbors.

Yet as much as real tensions between Iranian Shi'ites and Arab Shi'ites may persist, the Saudi reaction will end up uniting all Shi'ites, and turning Iran into Bahrain's only savior.

As for Washington's reaction, it was despicable to start with. When Sunnis in Iraq oppressed the Shi'ite majority, the result was Iraq shocked and awed to destruction by the neo-cons. When the same happens in Bahrain, liberal hawks have the Sunnis get away with it. (As much as there's been plenty of spinning to the contrary, the Pentagon's Gates knew Saudi Arabia would invade Bahrain on the spot, on a Saturday (the invasion started on Sunday night).

Not that Washington cares that much any way or another. Last week, in a Chicago restaurant, President Obama qualified the emir of Qatar, Hamad bin Khalifa, as a "pretty influential guy". He praised him as "a big booster, big promoter of democracy all throughout the Middle East'.' But Obama didn't notice there was an open mike, and CBS News was listening; so he added, "he himself is not reforming significantly. There's no big move towards democracy in Qatar. But you know part of the reason is that the per capita income of Qatar is $145,000 a year. That will dampen a lot of conflict."

Translation; who cares whether these "pretty influential guys" in the Gulf reform or not as long as they remain our allies?

The Saudi war of terror
Way back in 1965, the opposition in Bahrain was accused (by the colonial British press) of Arab nationalism (the nightmare of assorted colonialists and also US imperial designs). Now, it is accused (by the al-Khalifas and House of Saud) of sectarianism.

The House of Saud has predictably terrorized the majority-Shi'ite democracy movement in Bahrain with fear, loathing and - what else - sectarianism, the ultimate pillar of its medieval Wahhabi ideology. For intolerant Wahhabis, Shi'ites are as heretical as Christians. Shi'ite holy sites in Bahrain are being demolished under the supervision of Saudi troops. Bahrainis via twitter are stressing Saudis are using "Israeli tactics", demolishing "unauthorized" mosques.

Once again, this may only lead to a total radicalization of the Sunni-Shi'ite divide across the Arab world. Everyone who followed the Bush administration-provoked Iraq tragedy remembers that when al-Qaeda blew up the revered Shi'ite shrine of al-Askari in Samarra, in 2006, that was the start of a horrible sectarian war that killed tens of thousands of people and sent hundreds of thousands into exile.

The House of Saud (as well as the US and Israel) backed Mubarak in Egypt until the 11th hour. They all knew if that "pillar of stability" fell, the other (Saudi) would also be in danger. For all its bluster, the House of Saud's actions are essentially moved by fear. In recent years it has lost power in Lebanon, Iraq, Palestine and now Egypt. Its "foreign policy" consists in supporting ultra-reactionary regimes. The people? Let them eat kebab - if that. Their last bastion of power is the Gulf - crammed with political midgets such as Bahrain or Kuwait. With a little thrust, The House of Saud could reduce all these to the status of mere provinces.

Not yet. As the House of Saud developed its counter-revolutionary strategy, the Saudi-Israeli alliance morphed into a Saudi-Qatari alliance. Qatar could be destabilized via the tribal factor - the Saudis had attempted it before - but now they needed a close ally. And that, unfortunately, explains Qatar-based al-Jazeera's meek coverage of the repression in Bahrain.

It took only a few days for the House of Saud to force the Gulf Cooperation Council (GCC) to toe the new hard line: we are the top dog; there's no room for democracy in the Gulf; sectarianism is the way to go; our relationship with Israel is now strategic; and Iran is to blame for everything. The "Persian conspiracy" is the key theme being deployed by the hefty Saudi propaganda machine especially in Bahrain and Kuwait.

Israeli hawks, not surprisingly, love it. There's plenty of flower power - or downright lunatic - rhetoric in the Israeli press about a "strategic alliance" between Tel Aviv and Riyadh, "similar to the one between the Soviet Union and the US against the Nazis".

And guess what - Obama is to blame for it. Without this strategic alliance, according to the Israeli narrative, the whole Gulf will fall "victim of a nuclear Iran", and the Obama administration won't lift a finger to save anybody. Obama is vilified as someone who "only confronts and abandons allies", while emboldening "evil" Syria and Iran. It's a narrative straight out of the Loony Tunes.

Shallow grave or bust
Trying to understand the stakes, Rupert Murdoch's Wall Street Journal got it all backwards, blaring there's a new Cold War between Saudi Arabia and Iran. That's what you get when you regurgitate PR by "Saudi officials".

It's the House of Saud incendiary manipulation of sectarianism which is angering Shi'ites everywhere - not only Iranians; that may turn the Islamic Republic into the only substantial defender of all Shi'ites against Wahhabi medievalism.

It's the House of Saud counter-revolution against the Great 2011 Arab Revolt - condoned by the US - that has shattered America's "credibility on democracy and reform".

All this while the "traditional security arrangement" with Washington is not even working anymore. The House of Saud is not stabilizing global oil prices; by refusing to increase production, it will let it reach $160 a barrel-levels quite soon. And meanwhile the White House/Pentagon keeps protecting that medieval bunch that were the first to recognize the Taliban in the mid-1990s, and whose billionaires finance jihadis all across the world.

The Gulf political midgets are now in the process of being homogenized - and kept under a leash - by House of Saud force. Those Gulf kings and emirs may preserve their golden thrones - for now. But expect plenty of cultural and religious violence ahead; plenty of nasty tribalism and sectarian wars, with no possible political evolution and no possible development of a modern civil society. No surprise; fear and loathing are embedded in this reactionary House - an axis of multiple evils in itself that should only deserve a shallow grave in the desert sands.

Pepe Escobar is the author of Globalistan: How the Globalized World is Dissolving into Liquid War (Nimble Books, 2007) and Red Zone Blues: a snapshot of Baghdad during the surge. His latest book is Obama does Globalistan (Nimble Books, 2009).

He may be reached at pepeasia@yahoo.com.

TheUnhivedMind - April 25, 2011 06:30 PM (GMT)

WEBSTER TARPLEY - SAUDI ARABIA IS READY TO DEFEND ITSELF AGAINST THE U.S.

http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=LoEpg3CGL3o http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=iNO7SkgNckE http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=5FXCui1kvos http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=yfaeeRJpUO0
http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=0r0ae4Y_CLk

[DOHTML]<iframe title="YouTube video player" width="480" height="390" src="http://www.youtube.com/embed/LoEpg3CGL3o" frameborder="0" allowfullscreen></iframe>

<iframe title="YouTube video player" width="480" height="390" src="http://www.youtube.com/embed/iNO7SkgNckE" frameborder="0" allowfullscreen></iframe>

<iframe title="YouTube video player" width="480" height="390" src="http://www.youtube.com/embed/5FXCui1kvos" frameborder="0" allowfullscreen></iframe>

<iframe title="YouTube video player" width="480" height="390" src="http://www.youtube.com/embed/yfaeeRJpUO0" frameborder="0" allowfullscreen></iframe>

<iframe title="YouTube video player" width="480" height="390" src="http://www.youtube.com/embed/0r0ae4Y_CLk" frameborder="0" allowfullscreen></iframe>[/DOHTML]

TheUnhivedMind - May 11, 2011 05:34 PM (GMT)

Two grenades thrown at Saudi consulate in Karachi

Drive-by attackers lobbed two grenades at the Saudi consulate in Pakistan's largest city of Karachi on Wednesday, in the first possible violent reaction to the US killing of Osama bin Laden.

4:51PM BST 11 May 2011
http://www.telegraph.co.uk/news/worldnews/...in-Karachi.html

Officials reported no damage and no casualties after two men on a motorcycle threw the explosives at the heavily fortified building in Clifton, the smartest neighbourhood of Karachi, nine days after bin Laden was killed in Pakistan.

"This was an attack on the Saudi consulate. Two motorcycle riders threw two grenades and fled," provincial government official Sharfuddin Memon told AFP.

"There were no casualties. We are seeing this incident in the present context. It could be a reaction of the Osama incident," he added.

Pakistan has been in the grip of domestic and international crisis since US Navy SEALs flew in, seemingly undetected, from Afghanistan to identify and kill the Saudi-born al-Qaeda terror mastermind at a suburban compound on May 2.

Pakistanis have expressed horror at the perceived impunity of the raid, furiously asking if their military was too incompetent to know he was living in a garrison city near the capital, or, even worse, conspired to protect him.

But while the killing has not ignited mass protests in the Muslim country, where more than 4,240 people have died in bomb attacks blamed on the Taliban and al-Qaeda in the last four years, small gatherings have vowed revenge.

Saudi Arabia expelled bin Laden in 1991 and later revoked his nationality. The government in Riyadh, which is allied to the authorities in Islamabad, last week welcomed his killing as a boost to international anti-terror efforts.

An AFP photographer said ambulances, police and paramilitary Rangers swarmed outside the Saudi consulate after the attack, where small shrapnel marks could be seen on the outer wall of the building.

Mohammed Safdar, a police official at the scene, said security guards at the diplomatic mission had opened fire on the attackers but they escaped.

"Two men riding on a motorbike hurled two grenades towards the consulate. The security men at the gate opened fire on them, but they managed to flee," he told AFP.

"The security guards informed us and we reached the spot immediately. The bomb disposal squad are here. Other police and Rangers have surrounded the area," he added.

Pakistan is holding in protective custody three of bin Laden's widows, who come from Saudi Arabia and Yemen, and 13 of their children.

The foreign ministry says it has yet to receive a formal request from the United States for access to the relatives or requests from their home countries for their repatriation.

TheUnhivedMind - May 21, 2011 11:16 PM (GMT)

US arms sales at odds with words

By Derrick Z. Jackson Globe Columnist / May 21, 2011
http://www.boston.com/bostonglobe/editoria...dds_with_words/

ON THE same day President Obama pressed again for peace in the Middle East, the Associated Press reminded us that the United States cannot help itself from flooding the region with the instruments of war, reporting that the nation is “quietly expanding defense ties on a vast scale’’ with Saudi Arabia.

How vast? The part that has been highly publicized is the new $60 billion arms sale made to the Saudis because of the ongoing threat of Iran. The deal sends Saudi Arabia 84 new F-15s and upgrades to 70 F-15s. It also sends them about 180 Apache, Black Hawk, and Little Bird helicopters, as well as anti-ship and anti-radar missiles. In officially announcing the sale last fall, Andrew Shapiro, the US assistant secretary of state for political affairs, said the sales were part of “deepening our security relationship with a key partner with whom we’ve enjoyed a solid security relationship for nearly 70 years.’’

But there are other emerging aspects of the security relationship the Obama administration is not so candid about. The AP also reported on an obscure project to create a special elite security force that would fall under the US Central Command. The force would have up to 35,000 members “to protect the kingdom’s oil riches and future nuclear sites.’’ It would be separate from Saudi Arabia’s military and its national guard and would involve tens of billions of dollars in additional military contracts. But no official of the Pentagon, the State Department, or the Saudi embassy would go on the record to discuss the program.

The sheepishness of the Pentagon was mirrored by Obama’s failure to mention Saudi Arabia once in his speech Thursday at the State Department. Obama urged fresh Israeli-Palestinian negotiations, praised the revolutions in Tunisia and Egypt, harshly denounced Libya and Syria, and cajoled Yemen and Bahrain to loosen up on their people. Obama criticized in general the “corruption of elites’’ and pushed for women’s rights in health, business, and politics. He said, “the region will never reach its full potential when more than half of its population is prevented from achieving their full potential.’’

Saudi Arabia is well-known for the elites who still continue to suppress women’s potential. Only 31 percent of women ages 25-54 are in the workplace, compared to 96 percent of like-aged men, according to the International Labor Organization. While modernization and international pressure have led to women being more than half of the country’s college students, they do not have equal access to classes and facilities, according to Freedom House, the advocacy group that has tracked levels of freedom since World War II. Despite scattered appointments of female officials in government, business, and television news, laws still discriminate against women, and women were recently banned once more from municipal elections scheduled for later this year.

The United States is boosting aid to such regimes even though it demands far less accountability than it is supposed to. A Government Accountability Office study last fall found that the State Department and the Defense Department “did not consistently document how arms transfers to Gulf countries advanced US foreign policy and national security goals.’’ Among the policy criteria that arms transfers are supposed to be assessed on is whether that country is protecting human rights, but State Department officials admitted to the GAO “that they do not document these assessments.’’ The report concluded that the gap in accountability meant “Congress may not have a clear understanding’’ of direct commercial sales of arms to the Gulf region.’’

Most experts assume that Obama remains mute on Saudi Arabia because it has the largest oil production capacity in the world and its strategic importance against Iran. But these arms deals, public and secret, up the ante on Obama to be far more transparent about what our relationship is to a nation that is assisting the Bahrain government in its crackdown on freedom protesters. Even as Obama praised the people of North Africa who have risen up for human rights “in the face of batons and sometimes bullets,’’ he is sending yet more bullets, planes, and missiles to nations that fall far too short on human rights.

Derrick Z. Jackson can be reached at jackson@globe.com.

TheUnhivedMind - May 29, 2011 01:50 AM (GMT)

UK training Saudi forces used to crush Arab spring

• British military personnel run courses for snipers
• Human rights groups furious over Riyadh link

Jamie Doward and Philippa Stewart guardian.co.uk, Saturday 28 May 2011 21.00 BST
http://www.guardian.co.uk/world/2011/may/2...ng-saudi-troops

Britain is training Saudi Arabia's national guard – the elite security force deployed during the recent protests in Bahrain – in public order enforcement measures and the use of sniper rifles. The revelation has outraged human rights groups, which point out that the Foreign Office recognises that the kingdom's human rights record is "a major concern".

In response to questions made under the Freedom of Information Act, the Ministry of Defence has confirmed that British personnel regularly run courses for the national guard in "weapons, fieldcraft and general military skills training, as well as incident handling, bomb disposal, search, public order and sniper training". The courses are organised through the British Military Mission to the Saudi Arabian National Guard, an obscure unit that consists of 11 British army personnel under the command of a brigadier.

The MoD response, obtained yesterday by the Observer, reveals that Britain sends up to 20 training teams to the kingdom a year. Saudi Arabia pays for "all BMM personnel, as well as support costs such as accommodation and transport".

Bahrain's royal family used 1,200 Saudi troops to help put down demonstrations in March. At the time the British government said it was "deeply concerned" about reports of human rights abuses being perpetrated by the troops.

"Britain's important role in training the Saudi Arabian national guard in internal security over many years has enabled them to develop tactics to help suppress the popular uprising in Bahrain," said Nicholas Gilby of the Campaign Against Arms Trade.

Analysts believe the Saudi royal family is desperate to shore up its position in the region by preserving existing regimes in the Gulf that will help check the increasing power of Iran.

"Last year we raised concerns that the Saudis had been using UK-supplied and UK-maintained arms in secret attacks in Yemen that left scores of Yemeni civilians dead," said Oliver Sprague, director of Amnesty International's UK Arms Programme.

Defence minister Nick Harvey confirmed to parliament last week that the UK's armed forces provided training to the Saudi national guard. "It is possible that some members of the Saudi Arabian national guard which were deployed in Bahrain may have undertaken some training provided by the British military mission," he said.

The confirmation that this training is focused on maintaining public order in the kingdom is potentially embarrassing for the government. Coming at the end of a week in which the G8 summit in France approved funding for countries embracing democracy in the wake of the Arab spring, it has led to accusations that the government's foreign policy is at conflict with itself.

Jonathan Edwards, a Plaid Cymru MP who has tabled parliamentary questions to the MoD about its links to Saudi Arabia, said he found it difficult to understand why Britain was training troops for "repressive undemocratic regimes". "This is the shocking face of our democracy to many people in the world, as we prop up regimes of this sort," Edwards said. "It is intensely hypocritical of our leadership in the UK – Labour or Conservative – to talk of supporting freedoms in the Middle East and elsewhere while at the same time training crack troops of dictatorships."

The MoD's response was made in 2006, but when questioned this week it confirmed Britain has been providing training for the Saudi national guard to improve their "internal security and counter-terrorism" capabilities since 1964 and continues to do so. Members of the guard, which was established by the kingdom's royal family because it feared its regular army would not support it in the event of a popular uprising, are also provided places on flagship UK military courses at Sandhurst and Dartmouth. In Saudi Arabia, Britain continues to train the guard in "urban sharpshooter" programmes, the MoD confirmed.

Last year, Britain approved 163 export licences for military equipment to Saudi Arabia, worth £110m. Exports included armoured personnel carriers, sniper rifles, small arms ammunition and weapon sights. In 2009, the UK supplied Saudi Arabia with CS hand grenades, teargas and riot control agents.

Sprague said a shake-up of the system licensing the supply of military expertise and weapons to foreign governments was overdue. "We need a far more rigorous case-by-case examination of the human rights records of those who want to buy our equipment or receive training."

An MoD spokesman described the Gulf states, including Saudi Arabia, as "key partners" in the fight against terrorism. "By providing training for countries to the same high standards used by UK armed forces we help to save lives and raise awareness of human rights," said the spokesman.

Labour MP Mike Gapes, the former chairman of the Foreign Affairs Select Committee, said British military support for Saudi Arabia was about achieving a "difficult balance".

"On the one hand Saudi Arabia faces the threat of al-Qaida but on the other its human rights record is dreadful. This is the constant dilemma you have when dealing with autocratic regimes: do you ignore them or try to improve them?"

TheUnhivedMind - May 30, 2011 06:58 PM (GMT)

[dohtml] May 28, 2011<o:p></o:p>

Obama Vows War On <st1:country-region w:st="on"><st1:place w:st="on">Saudi Arabia</st1:place></st1:country-region>,
Orders Thousands Of US Troops To Region<o:p></o:p>

By: Sorcha Faal, and as reported to her Western Subscribers<o:p></o:p>

A stunning report from the G8 Summit states that President Medvedev has been told that the American regime leader Barack Obama [photo top left] intends to unleash a “summer war” on <st1:country-region w:st="on"><st1:place w:st="on">Saudi Arabia</st1:place></st1:country-region> to capture their oil fields and has ordered thousands more US Troops to the region to launch it.

According to this report, Obama this past week ordered his Defense Department to “pre-position” over 7,170 combat-hardened US Soldiers in southern Iraq to prepare for the invasion of Saudi Arabia in a blatant disregard of the American pledge to withdrawal all of their by January 2012.

So enraged were the Iraqi people when hearing of Obama's betrayal that tens-of-thousands of them began a mass protest demanding the Americans leave, but was met with <st1:country-region w:st="on">US</st1:country-region> commander Major General Jeffrey Buchanan slamming the protest march by calling this peaceful protest "an affront to Iraq's democracy."<o:p></o:p>

Even worse for the US, this report continues, was the powerful Iraqi cleric and militia leader Moqtada al-Sadr threatening to unleash his forces upon the Americans unless they begin leaving his country as soon as practical, but which with Obama's planned new war against Saudi Arabia is now not going to happen.

Unnerving Obama, this report says, is the new Arab Alliance the Saudi's are creating to make war against Iran, and which includes the largest Muslim nation in the world Indonesia, and America's newest enemy Pakistan.

The new Arab Alliance, all Sunni Muslim ruled nations, being created by Saudi Arabia through their Gulf Cooperation Council (GCC) launched their first attack against their Persian Shiite foes in Bahrain where Saudi and Pakistani troops unleashed one of the most brutal crackdowns ever seen in a region used to such actions, even to include the mass destruction of holy sites.   </ span>

<st1:place w:st="on"><st1:country-region w:st="on">Saudi Arabia</st1:country-region></st1:place>'s anger at Obama stems from the Americans refusal to support the deposed Egyptian dictator Hosni Mubarak who now languishes in prison with his two sons under threat of death by firing squad for his ordering the killing of unarmed protesters.

As we have reported on many times, including our March 4th report
"Obama Warned Is Preparing World For Return Of "The Moon God", the Americas have vowed to protect Iran 'at all costs' and since 2001 have fought two wars to defeat the Persian Shiite's nations most feared opponents, the Bathist led Iraq and Taliban led Afghanistan.

Obama's main strategy, this report continues, is to secure all of the Middle East's vast oil reserves of which Saudi Arabia has the most of, but which are now threatened should the Saudi's succeed in launching an attack on Iran with their GCC allies which would turn the whole Gulf region into an infernal of 'unimaginable proportions' and plunge the entire world into an economic depression the likes of which have never been seen.

Fueling Obama's fears even more, this report further says, are that Pakistan's nuclear weapons would be used in this conflict, and which the Americans have now lost their ability to monitor after being ordered out of the country as tensions between these two former allies escalate by the day.

Worse still for the Americans was the dashing of their hopes this past week for Brazil's oil reserves (the largest oil find in three decades) after new estimates
lowered this ‘black gold’ from over 15 billion barrels to as little few as 4.5 billion. Though the <st1:country-region w:st="on">US</st1:country-region> has tried to secure a part of <st1:place w:st="on"><st1:country-region w:st="on">Brazil</st1:country-region></st1:place>’s vast oil reserves through a $2 billion loan-guarantee, the Brazilians, to date, have not taken advantage

it.

Important to note about Brazil, and as we had reported on in our May 11, 2006 report “World Begins Effort To Collapse US Dollar As Brazil Begins Nuclear Production And Ejects UN Inspectors”, is that because of its nuclear weapons the Americans can’t take their oil reserves by force as they have through their wars against Muslim nations.

To the American peoples ability to stop Obama’s new war against Saudi Arabia there appears to be no hope especially after his refusal yesterday to allow a truce in the illegal Libyan war he started over two months ago by lying to his own citizens saying it would only last “days, not weeks.”

Most ominous, for the American people at least, in this report further warning that the parallels between the United States today, and Nazi Germany of last century are becoming too similar to ignore, especially when viewed in the light that both of these nations wars were started because they lacked the oil resources to sustain their global economic and military might.

Evidence that <st1:country-region w:st="on">America</st1:country-region> is fast falling into fascist tyranny could, literally, fill hundreds of volumes, and made even worse this after Obama followed Bush in allowing the unlimited powers of surveillance of US citizens and ordered his government lawyers to review all prayers said at the burial of <st1:country-region w:st="on"><st1:place w:st="on">US</st1:place></st1:country-region> war veterans to make sure the name of Jesus was removed.

Perhaps even worse was the Obama regime this past week unveiling their plan to spend over $500 million on a programme designed to make 5-year-old children ‘sit still’ in kindergarten in blind obedience to their ‘masters’, a move eerily similar to Nazi Germany’s creation of the Hitler Youth designed to accomplish the same goal.

To what the Obama regime is doing to the American peasant class is even worse as new reports show them failing to stop the dispensing of a popular stop-smoking drug called Chantix that has resulted in hundreds of suicides psychotic reactions or stopping the ingestion into food and drink the dangerous chemical Aspartame that scientists warn is the cause of thousands of premature births and cancer deaths.

To the worse horrors to come, and as we had warned about in our May 4th report “US Tells Russia That Time For “Apocalypse Equation” Is Now”, the American people remain blissfully ignorant, but one has no doubt that when these deluded people see that their “American Dream” is, in fact, an “American Nightmare”, the facing of their “new reality” will be more than they can bear. May God have mercy on them all.

© May 28, 2011 EU and US all rights reserved. Permission to use this report in its entirety is granted under the condition it is linked back to its original source at WhatDoesItMean.Com. [/dohtml]

TheUnhivedMind - June 18, 2011 12:40 AM (GMT)

Saudi Arabia women test driving ban

It was not a mass movement but about 30 or 40 women across the country took the wheel

Jason Burke in Riyadh guardian.co.uk, Friday 17 June 2011 17.25 BST
http://www.guardian.co.uk/world/2011/jun/1...drivers-protest

At just after 10 o'clock on Friday morning Maha al-Qahtani swapped places with her husband, Mohammed, and took the wheel of the family car.

For the next 50 minutes, she drove through the Saudi capital, along the six-lane King Fahd Road, through Cairo Square, down the upmarket Olaya Street with its shopping malls, Starbucks, Apple store and boutiques.

"No one tried to stop us. No one even looked," the 39-year-old civil servant said. "We drove past police cars but had no trouble."

In fact, the biggest problem for Qahtani was her husband sitting next to her in the family Hummer. "He kept telling me to slow down or speed up. He was very fussy," she said.

This is Saudi Arabia, the only country in the world that bans women from driving motor vehicles.

Qahtani was part of a small but striking movement of women determined to do something about it.

The exact number of Saudi women who protested was unclear. It was certainly not a mass movement.

By mid-afternoon a handful had driven in Riyadh, a few in the southern port city of Jeddah, a couple in Dammam in the east, perhaps 30 or 40 overall in a country with a population of 27 million including migrant labourers.

But it was a breakthrough. In the closed and authoritarian kingdom, such open and premeditated dissent is extremely rare. Under the spotlight of international attention, Saudi Arabia's rulers had clearly decided to allow the protest to go ahead.

"It is not the issue of women's driving itself which poses a problem, it is the challenge to authority," said a political analyst, Khaled al-Dhakil. "But … change is eroding that authority."

This was the closest Saudi Arabia has yet got to the revolutionary upheavals of the Arab spring. A "day of rage" declared in March was, outside areas dominated by the Shia minority, a non-event. A lack of tradition of public protest and heavy security presence rapidly ended any efforts at mobilisation.

Last month seven women were arrested for driving. Manal al-Sharif, a 32-year-old who had posted a video on the internet of herself at the wheel, was held for 10 days, made to sign a pledge not to drive again and banned from talking to the media.

On Friday, a different mood prevailed. Police appeared to be under orders not to intervene. In Jeddah, one woman said she had been detained by soldiers and escorted home. Others reported being ignored.

But when Qahtani, who holds American and international driving licenses, tried driving again in the afternoon, she was stopped after 30 minutes by police, given a ticket for driving without a Saudi licence, and sent home.

The question now is whether this signals forthcoming concessions from the authorities. King Abdullah, a relative moderate reigning since 2005, is known to be sympathetic but constrained by a conservative religious establishment.

The support of the clergy has been crucial to the house of Al Saud and successive kings have been careful not to antagonise them. Earlier this year, clerics issued a fatwa against challenging the royal family's authority.

Many clerics claim the driving ban prevents vice by stopping women interacting with male strangers – despite the enforced proximity with a hired driver.

Wajeha al-Huwaider, the activist who filmed Sharif's drive, said the "big campaign" might make the government rethink.

"Driving is a basic simple right. Denying it is hurting the image of the country. Even if the ban is nothing to do with religion, it is also hurting the image of Islam," she said.

Social networking sites such as Twitter and Facebook have been key for the women drivers, providing support networks and, crucially, publicity outside the kingdom.

The legal situation is unclear. Supporters say it is justified by both religious fatwas and the rulers' own statements. Critics say there is nothing in Islam to back the ban and that there has never been a royal decree.

Women in Saudi Arabia are also banned from voting or from leaving home without a male guardian.

Previous campaigns to overturn the ban have failed. One, in 1991, resulted in nearly 50 women who drove losing their jobs and being banned from foreign travel. The critical question now is broader public opinion. Those driving on Friday come from a small – if growing – element of Saudi society.

Saad, a 24-year-old engineer who recently returned from government-sponsored studies in the US, said that Saudis should "get over" the issue.

"There are much more important issues here than women driving. We need to be more broad-minded," he said.

But many others disagree. Abdullah al-Otaiba, who trades camels on the outskirts of Riyadh, said that women driving was a "bad idea".

"You have your ways of doing things in the west and that's fine for you. We are conservative people. We are not democratic. We have another religion and women should not go alone," he said.

There is room for compromise – the most likely outcome, experts says. Some younger clerics would accept women being allowed to drive in case of emergency.

The women, most of whom learned to drive overseas, say their campaign will continue until a royal decree is issued allowing them to drive "without any conditions".

"It's our right. We have to have it. We will continue until we can decide ourselves," said Maha al-Qahtani.

"I'm really excited," said Eman Nafjan, 32, who drove round her Riyadh neighbourhood for 15 minutes . "We need to do it again."

TheUnhivedMind - June 21, 2011 11:42 PM (GMT)

Hillary Clinton backs Saudi Arabia women's right-to-drive campaign

Relations between Washington and Riyadh could be damaged by comments on female drivers by US secretary of state

guardian.co.uk, Tuesday 21 June 2011 20.54 BST
http://www.guardian.co.uk/world/2011/jun/2...-female-drivers

Hillary Clinton has lent her support to women in Saudi Arabia protesting against the ban on female drivers, her first public comments on an issue complicating relations between Washington and Riyadh.

A day after the US state department said it was handling the issue through "quiet diplomacy" and not public pronouncements, Clinton praised the protesters, but stressed they were acting on their own behalf, not at the behest of outsiders such as herself.

"What these women are doing is brave and what they are seeking is right, but the effort belongs to them," said Clinton. "I am moved by it and I support them, but I want to underscore the fact that this is not coming from outside of their country. This is the women themselves, seeking to be recognised."

The protests have put the Obama administration, and Clinton in particular, in a difficult position. While she and many other top US officials personally oppose the Saudi ban on female drivers, the administration is increasingly reliant on Saudi authorities to provide stability and continuity in the Middle East and Gulf amid uprisings taking place across the Arab world.

Thus, some officials have been reluctant to antagonise the Saudis.

On Monday, a coalition of Saudi activists urged Clinton to support publicly the campaign to end male-only driving in the ultra-conservative Muslim country.

Clinton said on Tuesday that she and other US officials had raised the matter "at the highest level of the Saudi government".

"We have made clear our views that women everywhere, including women in the kingdom, have the right to make decisions about their lives and their futures," she said. "They have the right to contribute to society and provide for their children and their families, and mobility, such as provided by the freedom to drive, provides access to economic opportunity, including jobs, which does fuel growth and stability.

"And it's also important for just day-to-day life, to say nothing of the necessity from time to time to transport children for various needs and sometimes even emergencies," Clinton said. "We will continue in private and in public to urge all governments to address issues of discrimination and to ensure that women have the equal opportunity to fulfill their own God-given potential."

TheUnhivedMind - June 26, 2011 01:36 AM (GMT)

Before Oil Move, a Secret U.S. Delegation to Saudi Arabia

JUNE 24, 2011, 6:45 P.M. ET
http://online.wsj.com/article/SB1000142405...2639221080.html

President Barack Obama sent a delegation of high-ranking advisers in secret to Saudi Arabia to pave the way for Thursday's surprise release of oil from strategic reserves, administration officials said.

Mr. Obama and his top economic and national security advisers began discussing how to cope with the economic impact of higher oil prices in late January, as U.S. gasoline prices began rising above $3 a gallon for the first time since 2008. White House officials became more concerned after civil unrest in Libya disrupted oil shipments from the North African nation in late February.

Libya was exporting about 1.5 million barrels a day of light sweet crude, mostly to Europe. The disruption of Libyan oil heightened concerns on both sides of the Atlantic, because it cut deeply into the thin margin by which supply exceeds demand in the world oil market.

Throughout the spring, gasoline prices in the U.S. rose along with the world price of crude. On Capitol Hill, Republicans turned up the pressure on the Obama administration to accelerate domestic drilling, charging that the Environmental Protection Agency and the Interior Department were putting regulatory roadblocks in the way of expanded U.S. production.

The White House countered that oil companies weren't exploring substantial leases they already had. Mr. Obama also called for the Justice Department to undertake an investigation of whether there was improper financial speculation behind the runup in oil prices.

On April 26, Mr. Obama and his advisers, alarmed by a report showing brent crude prices surging above $120 a barrel, concluded they should move to release oil from the strategic reserves held by the U.S. and other consuming nations.

In early May, Mr. Obama and his advisers decided to undertake a secret diplomatic effort to persuade Saudi Arabia to accept the move. Gene Sperling, the director of the National Economic Council, and Mike Froman, a deputy national security adviser, prepared a May 2 memo for the president detailing why that was necessary and asking him to sign off on outreach to Riyadh. The world's largest oil producer has traditionally objected to U.S. moves to release oil from its strategic reserves.

Mr. Obama called Saudi King Abdullah to discuss the issue, and pave the way for the arrival later that week of a delegation of senior administration officials that included Mr. Froman, Deputy Energy Secretary Daniel Poneman and deputy Treasury Secretary Neal Wolin. The team went to Saudi Arabia, the United Arab Emirates and Kuwait, and returned to Washington on Mothers' Day, May 8, administration officials said.

On May 19, the IEA issued a report saying there was a clear, urgent need for additional supplies. Mr. Obama used the G-8 summit in Deauville, France, in late May to discuss the oil issue with his counterparts from the other big industrialized nations.

On June 8, OPEC members failed to agree on a proposal by Saudi Arabia to increase production. Saudi Arabia said it would boost production on its own by 1.5 million barrels a day. OPEC issued a report that warned of tight supplies in the summer season, when consumption is highest.

In an Oval Office meeting with his economic team on June 15, Mr. Obama approved a plan to start talks with the IEA about releasing reserves.

Two days later, the U.S. and a group of consumer countries from Asia, Europe formally asked IEA for an initial assessment of a drawdown of strategic reserves. The IEA issued its report on June 18, giving countries 48 hours to reply.

"And that's where we ended up at 9 a.m. [Thursday]," the official said.

TheUnhivedMind - June 30, 2011 04:11 PM (GMT)

'Saudi Arabia is simply a very different society from Egypt, Tunisia or Syria'

The jigsaw-solving women of Jeddah feel campaigning is on the rise, but a Saudi summer to follow the Arab spring seems far off

Jason Burke in Jeddah
guardian.co.uk, Thursday 30 June 2011 16.02 BST
http://www.guardian.co.uk/world/2011/jun/3...ot-egypt-reform

The Bridges bookshop and cafe, on Arafat Street in an upmarket residential area of the southern Saudi port city of Jeddah, is quiet this weekend afternoon. Three young women sit on the floor working on a 13,000-piece jigsaw. Among the well-thumbed books for browsing on the artfully slanted shelves, next to works on Islamic calligraphy and architecture, are biographies of Mahatma Gandhi, Che Guevara and Nelson Mandela.

Yet Asma, Amna and Dina, all 23, are no revolutionaries. As educated, English-speaking, iPod and iPad-carrying young Arabs, they are very much in the same demographic as those who organised the mass demonstrationprotests that ended the rule of President Hosni Mubarak in Egypt this year, but the three women are separated from their counterparts in Cairo by more than the Red Sea.

Images of the Arab spring streaming into Saudi Arabia on the ubiquitous satellite TV channels may have meant that "people are realising the importance of being politically aware", Amna, a human resources management student, says. But, in the kingdom, "we don't actually do anything".

Such feelings explain, at least in part, why, while the rest of the Arab world is in ferment, Saudis, of whom 70% are under 30 and 35% are under 16, have remained largely quiet. Despite overseas attention focused on a few incidents of protest, scores of interviews over two weeks in deeply conservative areas, the capital, Riyadh, and relatively liberal Jeddah have revealed a country in which a growing desire for reform is a very long way from anything approaching mass dissent.

"Saudi Arabia is simply a very different society from Egypt, Tunisia or Syria," says Dr Mustafa Alani, an analyst at the Gulf Research Centre, Dubai.

There is activism. The women working on the jigsaw are all involved in campaign groups, arguing for the right for women to vote in forthcoming municipal elections. Dina, who recently returned to Saudi Arabia after four years at a US college, says "nobody was doing much campaigning" when she left but now "lots is going on". Last month, several dozen women openly drove cars in defiance of custom, if not law.

"We cannot be a global leader and a medieval backwater at the same time," declared one headline in the reformist Arab News newspaper.

There is also an increasingly vocal community of human rights activists, bloggers and tweeters. "Something is happening every week. Activism was not really in the social fabric here but, compared to five years ago, things are really picking up," says Mohammed al'Qahtani, a prominent human rights campaigner. Long-term observers of the kingdom – diplomats and analysts — agree.

Yet anyone hoping for major upheaval soon is likely to be disappointed. The word that recurs in Saudi Arabia is "gradual". The increase in activism is relative and demands remain modest. "We are asking to be allowed to drive," says Eman al-Nafjan, a female PhD student and blogger in Riyadh.

Any activism remains within very tightly constrained bounds in this still fiercely conservative country. The present ruler, King Abdullah, is known as more moderate on many issues than many predecessors and many other senior royals. He has tacitly encouraged campaigns for women's rights. His own decision to moderate the strict policy of gender segregation at the huge new research university he has had built on the outskirts of Riyadh enraged local conservatives. In much of the kingdom, women remain heavily veiled even inside a private home if there is an unrelated man present, and single men are banned from shopping malls.

There are very clear rules about what criticisms can be voiced within the kingdom. These are so widely understood they do not have to be enforced.

Social issues such as bureaucratic incompetence, poverty and corruption can be denounced but only as long as the authority and integrity of the house of Al Saud are not questioned. Widespread anger at graft is thus rarely voiced, even if, as the jigsaw solvers put it, "the ceiling on what can be said has risen a lot".

So an academic who posted an article imagining Saudi Arabia without the royal family on his Facebook page was jailed for three months. So too, in February and March, were hundreds of Shia demonstrators from the kingdom's eastern oil-rich areas within whose community there is deep resentment at continuing discrimination.

The unpredictability of the far from monolithic authorities also acts as a deterrent. In May, several female drivers were detained, one for 10 days, yet no action was taken against about 40 women who drove two weeks ago. Officials "decided it was better to let their families deal with them", according to General Mansour al-Turki, a spokesman for the interior ministry. But this week, religious police arrested five.

The greatest severity is reserved not for "liberals" – though harassment is continual – but for Shia activists accused of links to Iran, and political Islamists whose organisation, ideology and criticism of the religious legitimacy of Saudi rulers are seen as extremely dangerous.

"The basic watchword is that reforms are to be granted by the king, not won through agitation, organisation and direct action," says one Riyadh-based analyst. "You can make your views known – there is a traditional right of audience and petition which is upheld – but that's it."

Many Saudis do not merely accept this, but welcome it. "It has to be remembered that the royal family are sitting on top of the most conservative society in the region, if not the world, and democracy is a foreign word, whatever is happening elsewhere [in the region]," says a second western Riyadh-based observer. The 87-year-old king remains popular, seen as a grandfatherly patriarch, despite the frequent complaints about his thousands of relatives.

Jamal Khashoggi, a prominent reformist journalist, stresses how the rule of the house of Al Saud is seen as maintaining the cohesion of a relatively new country containing many different communities.

"Egypt has sometimes been smaller or bigger but has not been divided for thousands of years. The Egyptians have their identity," says Khashoggi. "Saudis did not take to the streets demonstrating for change [because] they knew they could never agree. We all want a better country. Some want a more liberal country, some a more conservative country. But we all want a united country."

Others point to the lack of tradition of public protest – political gatherings or parties are illegal – to explain why there has been no "Saudi summer" after the Arab spring. There is also the clergy's support for the royals by the clergy in this deeply religious country. In March, senior clerics dutifully issued a fatwa, religious opinion, stating that it was un-Islamic to demonstrate.

"Here, there is no pretence. We know we do not choose the king. There are no fake promises of democracy," says Khashoggi.

Finally, there is the simple fact that most Saudis are much better off than they were only a few decades ago. The heady rush of the fabulous wealth of the 1970s may be gone, but oil revenue, inflated by recent high prices, still provides vast funds. There are big problems with housing in Saudi Arabia, and youth unemployment is estimated at 30%, but there are also subsidised utilities, a vast range of benefits and huge numbers of easy government jobs with generous pensions. Universities are free, with students paid a monthly stipend. Taxes are minimal. In March the king announced $130bn (£81bn) worth of new homes and public sector pay rises.

Poverty exists. Turki Faisal al-Rasheed, a businessman and campaigner in Riyadh, calculates that, though 80,000 individuals are worth more than $250m, 3 million are very poor. Starting salaries for teachers are below $6,000, barely a living wage. There are even occasional beggars. But most Saudis, if not the 9 million foreign labourers who do much of the menial work, are at the very least comfortable.

This may eventually change. "At the moment, the macro-economic picture is just fine, but in the long term something has to give," warns John Sfakianakis, chief economist at the Banque Saudi Fransi in Riyadh. By 2020, the Saudi population will be 35 million, with huge energy demands of its own. Even Saudi oil revenues will not be enough to sustain the current lifestyle of most.

Its leaders are aware of the need for economic reforms, particularly to create jobs for Saudis rather than foreigners, in the private sector. One recent measure was a royal decree to allow women to work in shops serving other women.

"We have to create jobs and to shift the economy into a higher level of productivity, more technology and knowledge-driven and less dependent on oil," Dr Abdul Wahed al-Humaid, the vice-minister of labour, says. One effort involves scholarships worth £20,000 per year for more than 100,000 young Saudis studying overseas, often in the US. A huge new university for women – the biggest in the world – has just opened.

One aim is to stimulate creative, independent thinking, which, Humaid admits, may make young Saudis question authority, particularly if there are economic problems, question authority. "With the internet and satellite television, the social change has already taken place," the minister says.

For the moment, however, any real challenge to the house of Al Saud or indeed to the country's strict conservatism appears a distant prospect, whatever is happening in the rest of the region.

"Change will come – it's got to come — but it will be at a pace which suits our society," says Miteb, 23, recently returned from college in California.

The women drivers have been careful to be veiled and accompanied by a family member, as customs demand. Amna stresses to the Guardian how the Bridges bookstore is somewhere to debate and meet but not to challenge social values. Though sexes mix there in a way that would shock some, she and her friends still wear the long black abaya gown.

"People are always trying to categorise liberals and conservatives. It's more complicated. You can be both at the same time but in different ways," she says. "But we definitely want more for our kids than we have."

TheUnhivedMind - July 2, 2011 03:17 AM (GMT)

Five Saudi women are seized for driving

Thursday, 30 June 2011
http://www.independent.co.uk/news/world/mi...ng-2304509.html

At least five Saudi women have been taken into custody accused of defying the men-only driving rule, an activist said yesterday.

The detentions mark the first major backlash since a campaign was launched by women nearly two weeks ago to challenge the restrictions. Dozens of women have since driven through the capital, Riyadh, and other cities.

The Saudi-based rights activist Eman al-Nafjan said that police detained one woman on Tuesday while driving in Jeddah on the Red Sea coast. Four other women accused of driving were later detained in the city

TheUnhivedMind - July 8, 2011 04:38 PM (GMT)

Merkel under fire for Saudi tank deal

Published: 5 Jul 11 11:43 CET
http://www.thelocal.de/politics/20110705-36081.html

Germany's centre-right coalition on Tuesday came under increasing fire from both the opposition and Angela Merkel's own conservatives for a controversial arms deal to supply 200 Leopard tanks to Saudi Arabia despite its questionable human rights record.
Saudi tank deal may be dirty, Greens MP says (7 Jul 11)
Victim asks for Germany to help save racist killer (6 Jul 11)

Barenboim stays on as Berlin State Opera music director (30 Jun 11)
News agency Reuters reported that most of the parliamentary leadership of Chancellor Merkel's Christian Democratic Union (CDU) raised objections to the sale at a meeting on Monday. The environmentalist Greens planned to raise the issue in the Bundestag on Tuesday.

News magazine Der Spiegel reported at the weekend that the German government had given the green light to the sale of Leopard 2 battle tanks, which would reap more than €1 billion for the country's arms industry but reverse its long-held policy not to supply heavy weaponry to the Arab kingdom.

Reuters reported that key members of the party's parliamentary group raised vocal concerns, including the chairman of the foreign affairs committee, Ruprecht Polenz, Bundestag president Norbert Lammert and the party's human rights expert Erika Steinbach.

They argued that breaches of human rights by Saudi Arabia raised questions about the sale. Lammert pointed out Saudi Arabia had recently deployed tanks to help suppress the anti-government protests in neighbouring Bahrain.

Concerns about Israel's safety have also been expressed.

The Greens' parliamentary leader, Jürgen Trittin, said the supply of tanks to the autocratic regime would breach the tradition of Germany's Middle East policy.

"Such equipment is not usually supplied to such areas," Trittin told public broadcaster ARD on Tuesday morning.

Saudi Arabia had only recently been involved in "steamrolling" the pro-democracy movement in the gulf state of Bahrain, he added.

On top of additional arms supplies to Algeria valued at about €10 billion, the government was entering dangerous new territory.

"It shows that there is no red line any longer for the federal government in Middle East policy," Trittin said.

Der Spiegel reported that the deal had been approved by the government's Security Council, a cabinet group made up of the chancellor and key ministers and which examines all major arms deals. The government has so far declined to comment.

Reuters also reported that Saudia Arabia has already purchased 44 battle tanks from Germany.

Merkel's junior coalition partners, the pro-business Free Democratic Party (FDP) has also raised concerns. The party's defence expert, Elke Hoff, told broadcaster ARD: "They may do it. The question is whether it is accompanied by the necessary political sensitivity and how it is received by the public."

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: Oman jails 12 more protesters, bringing total to Title: Oman jails 12 more protesters, bringing total to Description: 80

TheUnhivedMind - July 8, 2011 04:37 PM (GMT)

Oman jails 12 more protesters, bringing total to 80

06 July 2011, Wednesday / REUTERS, MUSCAT
http://www.todayszaman.com/news-249588-oma...otal-to-80.html

An Omani court jailed 12 protesters from the coastal city of Sohar for up to three and a half years, a local paper said on Wednesday, bringing the total number of people sentenced for taking part in the unrest to 80.

The usually tranquil Gulf Arab sultanate was hit by months of protests in February, following uprisings that toppled rulers in Egypt and Tunisia. Omanis, however, focused their demands on higher wages, more jobs and an end to graft rather than a change of government.

Security forces in May broke up a sit-in that had lasted for months in Sohar, an industrial city that was the epicentre of demonstrations in Oman. Police cleared road blocks and arrested hundreds on charges of vandalism, though most were pardoned.

The court sentenced two of the protesters to three and half years in jail for "making explosives and throwing them at security forces" the Times of Oman said. Five others were sentenced to two and half years and the rest to one year.

Last month the public prosecutor said 13 protesters were given prison sentences of up to five years for protesting in Sohar. A further 55 people were jailed for up to a year for demonstrating in the eastern town of Jaalan Bani Bu Ali.

Oman, a small non-OPEC oil producer, is poorer than its hydrocarbon-rich Gulf neighbours, Saudi Arabia, Qatar and the United Arab Emirates. The regional Gulf Cooperation Council, wary of unrest in its poorer members Oman and Bahrain, vowed to give each country aid packages of $10 billion each.

Sultan Qaboos bin Said, a U.S. ally who has ruled Oman for 40 years, has promised a $2.6 billion spending package and the government has said it will create 50,000 public sector jobs to placate Omanis.

Protests continued despite the promised reforms, with many complaining the changes had not been implemented, especially job creation. Protests have ebbed since May when police cleared out remaining protest camps in capital Muscat and the southern resort town of Salalah.

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: Chile police tear gas education protesters

Title: Chile police tear gas education protesters

TheUnhivedMind - July 1, 2011 10:14 PM (GMT)

Chile police tear gas education protesters

30 June 2011
http://www.google.com/hostednews/afp/artic...a3b52988d1e.481

SANTIAGO — Police fired tear gas and water cannons on at least 100,000 demonstrators in the Chilean capital Thursday, and arrested 13 during the biggest protest in two months demanding educational reforms.

Angry protesters hurtled sticks, rocks and metal objects like pies as police responded from armored vehicles in the violent culmination of what had been a peaceful, festive and colorful demonstration, the sixth of its kind.

A police officer was hurt and 13 people were arrested. Organizers estimated a crowd of about 200,000 people participated in the demonstration, while local media gave an estimate of 100,000. No official figures were immediately available.

Rioting broke out at the end of a sprawling demonstration on the streets of downtown Santiago, including a huge crowd waving flags and banners outside La Moneda presidential palace.

A cellphone shop was ransacked and protesters attacked police at the Brazilian embassy in Santiago in an attempt to breach the security barriers and occupy the building. The embassy is located just across the Ministry of Education in the center of the capital.

"This is historic. Since the return of democracy, we haven't seen anything this big," said Giorgio Jackson, a student leader.

The unrest came two weeks after some 70,000 people took to the streets calling for greater government investment in public education, which now totals 4.4 percent of Chile's gross domestic product compared with the seven percent of GDP for developed countries recommended by the United Nations.

"The strikes and protests are legitimate, but that's not how we will improve education. You need work, study, responsibility and engagement for that," said President Sebastian Pinera, a conservative multimillionaire businessman.

Students and professors want the Chilean government to retake control over the Chilean public schools that educate 90 percent of the country's 3.5 million students.

Control of the public school system was ceded to local municipalities during the 1973-1990 military dictatorship of General Augusto Pinochet.

TheUnhivedMind - July 5, 2011 06:55 PM (GMT)

Chile: education protests continue to grow

Submitted by Weekly News Update on Mon, 07/04/2011 - 23:27.
http://www.ww4report.com/node/10079

With chants of "An educated people will never be deceived" and "We want a free, quality education," tens of thousands of Chilean students, parents and teachers took to the streets on June 30 in the latest protest against the privatized education system set up under the 1973-1990 dictatorship of Gen. Augusto Pinochet. Giorgio Jackson, president of the Federation of Catholic University Students (FEUC), estimated that 200,000 people took part in the demonstration in Santiago, while Federation of University of Chile Students (FECH) president Camila Vallejo put the number at more than 300,000. By most accounts the Santiago protest was twice the size of a June 16 march that local media had called the largest since the return of democracy 21 years ago.

The Santiago march was only part of the day's action. Organizers said 200,000 protesters marched in other cities around the education demands; meanwhile, students have occupied some 200 schools and 30 universities over the last three weeks. More and more people from different sectors of Chilean society were joining the movement, FECH president Vallejo said. "Each time we have more support."

Violence broke out at the end of the Santiago march when groups of youths tried to loot downtown stores. The police used tear gas and water cannons on the crowd. At least 38 protesters were arrested and some 20 police agents were injured, according to the authorities. Protest organizers denied responsibility for the violence. "I feel that a large percentage of these people wearing hoods are infiltrators," Vallejo had told the Cuban wire service Prensa Latina the day before the demonstration. She noted that Chile had a history of the use of provocateurs.

Rightwing president Sebastián Piñera responded to the protests by saying that "the strikes, the demonstrations are legal, but education isn't improved with strikes or demonstrations." (La Tercera, Santiago, June 30; La Jornada, Mexico, July 1, from correspondent; Prensa Latina, June 29)

After a July 2 meeting at the University of the Frontier (UFRO) in Temuco, capital of the Araucanía region in central Chile, the approximately 30 organizations in the Chilean Student Confederation (CONFECH) announced plans for another strike and day of protests on July 14. FEUC Jackson noted that the Federation of Mapuche Students had participated in the meeting and that the movement's demands now included a call for new scholarships and greater enrollment of indigenous students along with respect for cultural differences in the schools. The Mapuche are Chile's largest indigenous group. (PL, July 3)

From Weekly News Update on the Americas, July 3.

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: Party of ousted PM's sister wins Thai elections

Title: Party of ousted PM's sister wins Thai elections

TheUnhivedMind - July 3, 2011 11:05 PM (GMT)

Party of ousted PM's sister wins Thai elections

Fears of unrest and a possible coup after apparently decisive election result

7/3/2011 1:19:27 PM ET
http://www.msnbc.msn.com/id/43621408/ns/wo...s-asia_pacific/

BANGKOK — The sister of exiled former Prime Minister Thaksin Shinawatra led Thailand's main opposition party to a landslide victory in elections Sunday, heralding an extraordinary political turnaround five tumultuous years after her fugitive billionaire brother was toppled in an army coup.

The vote paves the way for 44-year-old Yingluck Shinawatra, who has never held office, to become this Southeast Asian kingdom's first female prime minister.

A large mandate to govern could help the new government navigate a way out of the crisis that has plagued Thailand since Thaksin's 2006 overthrow. But the question remains whether the nation's elite power brokers, including the monarchy and the army, would accept the result.

Thaksin was barred from politics in 2007 and convicted on graft charges the next year. The U.S.-educated Yingluck, who he has called "my clone," is widely considered his proxy.

The incumbent premier, Abhisit Vejjajiva, conceded defeat Sunday night and said he was ready to become the opposition.

Sakchai Lalit / AP
A Thai woman writes names of candidates at a booth before casting vote at a polling station in Bangkok, Thailand, Sunday, July 3, 2011.

With 98 percent of the vote counted, preliminary results from the Election Commission indicated Yingluck's Pheu Thai party had a strong lead with 264 of 500 parliament seats, well over the majority needed to form a government. Abhisit's Democrats won 160 seats.

Speaking to a throng of cheering supporters at her party headquarters in Bangkok, Yingluck declined to declare victory until final results are released. But she said: "I don't want to say that Pheu Thai wins today. It's a victory of the people."

In an interview broadcast on the Thai PBS television station, Thaksin called the preliminary outcome "a step forward."

"People are tired of a standstill," he said from the desert emirate of Dubai, where he lives in exile to avoid a two-year prison sentence for graft he says is politically motivated. "They want to see change in a peaceful manner."

Thaksin said he did not feel vengeful and was "ready to forgive all."

After the army toppled Thaksin, controversial court rulings removed two of the pro-Thaksin premiers who followed, one of whom won a 2007 vote intended to restore democracy. That chain of events paved the way for army-backed Abhisit to assume power — ultimately sparking the massive anti-government protests last year which brought Bangkok to its knees, leaving 90 people dead, 1,800 wounded and the glittering city's skyline engulfed in flames.

Army chief Gen. Prayuth Chan-ocha reiterated his vow last week to stay neutral in the vote, dismissing rumors the military would stage another coup.

"The future depends on whether the traditional elite will be willing to accept the voice of the people," Pavin Chachavalpongpun of the Institute of Southeast Asian Studies in Singapore, told The Associated Press.

The more Yingluck's party wins by, he said, "the more stable her government will be, the more difficult it will be for the elite to do anything against it."

The photogenic Yingluck has long been seen as the front-runner in the vote. Her popularity is almost entirely due to fact that she is the proxy of Thaksin.

His ascent to power in 2001 changed Thailand forever, touching off a societal schism between the country's haves and long-silent have-nots. The marginalized rural poor hail his populism, while the elite establishment sees him as a corrupt, autocratic threat to the status quo and even to the revered constitutional monarchy.

That schism has played out through pro- and anti-Thaksin street protests since the 2006 coup. The vote, many believe, is largely about the divisive legacy he left behind.

For a nation of 66 million people known to tourists as "the Land of Smiles," much is at stake.

Last year's demonstrations marked some of the nation's worst violence in two decades and left Thailand's reputation for stability in tatters. Holding the ballot was one of the protesters demands, though they wanted it held last year.

Oxford-educated Abhisit has used his campaign to blame the opposition and its supporters for burning Bangkok last year, saying a vote for Yingluck would be a vote for chaos. He has also declared the poll "the best opportunity to remove the poison of Thaksin from Thailand."
Thailand likely to elect first female prime minister

Abhisit and his allies believe Yingluck is plotting Thaksin's return through a proposed amnesty that would apply for political crimes committed since the coup. Yingluck says it is aimed at reconciling all Thais — not just her brother.

Thaksin has vowed to return by year's end, but he said Sunday that "I have to be part of the solution ... I don't want to return and create problems. If that's the case, I don't have to go back yet."

In a concession speech, a pale-faced Abhisit said he would continue to oppose amnesty for Thaksin, but said that "from now on, I want to see reconciliation in society."

Sunai Phasuk, a senior researcher for Human Rights Watch, said the most important challenge facing the incoming government will be resolving the nation's divide.

"Everyone is talking about political deals, but no one is talking about how to end impunity, restore freedom of expression and hold perpetrators accountable no matter how high up they are," Sunai said. "Without that, Thailand will never able to get out of this cycle of violence and turn itself around."

Although Thaksin is credited for awakening what has become a democratic movement among the country's marginalized poor who long stood silent, his opponents say he is no champion of freedom. During his time in office, Thaksin was loudly criticized for a sharp authoritarian streak and stood accused of corruption, cronyism and abuse of power.

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: Gaddafi can retire in Libya under international

Title: Gaddafi can retire in Libya under international Description: supervision, rebel leader says

TheUnhivedMind - July 3, 2011 06:35 PM (GMT)

Gaddafi can retire in Libya under international supervision, rebel leader says

Last updated at 6:30 PM on 3rd July 2011
http://www.dailymail.co.uk/news/article-20...tire-Libya.html

Libyan rebels have told Colonel Gaddafi that he can retire in the country as long as he hands over power and agrees to international supervision of his movements.

Along with their western allies, they have rejected any solution to the conflict that does not include him standing down saying he must go before any talks can take place.

Despite Nato airstrikes and international pressure, Gaddafi has fiercely resisted calls for him to go, vowing to fight to the end.

Write caption here

Speaking in his stronghold of Benghazi, rebel leader Mustafa Abdel Jalil - Gaddafi's former justice minister - said he made the proposal about a month ago through the United Nations but had yet to receive any response from Tripoli.

'As a peaceful solution, we offered that he can resign and order his soldiers to withdraw from their barracks and positions, and then he can decide either to stay in Libya or abroad,' he said in an interview.

'If he desires to stay in Libya, we will determine the place and it will be under international supervision. And there will be international supervision of all his movements,' he said.

He added: 'We offered this through a U.N. envoy. We haven't received any answer.'

He said the rebel council believed Gaddafi could be held in a military barracks or 'a civilian building' in Libya, but gave no details.

There was no immediate reaction from Tripoli to Abdel Jalil's remarks but Gaddafi has so far shown no sign of backing down. He says he is the legitimate leader of the North African nation and will not leave Tripoli without a fight.

The conflict appears to be deadlocked both militarily and politically despite moves by Western powers to step up their bombing campaign against Gaddafi's installations across the desert country.

With the war dragging into a fifth month, there have been moves by some nations to try to mediate a face-saving solution that would suit both the rebels and the Tripoli government. So far these initiatives have failed.

Escalating his rhetoric, Gaddafi has threatened to attack Europeans in their homes in response to NATO air strikes.

The rebels in Benghazi, a Mediterranean city now festooned with NATO and Libyan monarchy-era flags, say the end to Gaddafi's 41-year rule is near.

Sitting underneath a giant rebel flag in his modestly furnished office in central Benghazi, Abdel Jalil was unfazed when asked if he saw himself as Libya's future leader.

'No. I don't hope to be in this position. I am here for the transitional period,' he said. 'The leader will be decided through elections. And I don't intend to run myself.'

Previous attempts to negotiate a peace deal have foundered, but some analysts say Gaddafi’s entourage - if perhaps not the Libyan leader himself - may look for a way out as air strikes and sanctions narrow their options.

Gaddafi’s daughter Aisha said last week her father would be prepared to cut a deal with the rebels though he would not leave the country, and his son, Saif al-Islam, has said Gaddafi would step down if that is what the people of Libya want.

U.S. Secretary of State Hillary Clinton on Saturday stepped up Western calls on Gaddafi to quit, brushing off his threat to attack Europeans in their homes and offices.

'Instead of issuing threats, Gaddafi should put the well-being and the interests of his own people first and he should step down from power and help facilitate a democratic transition,' she said.

In an address relayed to some 100,000 supporters in Tripoli’s Green Square on Friday, Gaddafi had urged NATO to halt its bombing campaign or risk seeing Libyan fighters descend on Europe 'like a swarm of locusts or bees'.

'Retreat, you have no chance of beating this brave people,' Gaddafi said.

'They can attack your homes, your offices and your families, which will become military targets just as you have transformed our offices, headquarters, houses and children into what you regard as legitimate military targets,' he said.

In the capital Tripoli, a senior source in Gaddafi's government said there was reliable intelligence indicating the rebels were planning to attack oil export terminals in the eastern towns of Brega and Ras Lanuf.

'The Libyan government will do whatever (possible) to prevent such attacks,' the source, who did not want to be identified, told Reuters.

'It urges international oil companies as well as international insurance companies to put pressure on their governments to force the rebels, who are supported by NATO, to stop their destructive operations,' said the source.

The conflict has already halted oil exports from Libya, helping push up world oil prices to over $110 per barrel. Most oil facilities have so far escaped major damage in the fighting.

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: Anarchy erupts in Greece as austerity bites

Title: Anarchy erupts in Greece as austerity bites

TheUnhivedMind - April 19, 2011 02:12 AM (GMT)

Anarchy erupts in Greece as austerity bites

As Thessalonika riots, a town near Athens spins out of control with angry residents setting up massive roadblocks and hurling Molotov cocktails

By Elena Becatoros in Keratea, Greece
Sunday, 17 April 2011
http://www.independent.co.uk/news/world/eu...es-2269023.html

As explosions boom, the town's loudspeakers blare: "Attention! Attention! We are under attack!" Air-raid sirens wail through the streets, mingling with the frantic clanging of church bells. Clouds of tear gas waft between houses as helmeted riot police move in to push back the rebels. This isn't a war zone, but a small town just outside Athens. And while its fight is about a rubbish dump, it captures Greece's angry mood over its devastated economy.

As unemployment rises and austerity bites ever harder, tempers seem to fray faster in Greece, with citizens of all stripes thumbing their noses at authority. Some refuse to pay increased highway tolls and public transport tickets. There has been a rise in politicians being heckled and even assaulted. Yesterday, in Thessalonika, scores of activists were arrested after violent clashes with police.

The anger is most palpable in Keratea, a town of 15,000 people 30 miles south of Athens which appears to have spun out of control. The state's attempt to start work on a planned landfill site on a nearby hillside in December caused locals to set fire to construction vehicles and erect massive roadblocks on a road that bypasses the town and runs to the capital. It's a fight that has galvanised the town, from the mayor and the local priest to shopkeepers, farmers, schoolteachers and teenagers.

Over the past four months, locals have developed increasingly inventive roadblocks to stop contractors from getting to the site. They have parked trucks across the street and built piles of rubble and dirt. Apparently in it for the long haul, they have erected a wooden hut by the side of the road to serve as protest headquarters, complete with campaign posters, news clippings and children's drawings of the riots. Their latest move was a nocturnal expedition to dig a shoulder-deep trench across both lanes of the road. That was one step too far for the authorities, who, on Thursday, sent in workers – protected by police – to repair the damage.

Within hours, the confrontation degenerated. Masked youths hurled firebombs and rocks at riot police, who responded with rubber batons and repeated volleys of tear gas. A police helicopter circled overhead. "The town is out of control. Business activity has stopped," said Yannis Adamis, a resident and mechanical engineer. "The stores are closed. The sirens are blaring, the [church] bells are ringing, people are on the streets. This cannot continue."

In nearby streets, gaggles of teenage girls, cut lemons held to their noses to ward off tear gas, mingled with young men in balaclavas, stocking up on rocks to throw at police. An elderly man wielding a shepherd's staff stormed past. "We've learned at the age of 60 about Molotov cocktails," he thundered through his gas mask – an accessory sported by young and old alike. He would give only his first name, Panagiotis. By the end of the night, more than 20 people – including three riot policemen – had been treated in hospital. Just after midnight, a police officer's home was attacked with firebombs, leaving three cars destroyed. The officer and his wife, who is also in the police force, and their four children were home at the time but unharmed, police said.

Greece is no stranger to riots, and demonstrations in Athens often end in scuffles with police. But the escalation of violence in Keratea is causing concern. A sense of paranoia has settled over the town. Rumours abound that undercover police are at work, walking around town and gathering information. Journalists, with their cameras and notebooks, immediately arouse suspicion. A cameraman for an international news agency was beaten by locals during the clashes on Thursday, and his camera equipment destroyed.

A government spokesman, Giorgos Petalotis, condemned the violence, and said the government had no intention of abandoning its plans to build the landfill site, which it said would ease problems at Athens's single rubbish dump. "We are the only authority that has comprehensive plans for [greater Athens] regional development. We will not abandon the effort that has been made and is currently being made to build this new facility," he said.

But the residents are adamant. "There's no way we will back down. If they don't accept that this project cannot happen, we will be here as long as it takes," said Kostas Levantis, the town's mayor.

TheUnhivedMind - May 11, 2011 05:47 PM (GMT)

Greece launches massive fire sale to service growing debt as riot police clash with violent protesters

By Daily Mail Reporter
Last updated at 3:13 PM on 11th May 2011
http://www.dailymail.co.uk/news/article-13...protesters.html

Petrol bombs, stun grenades and tear gas thrown during clashes in Athens
Government aims to sell off casinos, marinas and former Olympics venues to service debt
Greece could require second bail out of 60billion euros
Demonstrations against harsh austerity measure boil over into riots

Marinas, casinos and former Olympic venues could be up for grabs after Greece announced a massive fire sale to help service its debt.

The Greek government said it was putting vast areas of state-owned land on the market to raise £44billion in the next four years.

Nationalised companies could also be privatised to help raise the necessary capital to ensure it does not default on debt payments.

Fury: A policemen jumps backwards after protesters threw petrol bombs in Athens

Cowed: A protester sits with his face covered in blood as most of Greece ground to halt with a general strike

It comes after intense pressure from Britain and other creditors to act to prevent debt restructuring that could have widespread effects across Europe.

British Chancellor George Osborne told The Times: 'The issue for Greece is whether it lives up to its commitments.'

Officials have said there is a political drive to ensure Greece can service its debt after a 110billion euro bailout by the EU and IMF last year.

A general strike held today has seen most public services grind to a halt across the country, while thousands marched through Athens to protest against harsh austerity measures.

The socialist government is planning to pass further cutbacks aimed at saving an estimated 23billion euros.

The strike suspended all train and ferry services, grounded flights for four hours and disrupted public transport in the capital.

Hit back: Two protesters cower on the ground after clashes with riot police. Demonstrations against austerity measures have again turned to riots

Fire sale: The Greek government is selling off assets including former Olympic stadia to help it service its debt

Violence: Greece hopes to raise £44billion from the sale of government-owned land in the next four years

Around 10,000 members of the communist-led PAME union marched peacefully through the centre of Athens.

Greece's two main unions are also planning another demonstration later today, expected to be closely monitored by police after previous protests degenerated into riots.

Last year, three bank clerks died when their building was torched by violent protesters.

The economic crisis follows years of inept governance, widespread corruption and waste that created bloated budget deficits and a public deficit larger than annual economic output.

For the time being, the country is shielded from insolvency by a 110billion package of rescue loans in a three-year programme.

But despite drastic spending cuts - with reductions to pensions and salaries accompanied by increase in taxes and retirement ages - the nation may need additional support to meet its financing needs next year, as the cost of borrowing from bond markets remains sky-high.

Clash: Last year Greece was given a 110billion euro bail out by the EU and IMF

Security: A firefighter walks past Athens University during the riots. The Greek government is seeking a second bailout, reportedly up to 60billion euros

Held: Police officers detain a protester after using tear gas and stun grenades during the clashes in the Greek capital

Parliament is expected to vote on the new round of cutbacks later this month.

The governing Socialists have also committed themselves to an ambitious - but so far nebulous - privatisation program worth a total 50 billion euro over the next few years.

However, many promised reforms have not yet been implemented, and there is growing skepticism in Greece and abroad over the government's efficiency.

'Before we can talk about further aid, Greece has to make sure that all austerity and reform measures are duly implemented,' said Michael Meister, a deputy caucus leader of German Chancellor Angela Merkel's conservative party.

'I would like to have a signal that this is finally happening,' the lawmaker told Wednesday's German Rheinische Post daily.

EU and IMF officials are currently in Athens for talks on the austerity program - on which the continued release of the bailout loans depends.

Greek unions say the protracted austerity, amid a two-year recession and unemployment at around 15 per cent, is unfairly targeting the less well-off.

A statement from the country's largest union, the GSEE, said Wednesday's strike expresses 'strong protest at the unjust and cruel policies that have caused a surge in unemployment... violated labor rights, and squandered public wealth, while failing to insure an exit from recession'.

Among areas up for sale are the abandoned Athens airport at Hellinikon and Olympic venues that once housed baseball, taekwondo and hockey.

A racetrack at Faliron, the Mont Parnes Casino north of Athens and several marinas are also for sale.

TheUnhivedMind - May 11, 2011 06:08 PM (GMT)

Athens police use tear gas as strike hits Greece

Police fired tear gas as clashes broke out in Athens

11 May 2011 Last updated at 15:33
http://www.bbc.co.uk/news/world-europe-13356923

Police in Athens have clashed with groups of demonstrators as thousands marched through the city in protest at government austerity measures.

Dozens of hooded youths hurled stones and petrol bombs at police, who responded with rounds of tear gas.

The march, called by Greek unions, is part of a 24-hour strike that has brought most public services to a halt and paralysed transport networks.

Police said there were several arrests and two police officers were hurt.

Correspondents said about 20,000 people took part in the march, which was largely peaceful.

Thousands also took part in protests in the northern city of Thessaloniki.

The strike was called after the Greek government proposed a new austerity package to try to reduce the budget deficit and ease the country's crippling debt crisis.

Unions say the policies are making Greece's problems worse.

The violent clashes happened near to where Finance Minister George Papaconstantinou was meeting senior EU and International Monetary Fund (IMF) inspectors.

Many Greeks are angry over job losses, tax rises and pension and wage cuts, enforced by the government to meet the terms of an international bail-out.

But there is concern that the bail-out has not worked.

Protester Vangelis Papadoyiannis, a 46-year-old IT worker, told AFP news agency: "They want to suppress social rights acquired in past decades and take us back to the Middle Ages to save banks and bankers.

"In my company there were 100 layoffs just in January, our salaries were cut by 15% and there is more to come."

Litsa Papadaki, 60, a housewife also protesting in Athens said: "Enough is enough! They are killing us and our children."

Wednesday's one-day strike was called by the private sector union GSEE and the public sector union ADEDY.

A four-hour strike by air traffic controllers badly disrupted flights in a country heavily dependent on tourism.

The BBC's Nigel Cassidy in Athens noted that a large number of private sector workers had joined the strike.

"We strongly protest against the unfair and harsh policies that have pushed up unemployment, widen false employment and trample on worker rights," said the GSEE.

Unions said hospitals would be operating with skeleton staff only, schools would be closed, and all train and ferry services were being suspended.

Some banks were shut, while others were open but kept their shutters half-rolled down, fearing violence that might erupt during the day.

Last May, three bank workers died in a petrol bomb attack during anti-austerity demonstrations.
Gaping deficit

There is widespread anger over the cuts, but most marchers were peaceful

Despite its spending cuts, the government is failing to close its budget deficit as quickly as hoped - partly because the fiscal restructuring programme has compounded a recession, while unemployment has reached about 15%.

That has sapped market confidence that Greece will be able to avoid defaulting on its debts.

There is speculation that the government may need a further international loan, so that it does not need to raise capital on the markets, where it would face punishingly high interest rates.

The European Union's Economic Affairs Commissioner Olli Rehn said on Tuesday that talk of a new rescue package was "premature".

An EU mission is in Athens this week to review Greece's progress on meeting the terms of the 110bn euros ($158bn; £97bn) joint EU-IMF emergency bail-out agreed last year.

It has another two years to run and the mission's assessment will be key to deciding whether Athens will be offered better terms on the loans.

TheUnhivedMind - May 11, 2011 06:51 PM (GMT)

Greece braces for new general strike

5/11/2011 1:30:45 AM ET
http://www.msnbc.msn.com/id/42984440/ns/world_news-europe/

ATHENS, Greece — Greek labor unions were planning a general strike and a mass protest on Wednesday against the country's economic austerity measures.

The actions are expected to halt most public services and ground flights between noon and 4 p.m. They were called to oppose a new round of cuts to be voted on by parliament later this month, worth an estimated €23 billion ($33 billion) in savings through 2015.

Greece is receiving €110 billion ($158 billion) in rescue loans in a 2010-2013 program from the European Union and International Monetary Fund.

Despite drastic spending cuts, the nation may need additional support to meet its financing needs next year, with borrowing rates in bond markets remaining too high.

An opinion poll commissioned by the private Mega TV station and published Tuesday said 71 percent of the public oppose the government's handling of the economic crisis, compared with 66 percent in February.

The Socialists' 18-month-old government held a slender lead over the main opposition conservatives. Details on the number of peope questioned in the poll and its margin of error were not provided.

Greece's largest labor union, the GSEE, is organizing Wednesday's 24-hour strike together with the public sector union, ADEDY.

A GSEE statement said the strike is aimed at expressing workers' "strong protest at the (government's) unjust and cruel policies that have caused a surge in unemployment ... violated labor rights, and squandered public wealth, while failing to insure an exit from recession."

TheUnhivedMind - May 25, 2011 06:18 PM (GMT)

http://www.star.gr/ellada_kosmos/93174/

TheUnhivedMind - June 3, 2011 04:22 PM (GMT)

Greece to get next batch of bailout funds in July

3 June 2011
http://www.usatoday.com/news/world/2011-06...e-finance_n.htm

ATHENS, Greece (AP) — Debt inspectors from the European Union, European Central Bank and International Monetary Fund say Greece is expected to receive the next installment from a 110 billion euro ($159.06 billion) bailout fund in July.

The three groups, known as the troika, made the statement Friday after a near month-long inspection of Greek finances and the reforms it is implementing to meet the terms of the bailout. The review said Greece had achieved "significant progress," but that further measures were needed.

In Luxembourg, Jean-Claude Juncker, the head of the 17 eurozone finance ministers said he expects Greece's euro partners to provide more money and that the private sector will be asked to help out on a voluntary basis.

Juncker had been meeting Greek Prime Minister George Papandreou.

Anticipating the news, Greece's borrowing costs eased during the day, with yields on 10-year Greek bonds dropping some 60 basis points to 16.2%. Shares on the Athens Stock Market were up 4.45%, while the euro pushed up to day highs of $1.4544 in the aftermath of the finance ministry's statement.

The original bailout plan, from which Greece began drawing funds in May last year, envisaged the country being able to tap bond investors in 2012, but with the interest rates on Greek bonds remaining exceptionally high, that appears increasingly unlikely.

The austerity measures the country has had to take as part of the bailout has led to frequent strikes and demonstrations.

On Friday before dawn, about 200 protesters from the communist party-backed PAME union took over the Finance Ministry building, hanging a giant banner from the roof calling for a general strike. Other protests and demonstrations were planned for later Friday.

TheUnhivedMind - June 4, 2011 06:25 PM (GMT)

Greeks protest after nation pledges 'significant cuts' to secure €12bn IMF bail-out

Greece has been hit by protests in central Athens, after its prime minister agreed to strict new austerity measures in return for the next €12bn instalment of the International Monetary Fund's bail-out.

By Rowena Mason
12:50PM BST 04 Jun 2011
http://www.telegraph.co.uk/finance/financi...F-bail-out.html

Demonstrations led by the country's two most powerful unions broke out, after George Papandreou, the Greek prime minister, said the country would embark on extra asset sales and cut-backs totalling €78bn before 2015.

He agreed to make "significant" cuts in public-sector employment and establish an agency to manage accelerated asset sales to get an immediate €12bn lifeline released.

Greek bonds were immediately boosted, with the yield on two-year notes falling 172 basis points to 22.8pc on Friday – their lowest in six weeks. However, Moody's, the credit rating agency rated the probability of default at 50pc and doubts still remain about whether Greece will be able to stick to its financial cuts in the face of popular unrest.

Europe is also offering a new aid package for Greece that includes a "voluntary" role for private investors. This will amount to €60bn, partly funded by banks rolling over existing Greek government debt holdings due for redemption.

"I expect the euro group to agree to additional financing to be provided to Greece under strict conditionality," said Jean-Claude Juncker, prime minister of Luxembourg.

"On that basis, it's obvious there will be not be an exit of Greece from the euro area, there will be no default and Greece will be able to fully honour its obligations."

It is now the third year of recession for Greece, with widespread unrest and financial hardship despite the €110bn bail-out agreed a year ago.

The European Union has been battling to stop the first sovereign default within the eurozone since Greece's crisis worsened earlier this year.

TheUnhivedMind - June 7, 2011 03:03 AM (GMT)

Video: Mock Hanging Outside Greek Parliament

http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=M6W6ouFeEuc

[dohtml]<object style="height: 390px; width: 640px"><param name="movie" value="http://www.youtube.com/v/M6W6ouFeEuc?version=3"><param name="allowFullScreen" value="true"><param name="allowScriptAccess" value="always"><embed src="http://www.youtube.com/v/M6W6ouFeEuc?version=3" type="application/x-shockwave-flash" allowfullscreen="true" allowScriptAccess="always" width="640" height="390"></object>[/dohtml]

TheUnhivedMind - June 9, 2011 06:58 PM (GMT)

Greek state-run workers stage walkout

Thu Jun 9, 2011 6:20PM
http://www.presstv.ir/detail/183963.html

A postal worker blows an old-style postman's horn during a protest march against the Greek government's austerity measures and privatization plans, in Athens on Thursday, June 9, 2011. Greek workers have walked out of the job to protest the government's harsh austerity measures and privatization plan, as the country struggles to meet the terms of its international bailout.

Ahead of the cabinet meeting, strikers marched through central Athens, AP reported on Thursday.

Greek Prime Minister George Papandreou is expected to approve harsher austerity measures for 2011-2015.

The 24-hour general strike has paralyzed ports, post offices, banks, transportation and the media.

The plan includes cuts and tax hikes this year, tougher austerity measures over the next few years and a 50-billion-euro privatization program.

Meanwhile, a broader strike is scheduled for June 15.

Greece received a 110-billion-euro EU-IMF bailout loan last year as it faced a massive debt crisis but failed to resolve its financial problems. Greece has a debt of over EUR 300 billion.

The Greek government has estimated an overall unemployment rate of 14.5 percent for its 2011 budget.

This comes as the introduction of a second bailout plan has only resulted in harsher austerity measures by the government, which aims to reduce the 2011 budget deficit by EUR 6.5 billion.

TheUnhivedMind - June 16, 2011 02:58 AM (GMT)

Greek strikers hurl yoghurt and stones at Athens police

Police have been firing teargas in an effort to disperse the crowd

15 June 2011 Last updated at 16:15
http://www.bbc.co.uk/news/world-europe-13773148

Greek police have fired teargas at protesters outside parliament as MPs prepared to debate new austerity measures required for the EU and IMF bail-out package.

Demonstrators who broke off from a strike rally in Athens responded by throwing yoghurt and stones.

Prime Minister George Papandreou faces the risk of a revolt in his Pasok party over the austerity package.

He has proposed a unity government to pass the measures, state TV reports.

He is seeking support for a new austerity programme of 28bn euros (£24.6bn; $40.5bn) in cuts to take effect from 2012 to 2015.

Thousands are taking part in a general strike, the third in Greece this year.

Ports, public transport and banks have been badly disrupted as the main public- and private-sector unions go out on strike.

State-run companies have also joined the walkout, while hospitals are only offering emergency care. However, airports are operating normally after air traffic controllers called off their strike.

A top credit agency has cut Greece's rating, making it the least credit-worthy nation out of 131 countries it monitors.

The Greek government said the downgrade by Standard & Poor's - from B to CCC - ignored its efforts to secure funding.

In order for the next tranche of rescue loans to go through, parliament must adopt the new austerity plan by the end of June.
'Fight the battle'

Police thwarted protesters who were attempting to blockade parliament and stop MPs getting in for the debate.

They sealed off the roads leading to Syntagma Square and created a pathway for deputies.

The Greek demonstrators are calling themselves the "indignants", linking themselves to Spanish anti-austerity protesters who set up camps in Madrid and Barcelona.

The square is awash with Greek and Spanish flags, as well as banners reading "Resist" and the battle cry from the Spanish civil war, "No pasaran" (they shall not pass), the AFP news agency reports.

One MP defected from Mr Papandreou's Pasok party on Tuesday, leaving it with only 155 of the chamber's 300 seats.

"You have to be as cruel as a tiger to vote for these measures. I am not," George Lianis, a former sports minister, said in a letter to parliament's speaker announcing his departure from the parliamentary group.

At least one other Pasok MP has threatened to vote against the new programme of cuts and privatisation of state assets.

Another 14 MPs are wavering in their support for the austerity plan, our correspondent says.

Mr Papandreou held talks on Wednesday with Greek President Karolos Papoulias, telling him that "a national effort" was required.

"We are at a historically crucial moment and a time of crucial decisions," Mr Papandreou said, according to a transcript released by his office.

"In any case, we will move forward with this sense of responsibility and the necessary decisions."
Possible contagion

Meanwhile, eurozone finance ministers have failed to agree on how to make private creditors contribute to a possible second Greek bail-out.

Ministers meeting in Brussels continued their discussions late into the night on Tuesday on ways of making private bondholders share the cost of a second rescue package without throwing financial markets into turmoil.

As a result of their failure to reach a deal, the cost of insuring Greek debt against default shot to an all-time high.

In a sign of possible contagion from the Greek crisis, credit rating agency Moody's said it might downgrade the three largest banks in France because of their exposure to Greek debt.

Share prices for BNP Paribas, Credit Agricole and Societe Generale all fell as a result.

France appealed for calm, saying it opposed a Greek restructuring which could entail write-offs for private banks.

"The French position is voluntary - no restructuring, no credit event and in line with the ECB," government spokesman Francois Baroin told reporters in Paris.

The EU and IMF are demanding the measures in return for the release of another 12bn euros in aid next month which Athens needs to pay off maturing debt.

TheUnhivedMind - June 16, 2011 06:21 PM (GMT)

Greece: Leading Socialist quits ahead of reshuffle

Associated Press, 06.16.11, 04:36 AM EDT
http://www.forbes.com/feeds/ap/2011/06/16/...is_8519164.html

ATHENS, Greece -- A prominent Socialist lawmaker has resigned his seat in parliament after the failure of power-sharing talks designed to get broader support for austerity measures.

Former public order minister Giorgos Floridis announced his resignation Thursday, hours before Prime Minister George Papandreou announces a cabinet reshuffle.

The 55-year-old Floridis. who has fiercely criticized the slow pace of reforms in Greece, had been widely expected to join the new government. His resignation does not affect the government majority in parliament.

Surprise coalition talks between the government and rival conservatives collapsed Wednesday.

THIS IS A BREAKING NEWS UPDATE. Check back soon for further information. AP's earlier story is below.

ATHENS, Greece (AP) - Greece's prime minister is due to announce a broad cabinet reshuffle Thursday and seek a Parliamentary confidence vote in his new government as he struggles to push through an unpopular but critical new austerity package.

George Papandreou's reshuffle comes a day after talks with opposition parties over forming a coalition government collapsed and a major anti-austerity rally by tens of thousands in central Athens degenerated into riots.

A confidence vote is expected Sunday.

Papandreou has been struggling to contain an internal party revolt over the new five-year austerity package that is the main condition for continued funding from a euro110 billion ($155 billion) international bailout. Without continued funding from the rescue loans, Greece will default on its massive debts, which would have widespread ramifications for the global economy as well as the eurozone.

Although Papandreou has not indicated publicly what his new government will look like, the reshuffle is expected to be sweeping. Key figures, including the finance minister, George Papaconstantinou, could be replaced.

Papaconstantinou has drawn the ire of many Greeks, including several governing Socialist party figures, for his handling of the crisis and the massively unpopular tax hikes and spending cuts demanded by the European Union and International Monetary Fund in return for the bailout loans.

EU officials have been pressing for cross-party unity on the new austerity package, which will impose more tax hikes and spending cuts, and runs two years beyond the current government's term to 2015. The bill must be passed in Parliament by the end of this month.

But conservative opposition leader Antonis Samaras has insisted the initial agreement for Greece's bailout must be renegotiated.

The ensuing turmoil in the markets has reflected waning confidence that Papandreou can get the new austerity bill through the 300-seat Parliament, where his majority was trimmed to five Tuesday after one of his deputies rebelled and declared himself an independent. Another deputy has said publicly he will not support the bill.

As clouds of tear gas wafted across central Athens and lawmakers had to be escorted by armed motorcycle guards past protesters into Parliament, Papandreou sought Wednesday to hammer out a deal over forming a coalition government with the opposition. He had been prepared to step down from his post as part of an agreement - and Samaras pressed for Papandreou's resignation. But the talks collapsed, and the prime minister announced he would reshuffle his cabinet instead.

Samaras blasted the prime minister for wasting a "historic opportunity" as opposition leaders across the board called for elections.

Wednesday's mayhem is likely to be viewed with concern in the other European countries that are bailing out Greece. European officials have been wrangling over how to plug a funding gap the country faces next year, and prevent a disastrous default.

Eurozone finance ministers and European leaders are to meet next week in Luxembourg and Brussels, with Greece expected to take up a large portion of the talks.

Wednesday's political maneuvering and violence on the streets of the Greek capital triggered a sell-off in global financial markets as investors worried that a default in Greece could hurt banks in other countries in a chain reaction experts predicted would be catastrophic. Yields on the country's 10-year bonds hit a new record high Wednesday of 18.4 percent.

TheUnhivedMind - June 16, 2011 06:22 PM (GMT)

Greek PM offers resignation amid violent riots (UPDATES)

Greek Prime Minister George Papandreou will reshuffle his cabinet and seek a confidence vote Thursday after a day of violent protests in Athens.

News DeskJune 15, 2011
http://www.globalpost.com/dispatch/news/re...terity-measures

Greek Prime Minister George Papandreou will reshuffle his cabinet and seek a confidence vote Thursday after a day of violent protests against his austerity plans in the center of Athens.

Papandreou admitted that he could not drive through reforms to shore up the Greek economy, and offered to make way for a government of national unity, the Guardian reports.

Greek TV network reported that Papandreou told opposition leader Antonis Samaras: "If I am the problem, I am not tied down to my chair. I can discuss everything, even a national unity government."

Greece was paralyzed by a general strike Wednesday, while tens of thousands of demonstrators gathered in central Athens to protest the government's latest proposed austerity program.

But Greek riot police have stopped striking workers from encircling the country's parliament and blocking access for members of parliament due to debate the new austerity measures, the BBC reports.

Papandreou is trying to push through the policies as part of the conditions under the EU and IMF's bail-out package. But the country is losing faith in his leadership, and for the first time his socialist party is behind the opposition conservatives in public opinion polls, according to the BBC.

Tens of thousands of demonstrators marched in Athens as the main public- and private-sector unions staged a 24-hour strike. Around the country, schools and government offices were shut, ports, public transport and banks were disrupted and hospitals were only offering emergency services with a skeleton staff. However, airports are operating normally.

A walkout by journalists forced most morning news programs off the air, and small businesses and retailers were expected to join the strike later Wednesday, the Wall Street Journal reports.

"Thieves, traitors!" chanted thousands of activists and unionists that gathered around Syntagma square in central Athens, just outside the parliament, reports Reuters. "Where did the money go?"

It is the third general strike in Greece this year. It comes as Greece's parliament is to begin debating a five-year $40.36 billion austerity program of tax hikes, spending cuts and sell-offs of state property, required if it is to continue receiving EU and IMF aid.

A top credit agency has cut Greece's rating, making it the least credit-worthy nation out of 131 countries it monitors, according to the WSJ.

TheUnhivedMind - June 17, 2011 03:30 PM (GMT)

Dramatic ground shots of Athens riots, mass scuffles in Greece

http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=whH8xpTOidk

[dohtml]<object style="height: 390px; width: 640px"><param name="movie" value="http://www.youtube.com/v/whH8xpTOidk?version=3"><param name="allowFullScreen" value="true"><param name="allowScriptAccess" value="always"><embed src="http://www.youtube.com/v/whH8xpTOidk?version=3" type="application/x-shockwave-flash" allowfullscreen="true" allowScriptAccess="always" width="640" height="390"></object>[/dohtml]

TheUnhivedMind - June 18, 2011 04:09 AM (GMT)

Max Keiser: Mass Rioting In Greece As Economists Warn Of Global 'Armageddon Scenarios'

http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=kssMNSZ7_ZI http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=0i0FVplDZ5o
http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=Y7pLpVd4e0I

[dohtml]<iframe width="640" height="390" src="http://www.youtube.com/embed/kssMNSZ7_ZI" frameborder="0" allowfullscreen></iframe>

<iframe width="640" height="390" src="http://www.youtube.com/embed/0i0FVplDZ5o" frameborder="0" allowfullscreen></iframe>

<iframe width="640" height="390" src="http://www.youtube.com/embed/Y7pLpVd4e0I" frameborder="0" allowfullscreen></iframe>[/dohtml]

TheUnhivedMind - June 18, 2011 05:44 PM (GMT)

Greek debt crisis: protests renewed over reshuffle status quo

The prime minister, George Papandreou, reshuffles cabinet but vows to push on with deeply unpopular austerity measures guardian.co.uk, Saturday 18 June 2011 15.55 BST

http://www.guardian.co.uk/world/2011/jun/1...rotests-renewed

Thousands of Greeks have marched on parliament in a show of renewed public anger after the prime minister, George Papandreou, reshuffled his cabinet and vowed to push on with deeply unpopular austerity measures.

In a move aimed at stifling dissent in his Socialist party, Papandreou on Friday dismissed his finance minister, George Papaconstantinou, who masterminded the five-year austerity programme that has sparked weeks of protests.

The reshuffle coincided with a pledge by France and Germany to continue funding Athens, a move that may have bought Greece and its fellow euro zone members time to prevent a messy default, even if doubts over its longer-term solvency persist.

The European Union and International Monetary Fund have made the reforms a condition for a new bailout package worth an estimated €120bn ($170bn) that Greece, shut out of capital markets, will need to fund itself through 2014.

Around 5,000 protesters from the Communist group Pame marched into Athens' central Syntagma square, where demonstrations turned violent earlier this week, chanting "the measures are killing us!".

French activists also performed with a 3m puppet depicting a bloodied figure of Lady Justice to rhythmic drumming in a gesture of solidarity with Greek protesters who have camped in the square for three weeks.

"What has changed with the reshuffle? Nothing," said Costas, a 22-year-old student who has been camping on the square since the beginning of the month. "We are not planning to leave unless they take back the measures."

Papandreou appeared to curb a revolt in his party by including some of the austerity package's harshest critics in the new administration, but that might also weaken the reforms. He named political heavyweight Evangelos Venizelos, his biggest party rival, as finance minister.

Shortly after his nomination, Venizelos said he would travel to Brussels on Sunday to ask lenders to allow some "improvements ... for social justice" in the reform package.

On the same day, euro zone finance ministers are expected to agree to release a 12 billion euro tranche of an existing, year-old bailout loan that Greece needs to pay back debt maturing in July and August and avoid default.

"They've bought themselves time until September," said Howard Wheeldon, strategist at BCG Capital Partners in London.

"Germany and France are the main countries involved here, and neither of them are going to let the euro fail, and they're not going to let Greece fail."

Luxembourg's Jean-Claude Juncker, the chairman of the euro zone finance ministers' Eurogroup, criticised German pressure to involve bondholders, telling a German newspaper this has pushed up the cost of the bailout.

Successful negotiations over a new aid package for Greece are vital to the economic health of the euro zone, Juncker said.

"We are playing with fire," he said, adding that in the worst case, ratings agencies could declare a default leading to dire consequences for the currency union.

Papandreou's new cabinet is expected to survive a parliamentary confidence vote on Tuesday night, and then approve a package which envisages €28bn in tax hikes and spending cuts by 2015.

But Greek media were less certain about implementation, an issue that dogged Venizelos's predecessor when he struggled to meet deficit targets agreed with Greece's bailout lenders.

"Greece needs a strong government. But does it need a strong government to finally implement what has been agreed with the EU or to break these deals?," columnist Yiorgos Karipidis wrote in main Greek financial daily Imerisia.

TheUnhivedMind - June 20, 2011 03:41 PM (GMT)

Athens protests: Syntagma Square on frontline of European austerity protests

The area in the centre of the Greek capital is playing host to thousands of angry demonstrators

Aditya Chakrabortty in Athens guardian.co.uk, Sunday 19 June 2011 21.00 BST
http://www.guardian.co.uk/world/2011/jun/1...terity-protests

Athenians used to stop off at Syntagma Square for the shopping, the shiny rows of upmarket boutiques. Now they arrive in their tens of thousands to protest. Swarming out of the metro station, they emerge into a village of tents, pamphleteers and a booming public address system.

Since 25 May, when demonstrators first converged here, this has become an open-air concert – only one where bands have been supplanted by speakers and music swapped for an angry politics. On this square just below the Greek parliament and ringed by flashy hotels, thousands sit through speech after speech. Old-time socialists, American economists just passing through, members of the crowd: they each get three minutes with the mic, and most of them use the time alternatively to slag off the politicians and to egg on their fellow protesters.

"Being here makes me feel 18 again," begins one man, his polo shirt stretched tight over his paunch, before talking about his worries about his pension.

The closer you get to the Vouli, the parliament, the more raucous it becomes. Jammed up against the railings, a crowd is clapping and chanting: "Thieves! Thieves!"

There is another mic here, and it's grabbed by a man wearing a mask of deputy prime minister Theodoros Pangalos: "My friends, we all ate together." He is quoting the socialist politician, who claimed on TV last year that everyone bore the responsibility for the squandering of public money. Pangalos may have intended his remark as the Greek equivalent of George Osborne's remark that "We're all in it together", but here they're not having it."You lying bastard!" They roar back. "You're so fat you ate the entire supermarket."

This is an odd alloy of earnestness and pantomime, to be sure, but it's something else too: Syntagma Square has become the new frontline of the battle against European austerity. And as prime minister George Papandreou battles first to keep his own job, and then to win MPs' support for the most extreme package of spending cuts, tax rises and privatisations ever faced by any developed country, what happens between this square and the parliament matters for the rest of the eurozone.

The banner wavers here know this. In the age of TV satellite vans and YouTube, they paint signs and coin slogans with half an eye on the export market. Papandreou's face is plastered over placards that congratulate him in English for being "Goldman Sachs' employee of the year". Flags jibe at the rive gauche: "The French are sleeping – they're dreaming of '68."

Most of the time, the anger is expressed sardonically. A friend shows me an app on her phone that gives updates on the latest political and industrial actions – its name translates as iStrike. But it's not hard to see how this situation might boil over.

"Are you an indignado?" I ask Nikkos Kokkalis, using the term coined by young Spanish protesters to express outrage at José Luis Rodríguez Zapatero's austerity plans, now swiped by the Greeks. "I'm a super-indignado," he almost shouts. A 29-year-old graduate who lives with his parents, Nikkos has never done a proper job – just menial tasks for a website and an internship for a TV station. "There are 300 people over there," he waves at the MPs' offices. "Most of them make decisions without asking the people."

For their part, protesters with salaries and wrinkles are fuming at the spending cuts already inflicted on them. Chryssa Michalopolou is a teacher who calculates that her annual pay has already gone down by the equivalent of one and a half months, while her living costs have shot up, thanks to rising taxes and inflation. Does she buy the government's line that it needs to trim the public sector? "After 15 years' service, I'm only on €1,200 (£1,056) a month," she says. "I didn't see any boom; I simply paid my taxes and now I am being punished."

On display here is more than a personal grievance; it also reveals a glaring truth that politicians across Europe have so far ignored. In their efforts to hammer out a second loan agreement for Greece, eurozone ministers are focusing on the differences between bond swaps and bond rollovers, the tensions between Berlin and the International Monetary Fund and the European Central Bank or how far continental banks can withstand another massive shock.

Taken for granted in these negotiations is that the Greeks (and by implication, the Irish and the Portuguese) must accept more austerity. Yet in Athens, whether on the streets or even at a policy-making level, these technical details barely figure on the agenda. It's not just that the terms are different, the entire debate is too. Here, the argument concerns how much more austerity the Greek economy, its people and even the government can take – because all three are already at breaking point.

When Greece was all but locked out of the financial markets last May, Papandreou accepted a €110bn loan from Europe and the IMF. The idea was that the money would tide the country over for a year, in which time his government would at least start sorting out its public finances. For Angela Merkel, Nicolas Sarkozy and the rest of Europe, the loan came with some pretty tight strings attached: they charged the Greeks interest well above the official eurozone rate, and set demanding budget targets for the Pasok socialist government.

Freefall

A year in, and the deal is not working. Greece has been in recession for two years and on official forecasts this will be its third. When I ask Athens University economist Yanis Varoufakis to describe the economy, he shoots back one sentence: "It's in freefall."

Sitting on the balcony of his flat behind the Acropolis, he throws out some statistics: 50,000 businesses went bankrupt last year, industrial production fell 20% and will drop another 12% this year. Unemployment has surged, so that one in six of the workforce doesn't have a job. These are the sort of figures associated with a depression, and the predictable result is that the public finances are getting worse. Greece's debt has ballooned to 153% of GDP; on Varoufakis's projections, even if ministers manage to make all their promised cuts, the government will owe three times the entire national income.

Behind these numbers lie the stories of a society in distress. One man talks about his daughter who works in the in-store restaurant of a large supermarket outside Athens; at closing time, she and her workmates have started giving out the unsold meals to the newly unemployed – the 21st-century equivalent of a soup kitchen. An employee of a local council notes that they pick up 17% less rubbish than a year ago, simply because people have cut back on food. The owner of an art gallery tells me her son has just started his first job; holding a master's in accountancy, he works six hours a day in a mobile-phone shop.

The lazy accusation to hurl at Greece is that it had a bloated public sector and so was bound to come a cropper. Not so, says Varoufakis: the country has a public sector in line with the rest of Europe (although, nearly everyone I speak to agrees, one that does not work as well), but takes in taxes some 35% below where they should be.

Wealthy Greeks have always treated the country's tax system like a church collection plate: what they give is strictly optional. This gap was covered up for as long as the Greek state could get cheap credit; then in 2008 it became glaringly obvious. The other problem covered up during the boom years was the rotting away of the industrial base. That too is now the subject of angry public discussion.

I take a tour of the shipbuilding yard in Perama, just outside Athens. Greece has the largest commercial fleet in the world, and yet Perama is utterly silent. There is a rusting hulk, abandoned a few years ago, when those who commissioned it could no longer afford to pay for it. A decade ago, this yard employed 7,000 workers – now it has around 500. There was a time when assembling small cargo vessels was seen as pedestrian work; last year, the yard was contracted to build two boats, and the jobs were fought over. A few minutes away lives Tassos Alexandris, who was laid off from Perama in 2008. The hall of his flat is decorated with needlepoint; inside are pictures of the Virgin Mary put up by his wife, Nikki. She is ill, and his 26-year-old daughter has worked for six months in her entire career. How do they make ends meet? Nikki snorts with laughter.

"The electricity connection is inside the flat; otherwise the board would have cut us off," begins Tassos. His mother-in-law lives upstairs and, while he is too ashamed to ask her for food, she allows him to raid her fridge at night. They had a small green Citroen, but couldn't afford to keep it. Now he runs a motorbike, although with no plates and no taxes. "I can't sleep at night for worry," he says. "It has affected every part of our lives: personal, sexual, the lot." How many families in this block do they think are in a similar situation? Nikki tots them up: "80%."

Tassos doesn't just support the protesters of Syntagma; he thinks they will go further. "Don't be surprised if Athens goes up in flames," the 50-year old says. "And don't be sad, either." His words initially sound melodramatic, but the anger keeps coming up. "Politicians now walk around with bodyguards," says Aris Chatzistefanou, the co-director of Debtocracy, a film about the Greek crisis that has become a sensation. He quotes a newspaper report of how restaurateurs are taking down those cheesy framed photos of dining politicians, of how one government spokesman went to dinner a few weeks ago only for the rest of the restaurant to start shouting "You are eating the blood of the people".

Political arithmetic

The anger against the austerity and the politicians imposing it is palpable; whether it will translate into political success is debatable. Papandreou may be one of the most hated men in Greece, but there is no mainstream politician who has an alternative to acting under creditor's orders. This isn't about an electorate taking on a government, either, but the impossible political arithmetic of disparate groups of Greeks on one side versus the IMF, the European Central Bank and 16 other eurozone members on the other.

Run that by the protesters of Athens, though, and even the older, more pragmatic ones have an answer. "We may lose," one grey-haired trade unionist said to me. "But what matters is how you lose."

TheUnhivedMind - June 23, 2011 12:12 AM (GMT)

The Greek protests are not just about the economic crisis

They're a rejection of authority

Aditya Chakraborrty
guardian.co.uk, Monday 20 June 2011 20.00 BST
http://www.guardian.co.uk/commentisfree/20...t-just-economic

A sunny Saturday afternoon in central Athens, and Christos Roubanis is sitting outside having a beer, while telling me about the death threats he's received. We're in Victoria Square, one of the most racially mixed areas in the capital. The nearby payphones have queues of Bangladeshis waiting outside, and after every few shops comes that telltale feature of immigrant-ville: a Western Union money transfer booth. Locals reckon that more than a third of residents are non-Greek subjects.

And that's made the neighbourhood the target of fascist activity, especially since Greece plunged into severe recession in 2009. A few minutes down the road is a playground, complete with seesaws, slides and climbing frames. It was where Afghans and others used to take their kids – until the Nazis marched in and declared it a no-go zone a couple of years ago. Although most of the equipment inside looks like it's working, the entire rec is still locked up.

Just outside, on the stones in front of the handsomely domed church, is daubed various graffiti. "I love my country" reads one in the national colours of blue and white. Another is more direct: "Immigrants go home." Sprayed on the shutters of nearby shops are swastikas. They look particularly incongruous in a country that tried so heroically to fend off Hitler's invasion.

Christos lives here, but can't walk me to the playground for fear of getting beaten up. Bald, with a small greying moustache, he's previously stepped in to prevent immigrants being hassled – so the Nazis have turned their attention on him. They ring his mobile "and call me a bloody communist and say they will kill me". Once, he was trapped by a fascist gang brandishing wooden poles. "They brought them this close," he says, his hand stopping just in front of his thick glasses.

Under the awning of this bar, Christos and his friends Afrodite and Olga can debate how waves of badly-managed immigration have put pressure on this working-class neighbourhood. But one thing they agree on is that the fascists are managing to exploit the tension in the area. In elections at the end of last year, the extremist Golden Dawn party won 10% of the municipal vote.

Numbers like that flatly contradict the cosy view of the popular Greek reaction to the spending cuts as being articulate, engaged, left-wing. And it is – in parts. But as Christos and his neighbours will tell you, the politics of austerity can boost the thuggish right as well as the post-enlightenment left. Indeed, the defining feature of the Greek protests is not ideology – it's visceral hostility to anything that smacks of the mainstream, whether in politics, or business or the media.

You see this clearly in the demonstrations in Syntagma Square in central Athens. Writing for the Guardian's Comment is Free last week, Birkbeck professor Costas Douzinas found "striking parallels" between the protesters there, for whom "no issue is beyond proposal and disputation", and the Athenian agora, birthplace of western democracy.

It was a finely-written, humane article that sums up part of what's going on. But just up the steps from the "well-organised weekly debates" that Douzinas talks about is a much rowdier demo. Protesters here chant rather than discuss, and can be seen waving the Greek flag – an indicator of nationalist allegiances. I asked one teenager who he blamed for the crisis. The list began conventionally enough: the prime minister George Papandreou, the IMF, and then "the immigrants, because they take money that could be spent on us."

Down in the main throng, protesters flash green lasers into the windows of the surrounding hotels to ruin the footage of the TV cameramen stationed there. When the Greek equivalent of Huw Edwards tried to present from the rally, the protesters tried to beat him up.

The revulsion to anything that smacks of authority is about two things: the past and the present. Many Greeks feel they were lied to during the go-go years: by the politicians, the media and the businesspeople who claimed the boom was real and sustainable. And now that voters are enduring job losses and salary cuts, rising taxes and transport fares, there isn't a single heavyweight politician raising serious objections to the severest austerity ever inflicted on a developed country.

Economic crises usually lead to the electoral guillotine; just ask Gordon Brown. But even if Papandreou and the Socialists are booted out, the New Democracy conservatives also look likely to take their orders from the IMF and the rest of the eurozone. Astonishingly, in the face of what must be among the most unpopular raft of policies ever to be imposed on any European democracy, there is no credible populist opposition.

As for leaving the European single currency, the question is barely raised in the national media. Yet in what was once the most enthusiastic country in the eurozone, polls suggest that one in four Greeks want an exit.

It's a mistake to think that the nature of the Greek crisis is primarily economic or social; it's now political and systemic too.And it will deepen unless a party vehicle comes along that can articulate credible alternatives. But for now in place of a mainstream, there is a vacuum.

And as the playground near Victoria Square reminds you, extreme policies in can lead to extremist politics out.

TheUnhivedMind - June 28, 2011 04:25 PM (GMT)

Greece protest against austerity package turns violent

The BBC's Jon Sopel: "The overwhelming smell is one of tear gas"

28 June 2011 Last updated at 16:24
http://www.bbc.co.uk/news/world-europe-13935400

Police have fired tear gas in running battles with stone-throwing youths in Athens, where a 48-hour general strike is being held against a parliamentary vote on tough austerity measures.

Thousands of protesters have gathered outside parliament in the capital where public transport has ground to a halt.

PM George Papandreou has said that only his 28bn-euro (£25bn) austerity plan would get Greece back on its feet.

If the package is not approved, Greece could run out of money within weeks.

Without a new plan in place, the EU and IMF say they will withhold 12bn euros of loans which Greece needs to repay debts due in mid-July.
'Declared war'

More than 5,000 police officers were deployed in the centre of Athens as the protesters marched towards parliament.

The rally started peacefully, but escalated into running skirmishes on the fringes of the main demonstration.

Hundreds of protesters with faces covered by scarves or gas-masks started throwing stones, debris and bottles at the police in one corner of the central Syntagma Square. Police fired tear gas and stun grenades to keep them back.

Two communications vans with mobile telecoms transmitters were daubed with graffiti condemning the media and banks before being set alight by protesters who had apparently mistaken them for satellite TV trucks.

Four police officers and four demonstrators were injured in the scuffles, police said, while a number of demonstrators were treated for breathing difficulties. Some 18 people were detained by police, Reuters reported.

There were also skirmishes as trade unionists tried to persuade anarchists to leave the square, saying their violent protests were only harming the aims of the demonstrations, says the BBC's Jon Sopel in Athens.

The general strike has halted most public services, banks are closed and hospitals are operating on skeleton staff.

Airports are shutting for hours at a time, with air traffic controllers walking out between 0800 and 1200 (0500-0900 GMT) and 1800 and 2200 (1500-1900 GMT). A number of flights were also cancelled at Athens international airport.

Trains, buses and ferries are also affected.

In Athens, the metro is the only form of public transport which will work "so as to allow Athenians to join the planned protests in the capital", metro drivers said.

Protesters blockaded the port of Piraeus, near Athens, which links most Greek islands with the mainland.

"The situation that the workers are undergoing is tragic and we are near poverty levels," said Spyros Linardopoulos, a protester with the PAME union at the blockade.

"The government has declared war and to this war we will answer back with war."

The unions are angry that the government's austerity programme will impose taxes on those earning the minimum wage, following months of other cuts which have seen unemployment rise to more than 16%.

Polls suggest that between 70% and 80% of Greek people oppose the austerity plan.

"We're opposed to what they're trying to do to us," said bank worker Kali Patouna. "We know very well that these measures will be our tombstone. They will have extreme consequences for workers and for everyone on all social levels."
'Flawed' plans

The austerity package and implementation law must be passed in separate votes on Wednesday and Thursday.

If the measures are passed, the next instalment of Greece's 110bn-euro bail-out will be released by the European Union and International Monetary Fund.

European officials will also start to finalise the details of a second bail-out - worth an estimated 120bn euros - designed to help Greece pay its debts until the end of 2014.

EU President Herman Van Rompuy said the impact of the Greek vote would be felt worldwide.

"There are decisive moments and the coming hours will be decisive, crucial for the Greek people, but also for the eurozone and the stability of the world economy," AFP quoted Mr Van Rompuy as telling the European parliament on Tuesday.

The BBC's Chris Morris in Athens says defeat for the government this week would send ripples of anxiety right across the eurozone, with Greece facing the prospect next month of becoming the first member state to default on its debts.

Mr Papandreou has warned that failure to secure the new loans would mean that national coffers could be empty within days.

The new Finance Minister, Evangelos Venizelos, acknowledged that the cuts were "unfair", but said they were absolutely necessary.

But the main opposition leader, Antonis Samaras of the New Democracy party, said the thinking behind the austerity package was flawed and that tax rates should be lowered rather than raised in order to stimulate the economy.

The outcome of the debate is uncertain. Mr Papandreou faces opposition from within the governing Panhellenic Socialist Movement (Pasok), with two MPs saying they may oppose the bill.

The party has a slim majority, with 155 seats out of 300 in parliament.

TheUnhivedMind - June 28, 2011 06:14 PM (GMT)

Greek Police Fire Tear Gas to Disperse Protesters Before Vote on Austerity

By Tom Stoukas and Natalie Weeks - Jun 28, 2011 4
http://www.bloomberg.com/news/2011-06-27/p...ons-strike.html

Greek police fired tear gas to disperse protesters in the center of Athens as labor unions shut down government services before a vote on austerity measures that may determine if the nation can avoid a default.

Lawmakers have now begun a second day of debate on Prime Minister George Papandreou's five-year plan of budget cuts and asset sales after a crowd estimated by police to number 20,000 thronged outside Parliament to mark a 48-hour general strike. Hooded youths faced volleys of tear gas as they attacked riot officers, smashed windows at a McDonald's Corp (MCD) restaurant and set two vans on fire.

"We are determined to stop this plan from passing and if it does pass, we will continue our efforts," said Dimitra Oikonomou, 50, a schoolteacher who joined today's rallies. "The government might not listen to us now, but in the end they will hear it all at once."

Papandreou faces his second survival test in a week tomorrow when lawmakers vote on the package that's needed before the cash-strapped nation can tap a fifth loan payment from last year's 110 billion-euro ($157 billion) rescue. Failure to pass the government's 78 billion-euro plan may lead to the euro area's first sovereign default.

"Voting for the medium-term plan means we can close this chapter of uncertainty for the Greek people," Papandreou told lawmakers at the start of a three-day debate late yesterday. "From the brink of catastrophe we are securing, colleagues, the great opportunity to change our country."

Vote Looms

Papandreou's Pasok party has 155 of the 300 seats in the legislature, and his ability to keep his lawmakers united in two votes this week on budget cuts and asset sales will be critical to his victory. Two of them have said they may vote against the legislation, in part due to their opposition to plans to sell a stake in Public Power Corp. SA.

One of the dissident lawmakers, Thomas Robopoulos, told Skai TV today that he was moved by Papandreou's comments yesterday and that Greece faces critical times. He said he will decide on how to vote during the final debate tomorrow.

Workers at the former electricity monopoly have held rolling 48-hour strikes for the past week, leading to power cuts around the country.
Asset Sales

State-asset sales are the "first pillar" in any new financing package for Greece and an important factor for its European Union and International Monetary Fund partners, who are supplying the aid, Finance Minister Evangelos Venizelos said in parliament today. He spoke as a debate on the second bill, the so-called Implementation Law, began under a fast-track process, to make a June 30 deadline.

Air traffic controllers are ceasing work for eight hours today and tomorrow, according to a statement on the union's website. That has caused the cancellation of all flights into and out of the Athens International Airport, the country's biggest, between 8 a.m. and midday and 6 p.m. and 10 p.m. today.

Aegean Airlines SA (AEGN) will reschedule 97 flights and cancel 26 today. Another 17 routes will be cut tomorrow and flight times for 82 domestic and international destinations changed. Olympic Air will cancel and reschedule 52 flights today.

Bus, trolley, and tram workers in Athens have joined the strike, as have staff at Hellenic Railways Organization, Greece's state-run rail company. Dockworkers, journalists, health-care and municipal workers are also participating.
Protest Slogans

Protesters chanted slogans against the government as they marched. One banner read "Bankers are PIGS, not the people," a reference to the acronym for countries in the EU that have sought aid.

Police deployed 3,000 officers to protect the Parliament building that is the focus of demonstrations. In the square below, they used tear gas to fight protesters throwing pieces of marble chipped with hammers from the sidewalk.

Twenty-eight people were injured in today's demonstrations, 21 of them police officers, according to information from the Greek police and the health ministry. Five people were arrested in the clashes.

The situation has calmed down now, police spokesman Takis Papapetropoulos said by telephone. The so-called Indignants, the group that has drawn crowds to Parliament for several weeks, has vowed not to leave and urged protestors to return for an evening rally, according to an e-mailed statement.

Subway Working

Workers at the capital city's subway called off plans to strike, keeping the service open to allow protesters to participate in the rallies.

Papandreou, whose support has slid in opinion polls, has spent the past 15 days trying and failing to muster opposition backing for the package, while keeping his own party in line. He appointed a new finance minister to stem defections, survived a confidence vote and outlined 5.6 billion euros of additional budget measures.

On June 24, he won a pledge for a second bailout from EU leaders, on the condition that he delivers domestic support for the retrenchment.

An accompanying law on the five-year plan which was submitted to Parliament on June 27 must also be approved by the deadline of June 30 before EU finance ministers meet on July 3 to approve the release of the 12 billion-euro tranche of aid.

Greek government officials say they may not have money past mid-July to pay wages and pensions. The country needs to cover 6.6 billion euros of maturing bonds in August.
Recession Impact

Implementing more austerity measures threatens to deepen a three-year recession and complicate efforts to boost government revenue and has stoked discontent among Greeks.

The economy contracted 4.4 percent in 2010 and will shrink a further 3.8 percent this year, according to a report from EU and IMF inspectors in June. The nation's debt load will peak at 166 percent of gross domestic product next year, and is already the biggest in the euro region's history.

Papandreou's plan includes higher taxes on restaurants and bars, higher heating-oil taxes and lowering the tax-free threshold to 8,000 euros from 12,000 euros presently. Greek newspaper To Vima calculated the additional burden for an average Greek family of four at 2,795 euros a year, about the same as one month's income.

To contact the reporters on this story: Tom Stoukas in Athens at astoukas@bloomberg.net; Natalie Weeks in Athens at nweeks2@bloomberg.net

To contact the editor responsible for this story: James Hertling at jhertling@bloomberg.net

TheUnhivedMind - June 28, 2011 11:08 PM (GMT)

Coca-Cola

everest

NA MHN

Δημοκρατία
ΙΑΝΤΟΥ

ΑΣΤΥ
POLICE
ΑΣΤΥ
POLICE
ΑΣΤΥ
POLICE

SHARK
Lipton
ΑΣΤΥΝΟΜΙΑ
POLICE

Μέσα
Μαζικής
ΕΞΑΠΑΤΗΣΗΣ
BANKERS

YNOMIA
OLICE

TheUnhivedMind - June 28, 2011 11:26 PM (GMT)

LIVE RIOTS IN GREECE [vD]

http://www.livestream.com/stopcarteltvgr?u...ign=footerlinks

[DOHTML]<iframe width="560" height="340" src="http://cdn.livestream.com/embed/stopcarteltvgr?layout=4&autoplay=false" style="border:0;outline:0" frameborder="0" scrolling="no"></iframe> Watch live streaming video from stopcarteltvgr at livestream.com [/DOHTML]

TheUnhivedMind - June 29, 2011 02:18 AM (GMT)

Greece begins 48-hour general strike

More than 5,000 police officers to guard central Athens as striking workers plan to march on parliament

Barry Neild and agencies
guardian.co.uk, Tuesday 28 June 2011 10.05 BST
http://www.guardian.co.uk/world/2011/jun/2...-48-hour-strike

Riot police fire tear gas at youths throwing missiles in central Athens as an otherwise peaceful demonstration against cuts continues Link to this video

Greece is facing major disruption on Tuesday as unions begin a 48-hour general strike before a parliamentary vote on harsh austerity measures demanded in return for international rescue loans.

Protest rallies in Athens are due to converge on parliament as industrial action called in protest against tax hikes was expected to disrupt or halt most public services.

More than 5,000 police have been deployed to guard central Athens where anti-austerity demonstrations earlier this month ended in scenes of violence as protesters clashed with riot officers.

"We expect a dynamic and massive participation in the strike and the march to the centre of Athens. We will have 48 hours of working people, unemployed, young people in the streets," Spyros Papaspyros, leader of public sector union ADEDY, told Reuters.

Doctors, paramedics, journalists, postal workers and private sector employees were all expected to join the protest. Stoppages by Greek air traffic controllers are likely to disrupt flights and ferry departures from Athens are also expected to be hit.

The unions are angry that the proposed austerity package would raise taxes on minimum wage earners and other Greeks in addition to earlier cuts that have driven unemployment past 16%.

Parliament must approve and implement the programme this week if Greece is to receive a scheduled bailout loan of €110bn from the European Union and the International Monetary Fund. Without the loan Greece risks becoming the first eurozone country to default on its debts – an event that could trigger a crisis in other economically weak European countries and have major global consequences.

"These measures are a massacre for workers' rights. It will truly be hell for the working man. The strike must bring everything to a standstill," Thanassis Pafilis, a member of parliament for the pro-strike Greek Communist party, told Associated Press.

The three-day parliamentary debate over the austerity package came as France, among eurozone nations scrambling to prevent a default, suggested rolling over some Greek debt for 30 years.

The proposal by the French president, Nicolas Sarkozy, offered hope to Greece's socialist prime minister, George Papandreou, before the debate.

"I call on you to vote for survival, growth, justice, and a future for the citizens of this country," Papandreou told politicians.

Unable to offload its sovereign debt, Greece is dependent on bailout loans and is banking on a new rescue package to cover a 2012 financial hole. Although any further assistance is likely to be dependent on approval of austerity measures, Papandreou said he hoped the terms of a second bailout would be better than the first.

"I call on Europe, for its part, to give Greece the time and the terms it needs to really pay off its debt, without strangling growth, and without strangling its citizens," he said.

Theodoros Pangalos, the deputy prime minister, rejected suggestions Greece might be forced to abandon the euro and return to its old currency, the drachma.

"There would be riots everywhere, shops would have empty shelves and people would be jumping out of windows ... It would also be disastrous for the entire economy of Europe," he told the Spanish daily El Mundo.

TheUnhivedMind - June 29, 2011 04:01 AM (GMT)

Athens police worse than anything we've seen before'

[dohtml]<object width="640" height="390"><param name="movie" value="http://www.youtube.com/v/zoxxmGpp6HI&hl=en_US&feature=player_embedded&version=3"></param><param name="allowFullScreen" value="true"></param><param name="allowScriptAccess" value="always"></param><embed src="http://www.youtube.com/v/zoxxmGpp6HI&hl=en_US&feature=player_embedded&version=3" type="application/x-shockwave-flash" allowfullscreen="true" allowScriptAccess="always" width="640" height="390"></embed></object>[/dohtml]

TheUnhivedMind - June 29, 2011 04:01 AM (GMT)

[dohtml]<object width="640" height="390"><param name="movie" value="http://www.youtube.com/v/jIu66kft9nM&hl=en_US&feature=player_embedded&version=3"></param><param name="allowFullScreen" value="true"></param><param name="allowScriptAccess" value="always"></param><embed src="http://www.youtube.com/v/jIu66kft9nM&hl=en_US&feature=player_embedded&version=3" type="application/x-shockwave-flash" allowfullscreen="true" allowScriptAccess="always" width="640" height="390"></embed></object>[/dohtml]

TheUnhivedMind - June 29, 2011 04:10 AM (GMT)

[dohtml]<object width="640" height="390"><param name="movie" value="http://www.youtube.com/v/8DABheis01E&hl=en_US&feature=player_embedded&version=3"></param><param name="allowFullScreen" value="true"></param><param name="allowScriptAccess" value="always"></param><embed src="http://www.youtube.com/v/8DABheis01E&hl=en_US&feature=player_embedded&version=3" type="application/x-shockwave-flash" allowfullscreen="true" allowScriptAccess="always" width="640" height="390"></embed></object>[/dohtml]

kalongi - June 29, 2011 03:04 PM (GMT)

http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=oOvwMRVI9Rk

[dohtml]<iframe width="480" height="390" src="http://www.youtube.com/embed/oOvwMRVI9Rk" frameborder="0" allowfullscreen></iframe>[/dohtml]

TheUnhivedMind - June 29, 2011 05:07 PM (GMT)

© AP

© AP

© AP

© EPA

© EPA

ΑΓΑΝΑΚΤΙΣΜΕΝΟΙ
ΤΟ ΜΕΣΟΠΡΟΑΕΣΜΟ
ΘΑ ΝΙΚΗΣΟΥΜΕ!
© EPA

© AP

© Reuters

© Reuters

BOB DYLAN
ΑΣΤΥΝΟΜ
POLIC
© AFP/GETTY IMAGES

ΑΣΤΥΝΟΜΙΑ
POLICE
© AFP/GETTY IMAGES

© AFP/GETTY IMAGES

© Reuters

© EPA

ΑΣΤΥΝΟΜΙΑ
POLICE
ΑΣΤΥΝΟΜΙΑ
POLICE
© AFP/GETTY IMAGES

© AFP/GETTY IMAGES

TheUnhivedMind - June 30, 2011 01:41 AM (GMT)

[dohtml]<object width="640" height="390"><param name="movie" value="http://www.youtube.com/v/nFshfFSuXII&hl=en_US&feature=player_embedded&version=3"></param><param name="allowFullScreen" value="true"></param><param name="allowScriptAccess" value="always"></param><embed src="http://www.youtube.com/v/nFshfFSuXII&hl=en_US&feature=player_embedded&version=3" type="application/x-shockwave-flash" allowfullscreen="true" allowScriptAccess="always" width="640" height="390"></embed></object>[/dohtml]

TheUnhivedMind - June 30, 2011 07:07 PM (GMT)

[dohtml]<object width="640" height="390"><param name="movie" value="http://www.youtube.com/v/cwPEJTtMHHI&hl=en_US&feature=player_embedded&version=3"></param><param name="allowFullScreen" value="true"></param><param name="allowScriptAccess" value="always"></param><embed src="http://www.youtube.com/v/cwPEJTtMHHI&hl=en_US&feature=player_embedded&version=3" type="application/x-shockwave-flash" allowfullscreen="true" allowScriptAccess="always" width="640" height="390"></embed></object>[/dohtml]

TheUnhivedMind - June 30, 2011 09:55 PM (GMT)

GREECE BREAKING FREE FROM THE GRIP OF THE MONEY JUNKIES!

[dohtml]<object style="height: 390px; width: 640px"><param name="movie" value="http://www.youtube.com/v/S20_JuaX8gg?version=3"><param name="allowFullScreen" value="true"><param name="allowScriptAccess" value="always"><embed src="http://www.youtube.com/v/S20_JuaX8gg?version=3" type="application/x-shockwave-flash" allowfullscreen="true" allowScriptAccess="always" width="640" height="390"></object>[/dohtml]

TheUnhivedMind - June 30, 2011 09:56 PM (GMT)

Member Of Greek Parliament Assaulted By Angry Mob For Flip-Flopping On Austerity Vote

Submitted by Tyler Durden on 06/29/2011 15:42 -0400
http://www.zerohedge.com/article/member-gr...-austerity-vote

When two weeks ago we wrote about a (short-lived) mutiny within Pasok, we noted the name of one Aleksos Athanasiadis, who had decided (briefly) to vote with his conscience and against his ruling party (and proxy for European banking interests) against the austerity measures. Another mutineer MP we cited, was Giorgos Lianis, who had declared his intention to leave politics in order to be able to safely "walk the streets" and not vote for the austerity. He stuck to his word. As was discovered yesterday, Athanasiadis subsequently recanted and backtracked on his promise to vote with the people. Alas, he should have listened to his buddy Lianis. As Reuters reports, Athanasiadis was attacked shortly following the austerity vote which, among other things, passed with his blessing. Ironically, he was walking the street. This time he got away. But something tells us Greeks never forget. And the one thing they hate more than being a slave to the central banking cartel, is being a slave to the central banking cartel and a traitor.

From Reuters:

Greek protesters hurled projectiles at a ruling party lawmaker outside parliament on Wednesday after he backtracked and voted in favour of austerity measures.

A group of around 20 demonstrators threw bottles and a chair at PASOK deputy Alexandros Athanasiadis as he was escorted by five policemen after leaving the parliament building following a vote which approved the unpopular austerity law.

TV images showed him holding his ear but police sources said he was not injured in the attack.

Indicatively, back in America, this guy would become a career politician for life courtesy of an idiot electorate.

h/t Alexis

TheUnhivedMind - July 1, 2011 01:43 AM (GMT)

Greece: This is What an IMF Riot Looks Like

Kurt Nimmo
June 30, 2011
http://www.infowars.com/greece-this-is-wha...iot-looks-like/

The European stock market reacted jubilantly to news that the Greek parliament agreed to Mafia-like terms demanded by the international loan sharking operation, the IMF. Investors looked myopically at the boards showing the London FTSE 100 up a smidgen along with Frankfurt's DAX and CAC-40 in Paris. In the United States, stock futures ticked up modestly as Wall Street opened for the day. Dow Jones Industrial Average futures for September delivery and Standard & Poor's 500 contract for the same month are up 0.2% at 12,238.00 and 1,306.30, respectively.

[dohtml]<object style="height: 390px; width: 640px"><param name="movie" value="http://www.youtube.com/v/Xo3t82ntchc?version=3"><param name="allowFullScreen" value="true"><param name="allowScriptAccess" value="always"><embed src="http://www.youtube.com/v/Xo3t82ntchc?version=3" type="application/x-shockwave-flash" allowfullscreen="true" allowScriptAccess="always" width="640" height="390"></object>[/dohtml]

Markets reacted triumphantly in South Korea, India, Brazil and elsewhere. It has turned out to be a red letter day for the globalists and the financial class.

Meanwhile, on the streets of Athens, an IMF riot is in full swing. "Despite continuing protests – some violent – on the streets of Athens, investors were pleased that a euro-zone financial disaster had been averted," the Wall Street Jounral cheerfully reports today.

The IMF riot will undoubtedly get worse later today as the Greek parliament figures out the mechanics of bankster-imposed austerity. It's business as usual for the financial class on Wall Street, and in London and Brussels.

"Although one would not think it from the pictures from Athens, European policy makers have expressed their approval that Armageddon has been averted following the vote of approval in the Greek parliament," said Dermot O'Leary, economist at Goodbody Stockbrokers.

Of course, it depends on how you define Armageddon.

When the IMF eliminated food and fuel subsidies for the poor in Indonesia in 1998, the people went into the streets and rioted. After the banksters jacked up water prices in Bolivia, a series of IMF riots broke out. There were riots in Ecuador over the rise in cooking gas prices imposed by the World Bank.

According to former chief economist at the World Bank, Joseph Stiglitz, the IMF and World Bank meticulously plot these riots. It's all part of the plan. Greece is being gutted economically so the banksters and transnational corporations can rush in and buy assets and resources for pennies on the dollar.

In 2008, as the engineered subprime mess began to roll and threaten economies, then IMF boss Strauss-Kahn (since disgraced and forced to resign) predicted advanced countries would ultimately experience what Greece is going through right now.

During a speech in Madrid, Strauss-Kahn said that “social unrest may happen in many countries – including advanced economies” if governments failed to adequately respond to the financial crisis. “He added that violent protests could break out in countries worldwide if the financial system was not restructured to benefit everyone rather than a small elite,” the Guardian reported.

IMF riots are planned across the board as the global elite consolidate wealth and unleash crisis after crisis in the lead-up to a planet-wide banking system, world government and a globalist authoritarian police state dictatorship to keep the rabble in line.

In Greece, this is what an IMF riot looks like. It will look similar when it finally reaches the rest of Europe and the United States, as planned.

[dohtml]<object style="height: 390px; width: 640px"><param name="movie" value="http://www.youtube.com/v/qLRqgpcvnag?version=3"><param name="allowFullScreen" value="true"><param name="allowScriptAccess" value="always"><embed src="http://www.youtube.com/v/qLRqgpcvnag?version=3" type="application/x-shockwave-flash" allowfullscreen="true" allowScriptAccess="always" width="640" height="390"></object>

<object style="height: 390px; width: 640px"><param name="movie" value="http://www.youtube.com/v/S20_JuaX8gg?version=3"><param name="allowFullScreen" value="true"><param name="allowScriptAccess" value="always"><embed src="http://www.youtube.com/v/S20_JuaX8gg?version=3" type="application/x-shockwave-flash" allowfullscreen="true" allowScriptAccess="always" width="640" height="390"></object>

<object style="height: 390px; width: 640px"><param name="movie" value="http://www.youtube.com/v/X5vYgF7oa60?version=3"><param name="allowFullScreen" value="true"><param name="allowScriptAccess" value="always"><embed src="http://www.youtube.com/v/X5vYgF7oa60?version=3" type="application/x-shockwave-flash" allowfullscreen="true" allowScriptAccess="always" width="640" height="390"></object>

<object style="height: 390px; width: 640px"><param name="movie" value="http://www.youtube.com/v/b_j0cIIboGA?version=3"><param name="allowFullScreen" value="true"><param name="allowScriptAccess" value="always"><embed src="http://www.youtube.com/v/b_j0cIIboGA?version=3" type="application/x-shockwave-flash" allowfullscreen="true" allowScriptAccess="always" width="640" height="390"></object>

<object style="height: 390px; width: 640px"><param name="movie" value="http://www.youtube.com/v/h22u18yiacI?version=3"><param name="allowFullScreen" value="true"><param name="allowScriptAccess" value="always"><embed src="http://www.youtube.com/v/h22u18yiacI?version=3" type="application/x-shockwave-flash" allowfullscreen="true" allowScriptAccess="always" width="640" height="390"></object>[/dohtml]

TheUnhivedMind - July 1, 2011 09:41 PM (GMT)

[dohtml]<object style="height: 390px; width: 640px"><param name="movie" value="http://www.youtube.com/v/nFshfFSuXII?version=3"><param name="allowFullScreen" value="true"><param name="allowScriptAccess" value="always"><embed src="http://www.youtube.com/v/nFshfFSuXII?

version=3" type="application/x-shockwave-flash" allowfullscreen="true" allowScriptAccess="always" width="640" height="390"></object>[/dohtml]

TheUnhivedMind - July 1, 2011 09:42 PM (GMT)

[dohtml]<object style="height: 390px; width: 640px"><param name="movie" value="http://www.youtube.com/v/wh0RbeZ90vk?version=3"><param name="allowFullScreen" value="true"><param name="allowScriptAccess" value="always"><embed src="http://www.youtube.com/v/wh0RbeZ90vk?version=3" type="application/x-shockwave-flash" allowfullscreen="true" allowScriptAccess="always" width="640" height="390"></object>[/dohtml]

TheUnhivedMind - July 2, 2011 03:39 AM (GMT)

[dohtml]<object style="height: 390px; width: 640px"><param name="movie" value="http://www.youtube.com/v/X5vYgF7oa60?version=3"><param name="allowFullScreen" value="true"><param name="allowScriptAccess" value="always"><embed src="http://www.youtube.com/v/X5vYgF7oa60?version=3" type="application/x-shockwave-flash" allowfullscreen="true" allowScriptAccess="always" width="640" height="390"></object>[/dohtml]

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: Will the Revolution Begin in London?

Title: Will the Revolution Begin in London?

TheUnhivedMind - June 30, 2011 01:44 AM (GMT)

Will the Revolution Begin in London?

London Riot - Wiki Commons
Wednesday, June 29, 2011
http://www.activistpost.com/2011/06/will-r...-in-london.html
Laurie Penny
Adbusters

'The revolution is in the mind.' Those words were scrawled in wobbly spray-paint on Nelson's Column on March 26, at the end of a day that saw half a million union members and outraged citizens march against government spending cuts in central London. The plan, cooked up by students and activist groups and advertised benignly on Facebook, was to have a picnic party and 'Turn Trafalgar Square into Tahrir Square,' as if some sympathetic magic could summon the regime-toppling energy of the Egyptian uprising to these soggy shores. What it turned into instead was a bloody mess.

As dusk fell, 200 police in full riot armor descended on the picnic without warning, cracking heads, breaking limbs and penning hundreds of young protesters in the biting cold for hours, with no water, no shelter and no way out. This is a form of collective punishment known colloquially as "kettling." Its use at the London G-20 protests in 2009 was recently ruled illegal in a landmark decision by the high court.

The same dangerous police tactics were employed in London last winter at the student protests that saw hundreds of thousands gather in London to challenge a prohibitive rise in college fees and the privatization of the British university system. School children and students carried placards that asked, "Where's my future?" Instead of getting an answer, they were subjected to a vengeful model of "public order" policing that has radicalized this generation with breathtaking speed.

Or take the royal wedding. On this day a quarter of a billion people watched Britain deliver what it does best: an exquisitely choreographed pageant of power, privilege and continuity. The wedding was a fantasy of faded imperial glory, a fairytale image of how we want the world to see the United Kingdom and how we would like to see ourselves. What far fewer people saw was how thoroughly and how violently that image was edited before its release to exclude all dissent, airbrushed to conceal anything beyond fawning, flag-waving deference.

The night before the wedding, activists were dragged out of their homes all over the country and arrested for unspecified crimes they had no intention of committing. Squats and community centers were raided and protesters were seized on the streets in an operation, foreshadowed in the tabloid press, to “preemptively arrest” radical elements using the wedding as an excuse. In central London, ten young people were cuffed and arrested outside a railway station simply for holding a placard saying “democracy now.”

A climate of fear has been drummed into being. Young protesters are now routinely the subject of public witch-hunts: 20-year-old student activist Alfie Meadows, who was beaten so badly by police on December 9 that he was left comatose and bleeding into his brain, has now been charged with violent disorder for his actions that day. This has become a propaganda war, as Parliament and the police attempt to wrest back control of the narrative by portraying every peaceful dissident as a violent hooligan.

The word “kettle” conjures the terribly English image of a nice, calming cup of tea. In fact, it’s a deeply traumatic form of collective punishment. Imagine: you came out with your friends to exercise your right to peaceful protest, but you find yourself trapped behind walls of armed police. The cops move forward in waves, bellowing in your face, raising their batons, crushing you into a smaller and smaller space with thousands of others. You can’t breathe or move; you start to panic. Young protesters, terrified and enraged, begin to throw themselves at the police, which is precisely what the police are waiting for.

They start to beat into the crowd with shields and sticks. You are surrounded by screaming, bloodied teenagers, and you try to protect yourself, but there’s nowhere to go. At first, you are incensed, appalled, but then the cold sets in, and you realize that until everyone calms down and shuts the fuck up, you’re not going to be allowed to escape. There’s a lesson about compliance that the police are extremely keen for you to learn.

After a few hours, you’re freezing and tired and hungry, and you’ve seen some frightening things. You need the toilet desperately. You’re prepared to say anything to get out, to get home. Your phone has run out of battery, so you’re cut off from the outside world, and you’re worried about your friends, your family. When you do eventually stumble through the police lines, your legs like blocks of cold wood, exhausted and seething with bitten-back rage, the policeman insists on taking your name and photograph before you can go. When you get home, you find the news reporting that the police took reasonable measures to control a violent riot.

Kettling is a perfect psychological metaphor for the tensions being played out in Britain today. It seals off dissidents and enforces compliance by beating them back if they try to break through, provoking panicked protesters into self-defense, showing the outside world a picture of a “violent minority” – the phrase is consistently used by the British press – making trouble, a picture taken from outside the police lines. It’s what activist journalist Dan Hancox calls “strategic brutality and unabashed doublethink.” It’s the cognitive dissonance that allowed the London Metropolitan police to crush thousands of people in treacherous subzero temperatures on Westminster Bridge in December while claiming that it was all for their own protection.

One year ago, the British left looked longingly across the channel to Europe, where ordinary people were actually putting up a fight. It seemed impossible that Britain, the briefcase-clutching auditor of supply-side economics, could ever hope to muster similar public dissent to the global austerity consensus our leaders helped broker. But now, we've already seen Metropolitan police on horseback charging thousands of rioting teenagers at the gates of Parliament. We've seen mass arrests for civil disobedience, hundreds of thousands on the streets in protest, and the birth of a smart, popular counterculture that seeks to contaminate the brand structure of casino capitalism. It began in November, when student protesters demonstrating against the privatization of higher education deviated from the march route and smashed up the headquarters of the party in government. It has now become a national movement, led by young people organizing nonhierarchically. It can happen anywhere if it can happen in Britain.

So can a revolution happen here, just like it happened in Egypt? Well, do you want the simple answer or the subtle answer? The simple answer is: no, of course it can't. Even though the oppression taking place in the UK is grounded in the same transfer of wealth to the global rich from the global poor, Britain is a different sort of country from Libya, Tunisia or Egypt, and if a cultural shift of anything approaching a similar magnitude is to take place on these shores, it will look very different from the cinematic revolutionary spectacle of Tahrir Square.

Because we have not had to wrestle with 30 years of military dictatorship, Britain is a far more sophisticated example of neoliberal statecraft. Power is dispersed between the government and business elites, and extensive state surveillance is employed to keep unruly elements in check, with police violence employed only as a last resort. Meanwhile the British government, desperate to downplay its history of support for Hosni Mubarak and Muammar Gaddafi, makes a point of ramming home the differences between the uprisings taking place in the Middle East and the protests taking place closer to home.

With the collusion of the tabloid press in Britain, the Libyan rebels in particular are drawn as heroic freedom fighters resisting an evil dictator, bravely aided by British Tommies who almost never end up slaughtering civilians by mistake. Protesters in London, meanwhile, are a "violent minority" of anarchist hooligans whose demands for economic and social justice are thuggish and absurd. Social injustice, we are told, is something alien, something that happens elsewhere, in mysterious foreign lands, and definitely not in your own country, in your own neighborhood, on your own street. You may be angry that your government has just closed your local library, made your spouse redundant, reduced your salary, kicked you out of your home and privatized the college system so your children will never be able to afford university, but David Cameron is not Gaddafi.

In Tripoli, dissent is gunned down. In Trafalgar Square, dissent is merely stifled, sealed off from the outside world and clubbed into temporary submission. A "sterile area" (the official police term for a kettle) is created wherever protesters gather in numbers, as if resistance and protest were an infection in the body politic to be cauterized by police violence.

This is psychological kettling as done by the government and business elites: rule by manufacturing public consent, by creating an illusion of need and then by branding themselves as the ones to meet it.

This brand of power is contaminated by protest, and as popular resistance has escalated in Britain over the past six months, that brand contamination has become more and more effective. It's no accident that UK Uncut, the direct action group most effective at damaging the brand image of major banks and whose flash protests against corporate tax avoidance have attracted supporters of all ages and political affiliations, was specifically targeted for mass arrest. Last month, during a peaceful protest, 148 key members were rounded up and taken away in handcuffs, ordered to strip to their underwear and held in the cells without food or human contact for many hours.

So, can it happen here? Are you ready for the subtle answer? It comes through like a whisper, half drowned out by the crash and squeal of cargo-cult patriotism and smothered by right-wing tabloid tub-thumping, but if you listen, it's there. The answer is: of course it can happen … it has happened before.

For as long as rich, powerful men have hoarded the wealth and power and enclosed the land in this country, the people of Britain have fought back, sometimes peacefully and sometimes violently, sometimes autonomously and sometimes with the backing of organized labor. The history of Britain isn't just a history of kings and queens: it's also a history of practical and psychological revolution, of ordinary people fighting for their right to suffrage and survival. It's a history that can be traced from the miners' strikes and poll tax riots of the 1980s right back through the suffragettes, the Chartists, the Peterloo protests, the diggers and levellers of the English civil war and the peasants' revolt in the 14th century. The British people have always fought the rich and powerful in their efforts to contain and silence dissent. And every time that resistance has been crushed, those ideas have lived on until the day their realization becomes inevitable. If we can fight the war of ideas and win, on this atomized, atrophied little postimperial island kingdom, anyone can.

Even today, UK activists have developed a sophisticated free smartphone system that allows protesters to anticipate and escape police kettles. The app was cooked up by a team of students and IT professionals calling themselves Sukey, and it has proved incredibly effective. Wherever the police attempt to sterilize dissent, protesters can and will reinfect; wherever a kettle forms, in the streets of London or in the political psyche of the nation, activists can and will learn how to break it.

In the early months of 2011, on bus hoardings and billboards across London, and then across the country, a specific set of stickers began to appear, plastering the paid promotional space of casino capitalism. Apathy is Violent, said one; Cuts don't Cure, said another, covering the airbrushed face of a model promoting a new perfume. These stickers, created and distributed among students, activists and schoolchildren, have become a secret code, a reminder that the imagery of power can and should be – and is being – questioned, a reminder that despite the savage police crackdown on known dissidents, there is hope. There is always hope.

As I walked home tonight, I spotted a sticker slapped across a hoarding congratulating the Royal Couple, small but perfectly legible. Destroy their hallucinations with our desires, it said. Resist. Strike. Occupy.

TheUnhivedMind - June 30, 2011 03:29 PM (GMT)

© Getty Images

© EPA
NO CUTS
GENERAL STRIKE NOW!
ALL OUT TOGETHER!
STOP THE CUTS
GENERAL STRIKE NOW!
Save our pensions
UCU education - cuts never heal

BROMLEY
N.U.T.
BARNET
NO CUTS
FAIR PENSIONS FOR ALL
HE'S GOT TO GO
Socialist Worker
UNITE THE FIGHTS
We're all in this together!
ATL NUT UCU
© Getty Images

JOIN THE SOCIALISTS
TEXT 'JOIN' WITH YOUR NAME & POSTCODE TO 07761 814204 www.socialistparty.org.uk
© PA

NUT OFFICIAL STRIKE HANDS OFF ME MA'S PENSION!
© PA

North West
FAIR FOR A Save
© PA

ATL | NUT | UCU
PENSIONS JUSTICE EDUCATION
- cuts never heal pcs
PCS.ORG.UK FAIR
PENSIONS
FOR ALL
UCU
© Getty Images

© PA

NUT
STOP THE PENSION PLUNDER
FAIR PENSIONS FOR ALL
Save Our PENSIONS
© Getty Images

POLICE
LX56 FUV

© Pete Hendrick

pcs
Campaigning for Justice
Pensions
Public Services
pcs
Defending Jobs and Services
pcs
OFFICIAL DISPUTE
pcs
PUBLIC SERVANTS
© AFP/GETTY IMAGES

NUT
NUT
NUT Defend Pensions Protect Education
Socialist Worker
STRIKE TOGETHER
Bring down the Con-Dems
TUC: call a general strike www.swp.org.uk
© PA

SCHOOLS

■ Up to two thirds of all schools – some 15,000 of a total of 23,000 – are expected to face 'severe disruption' or closure.

university terms are either already over or are drawing to a close.

CUSTOMS OFFICERS

■ Up to half a need to do so. Their dole will be paid into their bank account automatically.

■ Staff will attempt to give people job advice if they do turn up.

COURTS

■ Some trials may have to be postponed as up to 10,000 court staff belonging to the PCS union could strike.

expected to face 'severe disruption' or closure. Primary schools will be worst hit as infant classes are restricted, by law, to 30 pupils per qualified teacher.

■ Many top private schools, including Winchester College, St Paul's and Cheltenham Ladies College will be affected.

■ The two striking teachers' unions – the NUT and the ATL – have 420,000 members between them.

UNIVERSITIES & COLLEGES

■ Some 350 colleges and 75 'new' universities – those founded after 1992 – will close partially or completely.

■ The Universities and College Union, which is joining the strike, has around 110,000 members.

■ Lectures at universities may be cancelled, but many

■ Up to half a million international travellers have been advised to expect delays at passport control.

■ Almost seven out of 10 immigration and customs staff are members of the striking PCS union, meaning almost 10,000 could stay away from work.

■ The UK Border Agency will try to keep disruption to a minimum by putting managers on control desks.

■ Eurostar will run extra trains, and said it does not expect its border staff to strike.

JOB CENTRES

■ PCS staff working at job centres and benefit offices are set to walk out but closures are unlikely.

■ Those due to sign on for jobseekers' allowance today have been told they do not give people job advice if they do turn up. Applications from vulnerable people for 'crisis loans' will be proritised.

DRIVING TEST CENTRES

■ Hundreds of driving tests are at risk of cancellation because some staff – the total is unknown – are in the striking PCS union. But the Driving Standards Agency has told candidates they just turn up as normal unless told specifically their test is off.

■ Learners will be able to claim for compensation if their test is cancelled at any of the DSA's 400 centres.

■ The DVLA said it hoped to keep all 39 of its local offices open, but some may have to close. Customers are advised to apply for driving licences and tax discs online.

belonging to the PCS union could strike.

■ The Ministry of Justice said they expected to keep disruption to a minimum but priority would be given to important cases, such as urgent family and custody cases.

POLICE

■ Thousands of police civilian staff may join the strike, including community support officers and 999 call centre workers. In London, the Met has cancelled police leave for the day. Traffic wardens could also walk out.

PRISONS

■ Some 5,000 administration and education training officers could walk out – meaning prisoners' training sessions are cancelled.

TheUnhivedMind - June 30, 2011 04:32 PM (GMT)

LONDON PROTEST 26 ARRESTED 30 JUNE 2011

[dohtml]<object style="height: 390px; width: 640px"><param name="movie" value="http://www.youtube.com/v/cG_srwz9KT8?version=3"><param name="allowFullScreen" value="true"><param name="allowScriptAccess" value="always"><embed src="http://www.youtube.com/v/cG_srwz9KT8?version=3" type="application/x-shockwave-flash" allowfullscreen="true" allowScriptAccess="always" width="640" height="390"></object>[/dohtml]

TheUnhivedMind - July 1, 2011 09:46 PM (GMT)

[dohtml]<object style="height: 390px; width: 640px"><param name="movie" value="http://www.youtube.com/v/SGcff9D7BVo?version=3"><param name="allowFullScreen" value="true"><param name="allowScriptAccess" value="always"><embed src="http://www.youtube.com/v/

SGcff9D7BVo?version=3" type="application/x-shockwave-flash" allowfullscreen="true" allowScriptAccess="always" width="640" height="390"></object>[/dohtml]

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: "Stolen Elections" Battle Cry of the Color Revolut

Title: "Stolen Elections" Battle Cry of the Color Revolut

TheUnhivedMind - June 30, 2011 02:43 AM (GMT)

"Stolen Elections" Battle Cry of the Color Revolution

Rhetorical stage set by globalist Robert Amsterdam to destabilize Thailand.

Tony Cartalucci, Contributing Writer
Wednesday, June 29, 2011
http://www.activistpost.com/2011/06/stolen...y-of-color.html

Bangkok, Thailand, June 30, 2011 - Having reported on the engineered "Arab Spring" since January, the Land Destroyer Report has attempted to accurately reveal the inner workings of foreign-funded "color revolutions" drawing both on firsthand experience here in Thailand, and by sourcing the exemplary work of geopolitical analysts like Dr. Webster Tarpley and William Engdahl. Having amassed a considerable amount of insight on this phenomenon, the Land Destroyer Report believes an "Asian Summer" is imminent and that it will start right here in Bangkok, Thailand. It is unlikely that the Thai government is unaware of the totality of what it faces, and thus most likely prepared, with the "Arab Spring" in hindsight, in unpredictable ways difficult to discern.

What is certain is that the stage is now fully set with a Tunisian-Egyptian-style Wikileaks hit piece circulating through the corporate-owned media, and now the foreign-backed opposition party already attempting to decry the elections as "stolen," just as Egypt's Mohamed ElBaradei did prior to Egypt's 2010 elections and then revolution. All that can be done now is wait and see how the July 3rd, elections this Sunday play out. The Land Destroyer Report will attempt to cover these events in full detail, and while "Thailand" may not be a subject of interest to many readers, the repercussions, especially regarding China most definitely will affect everyone.

Thai Color Revolution 2011 Timeline:

May 16, 2011: Globalist-stooge Thaksin Shinawatra runs his own sister in his place for Thailand's July 3, 2011 elections, as he hides in Dubai, evading a two-year prison sentence for corruption.
June 21, 2011: Globalist lawyer Robert Amsterdam, representing Thaksin Shinawatra, already claiming Thialand's July 3rd, 2011 elections will be "stolen."
June 23, 2011: Wikileaks hit piece on Thailand penned by former-Reuters journalist Andrew Marshall released just days before the Thai elections.
June 27, 2011: CFR hails Wikileaks hit piece as a possible impetus for Thailand's total "political meltdown."

Stolen Elections: A Historical Precedent

While Egypt's revolutionary leader Mohamed ElBaradei attempts to fashion himself as an outspoken critic of Western, and in particular US foreign policy, the fact remains that ElBaradei himself sits upon one of the very US corporate-funded think-tanks making such policy. ElBaradei is also a vocal critic of Israel, even threatening to go to war with the nation recently - certainly for show however, as across the International Crisis Group's round table from him sits ICG advisers like Israeli President Shimon Peres, Shlomo Ben-Ami, Former Foreign Minister of Israel, and Stanley Fischer, Governor of the Bank of Israel.

So it should not then be surprising that ElBaradei led a US-funded revolution against Hosni Mubarak's government and is now poised to take over as Egypt's leader while his corporate backers prepare to fold Egypt's economy into their Wall Street-London "international order. ElBaradei had returned to Egypt a full year prior to the "spontaneous" "Arab Spring" to begin building a political front as well as an army of street activists to contest the inevitable election results. Surely a man working so overtly for the "international order" with an army of foreign-funded, US-trained political cannon fodder would never be allowed to win an election no matter how many votes ElBaradei's front was able to garner. Fully expecting such a loss, ElBaradei and his backers had long in advance prepared to call the elections "stolen," and with that battle cry, it became the excuse for taking to the streets, destabilizing, and toppling the Egyptian government.

Thailand's Turn

Mohamed ElBaradei's despicable treason can find its analogue in Thailand through globalist-stooge Thaksin Shinawatra. Before becoming prime minister in 2001, Thaksin served as an adviser to US equity firm, the Carlyle Group which included the Bush family, James Baker, Frank Carlucci (formally of the National Endowment for Democracy), all while holding public office as a politician in the Thai government. His time in office as prime minster, from 2001-2006 included a 3 month "war on drugs" that saw 2,500+ extra-legal executions carried out across Thailand and a 2004 attempt to ramrod a US-Thailand FTA through without parliamentary approval. His term as prime minister was cut short by a September 19, 2006 military coup which ousted him from power, on the eve of which Thaksin was reporting to the globalist Council on Foreign Relations in New York City.

Photo: Thaksin Shinawatra reporting before the Fortune 500-funded Council on Foreign Relations on September 18, 2006, the eve the Thai military ousted him from power in a peaceful, orderly coup.
....

Since then, Thaksin has been represented by the global monied-elite via their lobbying firms including Kenneth Adelman of the Edelman PR firm (Freedom House, International Crisis Group, PNAC), James Baker of Baker Botts (CFR, Carlyle Group), Robert Blackwill of Barbour Griffith & Rogers (CFR), and Robert Amsterdam of Amsterdam & Peroff (Chatham House). Additionally, media organizations within Thailand supporting Thaksin's political movement receive direct funding from the US government via the National Endowment for Democracy, including outfits like Prachatai. Thaksin has also led two consecutive attempts to violently seize power back via street protests in April of 2009, and again in April and May of 2010. In 2010, Thakin's street movement dubbed the "red shirts" employed professional militants to balk any attempt by the Thai Army to disperse the mobs. Weeks of gun battles, grenade attacks, and widespread arson, looting, and rioting followed, leaving 91 dead.

Despite Thaksin's "red shirt" leaders themselves admitting that armed militants intervened on their behalf, and one leader, renegade general Khattiya Sawasdipol known as "Seh Daeng," even admitting to leading 300 armed men trained for "close encounters" and carrying M79 grenade launchers, to this day the movement blames the deaths entirely on a government initiated "massacre." Leading the accusations of massacres, illegitimacy to rule, and now accusations of a premeditated conspriacy to deny convicted criminal Thaksin and his proxy party led by his own sister a victory during the July 3, 2011 elections, is paid-liar, Robert Amsterdam.

Robert Amsterdam of Amsterdam & Peroff, a Chatham House major corporate member, currently represents deposed autocrat Thaksin Shinawatra, and has now published an elaborate narrative titled, "Loser Take All: The Democrats' Playbook to Steal the Election." In this latest attempt to prime the narrative before Thailand's July 3rd 2011 elections, he claims the Thai government will "steal" the elections from his client Thaksin Shinawatra's proxy party by convicting them of vote-buying. Of course, in Amsterdam's own report he states:
There is some dispute about whether there is any such thing as "vote buying"— in other words, whether giving a voter a small sum of money really earns a candidate or party that voter's support. Aside from the impossibility of ascertaining what anyone does in the voting booth, voters in many constituencies often accept small cash gifts from the representatives of multiple candidates. However, there is no doubt that money plays a big role in Thai election campaigns, especially as candidates from various parties attempt to enlist the services of the most influential canvassers at the local level. Canvassers, in turn, use a portion of what they receive from the candidate as “walking around money” to pay for the campaign’s expenses and sometimes distribute the money to prospective voters. While both practices are illegal, they remain widespread and practiced widely by the Democrats themselves.

Such arguments attempt to whitewash the fact that Thaksin has built his entire support base by handing out fistfuls of cash in both socialist handouts and outright bribes come election time. Amsterdam expects his audience to believe that handing out cash around election time is entirely innocuous, and even if it isn't, the Thai government does it as well. Ultimately Amsterdam's complaint is that since the ruling party buys votes as well, his client's proxy political party should not be held accountable for their crimes.

Amsterdam might recognize this as the same sort of double standard the "international order" whom he and his client Thaksin represents, applies around the globe. For example, while the US has strafed Afghan and Iraqi civilians from the air for nearly a decade now, the mere implication that Libya's Qaddafi was doing likewise to US-backed terrorists in Benghazi earned Libya a referral to the UN Security Council and NATO's own campaign of strafing Libyan civilians from the air.

Unfortunately, Amsterdam's proposed version of reality exists divorced from the fact that his client Thaksin Shinawatra is a convicted criminal facing 2 years in prison who has spent his time since 2006 consorting with foreign governments to destabilize Thailand through violent street protests and coordinated media campaigns - the latest of which is gravitating around former-Reuters journalist Andrew Marshall's dubious Wikileaks-based "Thai Story."

It would be unimaginable to allow Thaksin and his armed band of foreign-subsidized thugs to seize back control of the nation after battling troops and murdering people in the streets for the last 2 years, burning down buildings (2010), and threatening a "people's war" (after 2009 riots) - just as it was unimaginable to allow overt US-stooge Mohamed ElBaradei to walk away a winner in Egypt's 2010 elections. The legitimacy for Thaksin and his proxy opposition party "Peua Thai" to even run in Thailand's 2011 elections is difficult to fathom, considering his criminal conviction and his overt dealings with foreign governments against his own nation. For those who attempt to portray Peua Thai and the "red shirt" movement as removed from Thaksin Shinawatra, one should know that his campaign slogan this year is, "Thaksin thinks, Peua Thai does."

Photo: Thaksin's proxy political party, "Peua Thai," led by his own sister sports the slogan, "Thaksin thinks, Peua Thai does." While Amsterdam argues that the elections will be stolen from his fugitive client, there are obvious concerns over his legitimacy to contest the elections in the first place.

....

Amsterdam's attempt to accuse the Thai government of "stealing" an election from his fugitive client is nothing less than an attempt to obfuscate the fact he has no legitimacy to run in the first place, and no possibility of returning to power after the myriad of treasonous, murderous crimes he has committed since his ouster in 2006. Just as with Mohamed ElBaradei, a man with no legitimacy himself, the global-elite must lend legitimacy to Thaksin Shinawatra, a task done by Robert Amsterdam and the corporate-owned media that will soon be extending their completely disingenuous coverage to focus on the imminent unrest about to grip Bangkok.

Global Implications

The Asian Summer is about to begin, and it will start in Bangkok, Thailand. Thailand is a nation of over 70 million people, with a large agrarian and manufacturing-based economy and a formidable military - very similar to Egypt's stature in many ways as a regional crossroads. Just as in Egypt, the Thai military has received a substantial amount of money from the US over many years, and as explained in the corporate-funded Brookings Institution report, "Which Path to Persia?" such money is expended with the hope of cultivating officers aligned to US interests who will perform on their behalf in a moment of instability and uncertainty. While Thailand's last military coup acted against the global-elites' interests, the next one may or may not, depending on who's behalf they intervene.

Thailand's military is far from homogeneous, and loyalties are divided. Following July 3rd's election in Thailand there are several possible ways Thaksin's foreign-paymasters may attempt to destabilize and topple the current Thai government. As explained in "Which Path to Persia?" it is most likely that all of these options will be used in tandem to create "helpful synergies." Street protests led by Thaksin's political lackeys inside of Thailand, coupled with a coordinated media campaign by the corporate-owned Western media, possible defections within the Thai military's ranks, and violent militants targeting both protesters and security forces alike to escalate the violence beyond a point-of-no-return are all likely scenarios Thailand should consider and prepare against.

Thailand has often been cited as a gateway into China. Indeed a proposed rail system connecting Singapore to China will pass through Thailand, while ports along Thailand's rivers connect Chinese and Thai traders with each other, as well as to the Gulf of Thailand. The Kra Isthmus located in southern Thailand holds the prospect of being made into a canal that could serve as a short-cut for Chinese ships to and from the Middle East and beyond. Destabilizing Thailand, or better yet, installing an indebted stooge like Thaksin Shinawatra, would allow the Wall Street-London "international order" to once again use Southeast Asia as "Lilliputians" to tie down China's "Gulliver."

Note: It is interesting to note that Amsterdam is also concurrently defending Russia's Mikhail Khodorkovsky who is now lodging in a Siberian prison for embezzling money, breathtaking displays of corruption, and his connections with the West, in particular with Henry Kissinger and "Lord" Jacob Rothschild who were sitting on what geopolitical expert William Engdahl called a George Soros Open Society-styled "Open Russian Foundation." Khodorkovsky, like Thailand's Thaksin Shinawatra, was attempting to consolidate power while handing over his nation's resources and institutions to Wall Street and London's banks.

For more information on Robert Amsterdam, please see "Globalist Page: Robert Amsterdam."

Tony Cartalucci's articles have appeared on many alternative media websites, including his own at Land Destroyer Report.

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: London strike riots alert: Police on stand-by for Title: London strike riots alert: Police on stand-by for Description: mass public sector walkout

TheUnhivedMind - June 29, 2011 05:20 PM (GMT)

London strike riots alert: Police on stand-by for mass public sector walkout

Justin Davenport, Nicholas Cecil, Anna Davis and Mark Blunden
29 Jun 2011
http://www.thisislondon.co.uk/standard/art...ctor-walkout.do

London is braced for the biggest day of industrial action in years as hundreds of thousands of public sector workers go on strike tomorrow.

All police leave in the capital has been cancelled to deal with a mass protest march and walkouts by civilian staff at Scotland Yard.

A huge operation is planned amid fears that a minority of activists may attempt to hijack the march. The 24-hour walkout by teachers, civil servants and other public sector workers is expected to cause major disruption.

Police are being brought in to man 999 call centres. Up to 90 per cent of schools are set to close in some areas. In Camden, expected to be the most badly hit borough, only three schools will open fully.

Gatwick and Heathrow airports are warning passengers of long delays at passport control as immigration and customs staff walk out.

Seventy jobcentres could close, driving tests will be cancelled and courts face disruption. Hundreds of police are to be deployed to stop a "Greek-style" protest outside Parliament during the strike march.

Roads around the Palace of Westminster - including Westminster Bridge - will be closed and security stepped up in Parliament.

The Met said it was working with the trade unions involved in the march and they expected the majority of people to protest peacefully.

However, sources said there was intelligence that a "small number" of activists may attempt to cause trouble. Riot squad officers will be on stand-by to deal with any trouble. A spokesman said : "We are prepared for all eventualities. If people cause trouble we will deal with them."

The Education Activist Network, one of the main groups behind previous student protests, has called on students and teachers to turn tomorrow into a "day of rage and anger against the Tory-led coalition". One group of protesters has also announced plans to "retake" Parliament Square.

Anarchist groups, which caused massive damage during the TUC march earlier this year, also called members out on the streets tomorrow.
The main protest march will start at Lincoln's Inn Fields in Holborn at 11am and finish at the Methodist Central Hall in Westminster before a major rally expected to attract thousands.

Picket lines will be set up across the capital at key locations including the House of Commons, Scotland Yard, 999 call centres as well as schools, courts and tax offices.

Up to 750,000 members of four trade unions are striking across the country in a bitter row over pensions. Deputy Prime Minister Nick Clegg warned union bosses that the Government would not bow to strike pressure.

"We are absolutely adamant in government that this issue can only and must only be resolved through dialogue and discussion, not through strikes and conflict," he said. He added: "I'm acutely aware that millions of people are asking themselves what's going to happen tomorrow? Are they you going to be able to send their kids to school? How are they going to get to work? Are they going to be able to get away on holiday?

And it seems to me that the strikes tomorrow are not going to help those millions of people, aren't going to help the millions of members of the trade union movement and they are not going to help the country."

David Cameron has branded the strikes as "wrong" and Labour leader Ed Miliband has warned they will be a "mistake".

But unions are protesting at millions of public sector workers being forced to work longer, pay more and get smaller pensions. Public and Commercial Services union leader Mark Serwotka dismissed talks with the Government as a "farce", accusing ministers of having no interest in negotiating on plans to cut pensions.

Education Secretary Michael Gove said: "I do hope that even at this eleventh hour that there will be teachers who were tempted to strike and will decide to go to work instead."

Colin Stanbridge, chief executive of the London Chamber of Commerce and Industry, said: "The grounds for this strike will seem completely alien to workers in the private sector."

RMT union leaders today raised the threat of a national rail strike to resist an "assault" on jobs, pay, safety and services.

[dohtml]<object id="flashObj" width="486" height="412" classid="clsid:D27CDB6E-AE6D-11cf-96B8-444553540000" codebase="http://download.macromedia.com/pub/shockwave/cabs/flash/swflash.cab#version=9,0,47,0"><param name="movie" value="http://c.brightcove.com/services/viewer/federated_f9?isVid=1" /><param name="bgcolor" value="#FFFFFF" /><param name="flashVars" value="videoId=1029786888001&playerID=10177795001&playerKey=AQ~~,AAAAAFBfUR0~,APHItme33r3NCzP7M6JbKtN_Lw1nEGX4&domain=embed&dynamicStreaming=true" /><param name="base" value="http://admin.brightcove.com" /><param name="seamlesstabbing" value="false" /><param name="allowFullScreen" value="true" /><param name="swLiveConnect" value="true" /><param name="allowScriptAccess" value="always" /><embed src="http://c.brightcove.com/services/viewer/federated_f9?isVid=1" bgcolor="#FFFFFF" flashVars="videoId=1029786888001&playerID=10177795001&playerKey=AQ~~,AAAAAFBfUR0~,APHItme33r3NCzP7M6JbKtN_Lw1nEGX4&domain=embed&dynamicStreaming=true" base="http://admin.brightcove.com" name="flashObj" width="486" height="412" seamlesstabbing="false" type="application/x-shockwave-flash" allowFullScreen="true" swLiveConnect="true" allowScriptAccess="always" pluginspage="http://www.macromedia.com/shockwave/download/index.cgi?P1_Prod_Version=ShockwaveFlash"></embed></object>[/dohtml]

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: Senegal deploys troops after riots over power cuts

Title: Senegal deploys troops after riots over power cuts

TheUnhivedMind - June 28, 2011 05:53 PM (GMT)

Senegal deploys troops after riots over power cuts

Energy firm apologises for protracted blackout as extra soldiers, armoured vehicles and helicopter gunship are brought into Dakar

guardian.co.uk, Tuesday 28 June 2011 13.33 BST
http://www.guardian.co.uk/world/2011/jun/2...ts-riots-troops

The Senegalese government has deployed extra troops at ministry buildings, armoured personnel carriers near the presidential palace and at least one helicopter gunship in its capital, Dakar, after riots over protracted power cuts.

Many homes and businesses in Dakar have been without electricity for more than 30 hours, a situation that has strengthened anti-government sentiment. Overnight, demonstrators burned tyres and ransacked the offices of the state electricity company Senelec and ministers' homes.

Riots happened last week after the president, Abdoulaye Wade, tried to alter the constitution in a way his rivals said would make it easier for him to get re-elected in February.

Senegal has earned a reputation as west Africa's most stable and democratic country but there has been increasing public frustration over backsliding public services – particularly in power generation – since Wade took power in 2000.

Senelec's chief executive, Seydina Kane, flanked by two ministers, said on national television on Tuesday that fuel shortages had caused the problems and the firm was working to get the situation back to normal by the end of the year.

"It is a difficult situation. Senelec would like to present its apologies to the entire population," Kane said. The company has been unable to keep up with electricity demand for years and a source at the firm said it was currently facing a "huge shortage of fuel".

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: U2 PROTEST VIOLENTLY STOPPED BY SECURITY AT

Title: U2 PROTEST VIOLENTLY STOPPED BY SECURITY AT Description: GLASTONBURY 2011 [Vd]

TheUnhivedMind - June 28, 2011 02:18 AM (GMT)

U2 PROTEST VIOLENTLY STOPPED BY SECURITY AT GLASTONBURY 2011

[dohtml]<object style="height: 390px; width: 640px"><param name="movie" value="http://www.youtube.com/v/qdDNwh66axE?version=3"><param name="allowFullScreen" value="true"><param name="allowScriptAccess" value="always"><embed src="http://www.youtube.com/v/qdDNwh66axE?version=3" type="application/x-shockwave-flash" allowfullscreen="true" allowScriptAccess="always" width="640" height="390"></object>[/dohtml]

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: France urges UN Security Council to speak out on Title: France urges UN Security Council to speak out on Description: Syria

TheUnhivedMind - June 26, 2011 01:04 AM (GMT)

France urges UN Security Council to speak out on Syria

Jun 21, 2011
http://www.straitstimes.com/BreakingNews/W...ory_682293.html

PARIS - FRANCE'S prime minister on Tuesday urged the United Nations to speak out against Syria's deadly crackdown on protests by security forces that has cost hundreds of lives.

'The UN Security Council cannot remain silent for much longer,' Francois Fillon said during a joint press conference with his Russian counterpart Vladmir Putin.

'The time has come when everyone will have to face up to their responsibilities,' he said.

Western governments have been circulating a draft UN Security Council resolution that would condemn Syrian President Bashar al-Assad's crackdown but Russia has warned it would veto any such move. -- AFP

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: Protesters found in Wimbledon queue

Title: Protesters found in Wimbledon queue

TheUnhivedMind - June 25, 2011 04:58 PM (GMT)

Protesters found in Wimbledon queue

25 Jun 2011
http://www.thisislondon.co.uk/standard/art...bledon-queue.do

Wimbledon officials have beefed up security after a little-known protest group tried to stage a demonstration within the ground.

Democracy campaigners 15M London - which has a movement in Spain, where it originated - attempted to smuggle banners and tins of paint inside SW19, where it was feared they would target a high-profile match.

The 14 protesters, all Spanish and wearing yellow T-shirts, sent the grounds into lockdown with a Metropolitan Police helicopter monitoring the massive queue. It was feared the group would target world number one Rafael Nadal who was playing on Court One.

Thousands of fans - who had already queued throughout the night in the hope of seeing some of the top stars play - were delayed as bosses closed the gates for an extra 45 minutes.

Ian Ritchie, chief executive of the All England Lawn and Tennis Club, said it was not known if the 125th championships would be targeted again but security had been increased.

He said: "We put a particular message out looking at strengthening the presence on the court. We have service stewards from the armed forces - we have 650 of them.

"They are hugely equipped to deal with the situation as well as the G4S security. For all we know, we have to be prepared for people coming back in on Monday."

A police spokesman said: "At approximately 10.30am today a number of people were stopped in the queue at the tennis for Wimbledon and items were also found near to this group, believed to be for use in a demonstration or publicity stunt.

"The police informed the All England Lawn Tennis Club which delayed the opening of the gates where additional searches took place. A number of individuals are not being allowed access to the tennis following the searches. No arrests were made."

15M London put a message on its website saying: "Important: don't go to Wimbledon - mission aborted." The activists describe themselves as "a movement of outraged citizens" fighting for people rather than economic powers.

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: Forecast: Spain's protests to 'go global'

Title: Forecast: Spain's protests to 'go global'

TheUnhivedMind - May 31, 2011 04:05 AM (GMT)

Forecast: Spain's protests to 'go global'

Published: May 27, 2011 at 4:35 PM
http://www.upi.com/Top_News/US/2011/05/27/...0/?spt=mps&or=4

KINGSTON, N.Y., May 27 (UPI) -- Growing unrest in Spain will spread throughout Europe this summer and "go global" by winter, a U.S. trends forecaster said in an interview posted Friday.

"Young people have wised up. They know the score," Trends Research Institute Director Gerald Celente told King World News. "Those are the people that are ahead of all of these revolutions."

Inspired by the revolutionary wave of demonstrations and protests taking place in the Middle East and North Africa, tens of thousands of young Spaniards, expressing distress over 45 percent youth unemployment and severe government-imposed austerity measures, have taken over central squares in 60 cities -- including Madrid's busy Puerta del Sol -- seeking to overhaul Spain's socioeconomic and political systems, which they allege favor special interests, especially financial institutions.

Like the so-called Arab Spring, the growing Spanish movements are spread via social media networks and led in the streets by the young.

And "they're not leaving the streets," Celente told King World News, because "when you lose everything and have nothing left to lose, you lose it."

"These revolutions are going to spread through the summer in Europe, and by the winter it's going to go global," he said.

A French youth-led group plans a large demonstration in Paris this weekend in solidarity with Spain's protesters, known as "los indignados," or "the outraged." The French protest would follow Friday's close of the Group of Eight summit of world leaders, including U.S. President Barack Obama, in the French seaside resort town of Deauville.

Another Spanish-style uprising could emerge in neighboring Portugal next week, ahead of a June 5 snap election, The New York Times said.

Celente said Europe's Internet-savvy youth are "getting everyone out to join them because they know now that if they don't fight against the machine, the machine is going to grind them up."

TheUnhivedMind - June 20, 2011 04:46 PM (GMT)

Mass protests in Spain blame politicians and banks for economic crisis

The protests centered in Madrid and Barcelona

19.06.2011
http://www.dw-world.de/dw/article/0,,15173205,00.html

Mass demonstrations gripped Spain on Sunday with protesters descending on Madrid and Barcelona to blame politicians and banks for the nation's economic woes. Spain continues to suffer from crushing unemployment.

More than 100,000 protesters took to the streets in cities across Spain on Sunday, accusing politicians and bankers of implementing economic policies that led to the highest unemployment rate in the eurozone.

In Spain's capital, Madrid, protesters converged near the parliament building where 500 police were deployed to maintain security. The police estimated that between 35,000 and 45,000 people joined the demonstrations with no reports of violence.

"I'm here because this is a con," Juanjo Montiel, a 26 year old who works in information technology, told the news agency Reuters.

"I'm lucky enough to have a job, but many don't and have no chance. And on top of that, the politicians want to make more cuts. This not our fault, it's the system."

In Barcelona, Spain's second largest city, 50,000 people turned out to protest while groups of several thousand demonstrators took to the streets in other cities.

The protests focused on the "Euro Pact," an agreement among eurozone politicians to stimulate competitiveness. In order to comply with the pact, Spain has implemented reforms that give companies greater power to hire and fire employees.

Spain currently suffers from 21 percent unemployment across the board and more than 40 percent unemployment among those less than 25 years old.

Zapatero's Socialists suffered losses during May elections

Indignant

The protest movement, called the "indignant," began on May 15 prior to regional and local elections. Those elections saw Spain's ruling Socialists, led by Prime Minister Jose Luis Rodriguez Zapatero, suffer major losses largely attributed to the country's stubborn economic crisis.

Since its founding in May, the protest movement has fanned out across Spain with protesters on Sunday reading a manifesto calling for a general strike and for a revolution.

"The capitalist system does not work, it only benefits a few and harms the majority," a young female protester told the news agency dpa.

Political leaders in Spain have implemented controversial austerity measures to avoid the debt crisis that has gripped Ireland, Portugal and Spain.

"The banks and the governments that caused this situation must know that we do not agree with the measures and the budget cuts, that we intend to be heard," the "indignant" movement said when calling for nationwide protests.

Many of those who participated in Sunday's protests hope the size of the demonstrations will force the government to listen to their demands.

"The politicians have to come here and see this," Paloma Cirujano, a nurse in Madrid, told the news agency Reuters.

"This (movement) has to come to something. It won't just end here."

Author: Spencer Kimball (Reuters, AFP, dpa)
Editor: Mark Rossman

TheUnhivedMind - June 21, 2011 02:38 AM (GMT)

Bashing the bankers Madrid-style: Thousands take to Spain's streets in protest against public spending cuts

'Indignants' lash out at those behind the country's financial crisis

Last updated at 11:53 AM on 20th June 2011
http://www.dailymail.co.uk/news/article-20...ets-Madrid.html

Tens of thousands of protesters have flooded the streets of Madrid blaming bankers and politicians for causing a financial crisis that forced the country to adopt painful spending cuts.

Demonstrators of all ages linked to a protest movement called the 'indignants' assembled early on Sunday in several neighbourhoods on the outskirts of Madrid.

They then formed six columns and converged on the city centre, gathering near Spain's parliament where they met various forms of police resistance, including 12 vans blocking several major roads.

Protests over the economic crisis and soaring unemployment began in Madrid on May 15 and fanned out nationwide as word spread by Twitter and Facebook among demonstrators.

The protesters insisted that workers and the unemployed would not passively accept spending cuts to help ease a crisis they had no role in causing.

'The banks and the governments that caused this situation must know that we do not agree with the measures and the budget cuts, that we intend to be heard', the 'indignants' movement said in its call for nationwide protests.

The El-Mundo newspaper, quoting police sources, estimated the number of demonstrators on Sunday at between 35,000 and 40,000.

In a procession on the main Castellana avenue that crosses Madrid from north to south, at least 3,000 people marched towards parliament, including the young, the retired, the unemployed and parents pushing babies in their strollers.

'They call this democracy, but it's not,' shouted the crowd gathered at parliament, watched closely by police.

'We are not property in the hands of politicians and bankers,' read a banner written in bold red letters.

Yolanda Garcia, a 36-year-old woman who said she works a series of low-paying jobs and struggles to pay her bills, insisted that politicians "do nothing" to help people like her.

'I think that the (protest) movement could change things if it continues,' she said, adding that the demonstrators have the support of Spain's most disadvantaged.

Similar demonstrations took place in Barcelona and Valencia.

Protests in city squares across Spain against welfare cuts, corruption and a jobless rate of 21 percent in the first quarter of 2011 -- the highest in the industrialised world -- have run across the country for weeks.

The demonstrations peaked ahead of May 22 local election, when tens of thousands of people packed into squares in several towns and cities.

The protesters had also set a camp in Madrid's Puerta del Sol square, which was dismantled on June 12 although the group said that did not signal the end of their movement.

The 'indignants' have inspired similar offshoot movements in other European cities, notably Greece, where the government is also trying to implement a strict austerity programme to avoid defaulting on its loans.

The Spanish central bank said last weak the recovery in Spain's beleaguered economy would likely remain slow, with unemployment expected to remain high for the foreseeable future.

TheUnhivedMind - June 21, 2011 02:39 AM (GMT)

© Reuters

© Reuters

© Reuters

EUROPE FOR ITS PEOPLE
© Reuters

TheUnhivedMind - June 23, 2011 02:53 AM (GMT)

http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=JRPTiJi4CUk

[dohtml]<object width="640" height="390"><param name="movie" value="http://www.youtube.com/v/JRPTiJi4CUk&hl=en_US&feature=player_embedded&version=3"></param><param name="allowFullScreen" value="true"></param><param name="allowScriptAccess" value="always"></param><embed src="http://www.youtube.com/v/JRPTiJi4CUk&hl=en_US&feature=player_embedded&version=3" type="application/x-shockwave-flash" allowfullscreen="true" allowScriptAccess="always" width="640" height="390"></embed></object>[/dohtml]

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: DEFEND THE RIGHT TO PROTEST JUNE 2011 [Vd]

Title: DEFEND THE RIGHT TO PROTEST JUNE 2011 [Vd]

TheUnhivedMind - June 22, 2011 03:01 AM (GMT)

DEFEND THE RIGHT TO PROTEST JUNE 2011

http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=j5xs6nuBLXY

[dohtml]<object style="height: 390px; width: 640px"><param name="movie" value="http://www.youtube.com/v/j5xs6nuBLXY?version=3"><param name="allowFullScreen" value="true"><param name="allowScriptAccess" value="always"><embed src="http://www.youtube.com/v/j5xs6nuBLXY?version=3" type="application/x-shockwave-flash" allowfullscreen="true" allowScriptAccess="always" width="640" height="390"></object>[/dohtml]

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: The CIA’s Fake “Arab Spring” Becoming A Long, Hot

Title: The CIA’s Fake “Arab Spring” Becoming A Long, Hot Description: Summer of War

TheUnhivedMind - June 22, 2011 12:23 AM (GMT)

The CIA’s Fake “Arab Spring” Becoming A Long, Hot Summer Of War

Obama Regime Courts World Conflagration: Imperial Overstretch Threatens as US, NATO Wage Five Wars: Afghanistan, Iraq, Pakistan, Libya, and Yemen – Are Syria, Iran, Lebanon Next?

Webster G. Tarpley, Ph.D.
TARPLEY.net
June 20, 2011
http://tarpley.net/2011/06/20/cia-fake-ara...-summer-of-war/

Washington DC, June 20- With the previously covert US bombing of Yemen out in the open, the Obama administration is now waging illegal wars against at least five countries – Afghanistan, Iraq, Pakistan, Libya, and Yemen. Given Obama’s absurd and Orwellian theory that acts of war from the air in the sea do not constitute hostilities under the terms of the War Powers Act, this list may be incomplete, and stealth US attacks may be going on elsewhere as well. As spring turns into summer along the banks of the Potomac, there are signs that Obama’s next move may be a trifecta of aggression – an attack on Syria which would also embroil the US in war with Iran and with the Hezbollah forces of Lebanon. Or, the Obama rampage may strike Pakistan. The “Arab Spring” of color revolutions, military coups, and destabilizations is moving inexorably towards a possible world conflagration whose outlines are already visible.

According to military sources speaking on the Alex Jones radio program on June 15, US Special Forces units based at Fort Hood, Texas, have been told to prepare for deployment to Libya no later than July. Also on alert, reportedly for September or October, are the heavy armored units of the First Cavalry Division, currently located in Iraq and Afghanistan, along with other components of the US III Corps at various US bases. Observers point out that US Special Forces have been in Libya since February at the latest. They also note that, while the Libyan destination is highly plausible, some of these units may also find themselves on the way to Yemen, Syria, Iran, or beyond. At the same time, the Russian Foreign Ministry was denouncing the presence of the US Aegis cruiser Monterrey in the Black Sea. The amphibious assault ship USS Bataan and its task force are presently off the coast of Syria. One very plausible explanation for these deployments might be that a US attack on Syria, under the pretext of protecting civilians, is imminent.

On June 19, CNN reported1 a large-scale US Navy, Air Force, and Marine Corps military drill, the biggest of its type in history, along much of the American Atlantic coast under the code name of Exercise Mailed Fist, to be conducted from June 19-24. "The exercise is designed to test the capability of every type of Marine Corps aircraft, including MV-22 Ospreys and F/A 18 Hornets, as well as some Navy ships and Air Force planes," CNN reported. This drill appears designed to train for amphibious landings on the coast of the Mediterranean, as in Libya or Syria.
June-July Turning Point, as in 1848

The US-UK putsch wave of 2011 continues to exhibit similarities to an earlier historical model, the insurrections of 1848 in Europe. The 1848 events started with a revolt in Sicily (not far from Tunisia), and forced the ouster of King Louis Philippe of France in February and of the powerful Austrian Chancellor, Prince Metternich, in March. These insurrections drew on the pent-up tensions accumulated over decades under the post-1815 Holy Alliance system, but they were by and large detonated by the networks of Italian ultra-nationalist firebrand Giuseppe Mazzini, an agent of the British Admiralty. Tides of unrest swept through central Europe.

The turning point came in June-July 1848. When a Czech nationalist insurrection broke out in Prague, it was crushed by the Austrian army of Gen. Windischgrätz after June 12. An attempted coup by the radical working class and city mob of Paris, organized in Louis Blanc's National Workshops, was defeated by the reactionary Gen. Cavaignac in the June Days – June 24-26, 1848. In northern Italy, the army of the Italian Kingdom of Sardinia – which had declared war2 on Vienna in support of a rebellion in Milan and with the hope of using the upheaval to drive the Austrians out of Italy and thus achieve national unity – was defeated on July 25 by Marshal Radetsky at Custozza. In September and October, Hungarian nationalist radicals under the Mazzini disciple Kossuth set off a civil war with the Croatians, leading to social chaos and (as R. R. Palmer put it), "the war of all against all." Somewhat later, Russian troops were invited in to put down the Hungarian rebellion. There was a renewed flare-up of insurrectionary activity in the spring of 1849, notably with the creation of Mazzini's Roman Republic, before the insurrectionary movements subsided during the late summer of 1849, and gave way to a phase of oppression, cynicism, and reaction. It may be useful to keep this time frame in mind as a rough guide to evaluating events today, while of course bearing in mind no mechanistic or cyclical repetition should be anticipated.

Ahmadinejad of Iran to Obama: Only the US Mask Has Changed, Hands Off Syria

On June 8, President Ahmadinejad of Iran warned the US-NATO bloc not to assail Syria: "Syria is a pioneer of resistance. The Syrian government and nation can settle their issues and there is no need for the interference of others," Ahmadinejad said. He cautioned certain US-led countries in the region to "stop interfering in Syria's affairs," and added that Washington will turn against these states immediately after it achieves its objectives in Syria.3 These warnings may be addressed to Jordan, the Iraqi Kurds, or Turkey, whose territories may have been used by CIA/MI-6 networks to smuggle weapons and commandos into Syria to help constitute the armed gangs of the Moslem Brotherhood which have killed 400 Syrian military and security forces so far. "The Americans want to gain popularity among the regional nations through the implementation of this plan and portray themselves as the upholder of people's rights," Ahmadinejad went on, and noted that while a new regime took power in the U.S. in 2009, the nature of the ruling system has not changed: "Only the masks have changed. Campaign against terrorism was the mask of the previous U.S. administration, but the mask of the current administration is supporting human rights."4 More recently, the Iranian Foreign Ministry and leading Iranian generals have issued stern warnings against any aggression at the expense of Syria, which they evidently would regard as casus belli. Increased attacks on US forces by Shiite militias in Iraq in recent weeks may be a token of Tehran's alarm over the possible loss of its main ally.
"Gay Girl in Damascus" a US Hoax – Like So Many Reports on Syria and Libya?

On June 14, US Secretary of State Hillary Clinton issued an unusual dual condemnation of both Damascus and Tehran, repeating the US line that Iran is assisting in the repression of Syrian protests. "Today in Syria, Iran is supporting the Assad regime's vicious assaults on peaceful protesters and military actions against its own cities," said Clinton. Back in the real world, suspicions were growing up that much media reporting concerning events in Syria represented pure fiction in the tradition of the Kuwait incubator babies and Jessica Lynch: the much-touted "Gay Girl in Damascus" blog, which had been cited as a primary source of information about Syria by mainstream news media across the western world, was exposed as a total hoax. This hoax was the handiwork of Tom McMaster, a 40-year-old American man, and his wife Britta Froelicher, an activist with the American Friends Service Committee, an organization linked to the US intelligence community since the Cold War. How many of the films, photos, and interviews broadcast and posted about supposed war crimes in Libya, Syria, and other countries have also been invented out of whole cloth by this CIA cottage industry of disinformation and black propaganda? How much of the social media hype associated with the "Arab Spring" derives from the trolls at US Cyber Command?
Egypt's Asterisk Revolution: Run by Samantha Power and McFaul From the White House

The "Gay Girl in Damascus" stunt may be seen in retrospect as a microcosm of the entire "Arab Spring": a cynical manipulation of idealistic (or nihilistic) young dupes under the aegis of US-designed color revolutions and people power coups, playing these affluent computer-oriented young people against the fragile structures of the modern state under conditions of world economic depression. But even so, the activities of the golden youth in the public squares have been largely a media spectacle, a diversion, a smokescreen. Street demonstrations do not amount to a struggle for power. The overthrow of governments has been accomplished behind the scenes by generals and government officials who have been bribed, blackmailed, and otherwise subverted into mounting putsches sponsored by CIA/MI-6/DGSE. In Tunisia this worked well, with Ben Ali fleeing the country when the general staff made clear that they had turned against him. In Egypt, the procedure finally ousted Mubarak, but with much greater difficulty. US assets like Tantawi and Enan proved unable to drive out the Rais until the Obama White House made some heavy-duty threats of direct US action, the exact nature of which has yet to be determined, but which may have involved the menace of US action against the Suez Canal.

As US Egyptian asset Saad Eddin Ibrahim told Lally Weymoth of the Washington Post: "The Egyptian chief of staff [Tantawi] on orders from the White House was escalating the pressure. President Obama's advisers, who are good friends — Samantha Power and Michael McFaul — asked me to come [to Washington]. They relied on me as a source. .•.•. After Mubarak's second speech, Obama became convinced [that Mubarak had to go]."5 Nationalist colonels in the Egyptian Army may be interested to know that their supreme commander, now the virtual dictator of Egypt, acted on orders from the likes of McFaul and Power, who control the "democratic" opposition as well.

In Libya, the color revolution has worked far less well, as armed al Qaeda gangs have been unable to conquer the loyalist stronghold of Tripoli, and are also having trouble subduing loyalists in the Benghazi-Darna-Tobruk corridor. In Syria, the color revolution model has not worked at all, since the middle class is not interested in undergoing a total Iraq-style bloodbath and Moslem Brotherhood reign of terror for the sake of some vapid slogans about democracy. In Algeria, where the population has immediate experience of the nightmarish slaughter wrought by the Groupe Islamique Armé (GIA) a few years back, no appetite whatever for new adventures has been observed. Al Jazeera has now shifted target to destabilize Morocco, and we will see how that turns out. The destabilization of Jordan has gone nowhere.

An attack on Syria could come soon. "It has gotten to the point where Qaddafi's behavior and Assad's behavior are indistinguishable," commented warmonger GOP Senator Lindsey Graham of South Carolina, who noted "You need to put on the table all options, including a model like we have in Libya."6 This meant a much wider war.
Yemen: Government of Wounded President Saleh Crumbles, US Drone Strikes Begin

Yemen's President Saleh was seriously wounded on June 3 when rockets allegedly fired by insurgent tribesmen struck his palace. Saleh was flown to Saudi Arabia the next day for emergency treatment. While Saleh's relatives and allies tried to hold onto power, the Pentagon exploited the resulting power vacuum to begin large-scale Predator drone attacks in the country. It was revealed that the US Joint Special Operations Command (JSOC) and the CIA were operating out of a headquarters in Sanaa, and that the CIA would soon begin a wide-ranging program of Predator drone assassinations outside of any rules of military engagement. There were also reports that the US was building a large Predator drone base for operations in Yemen. In the meantime, Islamic militants of the Ansar al-Sharia group, equated by the US media to "al Qaeda," seized parts of a provincial capital in southern Yemen. It should be remembered that the two leading spokesman for "Al Qaeda in the Arabian Peninsula" ("AQAP") are US citizen Anwar Awlaki and Guantanamo alumnus al-Shiri, both obvious US double agents. The purpose of the entire Yemen destabilization is to open an avenue of attack against Saudi Arabia, Yemen's immediate neighbor.
US Strike Against Pakistan Nukes On Front Burner

On June 17, Pakistan said "NATO aircraft attacked one of its military posts in the northwest near the Afghan border and it had expressed its serious concern to the U.S. embassy in Islamabad…. The Pakistani Foreign Ministry said NATO aircraft intruded around 2.5 km (1.5 miles) inside Pakistani territory" to make the attack.7 These probes by NATO aggressors along Pakistan's border are now a frequent occurrence, and threaten to break out in an open, shooting war – all the more so since any one of these raids could represent a US attempt to cripple Pakistan's nuclear deterrent with a conventional first strike below the nuclear threshold. Afghanistan President Karzai has officially announced that peace talks with State Department participation are now going on with Mullah Omar and others leaders of the Afghan Taliban. These talks have nothing to do with peace; they rather represent a US attempt to recruit the Afghan and other Taliban and Pushtuns generally as kamikaze puppets to be launched against Pakistan in military attacks.

Certain parts of the US media – particularly the ones addressed to policy elites — have mounted a sustained campaign of demonization against Pakistan. Here are some recent samples of top front-page headlines from the Washington Post:

May 28: "Infiltrators worry Pakistani military; 'We are under attack'; US unsure of army's commitment to purging ranks"
May 30: "In Afghan war, Haqqani group is 'resilient' foe; Operations based in Pakistan; Network is seen as least reconcilable insurgent faction"
June 11: "Thwarted raids add to tension with Pakistan; US shared intelligence; Bomb-making sites were later found vacant"
June 16: "Pakistan Relations Reach a new low; security ties fraying; Anti-US sentiment in Pakistani army on rise"

Iran's Ahmadinejad was also taking seriously the spate of media reports about a coming US attack on Pakistan's nuclear forces. "We have precise information that America wants to sabotage Pakistan's nuclear facilities in order to control Pakistan and to weaken the government and the people of Pakistan," he said on June 6. The U.S. is also seeking to "use the United Nations Security Council and some other international organizations as a lever to pave the way for its increased presence in Pakistan with the aim of undermining Pakistan's national sovereignty," said the Iranian President.8 The Pakistani government has requested that Iran share with them the detailed intelligence that was the basis for this report.

The Pakistan nukes scenario was the centerpiece of a widely noticed study entitled "Terrorist Tactics in Pakistan Threaten Nuclear Weapons Safety," by British academic Shaun Gregory, published on June 1 in the CTC Sentinel, the house organ of the Combating Terrorism Center of the US Military Academy at West Point, NY. Gregory's thesis is that Pakistan, now equipped with over 100 nuclear weapons, will not be able to defend all of them against a determined terrorist attack. He estimates that some 70,000 Pakistanis are now involved in the nation's nuclear program, and that terrorists would inevitably be able to infiltrate and subvert some of this personnel, including by recruiting rogue commanders of the tactical or battlefield nuclear weapons which Pakistan is currently deploying to guard against an attack by India. Gregory also asserts that it would be enough for terrorists to get possession of fissile materials that would allow the construction of a dirty bomb. Even a failed attack on a nuclear site would cause world hysteria: "The successful location and penetration of such a site by terrorists, even if they were ultimately unsuccessful in accessing nuclear assets, would itself be a transformative event both in terms of the U.S.-Pakistani nuclear relationship and in terms of international anxiety about the security of Pakistan's nuclear weapons," writes Gregory.9

Reuters commented: "It's a nightmare scenario: al Qaeda militants gain control of a Pakistani nuclear weapon, either through a base assault, theft or a rogue commander's cooperation, possibly in the event of hostilities with nuclear-armed neighbor India.10 The Pakistanis were on full alert: "We know that the ultimate objective of the United States here is not to get a piece of land but to target our nuclear facilities…." said a Pakistani source quoted by Ansar Abbasi in News International on June 9.

US Joint Chiefs of Staff head Admiral Mike Mullen confirmed that this is indeed what the Pentagon has in mind, saying of Pakistan: "It's a country with an awful lot of terrorists on that border… Things that I fear in the future, it's the proliferation of that [nuclear] technology, and it's the opportunity and the potential that it could fall into the hands of terrorists, many of whom are alive and well and seek that in that region."

As if to provide a suitable pretext for such an attack, the US media has been trumpeting the alleged selection of notorious MI-6 asset Ayman al-Zawahiri as Bin Laden's successor as top dog of "al Qaeda." Zawahiri has allegedly sworn to avenge the death of Bin Laden, meaning that the door to new false flag terror events is wide open. This coverage was accompanied by the assurance that Zawahiri's home base was nowhere else but Pakistan. Mullen immediately proclaimed that Zawahiri would soon meet the same fate as his predecessor, meaning that the US is determined to carry out more unilateral attacks on Pakistani territory, despite the virtual certainty that these will meet with Pakistani countermeasures. Pakistan's Federal Interior Minister Rehman Malik "has said that a foreign hand is involved in terror incidents in Pakistan," and called for national unity against terrorists in "the fight for our survival."11

The other main US goal is to block the creation of the Pakistan energy corridor, the fabled Pipelinestan. These projects involve oil and gas pipelines from Iran to China and India, all crossing through Pakistan. The US and UK are determined to block such peaceful infrastructure development, which would give all these countries a rational common economic interest. One key part of the Pakistan energy corridor has been halted; on June, IANS reported that "the proposed Pakistan-Iran gas pipeline has run into delays as Islamabad has failed to raise the necessary funds…. Pakistani officials have told their Iranian counterparts that the pipeline was unlikely to be completed by the scheduled deadline of December 2014, the Urdu daily Jang reported. According to reliable sources, Pakistan has neither been able to raise the necessary $1.24 billion funding nor plan out the proposed route for the pipeline within its territory."12

An Anti-US Coup d'État by Nationalist Colonels in Islamabad?

On June 15, the New York Times and Washington Post both published front-page articles highlighting the rapid growth of anti-American resentment in the Pakistani officer corps. The New York Times wrote that many military officers were so disgusted by the servility of army chief Kayani towards Washington that "a colonels' coup, while unlikely, was not out of the question," according to "a well-informed Pakistani who has seen the general in recent weeks, as well as an American military official involved with Pakistan for many years."13

The neocon National Review, genuinely alarmed by the prospect of a new generation of modernizing military officers in the great tradition of Colonel Nasser of Egypt, spun out some grim scenarios and asked, "would the outcome of a break between America and Pakistan be war–whether low-level or outright?"14 In reality, a regime of progressive colonels might provide a better outcome than Islamic fundamentalists not just for Pakistan, but also for Egypt.

Panetta's New Pearl Harbor of Virtual Flag Cyber-Attacks

Islamabad continues to enjoy support from China, which pledged a month ago to regard any attack on Pakistan as an attack on the Middle Kingdom itself. China has military options for retaliation, ranging from ICBMs to sensitive points like the Taiwan Straits, but these are less likely. China could also express displeasure by divesting some U.S. Treasury bonds. More likely might be operations in the cyber-realm. US sources allege that Lockheed Martin, the CIA, and other websites are under cyber assault, and some commentators have tried to pin this on China. CIA Director Panetta, now moving over to the Pentagon, told a Senate Committee, "The next Pearl Harbor we confront could very well be a cyber attack that cripples our power systems, our grid, our security systems, our financial systems, our governmental systems."15 Since no known cyber-attack has thus far been able to create such devastating effects, we may assume that Panetta is preparing the way for virtual flag terrorism, in which the US government would simply assert that some catastrophic event had been caused by a country it wishes to target. In a possibly related development, German attorney Thorsten van Geest is in court seeking a temporary restraining order against the Merkel government to shut down all anti-terror drills around at the June 26 opening of the World the Women's Soccer Championship in Berlin, citing the danger that these exercises might be flipped live.

Saudi Arabia Signals Break from Washington

Saudi Arabia is known to be seeking cooperation with Pakistan and with other countries as part of its attempted exit from the collapsing US empire. Prince Turki al-Faisal, a leading figure of the royal family, signaled Riyadh's broad-based rage against Washington with a June 7 op-ed warning Obama that "there will be disastrous consequences for U.S.-Saudi relations if the United States vetoes UN recognition of a Palestinian state." Turki concluded with a threat: "We Arabs used to say no to peace, and we got our comeuppance in 1967 [with a crushing military defeat] …. Now, it is the Israelis who are saying no. I'd hate to be around when they face their comeuppance."16 These blunt words, which reflect a Saudi hostility to the Obama regime that goes beyond the Palestinian issue to include the whole range of national strategy, has caused shock behind closed doors in official Washington.

The March visit of Saudi Prince Bandar to Pakistan is widely regarded as having sealed a defensive alliance between these two powers, which may be regarded (along with Egypt) as regional pillars of the US empire. Both are seeking to exit the empire. Pakistan is thought to have guaranteed the Saudis protection under Islamabad's nuclear umbrella, as well as a division or more of Pakistani troops to quell any color revolution or other destabilization the CIA might attempt. A possible signal of US rage over this cooperation came on May 16, when "motorcycle-riding assassins gunned down a Saudi diplomat in the Pakistani city of Karachi, four days after a grenade attack on the Saudi consulate there."17
NATO Facing Logistical Overstretch in Libya

Resistance by Colonel Qaddafi of Libya against the attacking US-NATO forces has exposed the grave logistical and political weakness of the supposedly omnipotent Western alliance. A US military source speaking on the Alex Jones broadcast reported that US stocks of depleted uranium (DU) munitions are currently very low. This may be the reality behind outgoing Defense Secretary Gates' complaint last week that NATO is running out of bombs in Libya, and similar remarks by French NATO General Stephane Abrial in Belgrade. The US still has some stocks, but how long would these last against Syria, Hezbollah, and Iran?

Obama is Impeachment Bait for Violating the War Powers Act

At a recent Republican presidential debate, candidates Bachman, Gingrich, and Cain hinted that the Libyan rebels include al Qaeda terrorists. Obama's arrogant and cynical management of the attack on Libya has raised the possibility of congressional action to cut off funds for the war. The Republican fanatics of the Tea Party are seeking to force the US government to default on Treasury securities payments as a way of destroying Social Security, Medicare, Medicaid, unemployment benefits, and other economic rights of the American people recognized under the New Deal. However, it is possible that the zombie bankers and hedge fund hyenas of Wall Street who fund and generally own the Republican Party will use threats and bribes to force these Tea Party extremists to knuckle under and increase the debt ceiling over the next month. That will leave the Tea Party fanatics in desperate need of an issue they can use to make a loud show of hostility to Obama to placate their extremist supporters, and that issue may be the aggression against Libya, which has become thoroughly unpopular despite Obama's attempts to conceal that it is going on.
Libya: A War Too Far, even for GOP

The House of Representatives has voted to demand that Obama seek congressional approval for his stealth Libya war. Democratic Congressman Dennis Kucinich and others are suing Obama in federal court to force him to get such approval. Speaker of the House John Boehner has warned Obama that, if he does not come to Congress for approval by June 20, he will be in violation of the War Powers Act. Senators like Lugar, Corker, and Webb have also called on Obama to get a congressional resolution to prosecute hostilities. It has also been revealed that Obama was told by lawyers from the Department of Justice and the Pentagon that the Libyan war was indeed covered by the War Powers Act, but that Obama chose to endorse legal opinions from White House and State Department lawyers telling him he did not need to get any go-ahead from Congress. Naturally, Obama's flagrant violation of the War Powers Act in Libya would make him subject to impeachment, and this possibility might become more likely if the US economy continues to deteriorate. Another approach would be for Congress to cut off the money for the Libyan aggression. Usually, such a move would be blocked with the argument that US troops would be left stranded in harm's way. But in this case, by Obama's own assurances, no US ground troops are officially involved (although they are already there nonetheless). Since Obama claims that only air and naval attacks are being mounted, it may prove easier to cut off the funding and end the illegal attacks on Libya.

As Chinese political scientist Kiyul Chung told RT on June 16, the world was at an historic crossroads, on the brink of deciding whether US and NATO military interventions on the Libyan model would subdue the entire world, or whether Russia, China, and other participants in the Shanghai Cooperation Organization would be able to create a worldwide movement to counterbalance the "unilateral, aggressive, and colonial" methods of the NATO bloc.

References

1 http://www.cnn.com/2011/US/06/17/marine.co...html?&hpt=hp_c2

2 King Carlo Alberto of Sardinia declared war on Austria on March 23, 1848. He was joined by a coalition which included the Grand Duchy of Tuscany, the Papal States under Pope Pius IX, and the Kingdom of the Two Sicilies. This marked the first transformation of the domestic insurrections of 1848 into cross-border wars. There is an eerie congruence between this event and the initiation of the NATO bombing of Libya on March 19, 2011.

3 Iran censures US interference in Syria, Press TV, June 8, 2011, at http://www.presstv.ir/detail/183696.html

4 http://www.tehrantimes.com/index_View.asp?code=242059

5 http://www.washingtonpost.com/opinions/in-...3M9G_print.html, emphasis added.

6 http://thehill.com/blogs/blog-briefing-roo...be-on-the-table

7 http://news.yahoo.com/s/nm/20110617/wl_nm/...stan_nato/print

8 http://www.tehrantimes.com/index_View.asp?code=242059

9 Shaun Gregory, "Terrorist Tactics in Pakistan Threaten Nuclear Weapons Safety," West Point CTC Sentinel, June 1, 2011, at http://www.ctc.usma.edu/posts/terrorist-ta...weapons-safety; see also http://www.globalsecuritynewswire.org/gsn/...10614_5737.php; Professor Shaun Gregory is Director of the Pakistan Security Research Unit at the University of Bradford, UK.

10 Reuters, June 1, 2011, at http://www.dawn.com/2011/06/01/how-pakista...eopardised.html

11 http://pakobserver.net/detailnews.asp?id=98524

12 http://in.finance.yahoo.com/news/Pakistan-...610859.html?x=0

13 http://www.nytimes.com/2011/06/16/world/as...istan.html?_r=1

14 Stanley Kurtz, "Anti-American Coup in Pakistan?," National Review, June 16, 2011, http://www.nationalreview.com/corner/26982...n-stanley-kurtz

15 http://www.huffingtonpost.com/2011/06/13/p...r_n_875889.html

16 http://www.washingtonpost.com/opinions/pal...OH_story_1.html

17 http://www.guardian.co.uk/world/2011/may/1...killed-pakistan

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: 'Flashmop' protest over Tesco cleaners' pay

Title: 'Flashmop' protest over Tesco cleaners' pay

TheUnhivedMind - June 21, 2011 11:55 PM (GMT)

'Flashmop' protest over Tesco cleaners' pay

Rob Parsons
21 Jun 2011
http://www.thisislondon.co.uk/standard/art...er-tesco-pay.do

A flash mob of 150 protesters invaded a Tesco store in west London as part of a campaign to force the supermarket giant to increase cleaners' wages.

The demonstrators from Citizens UK took mops into the superstore in West Cromwell Road and sang Beatles songs during a 10-minute protest as part of its Living Wage Campaign.

They are calling on Britain's biggest supermarket chain to pressure subcontractors who supply their cleaners into paying them a "living wage" of £8.30 an hour, the minimum needed to live a decent life.

Tesco last week announced that 230,000 employees will be paid at least £7 per hour, but campaigners say the staff who clean its stores remain on poverty pay, often less than £6 an hour.

Protester Paul Regan said: "Philip Clarke [Tesco CEO] should ensure that all his cleaners get enough money to be able to put food on the table. Nobody should have to work two to three jobs to afford the simple necessities of family life."

The demonstration passed off peacefully. Tesco says it does not have control over what its cleaners are paid as they are employed by another firm.

A spokeswoman said: "Our staff receive a market-leading pay and benefits package. In London this is significantly higher than the London Living Wage. We can only speak for what we pay our people, not what others pay theirs."

Last year, a series of articles in the Standard helped hundreds of cleaners at University College London win a living wage. After initially saying the university could not afford it, UCL provost Malcolm Grant - who has a £404,000 annual pay and benefits deal - changed tack and said: "UCL will now support the London living wage of £7.85 an hour."

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: School walkouts planned to coincide with public

Title: School walkouts planned to coincide with public Description: sector strikes

TheUnhivedMind - June 21, 2011 02:37 AM (GMT)

School walkouts planned to coincide with public sector strikes

Thousands of school and college students prepare to join public sector strikes against cuts on 30 June

Matthew Taylor
guardian.co.uk, Monday 20 June 2011 10.22 BST
http://www.guardian.co.uk/world/2011/jun/2...-sector-strikes

Thousands of school and college students are expected to stage walkouts this month as part of a growing wave of occupations and demonstrations planned to support the co-ordinated strike action organised by trade unions.

Students behind last year's demonstrations against cuts to post-16 education are mobilising in schools and further education colleges as part of a wider campaign to turn 30 June into a national day of action against the government's austerity programme.

The move follows the announcement this week by the direct action group UK Uncut that it would be joining picket lines and staging a "public spectacular" in London to coincide with the industrial action.

Michael Chessum from the National Campaign Against Fees and Cuts, one of the student groups behind last year's protests, said: "It was the student movement before Christmas that really kicked many of the major unions into action, and we'll be there again in force on 30 June. One of the successes of the student movement was that we abandoned passive, A-to-B marches in favour of direct action in the streets and on campuses. Mass strike action is the logical extension of that. We're not here to protest; we're here to actively resist."

More than 750,000 public sector workers from major unions including the Public and Commercial Services Union, the National Union of Teachers and the Association of Teachers and Lectures are expected to take part in this month's industrial action. The strike, which will be the largest in the UK for several years, is expected to bring schools, colleges, universities, courts, ports and jobcentres to a standstill, and comes as millions of staff face pay freezes, job losses and pension reforms.

Activists say the wider campaign of demonstrations, occupations and walkouts will build a broad coalition of people opposed to the government's programme of cuts and has been inspired, in part, by protests across Europe over recent months – particularly those in Spain and Greece.

As part of the preparations, anti-cuts groups have held a series of "J30 assemblies" across the country under the "generalise the strike" slogan, to plan events and mobilise support.

Over the next few weeks, assemblies will be held in Birmingham, London, Leeds, Newcastle, Norwich, Sheffield and Sunderland. Another group, Right to Work, says it has organised more than 40 events to coincide with the strikes.

One of the organisers of the J30 assemblies, Alex Long, said they had been strongly influenced by protests held in Spain last month. "We want to approach this whole 30 June strike day in a more general way, to use it as a general day of action against the cuts," he said.

In London, activists say they are planning a number of direct action campaigns on 30 June, with events in the City of London and Westminster, including Oxford Street. There is also a call to occupy Trafalgar Square and a Facebook page calling for people to join a "black bloc" protest (the black bloc being the group blamed for smashing up shops during the TUC demonstration in March).

Tens of thousands of students from further education colleges and schools took part in last year's demonstrations against the rise in tuition fees and the scrapping of the education maintenance allowance, and activists hope many will walk out of classes at the end of this month.

Campaigners have been leafleting colleges and schools, calling on students to hold meetings, make contact with teachers who are union reps and organise walkouts on the day.

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: Anti-China Protests Intensify

Title: Anti-China Protests Intensify

TheUnhivedMind - June 20, 2011 04:50 PM (GMT)

Anti-China Protests Intensify

Vietnamese continue demonstrations over a territorial spat with China.

2011-06-19
http://www.rfa.org/english/news/vietnam/sp...2011150046.html
Vietnamese continue demonstrations over a territorial spat with China.

Nguyen Thi Duong Ha ©, the wife of an imprisoned dissident lawyer, joins the anti-China protests.

Anti-China demonstrations in Vietnam intensified as several leading activists joined in on Sunday to defend Hanoi's claims to disputed territory in the South China Sea.

Over 100 people gathered near the Chinese Embassy in the Vietnamese capital for the third round of rallies in as many weeks.

Protesters carried slogans such as "Down with China!" and "The Spratlys and Paracels belong to Vietnam," referring to the island groups at the heart of a longstanding bilateral dispute.

Several prominent Vietnamese activists and intellectuals joined the demonstration, including Nguyen Quang A, founder of a think tank that was shut down, and Pham Hong Son, a pro-democracy activist.

Public demonstrations are rare in Vietnam and usually restricted by the government, but the authorities have allowed the anti-China protests to continue after two incidents in the past month involving clashes between Chinese and Vietnamese boats in the South China Sea.

Nguyen Thi Duong Ha, wife of an imprisoned dissident lawyer, told RFA while marching in Hanoi, “The authorities have not only allowed us to rally in Lenin Park, but they also do not do anything when we march along the street.“

The park under a statue of the Russian Communist revolutionary Lenin is across from the Chinese Embassy.

“When they do not beat the protesters, I think that the [government’s] policy appears to approve of the protesters,” she said.

“The onlookers also join in with us, so there are a number of people marching. They are very determined to protect Vietnam's islands,” she said.

Ha has been operating a law firm in Hanoi with her husband, Cu Huy Ha Vu, that took on cases that challenged the Communist Party. Vu was convicted earlier this year of conducting propaganda against the state.

'Indignant'

Protesters spoke up against what they considered Chinese incursions in the Spratly (in Chinese, Nansha) and Paracel (in Chinese, Changsha).

“I protest against China, and for me and other people the nation is first and foremost. I myself and those around me are very indignant with China's behavior; we want the government to show their attitude more clearly," Ha said.

Prominent dissident Pham Hong Son, a doctor imprisoned in 2002 for four years for publishing pro-democracy articles online, said he saw security forces trying to stop someone from filming the event.

"One of the particular point I saw at this third anti-China protest in Hanoi was that one cameraman filmed the event and a security officer wanted to hold him; however, luckily the people present at the scene joined in to intervene and the security officer had to release the cameraman.”

“The protesters showed that they are very disciplined; if the authorities support them, the protest would be more efficient," he said.

On June 13, Vietnam held four hours of live-fire drills in the South China Sea and on Friday, China announced that it had also held similar exercises.

Foreign involvement

Vietnam has welcomed foreign involvement to resolve the rival claims to the potentially resource-rich waters.

On Friday, American and Vietnamese officials met in Washington for an annual political, security, and defense dialogue and called for all territorial disputes in the South China Sea to be resolved through a “collaborative, diplomatic process without coercion or the use of force.”

They also called for freedom of navigation in the South China Sea, which encompasses an area from the Singapore and Malacca straits to the Strait of Taiwan.

Aside from China and Vietnam, the Philippines, Malaysia, Brunei and Taiwan all claim territories in the South China Sea.

Reported by RFA’s Vietnamese service. Translated by An Nguyen. Written in English by Rachel Vandenbrink.

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: China riot informers promised cash and residency

Title: China riot informers promised cash and residency Description: for tipoffs

TheUnhivedMind - June 20, 2011 03:42 PM (GMT)

China riot informers promised cash and residency for tipoffs

Authorities offer financial reward and honorary titles for information on migrant workers involved in Zengcheng clashes

guardian.co.uk, Monday 20 June 2011 11.31 BST
http://www.guardian.co.uk/world/2011/jun/2...sidency-tipoffs

Riot police in Zengcheng, China, block a road during clashes with migrant workers. Authorities are offering cash for information on the protests. Photograph: Reuters

Informers who help identify participants in a three-day riot by migrant factory workers in southern China could be rewarded with cash, honorary titles and a chance to gain official urban residency status, an official announcement has said.

The police notice, published on the website of the Zengcheng Daily newspaper, indicates authorities are having trouble tracking down those behind the violence that broke out 10 June, during which vehicles were torched, government offices ransacked and at least 25 people arrested.

Authorities are offering up to $1,500 (£900) in cash together with "outstanding migrant worker" titles and urban residency permits that allow better access to schools, subsidised housing, healthcare and other public services.

"The public security departments call on the broad masses of city residents not to be incited by people with ulterior motives, but to keenly struggle against criminal lawbreakers and actively reveal the identities of these criminal lawbreakers," said the notice.

It was not clear whether the offer has led to any useful information and calls to police as telephone numbers attached to the notice rang unanswered on Monday.

Yet it was a clear sign of the lack of trust between security forces and citizens at a time of growing unease over corruption, abuse of power and a worsening income divide.

The Zengcheng riot was sparked by a confrontation between security guards and a pair of migrant street vendors in Zengcheng's Xintang township. Tensions grew over the next two days as migrants from Sichuan province rushed to the area, triggering violent clashes on 12 June.

Migrant workers tend to perform the most dangerous and least desirable work in China and can be vulnerable to abuse and discrimination by authorities and residents.

Several apparently unrelated cases of unrest have erupted across China in recent weeks, some involving migrant workers. The government's response has been to meet them with overwhelming force.

Such stopgap measures will grow increasingly ineffective unless fundamental tensions between citizens and the communist government are addressed, said Liu Shanyin, who studies social unrest at the Chinese Academy of Social Sciences. "If these problems are not addressed, the government's legitimacy will come into question and political and criminal forces could get involved, leading to big trouble," Liu said.

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: China unrest as hundreds protest against Taizhou

Title: China unrest as hundreds protest against Taizhou
Description: land grabs

TheUnhivedMind - June 18, 2011 03:37 AM (GMT)

China unrest as hundreds protest against Taizhou land grabs

Riot police and locals clash in village after local government boss accused of stealing compensation payments

Associated Press
guardian.co.uk, Thursday 16 June 2011 10.53 BST
http://www.guardian.co.uk/world/2011/jun/1...a-riots-taizhou

Chinese security forces mobilised to suppress protests in eastern China, a monitoring group and eyewitnesses said on Thursday, in the latest bout of unrest gripping parts of the country.

The unrest in Taizhou, Zhejiang province, broke out on Tuesday after the head of a local village government confronted petrol station staff during talks over land compensation fees that the station's owner was due to pay villagers, the reports said.

Within hours, hundreds of fellow residents of Rishanfen village had surrounded the petrol station, blocked an adjacent airport expressway, and seized a man who had struck the village leader, according to the owner of a nearby factory, who witnessed the events.

Riot police clashed with villagers, said the factory owner, who spoke on condition of anonymity. Reinforcements arrived on Wednesday and officers detained about a dozen people, including the chief, other village officials and anyone found with images of the protest on their mobile phones, the man said.

Police and government officials in Taizhou were unavailable for comment.

As with many of the protests across China, the Taizhou incident appears rooted in disagreements over compensation for land seized for development.

The Hong Kong-based Information Center for Human Rights and Democracy said villagers squeezed by soaring inflation had been hoping for an increase in payments from businesses in the industrial park, including the gas station. The factory owner, however, said many believed that compensation offered by the petrol station had been embezzled by the former head of Rishanfen, now the local Communist party secretary – a much more powerful position.

The incident was the third large-scale outburst of unrest in recent days, mainly fuelled by anger over corruption.

Police arrested at least 25 people following weekend rioting in Xintang in the manufacturing powerhouse province of Guangdong. Security forces there clashed with migrant workers from the south-western province of Sichuan.

On Wednesday, a woman was arrested for spreading rumours of the death of a migrant blamed for fuelling the violence, local police said.

Last week, residents of Lichuan, in the central province of Hubei, laid siege to government offices following the death in custody of a local city council member. A number of local government officials have been fired or placed under investigation over the death in an attempt to assuage public anger.

Though the triggers for the events are different, most are driven by common resentments over social inequality, abuse of power and suppression of legitimate grievances.

The Communist party leadership has reacted nervously to the wave of protests, especially after popular uprisings began sweeping the Middle East and north Africa this year. In recent months, hundreds of government critics have been questioned, arrested or simply disappeared.

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: Prince Charles and Camilla visit Morocco amid Title: Prince Charles and Camilla visit Morocco amid Description: unrest

TheUnhivedMind - April 4, 2011 11:52 PM (GMT)

Prince Charles and Camilla visit Morocco amid unrest

4 Apr 2011
http://www.thisislondon.co.uk/standard/art...-amid-unrest.do

The Prince of Wales arrives in Morocco today as the North African nation reaches a historical crossroads following the Arab Uprisings.

Charles will be accompanied by the Duchess of Cornwall for the three-day tour which was planned before neighbouring regimes in the region began to topple.

Morocco has so far avoided persistent unrest but several people died in February during violence linked to protests.

Several thousand people took part in protests in Casablanca, Morocco's biggest city, yesterday.

Most were from the February 20 pro-reform movement, named after the date of the first nationwide protest this year, it was reported.
The demonstrators chanted "No to corruption" and "End social injustice".

Clarence House said Foreign Secretary William Hague had confirmed to the royal couple that the visit should go ahead.

Morocco's ruler, King Mohammed VI, remains popular among his 33 million subjects but has not been immune to demands for change.

He made a rare television appearance on March 9 announcing major constitutional reform.

The 47-year-old king, who appoints the prime minister and ministers, has formed a National Council to prepare the way for a move towards constitutional monarchy.

The council is expected to report back in the summer and will be followed by a referendum and elections next year.

Morocco is seen as a crossroads nation, straddling the Arab and African worlds and enjoying good ties with Europe.

Charles and Camilla's visit will focus on multi-faith issues, climate change and trade.

The couple will arrive in the country to a guard of honour and an official welcome from Mohammed's brother Prince Moulay Rachid.

They will see a display by the Moroccan parachute regiment before travelling into the capital, Rabat.

The prince, 62, will hold a private meeting with the king at the Royal Palace and later travel to Mohammed's private residence, the Palais Dar Essalam, where they will be joined by their wives for dinner.

Tomorrow, Camilla, 63, will visit a casbah and Charles will travel to an oasis to see how locals are tackling the loss of arable land to the encroaching desert.

They arrive in Morocco following last week's visits to Portugal and Spain where they were guest of honour at business receptions and events to meet British ex-pats.

TheUnhivedMind - June 18, 2011 12:42 AM (GMT)

Morocco's king bows to pressure and allows reform

Mohamed VI rewrites constitution and gives elected politicians greater power after biggest protests in decades

Giles Tremlett and Agencies in Rabat
The Guardian, Saturday 18 June 2011
http://www.guardian.co.uk/world/2011/jun/1...cco-king-reform

Morocco's king, Mohamed VI, has responded to the Arab spring by rewriting his country's constitution and giving greater power to elected politicians but leaving him with a firm grip on security, the army and religious matters.

The draft constitution, which will be put to referendum on 1 July, sees some power being shifted away from the Arab world's longest-serving dynasty and from the tight clique of palace officials who dominate Morocco.

Among other measures, the new constitution explicitly states that the king will now have to pick the country's prime minister from the party that wins elections to what, up until now, has been a largely rubber-stamp parliament.

While the government gains executive powers, the 47-year-old monarch has kept exclusive control over the military and over religion.

And analysts pointed out that while the prime minister would be in charge of domestic policy, he does so with the king's permission and with the monarch still able to pass his own decrees.

"He is sharing some executive powers with the PM [but] still retains significant ones," said the respected, if anonymous, Maghreb Blog on its Twitter feed. "The changes do nothing to his real discretionary, religious and military powers."

Mohamed VI presented the measuresto the country in a TV broadcast.

The king said the constitutional reform "confirms the features and mechanisms of the parliamentary nature of the Moroccan political system" and laid the basis for an "efficient, rational constitutional system whose core elements are the balance, independence and separation of powers, and whose foremost goal is the freedom and dignity of citizens.

After facing the biggest protests in decades, the king ordered a committee in March to draw up the new constitution after discussions with political parties, trade unions and NGOs.

Moroccans first took to the streets in February, but the country has not experienced the degree of violence seen elsewhere in Arab countries.

Officials claimed that respect for the king combined with a regime that is more liberal and less severely policed than elsewhere had helped prevent a Tunisian or Egyptian-style uprising.

But Moroccans are clearly fed up with rampant corruption which, according to US embassy cables released by WikiLeaks, stretches right into the heart of Mohamed VI's palace. Those cables show one former US ambassador to Rabat condemning "the appalling greed of those close to King Mohammed VI".

"Major institutions and processes of the Moroccan state are used by the palace to coerce and solicit bribes in the real estate sector," one senior Moroccan businessman complained to US diplomats

Corruption is also rampant in courts, business and health services, according to Transparency Maroc.

Many Moroccans would like to see their country enjoy the sort of economic growth that countries such as Tunisia or Turkey have had over the past two decades.

The king said a constitutional court would also be set up while "the draft constitution criminalises any interference, corruption or influence peddling with regard to the judiciary".

He said the constitution "criminalizes torture, enforced disappearance, arbitrary detention and all forms of discrimination and inhuman, degrading practices" while also upholding "freedom of the press and of expression and opinion." within unspecified legally enforcable boundaries.

The reforms will be closely monitored by Gulf Arab monarchies, which have so far dodged calls at home for reforms and fret that major change in Morocco might fuel further demands from reformists in their countries.

In Muslim Morocco the monarch is formally considered the nation's religious leader with the title of commander of the faithful.

But the new constitution will see his status changed slightly, with the term "sacred" disappearing but the monarch still remaining "inviolable", the king said.

The referendum date gives Moroccans – 44 % of whom are illiterate – just two weeks to find out about and debate the new constitution's contents.

Few commentators doubted, however, that it would be passed even though pro-democracy activists from the February 20 movement dismissed many of the changes as cosmetic.

After the speech ended, cars flying Moroccan flags drove through the streets of the capital Rabat honking their horns, with passengers cheering into the night and young people marched along the wide boulevards banging drums and cheering.

Najib Chawki, a February 20 activist, said the constitutional reform draft "does not respond to the essence of our demands which is establishing a parliamentary monarchy. We are basically moving from a de facto absolute monarchy to a constitutional monarchy".

Activists claimed that the reform programme initially introduced by King Mohamed, who brought in greater freedoms and improved women's rights when he inherited the throne 12 years ago, had effectively ground to a halt.

Activists on Twitter said that pro-government mobs had attacked at least one pro-democracy activist

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: Beijing battling protest fires on all fronts

Title: Beijing battling protest fires on all fronts

TheUnhivedMind - June 17, 2011 01:24 AM (GMT)

Beijing battling protest fires on all fronts

From: The Times June 15, 2011 12:00AM
http://www.theaustralian.com.au/news/world...o-1226075255343

Chinese migrant workers riot over discrimination, cost of living and wages in the southern city of Zengcheng. Travis Brecher reports.

AN eruption of protests throughout China has sent armoured vehicles into town centres, prompted an internet blackout by the government and left thousands across the country blogging about "crazy" violence on the streets.

The summer surge of protests, which flared in the southern industrial hub of Zengcheng over the weekend, has been linked to a range of frustrations with modern China - furies that have drawn the government into crackdowns on activism and massive increases in the domestic security budget.

More than 1000 migrant workers went on the rampage in Zengcheng after a pregnant street vendor in her 20s was roughed up by security guards. Such incidents, while distressing, are not uncommon. Witnesses said that the centre of town was bedlam, with smashed windows, blazing police vehicles and teargas explosions as rioters hurled missiles at an official building. One bank worker blogged that the Bank of China had ordered an immediate halt to all ATM transactions.

In central Hubei province armoured cars were used last week to quell a riot over the death of Ran Jianxin, an official who had led the fight against corruption in the town of Lichuan but died mysteriously in police custody.

The protests followed bomb attacks on government facilities in two other cities in the past three weeks, and ethnic unrest in the northern region of Inner Mongolia last month.

Although few see China as a likely arena for uprisings in the style of the Arab Spring, Beijing remains terrified that the fast-rising tally of localised protests could be linked via mobile social networking and Twitter-style websites.

Some Chinese academics believe that the true number of protests in the country last year was more than 180,000. After several big clashes in recent weeks the names of half a dozen big towns have been eradicated from the search engines of the country's most popular microblogging sites.

One of the "disappeared" cities, Dongguan, is the fourth-largest producer of exports in the country and has a population only slightly smaller than London's.

The recent violence, however, has exposed the limits of the government's ability to control the urban population using internet censorship what party leaders refer to as "social management".

Authorities have turned to displays of raw power, deploying paramilitary police and armoured vehicles in at least three cities in as many weeks to prevent violence from spiralling further as protesters have repeatedly directed their anger at government buildings, often ostentatious symbols of power. What connects the violence is the way a flashpoint - in Inner Mongolia, the death of a Mongol at the hands of a Han Chinese truck driver, and in southern China, the assault by security personnel on a pregnant migrant worker - sets off much wider conflagrations.

The disturbances could reflect badly on President Hu Jintao, who has tried to promote the concept of a "harmonious society" and who is due to retire as party chief next year.

"There's an increasing sense of frustration that (leaders) are unable to put out a consistent, unifying message, even within the party," said Kerry Brown, head of the Asia program at Chatham House, who met senior party officials last week. "Local officials are overreacting partly because of a lack of clear leadership at the top."

But the unrest is likely to strengthen the clout of Zhou Yongkang, who technically ranks ninth of nine on the Politburo Standing Committee but wields huge power as he oversees the police, intelligence agencies, prosecutors and courts.

Authorities have been careful to balance their use of force with conciliatory gestures, including the removal of some local officials. State media have also been reporting the unrest relatively quickly and openly, compared with previous years, in what some analysts see as an attempt by the government to take control of the narrative ahead of bloggers.

A Monday editorial in the Global Times, a tabloid linked to the Communist Party, warned against trying to connect the recent incidents of unrest and draw conclusions about China's social stability. "China is not a nation where public anger collectively seeks to topple the existing order. It is time to debunk this ludicrous lie," it said.

The Times

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: Canadian Civil Liberties Crushed by Police in Mass

Title: Canadian Civil Liberties Crushed by Police in Mass
Description: Tear Gas Attacks [Vd]

TheUnhivedMind - June 16, 2011 10:48 PM (GMT)

Canadian Civil Liberties Crushed by Police in Mass Tear Gas Attacks

I live in downtown Vancouver, Canada, the host city of tonight's Stanley Cup hockey final. Although I was expecting the drunken rowdiness and pockets of vandalism common in the downtown core after Vancouver's beloved hockey team loses, what I did not expect was the violent and oppressive intimidation of the city's police officers.

Although major news stations will cleverly show you otherwise, I can attest with my own two eyes that the widespread tear gas, beatings and intimidation tactics used by the Vancouver police were completely beyond what the isolated incidents of violence required. As a young female of small stature, I felt completely safe walking alone through the downtown core among the crowd. The vast majority of people were either heading home, socializing with friends, or simply enjoying the city on a beautiful night. Many people were with their families and young children. All of the sudden, without any prior warning or more peaceful attempts to disperse the crowds, SWAT teams arrived and began throwing tear gas bombs into unsuspecting crowds all over the city. I myself was tear gassed while watching the scene from my own balcony. People began running, panicking from fear and pain. Yet, the tear gas assaults continued for over an hour. I was gassed three times never further than a block from my own home.

I do not condone the pockets of violence and looting that occurred in my city tonight; on the contrary I believe those people should be punished. However, I believe the greater issue at stake is the fact that although the vast majority of people were innocent of any crime except for watching a hockey game downtown, everyone was physically assaulted and intimidated by the police tonight.

This is an infringement on thousands of people's civil liberties. Worse, NO mainstream news source to my knowledge has at all recognized this extremely important issue. In Canada and other Western countries, the civil liberties and human rights we take for granted are quietly being eroded by governments in the name of public safety. Such is the genesis of the USSR, North Korea, and other non-free states. Do not be complacent. If liberties can be taken away from other ordinary people, they can also be taken away from you. Nothing is sacred anymore unless we as individuals hold it to be.

UPDATE
Here is a video (well actually two videos put together) I took with my phone outside my home. Here is a "violent" crowd getting what they "deserve":

[dohtml]<embed width="485" height="385" quality="high" bgcolor="#000000" name="main" id="main" allowscriptaccess="always" allowfullscreen="true" src="http://video.godlikeproductions.com/modules/vPlayer/vPlayer.swf?f=http://video.godlikeproductions.com/modules/vPlayer/vPlayercfg.php?fid=808cc0f54787bf3230e" type="application/x-shockwave-flash"/></embed>[/dohtml]

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: Starving for protest in India

Title: Starving for protest in India
Description: [THEY LOVE DEPOPULATION SO DONT BOTHER]

TheUnhivedMind - June 16, 2011 05:51 PM (GMT)

Starving for protest in India

By Ammu Kannampilly (AFP)
June 16 2011
http://www.google.com/hostednews/afp/artic...83cbf53f748.2e1

NEW DELHI — The protest fast, used to historic effect by Mahatma Gandhi in his fight against British rule, has made a comeback in India among activists seeking to pressure the government on a host of issues.

A series of high-profile fasts -- mostly focusing on corruption -- have garnered national attention in recent months and posed a public relations challenge to the scandal-tainted coalition of Prime Minister Manmohan Singh.

But where Gandhi's fasts are still seen as models of principled, non-violent self-sacrifice, the modern-day versions have been criticised by some as publicity-seeking stunts that are also undemocratic.

In April, 73-year-old veteran activist Anna Hazare -- an ardent admirer of Gandhi -- launched what he said would be a fast to the death to demand greater civil participation in the drafting of anti-corruption legislation.

Mounting popular anger over graft, Hazare's frail resemblance to Gandhi and blanket media coverage supported by Twitter and Facebook campaigns lent the protest an unexpected momentum that took the authorities by surprise.

In the end, the government agreed to certain concessions and Hazare called off his fast after 98 hours.

Then in early June, India's most celebrated yoga guru, Baba Ramdev, embarked on a similar hunger strike to highlight the issue of "black money" -- illicit cash squirrelled away by officials in foreign bank accounts.

This time the government took a harder stance, sending in police with tear gas to clear Ramdev and his supporters from their camp in New Delhi -- an operation that was seen by many as desperate and heavy-handed.

Ramdev finally called off his strike last Sunday.

A day later, another Indian guru and social activist, Swami Nigamananda, died in the northern hilltown of Dehradun after a four-month fast to highlight corruption and rising pollution in the Ganges river.

Observers said the various fasts had caught a national mood, with public outrage over official corruption running at an historic high.

"Their rise is best explained by the falling credibility of the ruling political class," said Aroon Purie, editor-in-chief of Indian Today magazine.

"What matters is the message: India is erupting against corruption and those who are shielding the corrupt," Purie said.

Indian political analyst Parsa Venkateshwar Rao agreed that timing had helped Hazare and Ramdev become "very visible icons" of protest.

"They are very conspicuous dissidents, while political parties have been marginalised," Rao said.

"Hazare's main backing has come from the urban middle class, who are outraged by corruption and are all for taking up cudgels against it."

While public opinion in India is united behind the anti-corruption message, there are those who question the motives and tactics of the fasting messengers.

The Congress party, which leads the ruling coalition, spoke of the threat to democracy posed by "unelected tyrants", while others questioned whether Hazare's drive to have non-elected representatives on a law-drafting committee was constitutional.

Many are especially sceptical about Ramdev, a strict social conservative who claims he can "cure" homosexuality, cancer and AIDS through yoga and other alternative therapies.

Never one to shy away from publicity, Ramdev holds regular televised yoga sessions that draw millions of viewers.

"The desire to leave his ashram for the arc lights was entirely in character," prominent historian Ramachandra Guha said of the guru's anti-corruption fast.

"Ramdev occupies an important place in the history of publicity, rather than in the history of spirituality," Guha said.

An editorial in the financial daily Mint also argued that Ramdev was hard to take seriously.

"Leaving aside his concerns about black money -- ones that a majority of citizens would share -- nearly all his demands can be dismissed out of hand," the newspaper said.

"His lack of understanding of how the Indian political system works and the seriousness with which he is believed by a massive number of followers shows how dangerous such stunts are for democracy," it said.

Also unimpressed was Tushar Gandhi, the great-grandson of India's independence hero, who said Hazare and Ramdev were poor imitators.

"These are not Gandhian fasts, they are finger-pointing exercises," he told AFP.

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: Patrick Cockburn: Hopes for democracy fade as Title: Patrick Cockburn: Hopes for democracy fade as Description: civil wars grip the Arab world

TheUnhivedMind - June 13, 2011 03:43 AM (GMT)

Patrick Cockburn: Hopes for democracy fade as civil wars grip the Arab world

World View: The anti-regime demonstrations that worked so rapidly and unexpectedly in Tunisia and Egypt are faltering elsewhere as rulers fight to hold on to power

Sunday, 12 June 2011
http://www.independent.co.uk/opinion/comme...ld-2296452.html

The Arab awakening is turning into the Arab nightmare. Instead of ushering in democracy, the uprisings in at least three Arab states are fast becoming vicious civil wars. In the past 10 days, crucial developments in Syria, Libya and Yemen have set these countries spiralling into violent and intractable struggles for power.

In Syria, thousands of troops are assaulting the northern town of Jisr al-Shughour where the government claims 120 of its soldiers and police were killed last week. Leaving aside exactly how they died, the government in Damascus is making it lethally clear that in future its opponents, peaceful opponents or not, will be treated as if they were armed gunmen. An extraordinary aspect of the Syrian uprisings is that people go on demonstrating in their tens of thousands despite so many being shot down. But some are evidently coming to believe that their only alternative is to fight back.

A week ago in Yemen, the demonstrators, who have been marching and rallying in the streets of Sanaa since the start of the year, celebrated jubilantly on hearing the news that President Ali Abdullah Saleh had left the country for hospital in Saudi Arabia after being injured in a bomb attack. "The people, at last, have defeated the regime," the protesters chanted. But it is ludicrous to portray this as a triumph for peaceful protest, since the reason Saleh went to Riyadh was injuries inflicted by a bomb planted in the presidential compound. It is becoming depressingly clear that the Saleh regime is not as dependent on the presence of the president himself as many imagined. Other members of the Saleh clan are in command of well-armed and well-trained military units that remain in control of most of Yemen.

Related articles
Thousands flee Syria across Turkish border
Search the news archive for more stories

Even before what was clearly a well-planned assassination attempt against Saleh, the street protesters were looking marginalised. They were able to stay in "Change Square" only because traditional players, including powerful tribal and military leaders, had switched sides and were defending them.

Is Yemen on the way to permanent confrontation of the type that reduced Somalia to ruinous anarchy? In the past, Yemenis often argued that, while Yemeni politics was very divisive and violent, the ruling elite had a remarkable capacity to reach last-minute compromises. Maybe this was true, but the failure to evict the Saleh clan, even when its leader is out of the country, bodes ill and opens the way for a collapse of state authority.

Libya has also moved a long way from the democratic hopes of February. An important signal since the start of June has been the intervention of Nato attack helicopters, making the rebels more an auxiliary force in a foreign-run campaign. The deployment of the rebels is now largely decided by Nato, without whose air power the local anti-Gaddafi forces would long ago have been defeated. Most Libyans probably want Gaddafi to go, but the Transitional National Council in Benghazi may not have the legitimacy or the support to replace him. He is very likely to be displaced before the end of the year, but this will be a victory primarily won by Nato and not popular revolution.

A fourth country where the Arab awakening seemed to be on the verge of success is Bahrain. But since the Saudi-led intervention, and the assault on pro-democracy protesters and the Shia population as a whole since 15 March, this tiny kingdom has been convulsed by a civil war that rages just beneath the surface. The decision by Bahraini al-Khalifa royals to play the sectarian card and pretend the demand for democratic reform was a revolutionary plot orchestrated by Iran has won many believers among the Sunni. Quite why the family should have decided to declare war on most of the Arab population of Bahrain remains something of a mystery since this will make it permanently reliant on Saudi Arabia. Probably a sense of panic, at its height in March and induced by the fall of the regimes in Tunisia and Egypt, explains the intensity of the repression in Bahrain. A price for this will be permanently to deepen the bitter hostility between Shia and Sunni.

Probably one should not be so surprised by the faltering of the mass movements associated with the Arab Spring. The surprise is rather that they should have succeeded so easily in Tunisia and Egypt. After all, so-called "velvet revolutions" do not have a high success rate. They may have worked in Eastern Europe when communism was displaced 20 years ago, but the communist leadership was not prepared to fight it out, was divided, massively unpopular and hoped to be part of the new order. A better parallel to the Arab Spring is the Green movement's attempt to stage a velvet revolution in Iran in 2009, which signally failed. Even if the election of that year was fixed by the Iranian government, it still had a core of committed supporters in the Revolutionary Guards. The urban poor never joined the protests en masse as they did in Tunisia and Egypt.

The lesson of the past six months in the Arab world is that unless the street protesters can split or guarantee the neutrality of the armed forces, their chance of success is limited. Their only option is to get full-scale foreign military intervention, as has happened in Libya. In practice, this means obtaining support from the US, even if the military action is carried out by the UK and France. It was the fear in Saudi Arabia and the Gulf monarchies this year that they no longer had a guarantee of support from Washington that panicked them into their violent onslaught on protesters in Bahrain.

The foreign media – notably al-Jazeera and satellite channels – played a central part in opening the way for the Arab Spring. Censorship, control of information and communications played an important role in the establishment of the police states that monopolised power in the Arab world from the 1970s. But this control has been weakened by the internet, satellite television and mobile phone.

At the same time, not all the instruments of power have changed. Security forces remained. The spontaneous nature of the Arab uprising was at first an advantage because the police did not know who to arrest, but this lack of leadership became a disadvantage when the revolution faced opposition. The moderation of the early protesters is turning out to be a crippling weakness as rulers fight for power.

TheUnhivedMind - June 13, 2011 03:46 AM (GMT)

Please remember that the idea of putting democracy in the Middle East was never actually true at all. The World we're entering into under New World Order is the post-democractic era so why would anywhere be given democracy? No whats going to happen is that the Knights of Malta will hand a level of power over the Muslim World to their nazi puppets the Muslim Brotherhood once controlled by the Knight of Malta, Dulles brothers one of which was a Jesuit Cardinal. This is to create a radical Islamic World like you've never seen and therefore bring about the Holy Crusade and eventually excuse for the destruction of both Islam and Zionism. In the meantime you may see much of the West become more and more Islamic until the plan is fully implemented.

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: Pro-, anti-government protesters fill Iraq square

Title: Pro-, anti-government protesters fill Iraq square

TheUnhivedMind - June 11, 2011 03:55 AM (GMT)

Pro-, anti-government protesters fill Iraq square

June 10, 2011 -- Updated 1708 GMT (0108 HKT)
http://edition.cnn.com/2011/WORLD/meast/06....html?hpt=hp_t2

Baghdad (CNN) -- A pro-government protest calling for the execution of accused insurgents overshadowed a smaller anti-government protest at Iraq's Tahrir Square Friday.

Hundreds of supporters of Prime Minister Nuri al-Maliki, including tribal leaders and government officials, carried posters and banners. They want to see the authors of some of the most violent sectarian violence executed.

State television broadcast the demonstration live, but did not show another demonstration happening in the same square.

About 200 anti-government protesters rallied against corruption, unemployment, lack of basic services and freedom of expression.

The pro-government demonstration followed broadcasts on state-run television Iraqiya of testimonies of those accused of committing sectarian crimes against Iraqis in 2006 and 2007.

Among the crimes featured on these broadcasts was the so-called al-Dujail wedding massacre.

Firas Hassan Fleih al-Jabouri is accused of leading a terrorist group that killed dozens during a wedding party. Authorities say they raped the bride and then the killed her along with the groom.

Gen. Qassim Atta, the spokesman of Baghdad operation command said in a press conference early this week that al-Jabouri was a human rights activist, and had an identification card stating as much. If he was involved in the attack, it raises the possibility that he was posing as an activist to evade detention.

Al-Jabouri and 24 others were arrested last month in connection with the massacre.

He was among those that protesters were calling to be executed, even though his trial has not been held yet.

Pro-Maliki demonstrators shouted at the anti-government protesters, calling them " Baathists." They responded with shouts of "baseless" and "untrue."

Two human rights activists who were among the demonstrators told CNN that at least seven anti-government protesters were beaten with sticks by some pro-Maliki protesters.

CNN footage showed a protester being beaten by some people and the two groups shouting at each other.

Eventually, anti-government demonstrators were chased out by civilians carrying sticks.

Since early February, tens of thousands of protesters have participated in a series of demonstrations across the country, apparently inspired by popular uprisings in Egypt and Tunisia.

In that period, at least 20 Iraqis have been killed and hundreds have been wounded in protests across the country.

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: Chicago Police Brace for 'Flash Mob' Attacks

Title: Chicago Police Brace for 'Flash Mob' Attacks

TheUnhivedMind - June 11, 2011 01:09 AM (GMT)

Chicago Police Brace for 'Flash Mob' Attacks

By JULIE JARGON And ILAN BRAT
JUNE 9, 2011, 5:50 P.M. ET http://online.wsj.com/article/SB1000142405...oWhatsNewsThird

CHICAGO—Police here are girding for another weekend of "flash mob" attacks after arresting 29 people in connection with a recent rash of assaults and robberies in and around the city's tony shopping and dining district.

Twelve crimes involving large groups of young men were reported last weekend, in addition to others earlier this spring. The incidents are some of the first major problems confronting newly appointed Chicago Police Superintendent Garry McCarthy.

The attacks have received wide attention in Chicago because they have occurred around the city's affluent north side, including near the "Magnificent Mile," a Michigan Avenue strip popular with tourists.

The latest attack occurred early Thursday morning. A spokesman for the Chicago Police Department said the attack involved "multiple" perpetrators near an elevated train platform. Described in the police report as a "strong arm robbery," the group of assailants took the victim's iPad and money and punched him in the face. No arrests have yet been made in that case.

The Chicago Tribune reported the victim was Jesse Andersen, the 35-year-old brother of Smashing Pumpkins front-man Billy Corgan. Mr. Corgan sent out a tweet Thursday morning saying: "My little brother Jesse was attacked and robbed this morning by 3 men. he's ok, but if you want to send him some love."

Mr. Andersen couldn't immediately be reached for comment. The police spokesman said the department cannot confirm the identity of the victim.

In another incident last Saturday evening, Krzysztof Wilkowski, after shopping on Michigan Avenue, was sitting on his scooter a couple of blocks away checking his phone for a restaurant when he got whacked in the face with a baseball.

At first, he said, he thought it was a prank, but then he looked up and saw 15 to 20 young men approaching. "My first reaction was, 'I'm about to get robbed, what do I do?' " Mr. Wilkowski recalled in an interview.

The 34-year-old insurance company employee from a Chicago suburb grabbed the keys from his ignition and held tight to his phone. A few of the attackers dragged him off his scooter and pulled him onto Chicago Avenue where they punched him, hit him with his helmet and tried to grab his phone.

"The way we're attacking this is attack the crimes—not being satisfied locking up one or two of [the suspects], but identifying and arresting the entire group," Mr. McCarthy said in an interview.

Mr. McCarthy, who was chosen to be the city's top cop by new Mayor Rahm Emanuel and confirmed by the city council Wednesday, said more than half of the 29 people arrested were picked up Saturday or Sunday.

Six of the dozen incidents over the weekend were robberies, with five involving the same group of people, Mr. McCarthy said. Ten members of that group have been arrested. Another 19 people, mostly juveniles, have been arrested in connection with the nonviolent crimes comprising the other six incidents. In one incident, a group of 10 people robbed a student on a bus, Mr. McCarthy said.

He said officers are monitoring train stops and other areas where groups might form. He is sending additional police officers to the downtown area and deploying undercover officers. Detectives and the gang unit are also assisting.

Mr. Wilkowski said he was happy with the department's response to the 911 call he placed as soon as his attackers disbanded. He said he suffered a bruise on his face and scratches on his knees, wrist and elbow, but "not a single scratch on my phone."

Mr. Wilkowski said he plans to keep coming downtown and he doesn't necessarily want to see too many police. To fully protect people, he said, "They'd have to have police on each corner like in '1984.'"

Write to Julie Jargon at julie.jargon@wsj.com and Ilan Brat at ilan.brat@wsj.com

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

23f0b

PLEASE MOVE OVER TO THE NEW SITE:

http://z15.invisionfree.com/The_Unhived_Mind_III/

18 JULY 2011 .. GOLD HITS NEW HIGH OF $1604 AS SILVER RAISES TO $40.38 PER OUNCE. THE OVERT DEPRESSION IS ON, ALL READY FOR THE COMING COLLAPSE BETWEEN OCT 2011 - OCT 2012! THE LIKES OF WHICH HAS NEVER BEEN WITNESSED BEFORE WORLDWIDE, ARE YOU READY? MENTALLY? YOU SURE? GET HARDENED NOW AND PREPARE ASAP.....

THE UNHIVED MIND
This site is dedicated to the truthsayers assassinated such as William Cooper, Jim Arrabito, Alberto Rivera, Joe Vialls, Brian Downing Quig, Phil Schneider etc.

KING 'FARNESE' CARLOS
World War III
The Unhived Mind

THE KNIGHTS OF MALTA
DEUTSCHE VERTEIDIGUNGS DIENST
HOMELAND
DEPARTMENT
CARPATHIA HOSTINGS INC CYBERNAZIS

CARDINAL RATZINGER
And his Oslo Accords
UHM

C.I.A (D.V.D) PREPARE TO
TESLA ATTACK U.K
EXERCISE ORION
SEPTEMBER 2010
UHM

WTC nuclear demolition
Dimitri Khalezov

WATCH OUT MIDDLE EAST
KING JUAN CARLOS IS
IN RUSSIA 24/25 FEB

LATEST INFO

The Unhived Mind Ii->DEPOPULATION->Vaccination Inquisition

Pages: (9) [1] 2 3 ... Last »

NEW TOPIC NEW POLL

Vaccination Inquisition

		Topic Title	Topic Starter	Replies	Views	Last Action
		Important Topics
		Vaccination, The Silent Genocide	TheUnhivedMind	2	902	14th June 2010 - 11:34 AM Last Post by: Matt Speake
		Murder By Injection EUSTACE MULLINS	AntiSionist	6	757	15th March 2009 - 05:19 AM Last Post by: AntiSionist
		MASSIVE ARCHIVE ON VACCINES	TheUnhivedMind	0	703	13th September 2008 - 11:48 PM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		Compulsory Vacc bill "BioShield 2" MUST Be Stopped	TheUnhivedMind	0	503	13th September 2008 - 04:24 PM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		Forum Topics

		Prominent Doctor Agrees Vaccination May Increase Autism Risk	TheUnhivedMind	0	33	21st July 2011 - 04:15 AM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		Bill Gates Wants to Register All New Babies on the Planet for Vaccines [TEUTONIC FILTH]	TheUnhivedMind	0	14	21st July 2011 - 02:45 AM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		SIMPLE JAB THAT CAN CURE HEART DISEASE [WATCH WHAT ELSE IT CAUSES]	TheUnhivedMind	0	17	21st July 2011 - 12:24 AM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		Testimony To Massachusetts Legislators on H1055 & Right to School For Vaccine Exempt Child	TheUnhivedMind	1	37	18th July 2011 - 12:50 AM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		Swine flu breath test would 'save thousands from having needless vaccines [FALSE POS's?]	TheUnhivedMind	0	22	15th July 2011 - 10:12 PM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		131 Children Vaccinated at Gunpoint in Malawi	TheUnhivedMind	0	29	15th July 2011 - 06:53 PM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		Some pediatricians taking stand for vaccine prg [GOOD STOP USING DOCTORS OF DEATH]	TheUnhivedMind	0	59	6th July 2011 - 01:28 AM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		Deadlier Whooping Cough Epidemic Likely Caused by Vaccine	TheUnhivedMind	0	40	30th June 2011 - 10:09 PM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		Vaccines as 'Cluster Bombs'	TheUnhivedMind	0	44	30th June 2011 - 01:08 AM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		Why are Babies Vaccinated for a STD?	TheUnhivedMind	0	74	26th June 2011 - 11:33 PM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		A Look Inside The Immunization Dilemma	TheUnhivedMind	0	66	26th June 2011 - 03:52 AM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		Newly published research in leading journals AGAINST fluoride and vaccines	TheUnhivedMind	0	31	26th June 2011 - 02:35 AM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		SHEOPLE FALL FOR MMR VACS OR IS IT A LIE?	TheUnhivedMind	1	51	25th June 2011 - 04:44 PM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		New focus on vaccines could spell new pharmaceuti jobs	TheUnhivedMind	0	34	25th June 2011 - 04:33 AM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		5 year olds targeted for population control with Flu vac	TheUnhivedMind	0	36	25th June 2011 - 01:56 AM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		Bill Gates And The SV40 Cancer-Causing Virus	TheUnhivedMind	0	55	23rd June 2011 - 02:32 AM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		Dr. Andrew Wakefield And GMOs	TheUnhivedMind	0	44	23rd June 2011 - 02:20 AM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		GMO-DNA Vaccines And Cytokine Storms	TheUnhivedMind	1	38	23rd June 2011 - 02:20 AM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		Is The H1N1 Vaccine Safe? Shocking Stories From Pregnant Women Who Have Had Miscarriages	TheUnhivedMind	0	46	22nd June 2011 - 01:58 AM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind

		Autism Ideas	TheUnhivedMind	9	186	22nd June 2011 - 12:59 AM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		Vaccines in Pakistan, Drones in Yemen [Vd]	TheUnhivedMind	0	46	20th June 2011 - 02:35 AM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		Vaccine hope for prostate cancer sufferers	TheUnhivedMind	0	45	20th June 2011 - 12:38 AM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		Glaxo steps up presence in China with purchase of flu vaccine partner	TheUnhivedMind	0	51	15th June 2011 - 03:41 AM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		Massive depopulation push against the Third World	TheUnhivedMind	1	130	13th June 2011 - 11:40 PM Last Post by: trk
		NEW POISONOUS VAC FOR MENINGITIS NEXT	TheUnhivedMind	0	80	10th June 2011 - 09:47 PM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		Fund vaccines for poorest children, pleads charity	TheUnhivedMind	0	56	10th June 2011 - 04:38 PM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		20 NEW POISON VACCINES ON THE WAY	TheUnhivedMind	0	65	10th June 2011 - 04:37 PM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		An Interview About Vaccines with Helen V. Ratajcza PhD	TheUnhivedMind	0	78	8th June 2011 - 02:42 AM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		GlaxoSmithKline and Crucell to test malaria jab [MORE POISON]	TheUnhivedMind	0	40	7th June 2011 - 10:43 PM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		The depopulation agenda continues in Liberia	TheUnhivedMind	0	45	6th June 2011 - 04:58 PM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		MARY TOCCO - CHILDHOOD VACCINE DANGERS [Vd]	TheUnhivedMind	0	86	4th June 2011 - 03:06 AM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		TB vaccination for all London newborns proposed [TIME TO UP TO DEPOPULATION/MISERY!]	TheUnhivedMind	0	55	3rd June 2011 - 03:36 PM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		78 percent of Pakistani children with polio were given polio vaccines	TheUnhivedMind	0	48	2nd June 2011 - 06:15 PM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		European patient groups call for mandatory vaccine surveillance systems	TheUnhivedMind	0	58	1st June 2011 - 11:38 PM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		How to Spot a Vaccine Zombie (Satire) [Vd]	TheUnhivedMind	1	101	1st June 2011 - 05:15 AM Last Post by: Phazon
		CDC admits flu vaccines don't work	TheUnhivedMind	0	47	31st May 2011 - 11:33 PM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		Narcolepsy cases rising after swine flu vaccine	TheUnhivedMind	0	47	31st May 2011 - 10:40 PM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		New study claims 83 autism cases caused by vaccines	TheUnhivedMind	1	74	31st May 2011 - 04:49 AM Last Post by: AntiSionist

		David Cameron takes on aid critics by making vaccine pledge	TheUnhivedMind	0	64	30th May 2011 - 01:52 AM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		Record Measles Cases In 15 Years, USA [PROPAGANDA FOR NEW VAC CAMPAIGNS]	TheUnhivedMind	1	72	28th May 2011 - 11:29 PM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		HOARD TO BEAT FLU JAB PANIC [PROPAGANDA]	TheUnhivedMind	0	62	26th May 2011 - 04:07 PM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		Bill Gates pushes for 90 percent vaccination rate worldwide [TEUTONIC DEPOPULATION!]	TheUnhivedMind	0	104	24th May 2011 - 12:28 AM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		Autism Leads Rise of Developmental Disabilities in U.S. Kids	TheUnhivedMind	0	65	23rd May 2011 - 04:22 PM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		Florida legislature refuses to regulate mercury in vaccines	TheUnhivedMind	0	87	21st May 2011 - 03:33 AM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		Anthrax vaccine: Children targeted for testing	TheUnhivedMind	0	97	13th May 2011 - 12:40 AM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		FOX NEWS: Feds Paid Millions To Cover Up Brain Damage And Autism Caused By FORCED Vacci	TheUnhivedMind	0	133	10th May 2011 - 01:15 AM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		Take a Vaccine poison and you MAY win a laptop [WHOOPI]	TheUnhivedMind	0	70	9th May 2011 - 11:42 PM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		SaneVax Inc. Protests FDA Approval of Second-Rate HPV Genotyping as a Cancer TestLast week	TheUnhivedMind	0	113	6th May 2011 - 11:32 PM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		HPV inquisition cartoon	TheUnhivedMind	0	91	6th May 2011 - 11:30 PM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		Infant Mortality Rates Increase With Vaccines	TheUnhivedMind	0	64	6th May 2011 - 11:27 PM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		What IS the Cause of Autism Spectrum Disorder?	TheUnhivedMind	2	187	23rd April 2011 - 04:29 AM Last Post by: maitreyaarrived
		Nasal aerosol flu treatment 'shows promise' [HIGHLIGHTS FLU VACS BEING USELESS]	TheUnhivedMind	0	80	22nd April 2011 - 09:40 PM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		How the GMC framed Doctors Wakefield, Walker-Smith and Murch	TheUnhivedMind	0	74	21st April 2011 - 02:18 AM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		Autism and Vaccines Researcher for CDC, Indicted for Fraud and Money-Laundering	TheUnhivedMind	0	78	20th April 2011 - 03:02 AM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		The Importance of Getting Factual Information on Vaccinations	TheUnhivedMind	0	65	20th April 2011 - 01:15 AM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		News of Smallpox Outbreak in India Raises Fear	TheUnhivedMind	0	137	20th April 2011 - 01:14 AM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		U.S. Taxpayers ‘Screwed’ in Vaccine Research	TheUnhivedMind	0	53	20th April 2011 - 01:11 AM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind

		UK Nurse Gave Vaccine To Child Without Consent To Meet Government Goals	TheUnhivedMind	0	58	20th April 2011 - 01:10 AM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		What Everyone Needs To Know About Kids Vaccination A Parent's Check List	TheUnhivedMind	0	77	20th April 2011 - 01:10 AM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		Doctors demand the removal of anti-vaccine ad from Times Square	TheUnhivedMind	2	122	19th April 2011 - 02:25 AM Last Post by: Alexandra
		Alex Loglia on Vaccines plus note AIDS refs	Alexandra	0	78	15th April 2011 - 05:51 PM Last Post by: Alexandra
		U.K TRAVELLER FEARMONGERED INTO TAKING POISONOUS MEASLES VACCINES	TheUnhivedMind	0	114	9th April 2011 - 06:10 PM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		GPs must return flu vaccine over narcolepsy fears [PANDEMRIX IS JUNK!]	TheUnhivedMind	0	84	6th April 2011 - 05:44 PM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		HPV VACCINE PARALYSED TEENAGE GIRL	TheUnhivedMind	0	191	22nd March 2011 - 12:37 AM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		Parents: You Can Say No to Vaccinations, Right? Maybe Not For Much Longer	TheUnhivedMind	1	175	16th March 2011 - 03:41 AM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		POLIO VACCINES CAUSED MESOTHELIOMA	TheUnhivedMind	0	131	13th March 2011 - 02:10 AM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		Call to vaccinate against possible H2N2 flu pandem [PATHETIC]	TheUnhivedMind	0	133	10th March 2011 - 06:05 PM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		Wakefield accusations: the defense	TheUnhivedMind	0	110	10th March 2011 - 04:18 PM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		Japan Suspends Use of Pfizer, Sanofi Pediatric Vaccines After Four Deaths	TheUnhivedMind	1	160	9th March 2011 - 02:55 PM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		Dr. Jonas Salk, inventor of polio vaccine, exposed experimenting on mental patients	TheUnhivedMind	0	108	7th March 2011 - 02:52 AM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		Vaccines Can't Claim What Nutritional Supplements Can: No Deaths!	TheUnhivedMind	1	152	5th March 2011 - 02:16 AM Last Post by: AntiSionist
		'The Decade of Vaccines' - Bill Gates interview [Vd]	TheUnhivedMind	2	192	2nd March 2011 - 06:08 AM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		Vaccines activate moron genes that cause further belief in vaccines	TheUnhivedMind	0	118	2nd March 2011 - 03:09 AM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		National Vaccine Injury Compensation Program and Vaccine Damage Awards	TheUnhivedMind	0	144	28th February 2011 - 04:15 AM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		Doctors in UK Warned After a Catalogue of Vaccine Mix-Ups	TheUnhivedMind	0	115	28th February 2011 - 04:14 AM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		Doctors offered meningitis 'red flag' advice [VACS CAN CAUSE THIS SUCH AS MMR]	TheUnhivedMind	0	140	26th February 2011 - 06:57 PM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind

		How the farmyard bugs that help children avoid asthma could be turned into vaccine	TheUnhivedMind	0	134	24th February 2011 - 06:53 PM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		Suits Against Vaccine Makers Curbed by U.S. Suprem Court	TheUnhivedMind	0	148	23rd February 2011 - 01:25 AM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		Child flu vaccine warning for GPs after mistakes made	TheUnhivedMind	0	141	21st February 2011 - 06:48 PM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		Catholics and Vaccines	TheUnhivedMind	0	166	20th February 2011 - 11:31 PM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		Scientist urges human papilloma virus jabs for boys to stem oral cancer rise [CRAFTY!]	TheUnhivedMind	2	114	20th February 2011 - 10:33 PM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		60 Lab Studies Now Confirm Cancer Link to a Vaccine You Probably Had as a Child [Vd]	TheUnhivedMind	0	133	19th February 2011 - 04:33 AM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		Glaxo flu vaccine probe is extended	TheUnhivedMind	0	120	18th February 2011 - 11:33 PM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		Army admits Gulf War medical records destroyed	TheUnhivedMind	0	133	17th February 2011 - 02:16 AM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		DR REBECCA CARLEY - DANGERS OF VACCINES & THE MEDICAL MARIA [Vd]	TheUnhivedMind	0	171	16th February 2011 - 05:47 AM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		What Do Vaccines & McCarthyism Have In Common?	TheUnhivedMind	0	124	15th February 2011 - 11:49 PM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		3 Old Interviews - The Truth About Vaccinations With Vyzygoth aka Keith Hanson	bovvered	2	121	15th February 2011 - 02:17 AM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		Fearful UK Healthcare Workers Refuse Flu Vaccine, US Nurse Fired	TheUnhivedMind	0	129	14th February 2011 - 10:22 PM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		Jared Lee Loughner: Psychotic or Vaccine Induced Madman?	TheUnhivedMind	0	126	14th February 2011 - 10:22 PM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		Fact: Evidence in Vaccine Induced Injury Cases is Suppressed	TheUnhivedMind	0	125	14th February 2011 - 10:21 PM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		Doctors would 'bypass NHS sexual health vaccine' [KEEP AWAY FROM BOTH]	TheUnhivedMind	1	135	13th February 2011 - 06:33 PM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		Doctors demand schoolgirls be vaccinated against genital warts in the U.K.	TheUnhivedMind	0	133	13th February 2011 - 03:19 AM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		Interview with Sherri Tenpenny about dangers of vaccines [Vd]	TheUnhivedMind	1	137	11th February 2011 - 01:25 AM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		Dr Andrew Wakefield says BMJ has been hijacked by false journalism	TheUnhivedMind	1	132	11th February 2011 - 01:20 AM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		SWINE FLU VACCINE CAUSING NARCOLEPSY PROBED BY WHO	TheUnhivedMind	2	141	11th February 2011 - 01:18 AM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind

		The New GMO Swine Flu CornFlakes The New GMO Swine Flu CornFlakes	wades77	0	211	3rd February 2011 - 10:17 PM Last Post by: wades77

Showing 100 of 893 topics sorted by last post date in descending order from the beginning Go!

Pages: (9) [1] 2 3 ... Last »

NEW TOPIC NEW POLL

Open Topic (new replies)

Open Topic (no new replies)

Hot Topic (new replies)

Hot Topic (no new replies)

Poll (new votes)

Poll (no new votes)

Locked Topic

Moved Topic

Search this forum: Enter Keywords Go

- Vaccination Inquisition Go

Mark this forum as read

Hosted for free by InvisionFree (Terms of Use: Updated 2/10/2010) | Powered by Invision Power Board v1.3 Final © 2003 IPS, Inc.
Page creation time: 0.0938 seconds | Archive

The Orsini Skin by Bunthius Zeta Board mods

0

View Full Version: Vaccination Inquisition

51. Take a Vaccine poison and you MAY win a laptop
52. SaneVax Inc. Protests FDA Approval of Second-Rate
53. HPV inquisition cartoon
54. Infant Mortality Rates Increase With Vaccines
55. What IS the Cause of Autism Spectrum Disorder?
56. Nasal aerosol flu treatment 'shows promise'
57. How the GMC framed Doctors Wakefield, Walker-Smith
58. Autism and Vaccines Researcher for CDC, Indicted
59. The Importance of Getting Factual Information on
60. News of Smallpox Outbreak in India Raises Fear
61. U.S. Taxpayers ‘Screwed’ in Vaccine Research
62. UK Nurse Gave Vaccine To Child Without Consent To
63. What Everyone Needs To Know About Kids Vaccination
64. Doctors demand the removal of anti-vaccine ad from
65. Alex Loglia on Vaccines
66. U.K TRAVELLER FEARMONGERED INTO TAKING POISONOUS
67. GPs must return flu vaccine over narcolepsy fears
68. HPV VACCINE PARALYSED TEENAGE GIRL
69. Parents: You Can Say No to Vaccinations, Right?
70. POLIO VACCINES CAUSED MESOTHELIOMA
71. Call to vaccinate against possible H2N2 flu pandem
72. Wakefield accusations: the defense
73. Japan Suspends Use of Pfizer, Sanofi Pediatric
74. Dr. Jonas Salk, inventor of polio vaccine, exposed
75. Vaccines Can’t Claim What Nutritional Supplements
76. 'The Decade of Vaccines' - Bill Gates interview
77. Vaccines activate moron genes that cause further
78. National Vaccine Injury Compensation Program and
79. Doctors in UK Warned After a Catalogue of Vaccine
80. Doctors offered meningitis 'red flag' advice

81. How the farmyard bugs that help children avoid
82. Suits Against Vaccine Makers Curbed by U.S. Suprem
83. Child flu vaccine warning for GPs after mistakes
84. Catholics and Vaccines
85. Scientist urges human papilloma virus jabs for
86. 60 Lab Studies Now Confirm Cancer Link to a
87. Glaxo flu vaccine probe is extended
88. Army admits Gulf War medical records destroyed
89. DR REBECCA CARLEY - DANGERS OF VACCINES & THE
90. What Do Vaccines & McCarthyism Have In Common?
91. 3 Old Interviews - The Truth About Vaccinations
92. Fearful UK Healthcare Workers Refuse Flu Vaccine,
93. Jared Lee Loughner: Psychotic or Vaccine Induced
94. Fact: Evidence in Vaccine Induced Injury Cases is
95. Doctors would 'bypass NHS sexual health vaccine'
96. Doctors demand schoolgirls be vaccinated against
97. Interview with Sherri Tenpenny about dangers of
98. Dr Andrew Wakefield says BMJ has been hijacked by
99. SWINE FLU VACCINE CAUSING NARCOLEPSY PROBED BY WHO
100. The New GMO Swine Flu CornFlakes

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: Vaccination Inquisition

101. Novartis's Fourth-Quarter Net Falls on Decline in
102. ONE MORE GIRL - Documentary
103. Pakistan begins assault on polio with vaccinations
104. Poor Sanitation In Haiti, Polio Vax Produce Polio
105. Feds checking post-vaccine seizures in young kids
106. Dr. confesses Cancer & other Viruses is found in
107. Flu Shots are Silly [Vd]
108. Scientists fear MMR link to autism
109. Dr. Mercola Interviews Dr. Andrew Wakefield on His
110. New TB poison vaccine on the way
111. New poisonous vaccine to hit Africa this time for
112. More kids' seizures reported after flu shots: FDA
113. GPs may lose flu vaccine procurement role
114. Vaccine Induced Child Abuse Exposed
115. Lancet propaganda bunkum to cover their arses
116. Fresh look at flu jabs for all under-fives
117. INDIAN CHILD CONTRACTS POLIO DESPITE HAVING SIX
118. ELITISTS TRYING TO MANIPULATE POPULACE AGAINST
119. We Are Change Chicago - Arrested for asking Dr. Oz
120. UK Government Decides Against Giving Children The
121. Sanofi Pasteur Plays Santa and Pays for Children
122. New Calif law requires TDAP vac for grades 7-12
123. Fat Vaccine from Novo Nordisk
124. Idiots pushing compulsory H1N1 vaccines of death
125. Walgreens, U.S. join to offer flu shot vouchers to
126. SYNTHETIC MARK OF THE BEAST LIFEFORM IN THE GULF
127. JUDGE SAYS NO TO FORCED VACCINATIONS
128. Viruses and the GM Insect "Flying Vaccine" Solutio
129. Nine month old twins die just minutes after measle
130. New polio poison vaccine being developed at Leeds

131. Diarrhea Vaccine fails in Trials
132. Myths and Facts: Study Verifies That There Is No
133. Gary Null Calls Out Corzine on Vaccine [Vd]
134. Mind Virus Injected into New Mothers by Pharma and
135. Police Arrested Twelve Year Old Boy for Refusing
136. Possible 400 Dead as UK Government Betrays Parents
137. How Government and Pharmaceutical Companies Gamble
138. GlaxoSmithKline Influences Experts To Boost HPV
139. Global Immunization Campaign Backed by Gates Seeks
140. Toddlers to get 'six in one' jabs
141. PROPAGANDA NEW LIFETIME ANTI-FLU VACCINE
142. RUSSIAN ACTIVIST DISAPPEARS AFTER EXPOSING
143. Mass genocide to take place on millions in Africa
144. Cervical cancer jab could replace smear tests
145. UN Prepares to Vaccinate Hundreds of Thousands
146. Get ready for meningitis propaganda for vacs soon
147. Get ready for a new super TV vaccine soon as they
148. Children without MMR jabs should be banned from
149. HMV voucher bribe for teenage girls to have
150. Possibly over Three Thousand Miscarriages: CDC

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: Vaccination Inquisition

151. Merck Sponsored Study Returns Dubious Gardasil
152. Narcolepsy and swine flu: conflicts of interest in
153. Fewer may get flu shots this year, survey finds
154. WHO to vaccinate 72 million African children
155. Fluzone High-Dose Vaccine For Elderly: Is Your
156. Researchers Tout Combination Anthrax-Smallpox Vac
157. A NEW POISON VACCINE FOR POLIO (POP REDUCTION)
158. Quadruple-dose seasonal flu "super" vaccine now
159. PATIENTS' ANGER AFTER THEY ARE UNABLE TO OPT OUT
160. Super vaccine may fight multidrug-resistant T
161. Flu Shots For The Elderly Are Ineffective
162. Dr. Manoj Jain: Mandatory flu shots for hospital
163. PROPAGANDA AGAINST ORAL SEX TO PUSH HPV VACCINE
164. Doctors in Germany refuse to give patients flu jaN
165. Supreme Court to Consider Vaccine Case
166. FDA Sees Possible Risk of Fatal Bowel Problem With
167. October is Vaccine Injury Awareness Month
168. EXPERTS ADMIT SWINE FLU JAB MAY CAUSE DEADLY NERVE
169. Twins Die Minutes after Measles Vaccination
170. Vaccine Makers Get Mixed Reception From U.S.
171. 16 New deaths tied to Gardasil by FDA
172. Many Americans Plan to Skip Flu Shot This Year
173. Shameless flu shot pushers use strip clubs to
174. Chief Justice John Roberts cashes in Pfizer stocks
175. Vaccinations: Much To Do About Nothing?
176. Hope On The Horizon
177. Do vaccines cause autism?
178. Novartis, Craig Venter to Create Synthetic Vacs
179. Australia blames a flu vaccine for child convulsio
180. Ukrainian People Say No to Globalist Vaccines

181. Flu jabs during pregnancy 'help protect child'
182. If you refused the Sine Flu Vac in the U.K. you
183. U.K. Pregnant women to be offered seasonal flu jab
184. GPs should give swine flu warning for seasonal jab
185. SCIENTIFIC “PROOFS” OF “NO HARM” FOR MERCURY IN
186. “Experts” meet to discuss mandatory “life style”
187. GSK’s controversial nicotine vaccine readies for
188. Calls for vaccine surveillance scheme
189. Flu Vaccine Caused Over 1000 Adverse Reactions
190. Canadians To Be Vaccinated With Live H1N1 Virus
191. Hidden government papers expose lies about measles
192. Twins die minutes after measles vaccination
193. Danish police request for documents about vaccine
194. Aborted Human Fetal Cells in Vaccines
195. Brain Swelling and Damage Associated With Vaccines
196. Vaccine Acceptance Statistics for 2009
197. Vaccine Meeting at FDA
198. Shoulder Injury Related to Vaccine Administration
199. Biased Government Study Claims Vaccines Don't
200. FLU VAC TOUTED AS ANTI-HEART ATTACK

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: Vaccination Inquisition

201. PREGNANT WOMEN MUST BE POISONED BY FLU VAC
202. Thimerosal Accumulates in Rat Brains,Study Reveals
203. J&J to Buy Crucell for $2.3 Billion in Vaccine
204. Navy to test its ability to vaccinate masses in a
205. New Zealand study confirms seasonal and pandemic
206. WHO, World Bank, vaccine manufacturers and Bill
207. Call for invesitgation into Denmark studies defend
208. Vit D proven far better than vaccines at Flu preve
209. People turning to homeopathic 'vaccines'
210. China mass measles vaccination plan sparks outcry
211. Healthcare workers to be fired if they refuse flu
212. Vaccine Deaths And Injuries Skyrocket As Cover-Up
213. Flu vaccine readily available, and free for many
214. Pentagon shifts $1 billion from WMD-defense
215. JANE BURGERMEISTER'S FREEDOM IS AT AN END
216. New York Lawmakers Push for Salmonella Vaccination
217. IRISH GOVERNMENT CAUGHT MANIPULATING GARDASIL
218. Cervical cancer jab for girls aged 12 can be given
219. Evidence-based vaccinations: A scientific look at
220. Family win 18 year fight over MMR damage to son
221. No evidence new flu vaccine helps avoid flu,
222. UK doctor stripped of licence over vaccine damage
223. Vaccine Death Coverup Implodes Worldwide [Vd]
224. Abbott Halts Sale of Flu Vaccine Business
225. Vaccine jabs being pushed by medical-industrial
226. Mandatory Flu Vaccine Pushed for Healthcare
227. 3 babies died within hours after they were vaccina
228. Celldex Plunges After Pfizer Cancels partnership
229. Vaccine Zombie [Vd]
230. Conclusive: Global Distribution of Rockefeller-

231. India halts vaccine programme after the deaths of 232. Australia bans flu vaccines in children after
233. Truth About Gardasil website documents young girls
234. Part I: Saying 'No' to vaccines says 'No' to
235. Government department funded by vaccine companies
236. Calls for closure to vaccine scandal
237. Compensation not yet available for Pandemrix harms
238. 52% Concerned About Safety of Vaccines
239. New poison vaccine for alphabet liver inflammation
240. U.S. tries to fix slow response to outbreaks with
241. Vaccines destroy the lives of children in China
242. Walgreens announces flu shot gift card; give the
243. Autistic girl uses laptop to break silence
244. Jab that could put a stop to stress without slowin
245. CDC: Flu Vaccine Arriving, Get Yours ASAP
246. FDA approves new flu vaccine
247. US doctors told to avoid 1 flu shot brand for kids
248. Mothers are killing their Autistic children
249. Media Pushes BRAIN Eating Vaccine... Nano Tech
250. Army's Vaccine Plan: Inject Troops With Gas-

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: Vaccination Inquisition

851. Patients at risk as NHS staff refuse flu jabs
852. FDA ignored debris in syringes
853. Vaccine pulled over bacteria fear
854. NHS blunders are behind a spate of 'vaccine overlo
855. Universal Vaccine Media Myths
856. Economic Stimulus Bill Mandates $954 Million for
857. Bill Gates to kill millions w/ more Maltese agenda
858. Autistic traits 'spread widely'
859. Mosquitoes make sweet love music
860. Unprecedented' rise in measles
861. Doubts raised over measles target
862. Pneumococcal Vaccine Does Not Appear To Protect
863. Mystery illness paralyses girl given cervical
864. Scotland has a 95% increase in the Inquisition
865. MORE PROPAGANDA TO PUSH MMR POISON
866. Heretic Adults to be given Whooping Cough POISON
867. Rat Poison Chemical in HPV Vaccine
868. Human Fetal Links with Some Vaccines
869. Neurodegeneration - [video] Watch Mercury
870. Proof that Vaccines caused the Gulf War Syndrome
871. 1 in 4 Gulf vets has syndrome
872. Anyone got the full Rebecca Carley Protocol?
873. RECENT FED CT DECISION IN AUTISM CASE PROVES DR.
874. Gardasil Linked to Seventy-Eight Outbreaks of
875. Dr Rebecca Carley
876. More Vaccine poison quackery now Lymph nodes
877. PATHETIC ATTEMPT TO DIVERT OFF VACCINES
878. Expert's fear over cervical cancer vaccine
879. Why Flu Shots For Kids Don't Work
880. Mosquitos to be used as 'flying syringe' to

881. Parents home-school to avoid vaccinations
882. Smokers to be poisoned w/ the Vaccine INQUISITION
883. Emergency Declarations Smooth Way for Vaccine Make
884. U.S. Limits Anthrax Vaccine Legal Liability
885. Protest over mandatory flu shots for preschoolers
886. Mass poisoning of Nigerians to come
887. Merck’s Combination Children’s Vaccine Linked to
888. 25% of Teen Girls POISONED by Gardasil quackery
889. More CDC fearmongering TO DAMAGE your child!
890. School refuses 'cancer vaccine'
891. People get wise in the U.K to the death MMR jabs
892. Poisonous Flu shots are good for pregnant women
893. Group With Big Pharma Ties Wants to Shut Down

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: Vaccination, The Silent Genocide

Title: Vaccination, The Silent Genocide

craig-oxley - September 13, 2008 04:23 PM (GMT)

Vaccination, The Silent Genocide

by Guylaine Lanctot, M.D.
http://educate-yourself.org/cn/vaccination...de14nov05.shtml
November 14, 2005

Forward courtesy of Zeus <info@zeusinfoservice.com>

Extracts from Medical Mafia by Guylaine Lanctot, M.D.

Why this lethal relentlessness?

What is the objective of the world authorities in destroying people's health, both in industrialized countries and in the Third World? It is always difficult to presume the intentions of others, particularly when one is not close to them. And this is true in this instance. But there are certainly advantages for someone, somewhere, to so doggedly keep-up the campaign for vaccinations, by any and all means possible. They must profit someone, somewhere. One thing is certain. It is not to our advantage. In order to determine what these advantages are, and for whom, let us stop and look at the CONSEQUENCES of these massive vaccination programs and draw our own conclusions.

I. Vaccination is expensive and represents a cost of one billion dollars annually. It therefore benefits the industry; most notably, the multinational manufacturers. One sells the vaccines. The other then provides the arsenal of medications to respond to the numerous complications that follow. Their profits increase while our expenses go through the roof. To the point where we have simply had it up to here and are ready to accept the unacceptable, such as socialized medicine in the United States, for example.

http://www.pnc.com.au/~cafmr/coulter/sids.html
http://www.pnc.com.au/~cafmr/coulter/vacc-deb.html

http://homepages.enterprise.net/whale/sch.html
http://www.trufax.org/nwcch/vaccines.html

2. Vaccination stimulates the immune system, the body's defense mechanism. Repeated, vaccination exhausts the immune system. It gives a false sense of security and, in doing so, it opens the door wide to all kinds of illnesses. Notably, to those related to AIDS, which can only develop on ripe ground, where the immune system has been disturbed. It causes AIDS to explode. It ensures that the illness flourishes perpetually.

http://alt.medmarket.com/members/reiddds/h...nfo/immune.html

3. Vaccination leads to social violence and crime. What better way to destabilize a country than to disarm its inhabitants, and reinforce police and military control? The authorities subtly create situations of panic and fear among the population which, in turn, necessitate the reinforcement of protection measures", including forbidding citizens from owning weapons. The authorities then come across as saviors and strengthen their control. It is certain that, in order to impose a single world army, one must first disarm the citizens of every country. One must therefore create violence, if they are to achieve this disarmament, particularly in the United States where the right to bear arms is guaranteed by the Constitution.

4. Vaccination encourages medical dependence and reinforces belief in the inefficiency of the body. It creates people who need permanent assistance. It replaces the confidence one has in oneself with a blind confidence in others, outside ourselves. It leads to loss of personal dignity, in addition to making us financially dependent. It draws us into the vicious circle of sickness (fear - poverty - submission) and, in this way, ensures the submission of the herd so as to better dominate and exploit it. And then lead them to the abattoir. To slaughter. Vaccination also encourages the moral and financial dependence of Third World countries. It perpetuates the social and economic control of Western countries over them.

5. Vaccination camouflages the real socio-political problems of poverty of some due to exploitation by others, and results in techno-scientific pseudo-solutions that are so complicated and vaccination diverts funds which should be used to help improve living conditions, and channels them into the banks of the multinationals. It is so sophisticated that patients cannot understand. In addition,the gap widens between the dominant rich and the exploited poor.

6. Vaccination decimates populations. Drastically in Third World countries. Chronically in industrialized countries. In this regard, Robert McNamara, the former President of the World Bank, former Secretary of State in the United States, who ordered massive bombing of Vietnam, and a member of the Expanded Program on Immunization, made some very interesting remarks. As reported by a French publication, j"ai tout compris", he was quoted as stating: "One must take draconian measures of demographic reduction against the will of the populations. Reducing the birth rate has proved to be impossible or insufficient. One must therefore increase the mortality rate. How? By natural means. Famine and sickness." (Translation)

7. Vaccination enables the selection of populations to be decimated. It facilitates targeted genocide. It permits one to kill people of a certain race, a certain group, a certain country. And to leave others untouched. In the name of health and well-being, of course.

http://www.tetrahedron.org/research.htm
http://www.new-atlantean.com/global/birthcon.html

Take Africa, for example. We have witnessed the almost total disappearance of certain groups. Some 50% dead, estimate the most optimistic. Some 70% dead, according to the less optimistic. As if by chance, many were in the same region, such as Zaire, Uganda, the extreme south of the Sudan. In 1967, at Marburg in Germany, seven researchers, working with green African monkeys, died of an unknown hemorrhagic fever.

In 1969, also by chance, the same sick-ness killed one thousand people in Uganda. In 1976, a new unknown hemor-rhagic fever killed in the south of Sudan. Then in Zaire. It is noteworthy that since l968, virologists (virus specialists) have installed their sophisticated equipment in certain hospitals in Zaire.At a CIA hearing, Dr. Gotlieb, a cancerologist, admitted having dispersed, in 1960, a large quantity of viruses in the Congo River (in Zaire) to pollute it and contaminate all the people who used the river as their source of water. Dr. Gotlieb was named to head up the National Cancer Institute!

A couple of years ago, Reuters reported: 'An illness similar to AIDS has killed 60,000 in the south of Sudan. They call the illness, the killer. Families, whole villages, have disappeared. This illness, the Kalaazar, takes the form of a fever and loss of weight. The symptoms are the same as those of AIDS. The immune system is deficient and one dies of other infections." It is obvious that Africa, particularly those countries in the center and to the south, contain fabulous resources that have always incited westerners to crush their inhabitants to take over their riches. And beware anyone who stands in their way. The colonies have disappeared. But not colonialism.

8. Vaccination serves as a form of experimentation, to test new products on a great sampling of a population. Under the guise of health and the well-being of the population, people are vaccinated against a pseudo-epidemic with products that one wants to study. The vaccine of hepatitis B seems to be the choice of authorities to accomplish this goal. Yet, this vaccine is manufactured by a process of genetic manipulation. And it is much more dangerous than the traditional vaccine because it inoculates into the body cells that are foreign to its genetic code. Moreover; this vaccine is produced from virus cultivated on the ovaries of Chinese hamsters. One can only imagine what future generations will look like! But there is more. It is also reported to cause cancer of the liver. Despite all that, it enjoys great popularity among the authorities, who impose it first on all those who work in the health field, and then on the rest of the population.

http://www.new-atlantean.com/global/ith_gulf.html

In 1986, the medical authorities administered the vaccine against hepatitis B to Native Indian children in Alaska, without any explanation or the consent of their parents. Many children fell ill. And several died. It seems there was a virus called RSV (Rous Sarcoma Virus) in the vaccine. American Indian tribes have been subjected to many vaccinations. Let us be aware that they are difficult to beat into submission, and they own vast tracts of land which the authorities would like to have for their own benefit.

Recently when I met a group of Native women to chat about health with them, the subject of vaccinations cropped up. I was giving them some information on the topic when, suddenly, the group's nurse confided in me that the federal government had given her complete freedom in the management of their health, but on one strict condition. That every vaccination had to be scrupulously applied to all. The silence was deafening. We all understood.

In 1988, the Ambassador of Senegal gave a radio interview reporting on the ravages of AIDS in his country where entire villages were being decimated. A few years earlier, scientific and medical teams had come to vaccinate their inhabitants against hepatitis B.

In 1978, a new vaccine was tested on homosexuals in New York.

And in 1980, on those in San Francisco, Los Angeles, Denver, Chicago, and St Louis. Officially, this "new vaccine" was against hepatitis B and, as we now know, it caused many of them to die from AIDS. It sounded the "official" beginning of the AIDS epidemic in 1981. The vaccination program of homosexuals against hepatitis B was led by Saint W.H.O. and the National Institute of Health.

There are reports of collaboration between these two organizations in 1970 to study the consequences of certain viruses and bacteria introduced to children during vaccination campaigns.

In 1972, they transformed this study to focus on the viruses which provoked a drop in the immune mechanism. Wolf Szmuness directed the anti-hepatitis B experiments undertaken in New York. He had very close links with the Blood Center where he had his laboratory, the National Institute of Health, the National Cancer Institute, the FDA., the W.H.O., and the Schools of Public Health of Cornell, Yale, and Harvard. In 1994 a vast vaccination campaign against hepatitis B was undertaken in Canada. It is both useless, dangerous and costly. And what for? Is there a hidden agenda? I note that the Province of Quebec is a particular target, over the course of three years.

1992: vaccination against meningitis
1993: re-vaccination against meningitis
1994: vaccination against hepatitis B.

I was there in 1993. It troubled me to see that it was aimed at a whole generation (1 to 20 years), in only one province. Since when do viruses respect borders, and specially provincial ones at that? The facts are:

There was no epidemic, nor risk of one. Epidemiologists confirmed it. Three different vaccines were administered, each in a designated area. Certain nurses were selected and trained to administer a special vaccine. All children were entered into a computerized data bank. The pressure to vaccinate the children was enormous:

Schools were turned into clinics. Those who did not want to be vaccinated were pointed out and treated as social outcasts. Nurses chased down parents at home who did not want their children vaccinated. I had a direct account of one of these kids. The mother did not want her child vaccinated. The nurse who came to the house made her believe that it was compulsory. The mother gave in...the child is now handicapped: physically and mentally (paralyzed spastic).

The vaccination cost $30 million. Why was there such a murderous will? Like Native peoples, the people of Quebec are also a "bother". They believe in their cultural identity and in sovereignty. What is more, Quebec with its Native territories, encompasses huge reservoirs of water which many a multinational have their eyes on. As an acquaintance of mine who sits on the California water management board said, "Water today is gold." Could one think of a more appropriate biological weapon to possibly remove any impediments to accessing that resource?

9. Vaccinations permit epidemiological studies of populations to collect data on the resistance of different ethnic groups to different illnesses. It permits one to study the reactions of the immune systems of large numbers of the population to an antigen (virus, microbe) injected by vaccination. Should it be within the framework of the fight against an existing illness, or one that has been provoked. In 1987, certain American laboratories and the Department of Biotechnology of India signed an agreement authorizing the testing of genetically manufactured vaccines on the people of India. This agreement was met with fierce opposition because it gave access to epidemiological and immunity profiles of a population. This data is extremely important from a military standpoint. It is even more valuable because India has never experienced yellow fever. And, at time of writing this book, it had known only a handful of cases of AIDS. Over and above all that, the private American laboratories proposed to test products on the Indian population for which they had no right to test in the United States! And the Indian authorities acquiesced!

10. Vaccination is a biological weapon at the service of biological warfare. It permits the targeting of people of a certain race, and leaves the others who are close by more or less untouched. It makes it possible to intervene in the hereditary lineage of anyone selected. A new speciality is born. Genetic engineering. It is flourishing, enjoys much prestige, and is receiving substantial research hinds. The challenge is staggering. To find a vaccine which gives an illness against which we already have the vaccine! In this way, we would be able to send in troops who have already been vaccinated against the killer vaccine, which they would then spread among the enemy. It is absolutely crazy and insane! Meanwhile, industrial theft is in full swing. Captain and biologist of the US Navy at Fort Detrick, Neil Levitt, reported the disappearance of 2.35 liters of an experimental vaccine. A dose sufficient to contaminate the entire world. Fort Detrick is a research laboratory which manufactures vaccines. It is located quite close to Washington, in Maryland, and it is attached to the National Cancer Institute at Bethesda, a suburb of the capital. It is hardly astonishing that, in every major vaccination campaign, one finds the same tangled web. Government, the military, Saint W.H.O., financiers, researchers, laboratories, universities, the CIA, and the World Bank. Let us not lose sight of the fact that: In the name of the defense of our countries, we manufacture the most murderous of weapons. War; whether it be biological or not, is war. And weapons kill. Biological warfare is a giant business, largely financed BY OUR FUNDS, through the medium of the military, research, and our donations. It is also financed, and without our knowledge, BY OUR LIVES. Those of our children and of millions of innocents who have beensacrificed.

It is we, those who live in the Western world, who are responsible for all the illnesses and acts of genocide in the world. By our acceptance of vaccinations, both at home and abroad.

http://www.pnc.com.au/~cafmr/online/vaccine/index.html
http://www.unc.edu/~aphillip/www/vaccine/informed.htm
http://www.new-atlantean.com/global/vaccine.html
http://www.909shot.com/http://www.gn.apc.org/inquirer/rubella2.html
http://www.unc.edu/~aphillip/www/vaccine/informed.htm
http://www.ozemail.com.au/~shotinfo/

Karin Schumacher
Vaccine Information and Awareness
12799 La Tortola
San Diego, CA 92129
619-339-5498 (voicemail)

619-484-1187 (fax)
via@access1.net (email)
http://www.access1.net/via (website)

We Must Have The Freedom To Choose & Respect Everyone's Choice

Any information obtained here is not to be construed as medical OR legal advice. The decision to vaccinate and how you implement that decision is yours and yours alone.

BECOME A MEMBER OF NATIONAL VACCINE INFORMATION CENTER

Please become a member of the National Vaccine Information Center who has been working for the right of a parent to a fully informed vaccine decision since 1982. Becoming a become will help ensure that your rights are better protected.

http://www.909shot.com/order.htm (NVIC MEMBERSHIP INFORMATION) Thank you again for your interest and good luck on your search and decision.

We Must Have The Freedom To Choose Respect Everyone's Choice

Any information obtained here is not to be construed as medical OR legal advice. The decision to vaccinate and how you implement that decision is yours and yours alone.
See Related Story:

forwarded by Zeus Information Service
Alternative Views on Health www.zeusinfoservice.com
All information, data and material contained, presented or provided herein is for general information purposes only and is not to be construed as reflecting the knowledge or opinion of Zeus Information Service.
Subscribe Free/Unsubscribe:
info@zeusinfoservice.com

Matt Speake - June 4, 2010 12:07 AM (GMT)

Thanks great info

Matt Speake - June 14, 2010 11:34 AM (GMT)

vaccination ressistance movement

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: Murder By Injection

Title: Murder By Injection
Description: EUSTACE MULLINS

AntiSionist - March 15, 2009 05:08 AM (GMT)

Foreword

Chapter 1. The Medical Monopoly

Chapter 2. Quacks on Quackery

Chapter 3. The Profits of Cancer

Chapter 4 : Death & Vaccination (extracts)

Chapter 5. Fluoridation

Chapter 6. Whither AIDS ?

Chapter 8. Contamination of the Food Chain

Chapter 9. The Drug Trust

Chapter 10: The Rockefeller Syndicate by Eustace Mullins

Foreword

The present work, the result of some forty years of investigative research, is a logical progression from my previous books: the expose of the international control of monetary issue and banking practices in the United States; a later work revealing the secret network of organizations through which these alien forces wield political power — the secret committees, foundations, and political patties through which their hidden plans are implemented; and now; to the most vital issue of all, the manner in which these depredations affect the daily lives and health of American citizens. Despite the great power of the hidden rulers, I found that only one group has the power to issue life or death sentences to any American — our nation's physicians.

I discovered that these physicians, despite their great power, were themselves subjected to very strict controls over every aspect of their professional lives. These controls, surprisingly enough, were not wielded by any state or federal agency, although almost every other aspect of American life is now under the absolute control of the bureaucracy. The physicians have their own autocracy, a private trade association, the American Medical Association. This group, which is headquartered in Chicago, Illinois, had gradually built up its power until it assumed total control over medical schools and the accreditation of physicians.

The trail of these manipulators led me straight to the same lairs of the international conspirators whom I had exposed in previous books. I knew that they had already looted America, reduced its military power to a dangerously low level, and imposed bureaucratic controls on every American. I now discovered that their conspiracies also directly affected the health of every American. This conspiracy has resulted in a documented decline in the health of our citizens. We now rank far down the list of civilized nations in infant mortality and other significant medical statistics. I was able to document the shocking record of these cold-blooded tycoons who not only plan and carry out famines, economic depressions, revolutions and wars, but who also find their greatest profits in their manipulations of our medical care. The cynicism and malice of these conspirators is something beyond the imagination of most Americans. They deliberately mulct our people of millions of dollars each year through "charitable" organizations and then use these same organizations as key groups to bolster their Medical Monopoly. Fear and intimidation are the basic techniques by which the conspirators maintain their control over all aspects of our health care, as they ruthlessly crush any competitor who challenges their profits. As in other aspects of their "behavioural control" over the American people, their most constantly used weapon against us is their employment of federal agents and federal agencies to carry out their intrigues. The proof of this operation may be the most disturbing revelation of my work.

Acknowledgement:
I am grateful to the staff of the Library of Congress in Washington, D.C. for their courtesy and cooperation in the preparation of this work.

Eustace Mullins
February 22, 1988

Chapter 1. The Medical Monopoly

The practice of medicine may not be the world's oldest profession, but it is often seen to be operating on much the same principles. Not only does the client wonder if he is getting what he is paying for, but in many instances, he is dismayed to find that he has actually gotten something he had not bargained for. An examination of the record shows that the actual methods of medical practice have not changed that much through the eons. The recently discovered Ebers papyrus shows that as early as 1600 B.C., more than nine hundred prescriptions were available to the physician, including opium as a pain-killing drug. As late as 1700, commonly used medications included cathartics such as senna, aloe, figs and castor oil. Intestinal worms were treated by aspidium roots (the male fern), pomegranate bark, or wormseed oil. In the East this was obtained from the flowers of santonin; in the Western Hemisphere it was pressed from the fruit and leaves of chenopodium.

Analgesics or pain relievers were alcohol, hyoscyamus leaves, and opium. Hyoscyamus contains scopolamine, used to induce "twilight sleep" in modem medicine. In the sixteenth century, Arabs used colchicum, a saffron derivative, for rheumatic pains and gout. Cinchona bark, the source of quinine, was used to treat malaria; chaulmoogra oil was used for leprosy, and ipecac for amoebic dysentery. Burned sponge at one time was used as a treatment for goiter; its content of iodine provided the cure. Midwives used ergot to contract the uterus. Some two hundred years ago, the era of modern medicine was ushered in by Sir Humphry Davy's discovery of the anaesthetic properties of nitrous oxide. Michael Faraday discovered ether, and Wilhelm Surtner isolated morphine from opium.

Until the late nineteenth century, doctors practiced as free lance agents, which meant that they assumed all the risks of their decisions. The poor rarely encountered a doctor, as medical ministrations were generally confined to the rich and powerful. Curing a monarch could bring great rewards but failing to cure him could be a fatal mistake. Perhaps it was the awareness of the personal risks of this profession which gave rise to the plan for monopoly, to level out the risks and rewards among a chosen few. The attempts to build up this medical monopoly have now created a modem plague, while the resolve to maintain this monopoly has cost the public dearly in money and suffering.

Almost five centuries ago, one of the first attempts to set up this monopoly took place in England. The Act of 1511, signed into law by King Henry the Eighth, in England, made it an offence to practice physic or surgery without the approval of a panel of "experts." This Act was formalized in 1518 with the founding of the Royal College of Physicians. In 1540, barbers and surgeons were granted similar powers, when the King granted approval of their company. They immediately launched a campaign to eliminate the unauthorized practitioners who had served the poor. Apparently there is nothing new under the sun, as much the same campaign has long been underway in the United States. This harassment of doctors who served the poor caused such widespread suffering in England that King Henry the 8th was forced to enact the Quacks Charter in 1542. This Charter exempted the "unauthorized practitioners" and allowed them to continue their ministrations. No such charter has ever been granted in the United States, where a "quack" is not only an unauthorized practitioner, that is, one who has not been "approved" by the American Medical Association or one of the government agencies under its control, but he is also subject to immediate arrest. It is interesting that the chartering of quacks is not one of the features of English life which was passed on to its American colony.

In 1617, the Society of Apothecaries was formed in England. In 1832, the British Medical Association was chartered; this became the impetus for the forming of a similar association, the American Medical Association, in the United States. From its earliest inception, the American Medical Association has had one principal objective, attaining and defending a total monopoly of the practice of medicine in the United States. From its outset, the AMA made allopathy the basis of its practice. Allopathy was a type of medicine whose practitioners had received training in a recognized academic school of medicine, and who relied heavily on surgical procedures and the use of medications. The leaders of this brand of medicine had been trained in Germany. They were dedicated to the frequent use of bleeding and heavy doses of drugs. They were inimical to any form of medicine which had not proceeded from the academies and which did not follow standardized or orthodox procedures.

Allopathy set up an intense rivalry with the prevalent nineteenth school of medicine, the practice of homeopathy. This school was the creation of a doctor named Christian Hahnemann (1755-1843). It was based on his formula, "similibus cyrentur," like cures like. Homeopathy is of even greater significance to our time, because it works through the immune system, using nontoxic doses of substances which are similar to those causing the illness. Even today, Queen Elizabeth is still treated by her personal homeopathic physician at Buckingham Palace. Yet, in the United States, organized medicine continues its frenetic drive to discredit and stamp out the practice of homeopathic medicine. Ironically, Dr. George H. Simmons, who dominated the American Medical Association from 1899 to 1924, building that organization into a national power, had for years run advertisements in Lincoln, Nebraska, where he practiced, which proclaimed that he was a "homeopathic physician."

Clinical trials have shown that homeopathy is as effective as certain widely prescribed arthritic drugs, and also having the overriding advantage that it produces no harmful side effects. However, the accomplishments of homeopathy have historically been given the silent treatment, or, if mentioned at all, were greatly misinterpreted or distorted. A classic case of this technique occurred in England during the devastating outbreak of cholera in 1854; records showed that during this epidemic, deaths at homeopathic hospitals were only 16.4%, as compared to the death rate of 50% at the orthodox medical hospitals. This record was deliberately suppressed by the Board of Health of the City of London.

During the nineteenth century, the practice of homeopathy spread rapidly throughout the United States and Europe. Dr. Hahnemann had written a textbook, "Homeopathica Materia Medica," which enabled many practitioners to adopt his methods.

In 1847, when the American Medical Association was founded in the United States, homeopaths outnumbered allopaths, the AMA type of doctors, by more than two to one. Because of the individualistic nature of the homeopathic profession, and the fact that they usually practiced alone, they were unprepared for the concerted onslaught of the allopaths. From its beginning, the AMA proved that it was merely a trade lobby, which had been organized for the purpose of stifling competition and driving the homeopaths out of business. By the early 1900s, as the AMA began to achieve this goal, American medicine began to enter its Dark Age. Only now is it beginning to emerge from those decades of darkness, as a new, holistic movement calls for treating the entire physical system, instead of concentrating on one affected part.

A distinctive feature of the AMA's allopathic school of medicine was its constant self-advertisement and promotion of a myth, the myth that its type of medicine was the only one which was effective. This pernicious development created a new monster, the mad doctor as a person of absolute infallibility, whose judgment must never be questioned. Most certainly, his mistakes must never be mentioned. As Ivan Ilyich has pointed out in his shocking book, "Medical Nemesis, the Expropriation of Health" (1976), not only has the effectiveness of the allopathic school of medicine proved to be the stuff of mythology, but the doctors have now brought new plagues into being, illnesses which Ilyich defines as "iatrogenic," causing a plague which he terms "iatrogenesis." Ilyich claims that this plague is now sweeping this nation. He defines iatrogenesis as an "illness which is caused by a doctor's medical intervention." Ilyich goes on to define three commonly encountered types of iatrogenesis; clinical iatrogenesis, which is a doctor-made illness; social iatrogenesis, which is deliberately created by the machinations of the medical-industrial complex; and cultural iatrogenesis, which saps the peoples will to survive. Of the three types of iatrogenesis, the third may be the most prevalent. Advertisements for various medications call it "stress," the difficulty of surmounting the problems of every day life which are caused by the totalitarian government and the sinister figures behind it, who operate it for their own personal gain. Confronted with this monstrous presence, which intrudes into every aspect of an American citizen's daily life, many people are overcome by a feeling of hopelessness, and are persuaded that there is nothing they can do. In fact, this monster is extremely vulnerable, because it is so greatly overextended, and when attacked, can be seen to be a paper tiger.

Despite the AMA's frenetic claims of improving medical care, records show that the state of American health is declining. During the nineteenth century, it had shown steady improvement, probably because of the ministrations of the homeopaths. A typical disease of the period was tuberculosis. In 1812, the death rate from tuberculosis in New York was 700 per 100,000. When Koch isolated the bacillus in 1882, this death rate had already declined to 370. In 1910, when the first TB sanatorium was opened, this rate had further declined to 180 per 100,000. By 1950, this death rate had dropped to 50 per 100,000. Medical records prove that a 90% decline in child mortality from scarlet fever, diphtheria, whooping cough and measles occurred before the introduction of antibiotics and immunization, from 1860-1896. This was also well before the Food and Drug Act was passed in 1905, which set up governmental control of interstate commerce in drugs.

In 1900, there was only one doctor for every 750 Americans. They had usually served a two year apprenticeship, after which they could look forward to earning about the same salary as a good mechanic. In 1900, the AMA Journal, which was already under the editorship of Dr. George H. Simmons, sounded the call to arms. "The growth of the profession must be stemmed if individual members are to find the practice of medicine a lucrative profession." One would find difficulty in reading in the literature of any profession a more determined demand for monopoly. But how was this goal to be achieved ? The Merlin who was to wave his magic wand and bring about this dramatic development in the medical profession turned out to be none other than the richest man in the world, the insatiable monopolist, John D. Rockefeller. Fresh from his triumph of organizing his gigantic oil monopoly, a victory as well-blooded as any ancient Roman triumph, Rockefeller, the creature of the House of Rothschild and its Wall Street emissary, Jacob Schiff, realized that a medical monopoly might bring him even greater profits than his oil trust. In 1892, Rockefeller appointed Frederick T. Gates as his agent, conferring upon him the title of "head of all his philanthropic endeavors." As it turned out, each of Rockefeller's well-publicized "philanthropies" was specifically designed to increase not only his wealth and power, but also the wealth and power of the hidden figures whom he so ably represented.

Frederick T. Gates' first present to Rockefeller was a plan to dominate the entire medical education system in the United States. The initial step was taken by the organization of the Rockefeller Institute of Medical Research. In 1907, the AMA "requested" the Carnegie Foundation to conduct a survey of all the medical schools of the nation. Even at this early date, the Rockefeller interests had already achieved substantial working control of the Carnegie Foundations which has been maintained ever since. It is well known in the foundation world that the Camegie Foundations (there are several), are merely feeble adjuncts of the Rockefeller Foundation. The Carnegie Foundation named one Abraham Flexner to head up its study of medical schools. Coincidentally, his brother Simon was the head of the Rockefeller Institute of Medical Research. The Flexner Report was completed in 1910, after many months of travel and study. It was heavily influenced by the German-trained allopathic representation in the American medical profession. It was later revealed that the primary influence on Flexner had been his trip to Baltimore. He had been a graduate of Johns Hopkins University. This school had been established by Daniel Coit Gilman (1831-1908). Gilman had been one of the three original incorporators of the Russell Trust at Yale University (now known as the Brotherhood of Death). Its Yale headquarters had a letter in German authorizing Gilman to set up this branch of the Illuminati in the United States. Gilman incorporated the Peabody Fund and the John Slater Fund, which later became the Rockefeller Foundation. Gilman also became an original incorporator of Rockefeller's General Education Board, which was to take over the United States system of medical education; the Carnegie Foundation and the Russell Sage Foundation. At Johns Hopkins University. Gilman also taught Richard Ely, who became the evil genius of Woodrow Wilson's education. Gilman's final achievement in the last year of his life was to advise Herbert Hoover on the advisability of setting up a think tank. Hoover later followed Gilman's plan in setting up the Hoover Institution after the First World War. This institution furnished the movers and shapers of the "Reagan Revolution" in Washington. Not surprisingly, the American people found themselves saddled with even more debt and an even more oppressive federal bureaucracy, all the result of Daniel Coit Gilman's Illuminati prospectus.

Flexner spent much of his time at Johns Hopkins University finalizing his report. The medical school, which had only been established in 1893, was considered to be very up-todate. It was also the headquarters of the German allopathic school of medicine in the United States. Flexner, born in Louisville, Ky., had studied at the University of Berlin. The president of the Zionist Organization of America, Louis Brandeis, also from Louisville, was an old friend of the Flexner family. After Woodrow Wilson appointed Brandeis to the Supreme Court, Brandeis appointed himself a delegate to Paris to attend the Versailles Peace Conference in 1918. His purpose was to advance the goals of the Zionist movement at this conference. Bernard Flexner, who was then an attorney in New York, was asked to accompany Brandeis as the official legal counsel to the Zionist delegation in Pads. Bernard Flexner later became a founding member of the Council on Foreign Relations, and a trustee of the Rockefeller Foundation with his brother Simon.

Simon Flexner had been appointed the first director of the Rockefeller Institute of Medical Research at its organization in 1903. Abraham Flexner joined the Carnegie Foundation for the Advancement of Teaching in 1908, serving there until his retirement in 1928. He also served for years as a member of Rockefeller's General Education Board. He was awarded a Rhodes Memorial lectureship at Oxford University. His definitive work was published in 1913, "Prostitution in Europe."

Abraham Flexner submitted a final report to Rockefeller which apparently was satisfactory in every way. Its first point was an emphatic agreement with the AMA's lament that there were too many doctors. The Flexner solution was a simple one; to make medical education so elitist and expensive, and so drawn out, that most students would be prohibited from even considering a medical career. The Flexner program set up requirements for four years of undergraduate college, and a further four years of medical school. His report also set up complex requirements for the medical schools; they must have expensive laboratories and other equipment. As the requirements of the Flexner Report became effective, the number of medical schools was rapidly reduced. By the end of World War I, the number of medical schools had been reduced from 650 to a mere 50 in number. The number of annual graduates had been reduced from 7500 to 2500. The enactment of the Flexner restrictions virtually guaranteed that the Medical Monopoly in the United States would result in a small group of elitist students from well to do families, and that this small group would be subjected to intense controls.

What has the Flexner Report cost the average American citizen ? Some recent statistics throw light on the situation. The New York Times reported that in 1985, the cost of health care per person in the United States was $1800 per year; in England, $800 per year; in Japan, $600 per year. Yet both England and Japan rank higher on the scale of quality of medical care than the United States. Compared to Japan, for instance, which has a higher living standard than the United States, but which furnished its citizens with quality medical care for $600 per person each year, comparative medical care in the United States cannot be valued higher than $500 per year per person. What is the $1300 per person difference ? It is the $300 billion per year looting of the American public by the Medical Monopoly, in overcharges, criminal syndicalist activities, and the operations of the Drug Trust.

AntiSionist - March 15, 2009 05:09 AM (GMT)

Chapter 2. Quacks on Quackery

Quack--an ignorant pretender to medical or surgical skill.
Quackery--charlatanty. 1783, Crabbe, Village 1, "A potent quack, long versed in human ills, who first insults the victim whom he kills."
Oxford English Dictionary

The first significant figure in American medicine, according to Geoffrey Marks, was the theologian Cotton Mather (1663-1728). The son of Increase Mather, the President of Harvard University, Cotton Mather wrote many theological works, but also wrote a full length medical work, "The Angel of Bethesda" on which he wrote from 1720 to 1724. His medical letters drew heavily on local Indian lore; he also pondered the mental factor in illness, noting that "A cheerful Heart does Good like a Medicine, but a broken Spirit dries the Bones."

Mather seems to have been the first and last theologian to be interested in the practice of American medicine. The next figure of importance in American medicine was a Dr. Nathan Smith Davis (1817-1904). After apprenticing under Dr. Daniel Clark in upstate New York, Davis moved to New York in 1847. As early as 1845, he had demanded that the Medical Society of the State of New York correct the more flagrant abuses in medical education, insisting that the four months of instruction then in vogue be increased to a period of six months. On May 11, 1846, he convened a group of physicians in New York to form the nucleus of the American Medical Association. The organization took on formal status the following year in Philadelphia, on May 5, 1847, the official date the American Medical Association came into being. The hundred delegates to the New York meeting had swelled to over two hundred and fifty at Philadelphia. They soon formed state organizations in a number of states. Smith later moved to Chicago, where he joined the faculty of Rush Medical School. In 1883, when the AMA founded its Journal, he became the first editor, serving until 1889.

Despite the good intentions of its founder, Dr. Davis, the AMA remained moribund for some fifty years. In 1899, the organization took a giant step forward, with the arrival of one Dr. George H. Simmons from Nebraska. Simmons, who throughout his life was known, perhaps derisively, as "Doc," is now remembered as the pre-eminent American quack. Born in Moreton, England, Simmons immigrated to the United States in 1870. Settling in the Midwest, he began his career as a joumalist. It is interesting that the two other dominant figures in twentieth century American medicine, Dr. Morris Fishbein and Albert Lasker, also began their careers as journalists; Fishbein remained a journalist all his life. Simmons became the editor of the Nebraska Farmer in Lincoln, Nebraska.

Several years later, he decided to improve his finances by launching on a career of unparalleled medical quackery. Interestingly enough, the AMA in 1868 had formally defined quackery as "the sale or administration of drugs or treatments that are not approved by legally constituted medical authorities." Simmons ignored this requirement. No one has ever been able to determine that he had studied anywhere to qualify for a medical degree. Nevertheless, he began to advertise that he was a "licentiate of the Rotunda Hospital of Dublin," referring, presumably, to Dublin, Ireland. In fact, Dublin Hospital had never issued any licenses, nor was it authorized to do so. (See Illustration No. 2, full page opposite.)

No one ever bothered to raise the question as to why Simmons, who had supposedly arrived in the United States as a duly licensed physician, chose instead to practice journalism for some years. He also advertised that he had spent "a year and a half in the largest hospitals in London," although he refrained from making any claims as to what capacity whether as a patient, an orderly or other functionary. Years later, he obtained a diploma by mail from one of the nation's flourishing diploma mills, Rush Medical College in Chicago, while maintaining a full time medical practice in Lincoln. There is no record that he ever set foot on the campus of Rush Medical College prior to obtaining this degree. His protege, Morris Fishbein, also attended Rush Medical College. There was some question as to whether Fishbein ever actually graduated; years later, in his time of influence, he became a "professor" there, specializing in teaching the public relations aspects of medicine.

In their definitive work, "The Story of Medicine in America," an exhaustive and detailed compilation, the authors, Geoffrey Marks and William K. Beatty, make no mention of either Simmons or Fishbein, seemingly a glaring omission, as they are the two most notorious practitioners in our medical history. Apparently realizing that these two men were the two most famous quacks in medical history, the authors prudently decided to ignore them.

In Who's Who Simmons notes that he practiced medicine in Lincoln from 1884 to 1899. He lists his degree as L.M. Dublin 1884. This raises further questions. Simmons had immigrated to the United States in 1870; he remained continuously in Lincoln from 1870 to 1899, when he went to Chicago. For some reason, he forebore the listing of the mail order diploma from Rush Medical College in his Who's Who listing in the 1936 edition; he had listed it in the 1922 edition as receiving it in 1892. Here again, no one later raised the question of his educational record, which showed that he only began his medical education in Dublin after he had come to the United States. "Doc" Simmons' advertisements in Lincoln, which we have reproduced here, employed a standard phraseology of the time, "A limited number of lady patients can be accommodated at my residence." This was a coded notification that he was engaged in the practice of abortion. He also operated a beauty and massage parlor on the premises, as part of a "Lincoln Institute" of which he was apparently the only official. His advertisements also identified him as a "homeopathic physician," although he would soon embark on a career with the AMA to destroy the profession of homeopathy in the United States. His advertisements announced that he "treats all medical and surgical diseases of women."

Having learned about the American Medical Association, Simmons, always in search of more status, formed a Nebraska chapter, the Nebraska Medical Association. His talents as an organizer came to the attention of the Chicago headquarters, and he was summoned to take over the editorship of the Journal of the AMA. Thus "Doc" Simmons came to the AMA, not as a physician, but as a journalist. He found that the AMA was drifting along, with no one capable of implementing a national policy. The situation was made to order for a man of his capacities and drive. He soon named himself as secretary and general manager of the American Medical Association, launching the organization on its dictatorial and self-aggrandizing policies which it has maintained to the present day. All moneys accruing to the AMA passed through Simmons' hands, and he personally supervised every detail of the operations. He soon found an able and willing lieutenant in a man who had formerly served as a Secretary of the Kentucky State Board of Health. He seems to have been a man after Simmons' own heart, for he had been arrested after examiners found a shortage of some $62,000 in his accounts. As a member in good standing of the state bureaucracy, he managed to obtain an official pardon from the Governor of Kentucky, with the gentle admonition that it might be best for him to settle elsewhere. Chicago was only a short train ride away, where he found that Simmons was overwhelmed by his credentials. This gentleman, Dr. E.E. Hyde, died in 1912 from leukemia. This proved to be a fortuitous circumstance for another joumalist waiting in the wings, Dr. Morris Fishbein. Fishbein had apparently completed his studies at Rush Medical College, but he had not yet been awarded his diploma. In any case, he did not want to become a doctor. He had desultorily served as an intern at Durand Hospital for a few months, but he was unwilling to comply with the then regulations requiring a two year internship in an accredited hospital. He was seriously considering a career as a circus acrobat, and had been working part time as an extra in an opera company. He had also learned of a possible opening at the AMA, and had been doing some part time writing there during Dr. Hyde's terminal illness. Simmons had also found Fishbein to be a man after his own heart. When Dr. Hyde died. Simmons at once offered the youth a very handsome starting salary of $100 a month, a high figure for 1913. Fishbein found a home at the AMA; he did not leave until 1949, when he was literally kicked out.

With the advent of Fishbein, the American Medical Association was now firmly in the hands of the nation's two most aggressive quacks, Simmons, who had practised medicine for years, unembarrassed by the fact that he had no medical degree which would hold up under the light of day, and Morris Fishbein, who admitted under oath in 1938 that he had never practised medicine a day in his life. Because "Doc" Simmons, as he was genially known, had never shown any motivation in his career except greed, he soon realized that the enormous power of which the AMA was capable had in effect launched him into a gold mine. He was not slow to request certain considerations in return for the favor or the goodwill of the AMA. First and foremost was its "Seal of Approval" for new products. Since the AMA early on had virtually no laboratory, testing equipment or research staff, the Seal of Approval was obtained by "green research," that is, the laborious determination of how much the supplicant could afford to pay, and how much it might be worth to him. At first, some pharmaceutical manufacturers resented this arrangement, and refused to pay. The leader of this opposition was one Dr. Wallace C. Abbott, who had founded Abbott Laboratories in 1900. Simmons met him head on by refusing to approve a single product of Abbott Laboratories, no matter how many were submitted. This standoff continued for some time, until one morning, "Doc" Simmons was visibly shaken to see Dr. Abbott towering over him in his office.

"Well, sir," he stammered, "and just what can I do for you ?"

"I just came down to hear from you personally" Dr. Abbott replied, "why not one of my products has ever been approved by the AMA."

"That's not really my department, sir," "Doc" Simmons replied, "but I'll be glad to check with our research department and find out what the problem is."

"Is there any way I could speed up your inquiry ?" asked Dr. Abbott.

Simmons was overjoyed. At last the stubborn chemist was beginning to see things his way. "I'll be glad to do whatever I can," he said. "There is something you can do," said Dr. Abbott, "if you would be so good as to look over these documents, it might help you to make up your mind."

He spread a number of papers out on "Doc" Simmons' desk. Simmons immediately realized that he was looking at a complete record of his career, carefully garnered by private detectives who had been hired by Dr. Abbott. There were the full details of the so-called "diplomas"; records of sex charges brought against Simmons by former patients in Lincoln, and other titillating items, such as charges of medical negligence resulting in the deaths of patients. He knew that he was trapped.

"All right," said Simmons, "just what is it you want ?"

"All I want is to have the AMA grant approval of my products," said Dr. Abbott. "Do you think that is possible, now ?"

"You've got it," said Simmons. From that day, the products from Abbott's firm, which was still called Abbott Biologicals at that time, were rushed through the AMA process and marked "Approved." Dr. Abbott never paid one cent for this special treatment.

Through the years, various versions of the Abbott-Simmons conflict were repeated. A whitewashed version appears in Tom Mahoney's "Merchants of Life," which claims that Simmons objected to Dr. Abbott's "commercialization" of the medical profession, and wished to teach him a lesson. The Council on Pharmacy and Chemistry not only refused to approve any of Abbott's drugs, but also turned down his requests to advertise in the journal of the American Medical Association, and later refused to print his letters of protest. Simmons then launched personal attacks on Dr. Abbott in the Journal in the issues of December 1907 and March 1908. Simmons' pious claim that he did not wish to see Dr. Abbott commercializing the medical profession rings hollow; Abbott was manufacturing pharmaceutical products for sale. The rub was that he refused to pay the usual shakedown to Simmons. After the imbroglio was settled, S. DeWitt Clough, Abbott's advertising manager, became a bridge playing crony of Morris Fishbein.

A spirited critic of the AMA during its Simmons-Fishbein period, Dr. Emanuel Josephson of New York, wrote, "The methods which Simmons and his crew used in their battle for a monopoly of medical publications and of advertisements to the profession were often crude and illegitimate ... The AMA has openly threatened firms that advertise in media other than their own journals with withdrawal of ‘acceptance' of their products." Dr. Josephson described Simmons' practices as "conspiracy in restraint of trade, and extortion." He further charged, again correctly, that "almost every branch of the Federal Government active in the field of medicine was completely dominated by the Association." This was borne out by the present writer, who cites many instances later of government agencies actively implementing the most horrendous cases of racketeering by the Drug Trust. So exhaustive were the controls set in place by Simmons that the President of the AMA, Dr. Nathan B. van Etten, later filed a sworn affidavit in the New York District Court that he, as President of the American Medical Association, had no authority to accept any moneys or enter into any contracts. All such deals were the province of the Chicago headquarters staff. It was later noted that AMA "focuses on protecting physicians' incomes against government intrusion in the practice of medicine." This was a case of having their cake and eating it too. While steadfastly opposing any government supervision of the Medical Monopoly, the monopolists frequently forced various government agencies to act against anyone who posed a threat to their monopoly, having them arrested, prosecuted, and sent to prison.

"Doc" Simmons' lucrative dominance of the American Medical Association led him into numerous sidelines. In 1921, he established the Institute of Medicine in Chicago. This apparently was nothing more than a holding company for his bribes. He had also been enjoying the perquisites of the American success story, a buxom mistress installed in a luxurious Gold Coast apartment. Scoundrel that he was, Simmons was not content to flaunt this liaison to his wife; he also became increasingly cruel in his determination to get rid of her. He then embarked on a classic ploy, the physician attempting to dispose of an unwanted wife by plying her with narcotics, trying to convince her that she is going insane, and hopefully, driving her to suicide. After some months of this treatment, his wife fought back by filing suit against him. A highly publicized trial in 1924 ended in his wife's testimony that he had given her heavy doses of narcotics, prescribed on the strength of his "medical experience," and then began proceedings to have her declared insane. This was not such an unusual procedure during that period; it had happened to literally hundreds of wives. However, his wife proved to be tougher than most victims. She testified in court that he had tried to have her framed on a charge of insanity. This trial inspired more than a dozen subsequent books, plays, and movies based on the story of a physician who tries to drive his wife insane through a campaign of ministration of drugs and psychological terrorism. The most famous was "Gaslight," in which Charles Boyer played the role of "Doc" Simmons to perfection, the luckless wife being played by Ingrid Bergman.

The trial brought Simmons a torrent of unpleasant publicity, and forced his retirement as head of the AMA. However, he retained the title of "general editor emeritus," absenting himself in 1924 until his death in 1937. Morris Fishbein, still operating under his lucky star, was now moved into total dominance of the AMA. Between the two of them, they controlled the AMA for more than a half century, perfecting their techniques for using this organization to raise money, exercise political clout, and maintain dominance over physicians, hospitals, drug companies and concerned government agencies. Simmons moved to Hollywood, Florida, where he lived until 1937. His New York Times obituary was headlined "Noted for War on Quacks." His longtime critic, Dr. Emanuel Josephson, noted that this was an odd memorial for a man who had long been known as "the Prince of Quacks."

Morris Fishbein also inherited Simmons' able assistant at the AMA, Dr. Olin West (1874-1952). West had been state director in Tennessee for the Rockefeller Sanitary Commission from 1910 to 1918. Thus he had the requisite credentials as a representative of the Rockefeller connection at the AMA headquarters. Dr. Josephson later termed Fishbein "the Hitler of the medical profession" and West as "his Goering." Fishbein remained aware of the AMA's ability to "use" government employees for AMA purposes. Of the first fifteen members of the Council on Pharmacy and Chemistry, three had been members of the federal government.

With the disappearance of Simmons, Fishbein now had a free hand. From that day on, he made sure that when anyone mentioned the AMA, they also paid tribute to Moms Fishbein. He used his position there to launch a host of private enterprises, including book publishing, lecturing, and writing feature newspaper columns. On a very modest salary of $24,000 a year from the AMA, Fishbein became the Playboy of the Western World. His children were supervised by a French governess, while he commuted weekly to New York to be seen at the Stork Club and to attend first nights at the theatre. Fees, kickbacks, awards and other moneys poured into his coffers in a veritable flood. During his twenty-five years of power at the AMA, he never lost an opportunity to advertise and enrich himself. Despite the fact that he had never practiced medicine a day in his life, he persuaded King Features Syndicate to sign him on as daily columnist writing a "medical" commentary which appeared in over two hundred newspapers. A full page ad appeared in Editor and Publisher to celebrate his new venture on March 23, 1940, stating "An authority of medicine, Dr. Fishbein's name is synonymous with the ‘sterling' stamp on a piece of silver." Whether this was an oblique reference to Judas is not clear.

Fishbein garnered additional income by having himself named medical adviser to Look Magazine, the second largest publication in the United States. In 1935, he had ventured into what was probably his greatest financial coup, the annual publication of a massive volume, "the Modern Home Medical Adviser." The book was written for him by doctors on consignment, but he wrote the lurid advertising copy, "Endorsed by doctors everywhere. The Wealthiest Millionaire Could Not Buy Better Health Guidance." Obviously, no doctor anywhere dared to criticize the book.

Fishbein's steadily aggrandizing powers at the AMA were veiled by the fact that he never had any title there except "editor." He maintained absolute control over all the publications of the AMA, and thus gained his total power over the organization. No one who disagreed with him had any opportunity to voice any discontent. He also maintained absolute control over the selection of the personnel of the various committees of the AMA, so that no one was ever in a position to attack him. The Committee on Food and the Council on Pharmacy and Chemistry were his particular preserves, because of the great power they had over manufacturers and advertisers. The Council on Pharmacy and Chemistry had been set up in 1905, at the same time that the Food and Drug Act had been passed by congress; the two groups always worked together very closely. As advertising revenues increased each year, Fishbein steadfastly denied that any profits were being made by the AMA. He was quoted in Review of Reviews, 1926, "Far from being the ‘corporation not for profit' which the statutes list it, the American Medical Association has been exceedingly profitable to the public, both in dollars and in lives." Thus Fishbein adeptly turned aside growing criticism of the income of the AMA by his claim that it was profitable to the public at large.

Under Fishbein's editorship, the AMA health magazine, Hygiea, carried the banner headline, "PURE FOODS, HONESTLY ADVERTISED." "The Seal of Acceptance of the Committee on Foods of the AMA is your best guarantee that the claims of quality for any product are correct and that the advertising for it is truthful. Look for this Seal on every food that you buy. White Star Tuna and Chicken of the Sea brand Tuna have this acceptance." At the very time that Fishbein was running these advertisements, the Food and Drug Administration was repeatedly seizing shipments of these very brands of tuna, condemning them because "they consisted in whole or in part of decomposed animal substance." So much for the Seal of Acceptance.

The AMA Committee on Foods always verged on the brink of exposure or serious damage suits, because it had virtually no testing apparatus. The June 24, 1931 issue of Business Week raised serious questions about these operations, particularly the power of the AMA to censor manufacturers' ad copy. Business Week asked "whether a national body of professional men conducted presumably on the highest ethical plane, is not continually exceeding the natural boundaries of its actions when it attempts to assume police and regulatory powers over the nation's largest industry." The editors of Business Week were well aware that the staff at AMA did little testing and were not qualified to render judgments on the "acceptance" of products. The magazine story may have been intended as a quiet warning to the AMA to cease and desist its activities in this field. They reckoned without Fishbein's chutzpah. The AMA Committee on Foods, under Fishbein's guidance, continued its operations for another decade. In 1939, Fishbein awarded the Seal of Acceptance to some 2,706 individual products, which were produced by some 1,653 companies. Its chief rival in this field, the Good Housekeeping Seal of Approval, had also come under increasing fire for its aggressive tactics in seeking more customers for its Seal. In May 1941, the Federal Trade Commission issued "cease and desist" orders against the Good Housekeeping Seal; Fishbein saw the handwriting on the wall, and shortly afterwards, he discontinued the AMA Seal of Acceptance awards for general purpose foods.

The Council on Pharmacy and Chemistry was quite another matter. This was the key to the big money. A drug company could make one hundred million dollars on a new product, if it were to be released under the proper auspices; the most vital, of course, was the AMA Seal of Acceptance. The opportunities for large scale bribery, conspiracy and corruption were too prevalent to be ignored. One physician who was very conscious of this was Dr. Emanuel Josephson of New York. Heir to a large fortune, Dr. Josephson resided in a multimillion dollar townhouse in the city's most expensive area, just around the corner from Nelson Rockefeller on the fashionable Upper East Side. Josephson was unable to conceal his contempt for Fishbein and his money-grubbing activities. On January 2, 1932, he officially resigned from the AMA's New York City Medical Society; the AMA chose to ignore his letter of resignation until 1938, when Fishbein released a letter claiming that the AMA "had severed connections with him." In 1939, Dr. Josephson submitted the important record of his ground breaking research to Science Magazine, "Vitamin E Therapy of Myasthenia Gravis," which they refused to print. Dr. Josephson later pointed out that the AMA had deliberately concealed the benefits of Vitamin E therapy for more than twenty-five years. This was only one instance of hundreds in which the AMA withheld life-saving information from the public. The benefits of Vitamin E therapy are now generally recognized by the medical profession.

The AMA technique for controlling all new products was revealed by a United Press dispatch January 20, 1940, that the AMA had a well-defined newspaper policy "never to call anything a cure, or in fact give publicity to any remedy of any description, without a thorough investigation." The organization usually recommended that any report of a remedy should be referred to the New York branch of the AMA for investigation. As Dr. Josephson testified, he had tried for years to get the New York chapter of the AMA to investigate his findings, but they always refused.

The AMA Council on Pharmacy and Chemistry had effectively solidified its control by amending the official AMA Code of Ethics to prohibit individual physicians from giving any testimonials in favor of any drug; this amendment protected the valuable monopoly of AMA headquarters in Chicago. A distinguished scientist and teacher, Dr. Frank G. Lydston, published a booklet, "Why the AMA is Going Backward," in which he stated, "The achievement of what the oligarchy of the AMA has boasted most vociferously has been its belated war on proprietaries, quack medical manufacturers and unproved products. When I recall the nauseous array of proprietary fakes on the advertisements on which the oligarchy built its financial prosperity, its ‘holier than thou' pose is sickening. It was fitting to its psychic constitution that after the AMA has for years done its level best to promulgate the interests, and to fatten upon, fake manufacturers and professional poisoners of the innocent, it should bite the hand that fed it. Despotic powers such as the oligarchy wields over the food and drug manufacturers is dangerous, and human nature being what it is, that power might be expected to sooner or later to be abused."

Dr. Josephson also observed that "The history of the AMA's Seal of Acceptance is replete with betrayals of professional and public trust. Drug products of the highest value have been rejected or their acceptance unwarrantedly delayed. Worthless, dangerous or deadly food and drugs have been hastily accepted."

On April 20, 1936, Time magazine reported that the American Medical Association was then worth $3,800,000, of which two million was in government bonds, one million in cash, with an $800,000 headquarters building in Chicago. Time also mentioned another little known aspect of the AMA medical monopoly, "Shoes designed to correct foot trouble must be approved by AMA before a conscientious physician may prescribe them." Just how the AMA had set up this shoe monopoly was not clear.

On July 7, 1961, Time reported that the AMA Journal now had a circulation of 180,000, with income of 16 million dollars a year, "the bulk from ads in its publications mainly by drug and appliance makers." The AMA Constitution states that it was organized "to promote the art and science of medicine and the betterment of public health." Yet the history of the AMA was replete with events which contradicted this goal. Literary Digest reported on June 11, 1927, the AMA had adopted a resolution that alcohol had no scientific place in medicine. In all fairness, it should be reported that the 1917 resolution had probably been passed at the behest of the Rockefeller interests, which, for their own hidden purposes, were strongly supporting passage of prohibition at that time.

On February 9, 1977, the Federal Trade Commission issued an order against the AMA because it had barred certain drug advertisements. Throughout the 25-year reign of Morris Fishbein at the AMA, the organization repeatedly made bewildering about face recommendations on certain products, the reason for such reversals being known only by Fishbein himself. The situation also offered impressive profits to be made by investing in the stock of a certain drug firm just before it received the coveted AMA Seal of Acceptance for a new product. After such an announcement, it was not unusual for the stock of the drug firm to double in price. Only Dr. Fishbein knew when such an approval would be released.

One of the more reprehensible decisions made by Dr. Fishbein during his long reign at the AMA was his move to hush up a dangerous outbreak of amoebic dysentery in Chicago at the height of the World's Fair observance in 1933. Although the cause of the outbreak was traced to faulty plumbing at the Congress Hotel, Fishbein met with a group of Chicago business leaders and pledged the cooperation of the AMA in holding back any warnings until the Fair had ended its season. Hundreds of unsuspecting tourists who visited the World's Fair returned to their home towns infected with the terrible illness, which often lingers for years, and is very difficult to treat or to cure.

The list of dangerous drugs approved by Fishbein during his tenure as public spokesman for the AMA is lengthy and terrifying. Fishbein hastened to approve the notorious diet drug, dinetrophenol, despite laboratory records that it was dangerous to health. Another drug, tryparsamide, manufactured by Merck under license from the Rockefeller Institute for Medical Research, was a dangerous arsenical drug. Used to counter the effects of syphilis, it was abandoned by its discoverer, Paul Ehrlich, when he found that it caused blindness by atrophying the optic nerve. Ehrlich's warnings did not prevent the AMA, Merck or the Rockefeller Institute from continuing to distribute this drug.

In the issue of June 21, 1937, Morris Fishbein had a cover portrait on Time magazine. It was an unusually unflattering photograph, in which Fishbein looked as though he needed a doctor. Time had published a story earlier that year that Fishbein was suffering from Bell's Palsy. The right side of his face hung slack, and he was obviously in very poor condition.

One of Fishbein's most dangerous errors was his approval of sulfathiazole in 1941. On January 25, 1941, Fishbein announced that Winthop Drug Company's sulfathiazole "has been accepted by the Council on Pharmacy and Chemistry for inclusion in its official volume of new and non-official remedies." Winthrop was a subsidiary of the international drug cartel, I. G. Farben. Sulfathiazole was also approved by Dr. J.J. Durrett, the FDA official in charge of new drugs. Durrett was a Rockefeller-approved appointee to this vital position. By December 1940, 400,000 tablets had been sold, which contained as much as 5 grains each of Luminal. The safe dosage was 1 grain of Luminal. Many persons who took the Winthrop dosage never woke up.

In 1937, the AMA approved an extremely poisonous preparation of sulfanilamide in a solution of diethylene glucol; this mixture caused a number of fatalities. It caused white blood cell loss, even though it was advertised that it would "help" heart disease. Long after Fishbein's departure, the AMA continued to endorse potentially dangerous products. The Winter issue of the Journal of the American Medical Association featured advertisements for Suprol in 200 mg capsules (suprofen), an analgesic which had been approved by the FDA in December of 1985. It was produced by McNeil, a subsidiary of Johnson and Johnson. By February 13, 1986, the firm had received the first reports of acute kidney damage, yet on December 2nd the FDA Arthritis Advisory Board recommended that Suprol remain on sale as an "alternative analgesic." It had already been banned in Denmark, Greece, Ireland, Italy and Great Britain; McNeil suspended its production here on May 15.

One of the more reprehensible episodes in Fishbein's long career was his denial of the Seal of Acceptance of the AMA to sulfanilamide, although it had been saving lives in Europe for several years. Because its producers had failed to negotiate a satisfactory deal with Fishbein, numerous persons in the United States continued to die of septicemia, or blood poisoning. The dam finally broke when a member of the Roosevelt family, in dire need of immediate treatment with sulfanilimide, had his physician obtain a special supply. Shortly thereafter the AMA Council was forced to "accept" it. In 1935 and 1936, the Council accepted and advertised in the Journal a heart stimulant, Digitol, at the very time that government agencies were seizing and condemning interstate shipments of this drug as a substance dangerous to life. Another product, Ergot Aseptic, was accepted by the Council, and advertisements for this product prominently featured in the Journal, at the same time that government agencies were seizing and condemning its shipments because of adulterants and misbranding.

Under the leadership of the nation's two most notorious quacks, Simmons and Fishbein, a gigantic nationwide drug operation was perfected which today poses a serious threat to the health of every American citizen. The fixed prices of these drugs has been a contributing factor to the meteoric rise in the cost of health care. In 1976, the national bill was 95 billion dollars, which was 8.4% of the Gross National Product, a figure which had risen from 4.5% in 1962. From 1955-1975, the price index rose 74%, while the cost of medical care rose 300%. Dr. Robert S. Mendelsohn, an independent health practitioner, estimates that 30% of X-rays taken in the United States, some 300 million a year, are ordered when there is no valid medical need. A federal expert reports that if we would reduce the unnecessary X-rays by one-third, we could save the lives of one thousand cancer patients each year. Yet the responsible organization, the American Cancer Society, has consistently ignored this problem. The genetic effect of X-rays on the population in a single year has been predicted to cause as many as thirty thousand deaths per year in future years. In 1976, doctors wrote one billion doses for sleeping pills, some twenty-seven million prescriptions which resulted in twenty-five thousand trips to emergency rooms for adverse drug reactions, and some fifteen hundred emergency room deaths from tranquilizers. Ninety per cent of these victims are women. By 1978, five billion tranquilizer pills were being prescribed; the most notorious of these, Vallium, produces five hundred million dollars per year income for Hoffman LaRoche Co.; it is the epitome of the mythical "soma" described by Aldous Huxley in his "Brave New World," "the perfect drug, narcotic, pleasantly hallucinant."

An English study showed that aspirin caused fetal defects, deaths, birth defects, and bleeding in newborn babies. Recently, a nationwide campaign was launched proclaiming that new studies "showed" that an aspirin a day would prevent heart attack in men. An appended afterthought suggested that it might be wise to check with a personal physician before embarking on this regimen, but how many thousands of men will at once begin to take a daily aspirin, hoping to postpone a dreaded heart attack, and unaware that they may be suffering from another result of the ingestion of aspirin, internal bleeding? It is this property of thinning the blood which caused it to be recommended as a preventive for heart attack. Aspirin is also of doubtful value when taken to reduce fever; by reducing fever in some instances, notably during the onset of pneumonia, it disguises the symptoms of pneumonia so that the physician is unable to make this diagnosis. It usually takes twenty minutes to dissolve in the stomach, and then only if it is taken with a full glass, eight ounces, of water. Few people know that if aspirin is taken with orange juice, its efficacy is greatly diminished, because it may not dissolve.

In September of 1980, the Food and Drug Administration announced that it would remove from the market more than three thousand drugs whose effectiveness had not been proven. During the previous year, Americans had spent more than one billion dollars on these same "unproven" drugs, many of which had been "accepted" by the AMA. In 1962, Congress had passed amendments to the Food and Drug Act which implemented drug effectiveness requirements by 1964. The drug manufacturers resisted all attempts to force them to comply with these amendments, forcing the FDA to remove them from the market some sixteen years later. The average life of an effective drug is about fifteen years; this meant that the delaying tactics of the drug manufacturers had allowed them to milk these unproven drugs for their entire effective market life !

We now come to the most amazing record of criminal syndicalism in our history. After Congress had passed stringent requirements in 1962 to force the drug manufacturers to prove that their drugs were effective (a requirement which in many cases was impossible to observe, since they were worthless), the drug manufacturers were advised by their cohorts in the AMA and the advertising industry that it would be wise to start a brushfire, a diversionary tactic which would draw attention from the fact that they had failed to comply with the new Congressional requirements. This diversionary tactic was to be called "the War Against Quackery." A few months after the new regulations went into effect, the AMA Board of Trustees met to create a new committee, the Committee on Quackery, which was formally incorporated on November 2, 1963. It was originally intended to destroy the entire profession of chiropractic in the United States, the nation's second largest health care group. It soon branched out in search of further victims, as the "Coordinating Conference on Health Information." This subsidiary was the brainchild of a New York letterhead outfit called the Pharmaceutical Advertising Council, which in turn was merely a space on the desk of the President of Grey Medical Advertising Company, a wholly owned subsidiary of the prestigious Grey Advertising Company in New York.

Although it was ostensibly merely an advisory group, the Coordinating Conference on Health Information soon launched an all-out war on independent health practitioners all over the United States. Its victims were usually selected by the nonprofit AMA, aided by the charitable foundations, the American Cancer Society and the Arthritis Foundation, both of which had been smarting under accusations that they were killing patients while independent health advisors were saving them. The criminal syndicalists were able to enlist the full police powers of the federal government, through contacts in the Federal Trade Commission, the Post Office Department, the Food and Drug Administration, and the United States Public Health Service. These federal agents were solicited by the charitable foundations to initiate police actions against hundreds of unsuspecting health practitioners throughout the United States. It was one of the most massive, well planned and ruthless operations in which the federal agents ever engaged. In many cases, people were arrested for selling or sometimes giving away booklets which advised such innocuous health practices as taking vitamins ! These distributors now found themselves under restraining orders from the Post Office, the Department of Justice, and the Food and Drug Administration. Others, who were distributing various salves, nostrums and other preparations, most of them based on herbal formulae, received heavy fines and prison sentences. In every case, all of the stocks of these practitioners, many of whom were elderly and impoverished, were seized and destroyed as "dangerous substances." It was never alleged that a single person had ever been injured, much less killed, by any of these preparations. At the same time, the drug manufacturers were continuing to sell drugs which produced extensive side effects such as kidney damage, liver damage and death. Not one of them was ever enjoined from distributing these products on the terms used against the independent health practitioners. In most cases, when these dangerous drugs were banned in the United States, the manufacturers shipped them overseas to countries in Latin America and Asia, where they continue to be sold to this day. The stock of Syntex Corporation rose from a few dollars to a high of $400 a share when it started dumping steroids in foreign markets.

Many of the attacks were focused against the distributors of an anti-cancer preparation called laetrile, a fruit product. Extremely sensitive to any rival of their very profitable chemotherapy drugs, the cancer profiteers ordered the federal agents to carry out terror raids against their competitors. Often striking at night, in groups of heavily armed SWAT teams, the federal agents broke down doors to capture elderly women and their stocks of herbal teas. Many of these housewives and retired persons carried small amounts of vitamins and health preparations which they furnished to neighbors or friends at cost. They had no funds to fight the massed agencies of the federal government, who themselves were merely patsies for the Drug Trust. In many cases, the victims lost their homes, their life savings and all other attachable assets, because they had posed a threat to the Medical Monopoly. It was the most blatant use of the police powers by the Big Rich to protect their profitable enterprises. To this day, most of these victims have no idea that they were knocked off by the Rockefeller Monopoly.

Sidney W. Bishop, deputy postmaster general, boasted at the Second National Congress on Medical Quackery in 1963, "I am particularly proud of the excellent arrangements existing between the Food and Drug Administration, the Federal Trade Commission and the Post Office department to maintain coordination in the exchange of information leading to the establishment of criminal prosecution," a laudatory reference to the success of the "war against quackery." It was later revealed that the Coordinating Conference on Health Information had been entirely financed by the leading drug companies of the Medical Monopoly, Lederle, Hoffman LaRoche and others. From 1964 to 1974, their search and destroy campaign was carried on as a total war by federal agents against anyone who had ever offered any type of health food or health advice. The goal of course, was the elimination of all competition to the major drug companies.

In 1967, the AMA received 43% of its total income, $13.6 million, from its drug advertisements. It then issued a letter of agreement jointly with the Food and Drug Administration publicizing a campaign to "enhance public awareness of health fraud devices and products by identifying them as ineffective and potential health hazards." These were the same persons who had been unable to persuade the drug companies to comply with federal requirements that they prove the effectiveness of their drug products! The hazards, as we have stated, lay more with the Drug Trust than from the elderly ladies in California who were advising people to eat more garlic and lettuce if they wished to stay healthy. The death tolls were from "approved" drugs, not from the preparations distributed by the holistic health advocates. The AMA then sponsored a National Health Fraud Conference, whose principle spokesman was Congressman Claude Pepper. This was an ironic turn of events, because a few years earlier, the then Senator Claude Pepper, one of the most powerful political figures in Washington, had aroused the ire of the AMA because he planned to support socialized medicine in the United States. A longtime spokesman for leftwing interests, who was known as "Red" Pepper because of his political sympathies, Pepper had found himself attacked by the big guns and money of the AMA. They found a candidate to oppose him in Nixon's friend, George Smathers, and Pepper was defeated in Florida. Coming back as a Congressman, Pepper now licked the boots of those who had ousted him. He endorsed their police state methods against anyone who dared to challenge the power of the Medical Monopoly.

Having proved his loyalty to the Rockefeller power, Pepper was allowed to stage another health conference in 1984. It was denounced by informed observers as a typical "Moscow show trial." The new Pepper sideshow was called the Congressional Hearings on Quackery. Pepper claimed that "health fraud" was a ten billion dollar a year scandal, an impressive figure for what was essentially a small cottage industry. He summoned a longtime apologist for the Medical Monopoly, Dr. Victor Herbert, a physician at the Bronx Veterans Administration Hospital. Herbert demanded that the Justice Department use the RICO (Racketeer Inspired Criminal Organization) strike force against "medical charlatans" and "health frauds" by using the same techniques which had been employed against organized crime. RICO allows the government to confiscate all assets of those who are convicted "as a result of a proved conspiracy." In December of 1987, this same Dr. Victor Herbert surfaced again, filing a 70 page complaint in the U.S. District Court in Iowa. He charged that the officials of the National Health Federation, a rival to the AMA, and other alternative health care practitioners had libelled him. Kirkpatrick Dilling, the attorney for the defendants, termed the suit a flagrant attempt to destroy freedom of choice in health care in the United States. Dilling pointed out that Herbert was backed by a shadow group called the American Council for Science and Health, a front for major food manufacturing companies.

Dr. Herbert was joined at the Pepper Hearings by a longtime agent of the Medical Monopoly, Mrs. Anna Rosenberg. She voiced her outrage that there should still be any competition in the United States for the Drug Trust. A longtime vassal of the Rockefeller family, she had served as director of the American Cancer Society during its valiant struggle to restrict all treatment to the orthodox and highly profitable "cut, slash and burn" techniques, which, unfortunately for the patients, usually proved to be fatal. Anna Rosenberg had been married to Julius Rosenberg. She earned five thousand dollars a week as "labor relations specialist" to keep unions out of Rockefeller Center and to keep its underpaid minions on the job.

The Coordinating Conference on Health Information ran amuck for some ten years, sending hundreds of victims to prison on what were in most instances flimsy or trumped up charges. The desired effect, to terrorize everyone who had become active in the alternative health care field, was achieved. Most health practitioners went underground, or closed up their businesses; others left the country. An inevitable reaction against these terrorists operations set in; by 1974, there were public demands for a Congressional investigation of the SWAT tactics used by the Post Office and the U.S. Public Health Service against elderly housewives. Such an investigation would inevitably have revealed that these conscientious and dedicated public servants were actually faceless tools of the sinister behind the scenes figures who manipulated the government of the United States for their own power and profit. Needless to say, no such Congressional investigation was ever held. Instead, the CCHI suddenly went underground. They were immune from countersuits by their victims, because all actions had been taken against the victims by federal agents. They were not immune, according to the statutes, but the chances of recovering against them in any federal court was remote. (The present writer has on numerous occasions sought redress against federal agents in federal courts, only to have a polite federal judge rule against him in every instance.)

After the Coordinating Conference on Health Information went underground, health practitioners in the State of California suddenly found themselves under more concerted attack than ever before. The activist now was the California State Board of Health. It was then found that the stealthy minions of CCHI, still doing the work of the Medical Monopoly, had merely abandoned their national operations for fear of exposure, but had now nested in the California State Board of Health like a group of diseased rats hiding from inevitable retribution. The CCHI has remained imbedded in the California State Board of Health ever since, carrying on a steady warfare against health practitioners in that state. The drug cartel continued to operate unmolested.

This war against American citizens fulfills every requirement for prosecution under the statutes forbidding criminal syndicalism in the United States. It is a classic case of a supposedly nonprofit organization, the American Medical Association, conspiring with certain charitable foundations, notably the American Cancer Society and the Arthritis Foundation, to enlist public agencies to start a war to benefit the national Drug Trust, while denying American citizens the benefits of reasonably priced and effective health care. Not only were there repeated violations of the constitutional rights of citizens who were active in the health care movement, often from a sense of public service rather than from a desire for profit, while the evidence of an active conspiracy (RICO) to subvert official government agencies for the profit of private multinational drug firms is too abundant to ignore. Those who have been victimized by the CCHI conspiracy can also bring actions against Lederle, Hoffman laRoche and the other drug firms who hired these people to do their dirty work. The trail of liability is plain; it will be simple to establish it in court.

Meanwhile, the effect of the CCHI depredations has been devastating. Millions of Americans, particularly the elderly and the poor, have been forcibly deprived of reasonably priced health care because of this conspiracy. These victims have been forced to do without their modestly priced health advisors, and thrown onto the care of the high-priced physicians from the AMA, who place them on expensive drugs produced by the Rockefeller drug monopoly. The fact that many of these drugs are overpriced, ineffective, and potentially dangerous has been routinely covered up by the federal agencies responsible for protecting the public, particularly the Food and Drug Administration. It is notable that the drug cartels have never been investigated by any government agency under the pertinent provisions of the Sherman Anti-Trust Act, because these cartels are the property of the international financial monopolists. This proves what many observers have charged for years, that the government regulations purportedly enacted by Congress to protect the public have, in reality, served only to protect the monopolists. By 1986, this Medical Monopoly had reached a yearly take of $355.4 billion a year, eleven per cent of the Gross National Product of the United States. The Medical Monopoly has long had its critics among conscientious members of the medical profession. In December 1922, the Illinois Medical Journal featured an article which declared that "The American Medical Association has become an autocracy." This was during the heyday of Dr. Simmons' rule in Chicago. The article denounced the dictatorial assumption of power over the entire medical profession.

Although it had first organized in 1847, the AMA had not formally incorporated until 1897, when it paid a three dollar fee to the Secretary of the State of Illinois. Within two years after its incorporation, "Doc" Simmons had arrived on the scene to begin his twenty-five year power grab. He soon realized that the medical schools control the hospitals; the medical examination boards control the medical schools, and so he expanded the power of the AMA until he had total control over the medical examination boards.

The records show that coincidentally with the growing power of the AMA, there came a corresponding decline in the quality of medical care and the personal responsibility of the physicians to their patients. The AMA enacted a stem Code of Ethics, which serve to form a phalanx of protection for any physician who faced criticism for his errors, such errors, in many cases, resulted in the crippling or deaths of his patients. This same "code" usually prevents any physician, nurse or other hospital employee from testifying in court about the errors committed by a physician.

One noted physician, Dr. Norman Barnesby, who had long been a prominent member of the U.S. Army Medical Staff and the U.S. Public Health Service, said, "Chaos and crime is inevitable so long as doctors abide by the AMA's code of ethics, the code of silence. (This is akin to the notorious Omerta, the code of silence of the Mafia, which invokes the death penalty to any member who reveals the secrets of the Cosa Nostra. The Medical Gnostics, the AMA, has set up its own Cosa Nostra, which passes a sentence of professional death against any physician who reveals any medical omissions or crimes, the result being ostracism from the profession, denial of hospital privileges, and other drastic forms of punishment. Editor's Note.) The ethics to which doctors subscribe smells to high heavens. It is a disgrace to any vaunting civilization. ‘A peculiar reserve must be maintained by physicians toward the public in regard to professional questions and as there exist many points in medical ethics and etiquette through which the feelings of physicians may be painfully assaulted in their intercourse, and which cannot be understood or appreciated by general society, neither the subject matter of their differences nor the adjudication of their arbitration should be made public."

The last part of this paragraph is Dr. Barnesby's direct quote from the AMA Code of Ethics. Note the arrogance of the AMA in claiming that "medical ethics and etiquette" cannot be understood by general society. Dr. Barnesby continues, "I am convinced that the remedy lies in a full abolition of all codes and practices inimical to society, and a complete reorganization of the system on the lines of legal supervision or other responsible control." Dr. Barnesby's recommendations were ignored by the Medical Monopoly.

AntiSionist - March 15, 2009 05:10 AM (GMT)

Chapter 2 continued

An AP dispatch of February 11, 1988 noted that "5% of Doctors Lie About Credentials" a headline of facts discovered by a large health care corporation, Humana, Inc., found that 39 of 727 doctors who applied to work in their clinics during a six-month period, that is 5%, presented false credentials. Even worse, many doctors, convicted of drug or sex charges in one state, simply move to another state and set up practice, protected by the Medical Monopoly. There have been horrendous stories in recent years about habitual sex offenders, convicted in one state, who go to another state and through their professional practice, began their career of violating children once more.

A gifted physician, Dr. Ernest Codman, of a distinguished New England family, addressed the annual AMA convention on March 2, 1924 as follows:

"I have notes on four hundred registered cases of supposed bone sarcoma. All of these four hundred registered cases, with few exceptions, are records of error and failure; I have many of the foremost surgeons and pathologists in the country convicted in their own handwriting of gross errors in these cases. Legs have been amputated when they should not have been, and left on when they should have been amputated."

Dr. Codman's speech left his audience dumbfounded. None of them challenged his statements, but his speech was deliberately hushed up by AMA officials. He wryly records that never again during his distinguished professional career was he asked to address any AMA meeting.

From time to time, other dissidents have appeared at AMA meetings, to engage in a brief skirmish as they voiced their objections, and then disappear, forgotten in the all consuming war to maintain the Medical Monopoly. Time magazine gave a brief summary of one such episode on June 6, 1970, with the headline, "Schizophrenic AMA." The story noted that some thirty to forty dissidents, young idealistic doctors, had rushed the podium and taken over the AMA annual meeting for a few anxious moments. Their leader denounced the AMA from the lectern in vigorous terms, "The A. M.A. does not stand for the American Medical Association -- it stands for the American Murder Association !" Armed guards turned back members of other groups which sought to voice their dissatisfaction. The young intern vacated the platform, and presumably is chief of surgery at some hospital today, having learned that you can't fight the system.

Another dissident, Dr. Robert S. Mendelsohn, noted that in 1975, 787,000 women had hysterectomies, and that 1,700 of them died as a result of this surgery. He believes that half of these women could have been saved, as their surgery was needless. The Washington Post noted on January 21, 1988 that "Most heart pacemakers may be unneeded; more than half are not clearly beneficial." The story noted that one American in 500 now has a pacemaker. This business is only twenty years old, but there are now 120,000 implants each year, a business taking in one and a half billion dollars a year. Greenspan complained that "many internists are ordering them without consulting a heart specialist."

Dr. Mendelsohn has also complained that terramycin was an ineffective antibiotic, its major result being that it left children with yellow-greenish teeth and tetracycline deposits in their bones. He quotes the Boston Collaborative Drug Surveillance Program, which found that the risk of being killed by drug therapy in an American hospital was one in a thousand, and that 30,000 Americans died each year from adverse reactions to drugs prescribed for them by their doctors. Mendelsohn minces no words in his opinion of modern medicine. He calls it the Church of Death, whose Four Holy Waters are
1) immunizations;
2) fluoridated water;
3) intravenous fluids;
and 4) silver nitrate.
Mendelsohn dismisses all four as being "of questionable safety."

By the early 1940s, ranking members of the AMA had come to the conclusion that much of their problems with their membership lay with the abrasive Morris Fishbein. Most doctors were ultraconservative in their thinking, and they found Fishbein's antics repulsive. Nevertheless, he had spun his web at the AMA so fine that it involved everyone in the headquarters. His power was built on censorship, intimidation, and exercise of his powers to the limit. It took his rivals almost a decade to get rid of him. Their opportunity came when Fishbein's able lieutenant, Dr. Olin West, became ill, and was no longer able to maintain iron control of the AMA headquarters for the Fishbein regime. Apparently ignorant of the cabal against him, Fishbein continued his merry life of travel and recreation, continuing to garner many awards and prizes for his medical public relations work. He had been named an Officer of the Cross in the exclusive order of OrangeNassau, a very secretive organization which commemorated the invasion and takeover of England by William of Orange, and the subsequent establishment of the Bank of England. Fishbein made frequent trips to England, where he was wined and dined by prominent members of the Establishment; they must have believed he could be of use to them.

However, none of these honors proved to be of avail when the man who was described by Newsweek as "the man with one hundred enemies" (surely the understatement of the year), was thrown out even more unceremoniously than his predecessor, the unsavory quack, "Doc" Simmons. Despite repeated public criticisms of his junkets and abuse of his expense accounts, Fishbein confidently announced at a luncheon on June 4, 1949 that he would be around for at least five more years. He counted heavily on the traditional schism between two groups at the AMA, the liberals and the conservatives, whom Fishbein declared would never be able to agree on anything. He was wrong, because they did agree that he should be kicked out. United by their common hatred of Morris Fishbein, they formed their conspiracy to assassinate their Caesar. In describing this episode, Martin Mayer notes that since 1944, a sizeable faction at the AMA had been resolved to get Fishbein out at any cost. He had been exposed on a national radio program, Town Meeting of the Air, in early 1949, as a habitual liar. He claimed that he had been touring England, visiting the offices of general practitioners every day. The radio program revealed that he had actually been attending the Olympics, that he had dined with several members of the British aristocracy and attended a number of plays in London, and then had travelled to Paris for a round of the night clubs, all in the name of promoting medicine. The program, aired on February 22, 1949 by Nelson Cruikshank, demolished Fishbein's reputation, noting that Fishbein had not gone near any doctor's office in England during his stay. As for Fishbein's report about his trip, Cruikshank branded it a lie, calling it "a libel on a profession which is proud of its tradition of service to its patients. Fishbein's life was described as "a constant round of visits to New York plays, the Stork Club, and night clubs in London and Paris."

As a result of this publicity, the AMA at its 1949 convention passed a unanimous resolution that Dr. Morris Fishbein be removed from all posts in which he did any writing and speaking. This resolution provided that it be implemented "as soon as possible," which turned out to be that very afternoon. By evening, Fishbein was gone from AMA headquarters, never to return. One of the literary losses of Fishbein's departure was his column, which he had fancifully termed "Dr. Pepys Diary." It was described by one critic as "a running or logorrhic account of Moms Fishbein's private life. Each Christmas, the Diary was enshrined between boards and distributed as the Fishbein Christmas Card to nearly everyone who had a permanent mailing address." Like all of Fishbein's extravagances, the expense of this largesse was entirely home by the dues-paying members of the AMA.

For years, Fishbein had used the awesome power of the AMA Seal of Acceptance to force drug companies to accede to his wishes. Harper's Magazine noted (Nov. 1949) that "The Seal is probably the biggest single ‘puller' of advertising ever concocted. The Journal is far and away the most profitable publication in the world. Fishbein's absolute power -- he often talked as if he carried the seal in his pocket -- was also the source of other men's power."

After Fishbein's forced departure, AMA officials moved to dilute the center of power at the Chicago Headquarters. The Council on Pharmacy and Chemistry changed its name to the Council on Drugs in 1956; the Seal of Acceptance was dropped entirely. Ben Gaffin and Associates had reported to the AMA, "The advertisers, in general, feel that the AMA, especially through the Councils, distrusts them and views them as potential crooks who would become actively unethical if not constantly watched." This had been Fishbein's paranoid approach, but his attitude had been based on the need to maintain control and to force "contributions" from the ethical drug manufacturers." As soon as the Seal of Acceptance was dropped, AMA's revenues from advertisers doubled in five years; in ten years, it had tripled, from $4 million a year to over $12 million. In retrospect, Fishbein's arrogance and his shortsighted policies had been costing the AMA millions of dollars a year in lost revenues. Dr. Ernest Howard of the AMA offered gratuitous reasons for dropping the Seal, saying "it was too arbitrary, and too much authority was vested in one body ... there were also certain legal problems."

Despite the fact that Fishbein had gone, some aspects of his malign influence lingered at the AMA headquarters for years; costing the organization many million of dollars and a great deal of unfavorable publicity. Especially virulent was Fishbein's burning determination to destroy any possibility of "socialized medicine" in the United States. It was paradoxical that the AMA leadership under Fishbein's dominance should be so vehemently against "government intervention" in the medical field, when they had used government agencies for years for their own purposes, particularly the Food and Drug Administration, the U.S. Public Health Service, and the National Cancer Institute. One authority, James G. Burrow, traces the AMA's stance towards compulsory health insurance, which changed from exploratory interest to violent hostility between 1917 and 1920. This stance was justified as "anti-Communism," it being well known that Socialized Medicine had long been a primary goal of the Communist Party. A select group of prominent American leftists had been summoned to Moscow for special indoctrination in this goal. They attended a summer course at Moscow University on "the organization of medicine as a state function." The group included such stalwart liberals as George S. Counts and John Dewey. On their return, they began a campaign of public agitation for national health care. Their first convert was a "liberal Republican," Senator Henry Cabot Lodge. In fact, he represented the New England group of bankers who were allied with Rockefeller in maintaining the Medical Monopoly. On March 1, 1940, Senator Lodge introduced a bill for health insurance, which provided forty dollars a year for health care. The bill was quickly shelved, but the gauntlet had been thrown down. Fishbein had no intention of turning his fiefdom over to any government department. Over the next several decades, the AMA spent many millions of dollars fighting "socialized medicine," all of it raised by special levies on American doctors. It also became enmeshed in several expensive antitrust cases as a result of its activities.

As early as 1938, the AMA had been indicted by the Department of Justice in the Group Health Association case. In 1937, a group of government employees had borrowed $40 from Home Owners Loan Company to start a group hospital. The plan offered group medical care for $26 a year for an individual, or $39 a year for a family. This association, which took the name Group Health Association, hired nine physicians. The District of Columbia Medical Society then refused these physicians permission to use the hospitals or to consult specialists. On April 4, 1941, a jury found the AMA and the District Medical Society guilty of anti-trust law violations. The two organizations and eleven physicians had been indicted for restraint of trade. Those convicted included Dr. Morris Fishbein. Two and a half years later, the Supreme Court upheld their conviction in 1943. A fine of $2,500 was levied, and the AMA was ordered to cease and desist in its interference with the Group Health Association.

The AMA fared little better in its twenty year battle against Medicare. The preservation of the integrity of the local physician was a worthwhile goal; however, he was already under the control of the Rockefeller Medical Monopoly; it is difficult to see how the establishment of socialized medicine in the United States would change anything, nor has it. Time noted on December 10, 1948 that the AMA had assessed each of its members $25 for a campaign to spend $3½ million on "medical education," a campaign to turn people against socialized medicine. It was the first such assessment of the AMA in its hundred years of operation. Almost two decades later, the Saturday Evening Post noted in its issue of January 1, 1966 that the AMA had spent five million dollars in 1964 and 1965 battling the medicare lobby in Washington. It was noted that the AMA had $23 million income that year from its annual dues of $45 per year, and from the sales of advertisements in AMA publications to drug companies and medical supply houses.

Time on Dec. 1, 1978 noted that Judge Fred Barnes, administrative law judge at the Federal Trade Commission, had ruled that the AMA Code of Ethics illegally restrains competition among doctors by preventing them from advertising. He further ruled that AMA ethical guidelines should in the future be approved by the FTC. The AMA issued an indignant press release opposing the decision; "There is no legal precedent in the United States for the federal bureaucracy to write or approve a code of ethics for any of the learned professions."

The subject of the AMA Code of Ethics had already come up several times. Science magazine noted on June 21, 1940 on "the bureau of investigation of frauds and charlatans" that the question was raised, "Should medical ethics be changed ? The principle of medical ethics as set down at present, can be improved in wording and arrangement, but it also believes that the present is not the time to do the rewriting. It seems wise to let the muddied waters settle before any consideration is given to so fundamental nature of our organization as our principles of medical ethics." Although the speaker was not identified, this pious pronunciamento could only have come from Fishbein himself. The speaker goes on to admit, rather coyly, that "the principle of medical ethics can be improved" but that ended the matter.

The passage of Medicare, after the AMA had sent so many millions opposing it, apparently changed nothing. It proved to be an unexpected windfall for many of the more unscrupulous members of the medical profession. They had no problem in padding bills for fees to the tune of millions of dollars per year per practitioner. In 1982, Medicare paid out some $48.3 billion dollars, while Medicaid paid out $38.2 billion dollars. The more conservative estimates believe that some 11 billion dollars of these funds were skimmed in illegal profits. The heirs of Morris Fishbein at the AMA may have lost the battle to "stop socialized medicine" but they have won the war.

As we previously noted, the AMA trustees at a meeting on November 2, 1963, resolved to "eliminate chiropractic" their biggest rival, through a Committee on Quackery. The secretary of this committee reported back to the trustees on January 4, 1971 that "its prime mission, first, the containment of chiropractic, and ultimately, the elimination of chiropractic." A more blatant admission of conspiracy can hardly be found in any organization's records. The Committee's special investigative unit, headed by the general counsel of the AMA, Robert Throckmorton, involved using insurance companies, hospitals, state medical licensing boards, public and private colleges, and lobbyists. Every method of intimidation and censorship was used. Dr. Philip Weinstein, a California neurologist, had given many lectures to chiropractic groups on diagnosing illnesses of the spine; the AMA ordered him to stop all such appearances. He sent a note of apology after cancelling a forthcoming lecture, "Please accept our sincerest apologies for this late cancellation due to circumstances beyond our control. We were unaware that delivering medical lectures (to your organization) was prohibited."

Throckmorton also tried to put chiropractic schools out of business by preventing the government from granting guaranteed student loans or grants from the government for research at chiropractic colleges. He prevented them from getting accreditation; lobbied in every state to prevent the establishment of a government created accreditation body, and was furious when the HEW Office of Education, being an agency of educators rather than physicians, resisted his efforts and in 1974 sanctioned the Council on Chiropractic Education as a national accreditation body for chiropractic schools. The AMA brought pressure on C.W. Post University, a division of Long Island University, to drop a course designed for pre-chiropractic students in 1972.

In the late 1960s, the AMA Joint Commission on Accreditation of Hospitals imposed new requirements on hospitals; the AMA Principles of Medical Ethics barred its members from all forms of exchange with chiropractors. A JCAH letter August 13, 1973 to a hospital administrator declared that "Any arrangement you would make with chiropractors and your hospital would be unacceptable to the Joint Committee. This would be in violation of the Principles of Medical Ethics published by the AMA that is also a requirement of the JCAH." On January 9, 1973 the JCAH wrote to a hospital in Silver City, New Mexico, "This is in answer to your letter of December 18 referring to a bill which may be passed in New Mexico that hospitals must accept chiropractors as members of the medical staff. You are absolutely correct -- the unfortunate results of this most ill-advised legislation mean that the Joint Committee could withdraw and refuse accreditation of the hospital that had chiropractors on its staff."

The AMA then forced the Veterans Administration to refuse payments to veterans for chiropractic services. These tactics had been reported to the AMA as positive results. A confidential memorandum dated September 21, 1967 by the Committee on Quackery boasted to the trustees that "Basically the committee's short range objectives for containing the cult of chiropractic, and any additional recognition it might achieve, revolves around four points: 1) Doing everything within our power to see that chiropractic coverage under Title #18 of the Medicare law is NOT obtained. 2) Doing everything within our power to see that registration, or a listing with the U.S. Office of Education, or the establishment of a Chiropractic Accrediting Agency, is NOT achieved. 3) To encourage continued separation of the two National Chiropractic Associations. 4) Encourage state medical societies to take the initiative in their state legislature with regard to legislation that might effect the practice of chiropractic."

Because of the flagrant activities of the AMA, several chiropractors finally sued, charging conspiracy. The case dragged on for years, and on August 27, 1987, after eleven years of continuous litigation, Federal Judge Susan Getzendammer of the U.S. District Court found the AMA, the American College of Surgeons, and the American College of Radiologists, guilty of conspiring to destroy the profession of chiropractic. During the proceedings, the AMA freely acknowledged that they never had, nor have, any knowledge of the content or quality of the courses taught in chiropractic college. Judge Getzendammer wrote a 101-page opinion, and issued an Order of Permanent Injunction requiring the AMA to cease and desist from "restricting, regulating or impeding or aiding and abetting others from restricting, regulating and impeding the freedom of any AMA member or any institution or hospital to make an individual decision as to whether or not the AMA member, institution or hospital shall professionally associate with chiropractors, chiropractic students or chiropractic institutions."

Thus ended the legacy of malice and obstructionism which Morris Fishbein had left to the AMA. Although he had been formally relieved of all duties at the 98th meeting of the AMA on June 20, 1949, the AMA had been bedeviled by his obsessions for four more decades. Another of his obsessions was his refusal to admit any black physicians as members of the AMA. He was often heard to refer contemptuously to "der schwaRzers," a Yiddish term of contempt for blacks, whenever the subject of admitting blacks came up, as it did repeatedly during his regime. His policy continued at the AMA for two more decades, until 1968, when the AMA was forced to admit blacks. Previously, the blacks had maintained their own organization, the National Medical Association. In hailing the decision, Time referred patronizingly to "the moss-backed AMA."

The fact that Simmons and Fishbein were able to impose their petty concerns on this national organization for half of a century reflects little credit on its members. One of the most telling comments was made by T. Swann Hardy in the Forum, June 1929. In an article with the title "How Scientific Are Our Doctors ?" Hardy wrote, "Medicine, as a profession, is not distinguished for the mentality of its members. The average intelligence is lower than in perhaps any other profession. Organized medicine in America is unalterably opposed to any standard of reorganization which would 1) make the medical monopoly thoroughly scientific; 2) make such therapy generally available to all who need it; 3) menace the incomes of incompetent practitioners."

It is noteworthy that the insignia of the medical profession is two snakes entwined on a staff. However, the University of Rochester, deciding that this was excessive, recently reduced the two snakes to one. The caduceus is the mythological symbol of the Roman god Mercury. He was the patron of messengers, but he also had a somewhat unsavory reputation as the associate of outlaws, merchants and thieves. In the ancient world, merchants were synonymous with the other two categories.

Chapter 3. The Profits of Cancer

In 400 B.C., Hippocrates assigned the name of Cancer or crab to a disease encountered during his time, because of its crab-like spread through the body. Its Greek name was "karkinos." In 164 A.D., the physician Galen in Rome used the name of "tumour" to describe this disease, from the Greek "tymbos" meaning a sepulchral mound, and the Latin tumore, "to swell." The disease could not have been very prevalent it is not mentioned in the Bible, nor is it included in the ancient medical book of China, the Yellow Emperor's Classic of Internal Medicine. Unknown in most traditional societies, it spread with the rise of the Industrial Revolution. In the 1830s, cancer was responsible for two per cent of the deaths around Paris; cancer caused four per cent of deaths in the United States in 1900.

With the rise of cancer came "modern" methods of coping with it. A leading critic of the medical establishment, Dr. Robert S. Mendelsohn, comments that "Modem cancer surgery someday will be regarded with the same kind of horror that we now regard the use of leeches in George Washington's time." The surgery of which he spoke is the widely accepted and imposed method of cancer treatment now in vogue throughout the United States. It is called the "cut, slash and burn" technique. This method of cancer treatment actually represents the highwater mark of the German allopathic school of medicine in the United States. It relies almost exclusively on surgery, bleeding and heavy use of drugs, with the exotic addition of radium treatment. The Temple of the modern method of cancer treatment in the United States is the Memorial Sloan Kettering Cancer Institute in New York. Its high priests are the surgeons and researchers at this center.

Originally known as Memorial Hospital, this cancer establishment was presided over during its early years by two physicians who were stereotypes of the Hollywood caricatures of "the mad doctor." If Hollywood planned to make a movie about this hospital, they would be stymied by the fact that only the late Béla Lugosi would be appropriate to play not one, but each of these two doctors. The first of these "mad" doctors was Dr. J. Marion Sims. Son of a South Carolina sheriff and tavern owner, Sims (1813-1883) was a nineteenth century "women's doctor." For years he dabbled in "experimental surgery" by performing experiments on slave women in the South. According to his biographer, these operations were "little short of murderous." When plantation owners refused to allow him to conduct further experiments on their slaves, he was forced to purchase a seventeen year old slave girl for $500. Within a few months he had performed some thirty operations on this unfortunate, a girl named Anarcha. Because there was no anesthesia at that time, he had to ask friends to hold Anarcha down while he performed his surgery. After one or two such experiences, they usually refused to have anything further to do with him. He continued to experiment on Anarcha for four years, and in 1853, he decided to move to New York. Whether his little negro hospital in South Carolina was surrounded by screaming villagers one night as they brandished torches, as in an old Frankenstein movie, is not known. However, his decision to move seems to have come rather suddenly. Dr. Sims bought a house on Madison Avenue, where he found a supporter in the heiress of the Phelps empire, Mrs. Melissa Phelps Dodge. This family has continued to be prominent supporters of the present cancer center. With her financial assistance, Sims founded Women's Hospital, a 30 bed, all charity hospital which opened on May 1, 1855.

Like a later quack, "Doc" Simmons, Sims advertised himself as a women's specialist, particularly in "vesico-vaginal fistula," an abnormal passage between the bladder and the vagina. It is now known that this condition has always been "iatrogenic," that is, caused by the ministrations of doctors. In the 1870s, Sims began to specialize in the treatment of cancer. Rumors began to circulate in New York of barbarous operations being performed at Women's Hospital. The "mad doctor" was at it again. The trustees of the institution reported that "the lives of all the patients were being threatened by mysterious experiments." Dr. Sims was fired from Women's Hospital. However, because of his powerful financial supporters, he was soon reinstated. He was then contacted by members of the Astor family, whose fortune was founded on old John Jacob Astor's ties with the East India Company, the British Secret Intelligence Service, and the international opium trade. One of the Astors had recently died of cancer, and the family wished to establish a cancer hospital in New York. They first approached the trustees of Women's Hospital with an at Berkely, he stated that his studies had proven conclusively that untreated cancer victims actually live up to four times longer than treated individuals. "For a typical type of cancer, people who refused treatment live an average of twelve and a half years. Those who accepted surgery and other kinds of treatment lived an average of only three years. I attribute this to the traumatic effect of surgery on the body's natural defense mechanism. The body has a natural type of defense against every type of cancer."

In February, 1988, the National Cancer Institute released its definitive report, summarizing the "war against cancer." It reported that over the past thirty-five years, both the overall incidence and death rates from cancer have increased, despite "advances" in detection and treatment." Washington Post, February 9, 1988. The problem may be that, just as in other wars we have engaged in the twentieth century, too many of those "on our side" are actually working for the enemy.

Chapter 4 extracts:

One of the few doctors who has dared to speak out against the Medical Monopoly, Dr. Robert S. Mendelsohn, dramatized his stand against Modern Medicine by defining it as a Church which has Four Holy Waters. The first of these, he listed as Vaccination. Dr. Mendelsohn termed vaccination "of questionable safety." However, other doctors have been more explicit. It is notable that the Rockefeller interests have fought throughout the nineteenth century to make these Four Holy Waters compulsory throughout the United States, ignoring all the protests and warnings of their dangers.

Of these four items, which might well be termed the Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse, because they too are known to bring death and destruction in their wake, the most pernicious in its long-term effects may well be the practice of immunization. This practice goes directly against the discovery of modern holistic medical experts that the body has a natural immune defense against illness. The Church of Modern Medicine claims that we can only be absolved from the peril of infection by the Holy Water of vaccination, injecting into the system a foreign body of infection, which will then perform a Medical Miracle, and will confer life-long immunity, hence the term, "immunization." The great-est heresy any physician can commit is to voice publicly any doubt of any one of the Four Holy Waters, but the most deeply entrenched in modern medical practice is undoubtedly the numerous vaccination programs. They are also the most consistently profitable operations of the Medical Monopoly. Yet one physician, Dr. Henry R. Bybee, of Norfolk, Virginia, has publicly stated, "My honest opinion is that vaccine is the cause of more disease and suffering than anything I could name. I believe that such diseases as cancer, syphilis, cold sores and many other disease conditions are the direct results of vaccination. Yet, in the state of Virginia, and in many other states, parents are compelled to submit their children to this procedure while the medical profession not only receives its pay for this service, but also makes splendid and prospective patients for the future."

From London comes an alarming observation from a practitioner of excellent reputation and long experience. Dr. Herbert Snow, senior surgeon at the Cancer Hospital of London, voiced his concern, "In recent years many men and women in the prime of life have dropped dead suddenly, often after attending a feast or a banquet. I am convinced that some eighty percent of these deaths are caused by the inoculation or vaccination they have undergone. They are well known to cause grave and permanent disease of the heart. The coroner always hushes it up as "natural causes".

You cannot find any such warning in any medical textbook or popular book on health. In fact, this writer was able to locate it in a small volume buried deep in the stacks in the Library of Congress. Yet such an ominous observation from an established medical practitioner should be as widely circulated as possible, if only to be attacked by those who can refute its premise. At least it cannot be attacked by the Establishment as quackery, because Dr. Snow is not attempting to sell some substitute for vaccination, but merely warning of its dangers.

Another practitioner, Dr. W. B. Clarke of Indiana, finds that "Cancer was practically unknown until compulsory vaccination with cowpox vaccine began to be introduced. I have had to deal with at least two hundred cases of cancer, and I never saw a case of cancer in an unvaccinated person."

At last, we have the breakthrough for which the American Cancer Society has been searching, at such great expense and for so many years. Dr. Clarke has never seen a case of cancer in an unvaccinated person. Is not this a lead which should be explored?

In the land where freedom rings, or is supposed to ring, it is even more surprising to find that every citizen is compelled to submit to a compulsory vaccination ritual. Here again, we are speaking of a civilization which is now being visited by two plagues, the plague of cancer and the plague of AIDS, yet compulsory vaccination offers no protection against the plagues which threaten us. It is goodbye whooping cough, goodbye diptheria and hello AIDS. The Medical Monopoly is searching desperately for some type of "immunization" against these plagues, and no doubt will eventually come up with some type of "vaccine" which will be more dreadful than the disease. From the outset, our most distinguished medical experts have proudly informed us that AIDS is incurable, which is hardly the approach we expect from those who demand that we accept their infallibility in all things to do with medi-cine.

Another well known medical practitioner, Dr. J. M. Peebles of San Francisco, has written a book on vaccine, in which he says, "The vaccination practice, pushed to the front on all occasions by the medical profession through political connivance made compul-sory by the state, has not only become the chief menace and the greatest danger to the health of the rising generation, but likewise the crowning outrage upon the personal liberties of the American citizen; compulsory vaccination, poisoning the crimson currents of the human system with brute-extracted lymph under the strange infatuation that it would prevent smallpox, was one of the darkest blots that disfigured the last century."

Dr. Peebles refers to the fact that cowpox vaccine was one of the more peculiar "inventions or discoveries of the Age of Enlightenment". However, as I have pointed out in The Curse Of Canaan, the Age of Enlightenment was merely the latest program of the Cult of Baal and its rituals of child sacrifice, which, in one guise or another, has now been with us for some five thousand years. Because of this goal, the Medical Monopoly is also known as "The Society for Crippling Children." Perhaps the most telling comment of Dr. Peebles' criticism is his reference to "brute-extracted lymph." Could there be some connection between the injection of this substance and the spread of a hitherto unknown form of cancer, cancer of the lymph glands? This type of cancer is not only one of the most commonly encoun-tered versions of this disease; it is also one of the most difficult to treat, because it rapidly spreads throughout the entire system. A diagnosis of cancer of the lymph glands now means a virtual death sentence.

In an article in Science, March 4, 1977, Jonas and Darrell Salk warn that. "Live virus vaccines against influenza or poliomyelitis may in each instance pro-duce the disease it intended to prevent—the live virus against measles and mumps may produce such side effects as encephalitis (brain damage)."

If vaccines present such a clear and present danger to children who are forced to submit to them, we must examine the forces which demand that they submit. In the United States, vaccines are actively and incessantly promoted as the solution for all infectious diseases by such government agencies as the Centers for Disease Control in Georgia, by HEW, USPHS, FDA, AMA and WHO. It is of more than passing interest that the federal agencies should be such passionate supporters of compulsory use of vaccines, and that they also should go through the "revolving door" to the big drug firms whose products they have so assiduously promoted, throughout their years of service to the public. It is these federal agents who have drafted the procedures which forced the states to enact compulsory vaccina-tion legislation which had been drafted by the attorneys for the Medical Monopoly, to become "the law of the land."

Medical historians have finally come to the reluctant conclusion that the great flu "epidemic" of 1918 was solely attributable to the widespread use of vaccines. It was the first war in which vaccination was compulsory for all servicemen. The Boston Herald reported that forty-seven soldiers had been killed by vaccination in one month. As a result, the military hospitals were filled, not with wounded combat casualties, but with casualties of the vaccine. The epidemic was called "the Spanish Influenza," a deliberately misleading appellation, which was intended to conceal its origin. This flu epidemic claimed twenty million victims; those who survived it were the ones who had refused the vaccine. In recent years, annual recurring epidemics of flu recalled "the Russian Flu." For some reason, the Russians never protest, perhaps because the Rockefellers make regular trips to Moscow to lay down the party line.

The perils of vaccination were already known. Plain Talk magazine notes that "during the Franco-Prussian War, every German soldier was vaccinated. The result was that 53,288 otherwise healthy men developed smallpox. The death rate was high."

In what is now known as "the Great Swine Flu Massacre," the President of the United States, Gerald Ford, was enlisted to persuade the public to undergo a national vaccination campaign. The moving force behind the scheme was a $135 million windfall profit for the major drug manufacturers. They had a "swine flu" vaccine which suspicious pig raisers had refused to touch, fearful it might wipe out their crop. The manufacturers had only tried to get $80 million from the swine breeders; balked in this sale, they turned to the other market, humans. The impetus for the national swine flu vaccine came directly from the Disease Control Center in Atlanta, Georgia. Perhaps coincidentally, Jimmy Carter, a member of the Trilateral Commission, was then planning his presidential campaign in Georgia. The incumbent President, Gerald Ford, had all the advantages of a massive bureaucracy to aid him in his election campaign, while the ineffectual and little known. Jimmy Carter offered no serious threat to the election. Suddenly, out of Atlanta, came the Centre for Disease Control plan for a national immunization campaign against "swine flu." The fact that there was not a single known case of this flu in the United States did not deter the Medical Monopoly from their scheme. The swine breeders had been shocked by the demonstrations of the vaccine on a few pigs, which had collapsed and died. One can imagine the anxious inferences in the headquarters of the great drug firms, until one bright young man remarked, "Well, if the swine breeders won't inject it into their animals, our only other market is to inject it into people."

The Ford-sponsored swine flu campaign almost died an early death, when a conscientious public servant, Dr. Anthony Morris, formerly of HEW and then active as director of the Virus Bureau of the Food and Drug Administration, declared that there could be no authentic swine flu vaccine, because there had never teen any cases of swine flu on which they could test it. Dr. Morris then went public with his statement that "at no point were the swine flu vaccines effective." He was promptly fired, but the damage had been done. The damage control consisted of that great humanitarian, Walter Cronkite, and the President of the United States, combining their forces to come to the rescue of the Medical Monopoly. Walter Cronkite had President Ford appear on his news program to urge the American people to submit to the inoculation with the swine flu vaccine. CBS then or later could never find any reason to air any analysis or scientific critique of the swine flu vaccine, which was identified as containing many toxic poisons, including alien viral protein panicles, formal-dehyde, thimerosal (a derivative of poisonous mer-cury), polysorbate and some eighty other substances. Meanwhile, back at the virus laboratories, after Dr. Anthony Morris has been summarily fired, a special team of workers was rushed in to clean out the four rooms in which he had conducted his scientific tests. The laboratory was filled with animals whose records verified his claims, representing some three yean of constant research. All of thr animals were immediately destroyed, and Morris' records were burned. They did net go so far as to sow salt throughout the area, because they believed their job was done.

On April I5, 1976, Congress passed Public Law 94-266, which provided $135 million of taxpayers' funds to pay for a national swine flu inoculation campaign. HEW was to distribute the vaccine to state and local health agencies on a national basis for inoculation, at no charge. Insurance agencies then went public with their warning that they would not insure drug firms against possible studies from the results of swine flu inoculation, because no studies had been carried out which could predict its effects. It was to foil the insurance companies that CBS had Gerald Ford make his impassioned appeal to 215,000,000 Americans to save themselves while there was still time, and to rush down to the friendly local health department and get the swine flu vaccination, at absolutely no charge. This may have been CBS' finest hour in its distinguished career of "public service."

Hardly had the swine flu campaign been completed than the reports of the casualties began to pour in. Within a few months, claims totalling $1.3 billion had been filed by victims who had suffered paralysis from the swine flu vaccine. The medical authorities proved equal to the challenge; they leaped to the defense of the Medical Monopoly by labeling the new epidemic, "Guillain-Barre Syndrome." There have since been increasing speculations that the ensuing epidemic of AIDS which began shortly after Gerald Ford's public assurances, were merely a viral variation of the swine flu vaccine. And what of the perpetrator of the Great Swine Flu Massacre, President Gerald Ford? As the logical person to blame for the catastrophe, Ford had to endure a torrent of public criticism, which quite natu-rally resulted in his defeat for election (he had previ-ously been appointed when the agents of the interna-tional drag operations had ushered Richard Nixon out of office). The unknown Jimmy Carter, familiar only to the supersecret fellow members of the Trilateral Commission, was swept into office by the outpouring of rage against Gerald Ford. Carter proved to be almost as serious a national disaster as the swine flu epidemic, while Gerald Ford was retired from politics to life. Not only did he lose the election, he was also sentenced to spend his remaining years trudging wearily up and down the hot sandy stretches of the Palm Springs Golf course.

At the annual ACS Science Writers Seminar, Dr. Robert W. Simpson, of Rutgers University, warned that "immunization programs against flu, measles, mumps and polio may actually be seeding humans with RNA to form provirus's which will then become latent cells throughout the body...they can then become activated as a variety of diseases including lupus, cancer, rheu-matism and arthritis."

This was a remarkable verification of the earlier warning delivered by Dr. Herbert Snow of London more than fifty years earlier. He had observed that the long-term effects of the vaccine, lodging in the heart or other parts of the body, would eventually result in fatal damage to the heart. The vaccine becomes a time bomb in the system, festering as what are known as "slow viruses", which may take ten to thirty years to become virulent. When that time arrives, the victim is felled by a fatal onslaught, often with no prior warning, whether it is a heart attack or some other disease.

Herbert M. Shelton wrote in 1938 in his book, Exploitation Of Human Suffering that "Vaccine is pus— either septic or inert—if inert it will not take—if septic it produces infection." This explains why some chil-dren have to go back and receive a second inoculation, because the first one did not "take"—it was not suffi-ciently poisonous, and did not infect the body. Shelton says that the inoculations cause sleeping sickness, infantile paralysis, haemophlagia or tetanus.

The Surgeon General of the United States, Leonard Scheele, pointed out to the annual AMA convention in 1955 that "No batch of vaccine can be proven safe before it is given to children." James R. Shannon of the National Institute of Health declared that, "The only safe vaccine is a vaccine that is never used."

With the advent of Dr. Jonas Salk's polio vaccine in the 1950s American parents were assured that the problem had been solved, and that their children were now safe. The ensuing suits against the drug manufacturers received little publicity. David v. Wyeth Labs, a suit involving Type 3 Sabin Polio Vaccine, was judged in favor of the plaintiff, David. A suit against Lederle Lab involving Orimune Vaccine was settled in 1962 for $10,000. In two cases involving Parke-Davis' Quadrigen, the product was found to be defective. In 1962, Parke-Davis halted all production of Quadrigen.

The medical loner. Dr. William Koch, declared that "The injection of any serum, vaccine, or even penicillin has shown a very marked increase in the incidence of polio, at lest by 400%." The Centers for Disease Control stayed out of sight for some time after the Great Swine Flu Massacre, only to emerge more stridently than ever with a new national scare program on the dangers of another plague, which was named "Legionnaires' Disease" after an outbreak at the Bellevue Stratford Hotel in Philadelphia. [End quoting.]

AntiSionist - March 15, 2009 05:12 AM (GMT)

Chapter 5. Fluoridation

The second item on Dr. Robert Mendelsohn's list of the Four Holy Waters of the modern Church of Medicine is the fluoridation of the nation's drinking water. Although Dr. Mendelsohn dismisses it too, as of "questionable value," few dare to question it. We are told that it confers untold benefits to the rising generation, guaranteeing them perpetual freedom from tooth decay and no need for any dental work. Surprisingly enough, the national fluoridation campaign is enthusiastically supported by the nation's dental profession, even though it might be expected that it would put them out of business. Here again, those in the know are well aware that the fluoridation program, far from threatening to put the dentists out of business, actually will offer them plenty of work in the future.

The principal source of the fluoridation is a poisonous chemical, sodium fluoride, which has long been the principal ingredient of rat poison. Whether the adding of this compound to our drinking water is also part of a rat control program has never been publicly discussed. The EPA released its latest estimate, that 38 million Americans are now drinking unsafe water, which contains unsafe levels of chlorine, lead and other toxic substances. Fluoride is not listed as one of the toxic substances. EPA, like other government agencies, has carefully refrained from either testing public drinking water for the effects of fluoridation, or from poaching on the preserves of the Rockefeller Monopoly, which launched the national fluoridation campaign.

The by-product of the manufacture of aluminum, sodium fluoride, had long posed a problem. Except for its limited use as a rat poison, other popular uses were limited by its extremely poisonous nature. It also was very expensive for the aluminum companies to dispose of, because of its persistence (it does not degrade--it is also cumulative in the body, so that each day you add a little more to your sodium fluoride reserves each time you drink a glass of water). It is puzzling, then, to find that the historical record shows that the principal sponsor and promoter of the fluoridation of the nation's drinking water was the U.S. Public Health Service. And thereby hangs a tale.

We may recall the heady days of the 1950s, when public health officials were routinely sent out from Washington to appear at meetings where communities were anxiously debating the pros and cons of water fluoridation. Without exception, these public servants not only reassured the anxious citizens, they positively demanded that the communities fluoridate their drinking water. Although they unequivocally endorsed the fluoridation of water supplies, not one of these public health officials had ever conducted any studies of fluoridated water, or made any experiments as to its possible benefits or dangers. Yet at meeting after meeting throughout the United States, they rose to solemnly guarantee that there were no dangers, no side effects, only positive benefits on children under the age of twelve. Fluoridation, even according to its most enthusi-

Non-prescription anti-diarrhoeal drugs also contain significant amounts of aluminum; Essilad (Central) has 370 mg of aluminum salts per ml; Kaopectate Concentrate (Upjohn) has 290 mg aluminum per ml.

Aluminum ammonium sulfate is widely used as a buffer and neutralizing agent by manufacturers of cereals and baking powder. Aluminum Potassium Sulfate, known as aluminum flour or aluminum meal, is widely used in baking powder and clarifying sugar.

The annual use of sodium aluminum phosphate has now reached the amount of 19 million kilograms per year; it is used in large amounts in cake mixes, frozen dough, self-rising flour, and processed foods, in an average amount per product of from three to three and one-half per cent. Some 300,000 kg. of sodium aluminum sulfates are used in household baking powders each year, averaging from twenty-one to twenty-six per cent of the bulk of these products.

Aluminum wrap is now everywhere; toothpaste is packaged in tubes lined with aluminum; there are aluminum seals on many food and drink products; and soft drinks everywhere are now packaged in aluminum cans. While the amount of aluminum ingested on any given day from all of these sources may be infinitesimal, the parade of products coated with or mixed with aluminum available on a daily basis is frightening. Its effects are the equivalent to that of a slow virus, as the metal accumulates at vital points in the system, particularly in the human brain. Thus the number of Alzheimer's victims is probably outnumbered by the number of potential victims, who will later be afflicted with its terrible symptoms.

Chapter 6. Whither AIDS ?

The most talked-about medical phenomena of the 1980s is AIDS, the "acquired immune deficiency syndrome." The name is of some interest. First of all, it is said to be "acquired," presuming some action on the part of the victim in coming down with this disease. Second, it results in or is characterized by an "immune deficiency," meaning that the human system, loses the ability to fight against and overcome these inimical presences. The result is that the system becomes prey to a variety of infections, some of which will be fatal. The prevalence of these infections occurs through two dominant illnesses, Kaposi's sarcoma, evidenced by large sores on the skin, and a form of pneumonia. It is noteworthy that pneumonia, which had been a fatal disease, had largely been conquered. It had been called "the old man's friend," because it took off many elderly persons who presumably no longer had a desire to live.

The class of infections which have become widespread through what is called AIDS were first recognized by physicians, veterinarians and biologists about fifty years ago. At that time, many sheep in Ireland were afflicted by a killer epidemic called Maedi-Visma. Biologists determined that Maedi-Visma was caused by a new class of viruses. Because of the time they required to become virulent, these viruses were called "slow viruses." The advent of these slow viruses presages a new era in the medical history of mankind. Human beings prior to this time have not been affected by slow viruses, although they have been found among animals being transmissible among monkeys and apes. Slow viruses are also a type known as "retroviruses." When they enter an infected cell, they assimilate into the genetic structure of the cell, apparently during the cell process of mitosis, or cell division, such division being a normal process of healthy growth. Mitosis is one of the two alternatives which face every cell in the human body; either it divides and grows through mitosis as a life process, or it submits to viral replication and resultant cell death as part of a disease process. Thus we find at the crux of the AIDS problem the ultimate question of the life or death of the entire organism. This is why AIDS, once it reaches the virulent stage, is said to be incurable, resulting in the death of the host body.

In a healthy body, some ten million cells are dying every second; at this same second, they are usually replaced by the body process. Such immediate replacement cannot be orchestrated by the usual body processes of genetic information theories, chromosomes, enzymes or nerve impulse signals. The instantaneous nature of the process requires that it be commanded by bioradiation phenomena. These are triggered by coherent ultraweak photon emissions from living tissues of varying wavelengths. These photon emissions, according to their wavelengths, control biological functions which are in constant activity, such as photorepair, photoaxism, photoperiodic clocks, mitosis, and multiphoton events. Ultraweak photon emissions from living cells exhibit a spectral distribution from infrared (900 nm) to ultraviolet (200 nm). This photon intensity correlates with the conformational states of DNA, during which activity the spectral intensities of biophotons amount to magnitudes of some 10140 magnitude times higher than those of thermal equilibrium at physiological temperatures. The biomolecule with the highest information density, DNA, seems to be the source of biophoton regulatory radiation, functioning as an "exciplex" laser, and comparing favorably with the fields of man-made lasers.

Thus the problem of AIDS brings us to the most basic properties of cell function. The ability of the living cell to respond to microwaves without discernible variation in temperature apparently indicates a nonthermal mechanism like an activated crystal. Thus AIDS may help us in understanding the tuning mechanism of cells, which indicate its state of health or disease and thus improve our understanding of all diseases affecting the organism. A wide ranging study of living cells, from primitive bacteria to those of man, shows that these cells produce natural alternating current (AC) fields which infrequency ranges lower than 100 Mhz, show maximal electrical oscillation at or near mitosis. Here again, tuned systems are triggering biological actions in a manner which is not yet fully understood. Thus the death of Rock Hudson, one of Hollywood's most promiscuous homosexual psychopaths, may lead to the fortunate result of inspiring new breakthroughs in our understanding of the most basic cell functions. Unfortunately, the cancer profiteers and Medical Monopoly insist on treating AIDS as a malfunction of the cell itself, which, of course, calls for the "magic bullet," the chemotherapy claim these protective techniques create a "harmful atmosphere" for the AIDS patient. Since he is probably already dying, the argument would seem to be moot.

The established fact that from its outset, the AIDS epidemics was confined to the well-identified groups of homosexuals, Haitians, intravenous drug users, and blacks, has also created a furor at the American Civil Liberties Union, it being a precept of egalitarian society that a disease should not be so bigoted in choosing its victims. In New York State prisons from 1984 to 1986, the toll of AIDS victims was 45% hispanic, 43% black, with 97% of them being intravenous drug users (New York Times, February 7, 1988).

This writer having previously established in "The Curse of Canaan" that homosexuality, from the time of Canaan himself to the present day, has had its origins in pollution of the original root race, the confusion of sexual identity being a direct consequence of the resulting confusion of racial identity, confusing the DNA pattern of the genetic structure, it is hardly surprising to find in Joy Schulenberg's useful book, "Complete Guide to Gay Parenting," Doubleday 1985, that "gay" couples who are white are found to adopt almost exclusively black children. This is unfair to the black adoptees, who, through no fault of their own, will then be exposed to the possibility of contracting AIDS from one or the other of their "gay" foster parents. It would seem that "gay" whites are unwilling to expose other whites to the perils of the "alternative life style."

Chapter 8. Contamination of the Food Chain

The National Academy of Sciences recently estimated that 15% of the American people are presently afflicted with allergies to one or more chemical products. The study pointed out that we are exposed to more toxic chemicals while inside our homes than when we go out. The chemicals which are found in every home include benzene, which causes leukemia; the common moth spray and mothballs containing para-dichlorobenzene, whose use forms an invisibly but damaging gas in some thirty million American homes; lindane, a common pesticide; chlordane, used for termite control (chlordane has been much in the news lately because of some families who became deathly ill after their homes has been treated by professional termite exterminators; one couple had to move out and totally abandon their home, after inspectors informed them there was no way it could be sufficiently cleansed of the chlordane residues to be habitable). Chloroform compounds are much more common in homes than is popularly realized. The EPA has found that chloroform levels inside of homes was five times greater than outside. Persons taking hot shower baths inside a closed shower curtain are unaware that they are inhaling substantial amounts of chloroform from the steam. Heating the water releases the chlorine in the heavily chlorinated water, which then emerges as a gas while the hot water comes from the nozzle. A daily shower is guaranteed to give you a chloroform high. Formaldehyde is also present in many homes in a number of commonly used compounds.

The daily ingestion of minute portions of any or all of these household chemicals contributes to the development of cancers, as they are sufficiently toxic to become carcinogenic in daily contact. However, Dr. A. Samuel Epstein, a noted cancer authority from the University of Illinois, states that "Food is the single most important route of exposure for humans to synthetic chemicals." Jim Sibbinson estimated that the average American ingests some nine pounds of chemicals in foodstuffs each year, meaning chemicals so toxic that a fraction of an ounce can cause serious illness or death. These chemicals are put into our food chain as additives, preservatives, dyes, bleaches, emulsifiers, antioxidants, flavors, buffers, noxious sprays, acidifiers, alkalizers, deodorants, moisteners, anti-caking and anti-foaming agents, conditioners, curers, hydrolizers, hydrogenators, drying agents, gases, extenders, thickeners, sweeteners, maturers fortifiers, and other agents.

Most Americans are not aware that of the more than five thousand chemical additives in the foods which they eat every day, about one-third are known to be harmless, another third are described by the Food and Drug Administration as "gras," an acronym for "generally recognized as safe," and the other third, almost 2,000 chemicals, are being used in large amounts, even though they have never been adequately tested for possible harmful results. An effort was made to control the use of

Chapter 9. The Drug Trust

In 1987, the eighteen largest drug firms were ranked as follows:

1. Merck (U.S.) $4.2 billion in sales.
2. Glaxo Holdings (United Kingdom) $3.4 billion.
3. Hoffman LaRoche (Switzerland) $3.1 billion.
4. Smith Kline Beckman (U.S.) $2.8 billion.
5. Ciba-Geigy (Switzerland) $2.7 billion.
6. Pfizer (U.S.) $2.5 billion (Standard & Poor's gives its sales as $4 billion).
7. Hoechst A.G. (Germany) $2.5 billion (Standard & Poor's lists its sales as $38 billion Deutschmarks).
8. American Home Products (U.S.) $2.4 billion ($4.93 billion according to Standard & Poor's).
9. Lilly (U.S.) $2.3 billion ($3.72 billion Standard & Poor's).
10. Upjohn (U.S.) $2 billion.
11. Squibb (U.S.) $2 billion.
12. Johnson & Johnson (U.S.) $1.9 billion.
13. Sandoz (Switzerland) $1.8 billion.
14. Bristol Myers (U.S.) $1.6 billion.
15. Beecham Group (United Kingdom) $1.4 billion (Standard & Poor's gives $1.4 billion in sales of the U.S. subsidiary -- $2.6 billion pounds sterling as overall income).
16. Bayer A.G. (Germany) $1.4 billion (Standard & Poor's gives the figure as $45.9 billion Deutschmarks).
17. Syntex (U.S.) $1.1 billion.
18. Warner Lambert (U.S.) $1.1 billion (Standard & Poor's gives the figure as $3.1 billion).

Thus we find that the United States still maintains an overwhelming lead in the production and sale of drugs. In the United States, the sale of prescription drugs rose in 1987 by 12.5% to $27 billion. Eleven of the eighteen leading firms are located in the United States; three in Switzerland; two in Germany; and two in the United Kingdom. Nutritionist T.J. Frye notes that the Drug Trust in the United States is controlled by the Rockefeller group in a cartel relationship with I.G. Farben of Germany. In fact, I.G. Farben was the largest chemical concern in Germany during the 1930s, when it engaged in an active cartel agreement with Standard Oil of New Jersey. The Allied Military Government split it up into three companies after World War II, as part of the "anti-cartel" goals of that period, which was not unlike the famed splitting up of Standard Oil itself by court order, while the Rockefellers maintained controlling interest in each of the new companies. In Germany, General William Draper, of Dillon Read investment bankers, unveiled the new decree from his office in the I.G. Farben building. Henceforth, I.G. Farben would exist no more; instead, three companies would emerge -- Bayer, of Leverkusen; BASF at Ludwigshafen; and Hoescht, near Frankfort. Each of the three spawns is now larger than the old I.G. Farben; only ICI of England is larger. These firms

AntiSionist - March 15, 2009 05:13 AM (GMT)

The Rockefeller Syndicate

Excerpted from the book Murder by Injection by Eustace Mullins.

Chapter 10

Many American conservatives believe as a matter of faith that the Rockefellers and the Council on Foreign Relations exercise absolute control over the government and the people of United States . This thesis can be accepted as a working formula if one remains conscious of the larger issues . Two writers for whom the present writer has great respect, Dr. Emanuel Josephson and Morris Bealle, insisted on focusing on the Rockefellers and excluding all other aspects of the World Order . This severely limited the effect of their otherwise ground breaking work on the Medical Monopoly.
This writer advanced a contrary view in "The World Order," fixing upon the Rothschild monetary power, which reached a point of world control by 1885, and its London policy group, the Royal Institute of International Affairs, as the policy makers for what has essentially been since 1900, re-established colonial government in the United States. The colonial, or occupation, government, functions primarily through the Council on Foreign Relations, but only as the subsidiary of RIIA and through the Rockefeller Foundation which controls government functions, the educational establishments, the media, the religions and the state legislatures.

It is true that the American colonials have "free elections," in which they have the absolute right to vote for one of two opposing candidates, both of whom have been handpicked and financed by the Rockefeller syndicate. This touching evidence of "democracy" serves to convince most Americana that we are indeed a free people. We even have a cracked Liberty Bell in Philadelphia to prove it. American youth have been free since 1900 to be marched off to die in Hegelian wars in which both combatants received their instructions from the World Order. We are free to invest in a stock market in which the daily quantity, price and value of the monetary unit is manipulated and controlled by a Federal Reserve System which is answerable only to the Bank of England. It has maintained its vaunted "independence" from our government's control, but this is the only independence it has ever had.

The realization that we do indeed live under the dictates of the "Rockefeller Syndicate" can well be the starting point of the long road back of a genuine struggle for American independence. In exposing "the Rockefellers" as agents of a foreign power, which is not merely a foreign power, but a genuine world government, we must realize that this is not merely a group dedicated to making money, but a group which is committed to maintaining the power of a colonial form of government over the American people. Thus the ancient calumny of John D. Rockefeller as a man obsessed by greed (a category in which he has plenty of company) obscures the act that from the day the Rothschilds began to finance his march towards a total oil monopoly in the United States from their coffers at the National City Bank of Cleveland, Rockefeller was never an independent power, nor does any department of the Rockefeller Syndicate operate as an independent power. We know that the Cosa Nostra, or Mafia, with which the Syndicate is closely allied, has somewhat autonomous power in the regions which have been assigned to that particular "family" by the national directors, but this always implies that that family remains under total control and answerable for everything which occurs in its territory.

Similarly, the Rockefeller Syndicate operates under clearly defined spheres of influence. The "charitable" organizations, the business companies, and the policy groups, always meld into a working operation, nor can any department of the Syndicate strike out on its own or formulate an independent policy, no matter what may be its justification.

The Rockefeller Syndicate operates under the control of the world financial structure, which means that on any given day, all of its assets could be rendered close to worthless by adroit financial manipulation. This is the final control, which ensures that no one can quit the organization. Not only would he be stripped of all assets, but he would be under contract for immediate assassination. Our Department of Justice is well aware that the only "terrorists" operating in the United States are the agents of the World Order, but they prudently avoid any mention of this fact.

The world financial structure, far from being an unknown or hidden organization, is actually well known and well defined. It consists of the major Swiss Banks; the survivors of the old Venetian-Genoese banking axis; the Big Five of the world grain trade; the British combine, centered in the Bank of England and its chartered merchant banks, functioning trough the Rothschilds and the Oppenheimers and having absolute control over their Canadian colony through the Royal Bank of Canada and the Bank of Montreal, their Canadian lieutenants being the Bronfmans, Belzbergs, and other financial operators; and the colonial banking structure in the United States, controlled by the Bank of England through the Federal Reserve System; the Boston Brahmin families who made their fortunes in the opium trade, including the Delanos and others and the Rockefeller Syndicate, consisting of the Kissinger network headquartered in the Rockefeller Bank, Chase Manhattan Bank, American Express, the present form of the old Rothschild representatives in the United States, which includes Kuhn, Loeb Company and Lehman Brothers.

It is notable that the Rockefeller Syndicate is far down on the list of the world's financial structure. Why then is it of such importance ? Although it is not the crucial factor in financial decision in the Western Hemisphere, it is the actual working control mechanism of the American colony. The Rockefeller family themselves, like the Morgans, Schiffs and Warburgs, have faded into insignificance, but the mechanism created in their name roars along at full power, still maintaining all of he functions for which it was organized. Since he set up the Trilateral Commission, David Rockefeller has functioned as a sort of international courier for the World Order, principally concerned with delivering working instructions to the Communist bloc, either directly, in New York or by traveling to the area. Laurance Rockefeller is active in the operation of the Medical Monopoly, but his principal interests are in operating various vacation spas in tropical areas. They are the two survivors of the "Fortunate Five," the five sons of John D. Rockefeller, Jr. and Abby Aldrich. John D. Rockefeller, Jr. died in an institution in Tucson, Arizona and was hastily cremated. John D. Rockefeller III died in a mysterious accident on a New York Parkway near his home. Nelson Rockefeller, named after his grandfather, died in the arms of a TV journalist; it was later revealed that he had also been in the arms of another TV journalist at the same time; the death was hushed up for many hours. It is generally believed hat he ran afoul of his Colombian drug connection, the disagreement hardly being trivial ; it involved several billion dollars in drug profits which had not been properly apportioned. Winthrop Rockefeller died an alcoholic in the arms of his black boy friend. He had been interviewed on television by Harry Reasoner to explain his hasty move from New York to Arkansas. Winthrop leered that his black boy friend, an Army sergeant who apparently taught him the mysteries of drill, refused to live in New York. To celebrate this alliance, Winthrop Rockefeller gave magnificently to Negro causes, including the Urban League building on East 48th Street in New York. A plaque on the second floor notes that it was his gift; it might well have stated "From Hadrian to his Antinous".

We do not wish to imply that the Rockefellers no longer have influence, but that the major policy dictates of the Rockefeller Syndicate are handed down by other capos, of whom they continue to be a visible force. Through the person of David Rockefeller, the family is sometimes called "the first family of the Soviet Union." Only he and Dr. Armand Hammer, the moving force behind USTEC, have permanent permission to land their private planes at the Moscow Airport. Others would suffer the fate of KAL 007.

Both the Rockefeller family fortune and the considerable portion set aside in the foundations of the Rockefeller Syndicate are effectively insulated against any type of government control . Fortune magazine noted August 4, 1986, that John D. Rockefeller, Jr. had created trusts in 1934 which now amounted to some $2.3 billion; another $200 million had been set aside for the Abby Rockefeller branch. The five sons had trusts which in 1986 amount to $2.1 billion. These trusts had originally amounted to only $50 million each, showing the increase in their assets as well as inflation during the ensuing half century . Fortune estimated the 1986 total Rockefeller wealth as $3.5 billion, of which $900 million was in securities and real estate. They owned 45% of the Time Life Building; Nelson Rockefeller's International Basic Economy Corporation had been sold to a British company in 1980. For years, the Rockefeller family had deliberately kept the rents low in its major holding, the Rockefeller Center, a $1.6 billion investment yielding an annual return of 1%. This was a convenient maneuver, for tax purposes. Rockefeller Center recently went public issuing stock which was sold to public buyers. The Rockefellers are rumored to be liquidating their investments in the New York area, and reinvesting in the West, particularly in the area around Phoenix, Arizona. It is possible that they know something we don't.

However much of the Rockefeller wealth may be attributed to old John D.'s rapacity and ruthlessness, its origins are indubitably based in his initial financing from the National City Bank of Cleveland, which was identified in Congressional reports as one of the three Rothschild banks in the United States and by his later acceptance of the guidance of Jacob Schiff of Kuhn, Loeb & Company, who had been born in the Rothschild house in Frankfort and was now the principal Rothschild representative (but unknown as such to the public) in the United States.

With the seed money from the National City Bank of Cleveland, old John D. Rockefeller soon laid claim to the title of "the most ruthless American". It is more than likely that it was this quality which persuaded the Rothschilds to back him . Rockefeller realized early in the game that the oil refinery business, which could offer great profits in a short time, also was at the mercy of uncontrolled competition. His solution was a simple one - crush all competition. The famous Rockefeller dedication to total monopoly was simply a business decision. Rockefeller embarked on a campaign of coercing all competing oil refineries out of business. He attacked on a number of fronts, which is also a lesson to all would be entrepreneurs. First, he would send a minion, not known to be working for Rockefeller, with an offer to buy the competing refinery for a low price, but offering cash. If the offer was refused, the competitor would then come under attack from a competing refinery which greatly undercut his price. He might also suffer a sudden strike at his refinery, which would force him to shut down. Control of labor through unions has always been a basic Rockefeller technique. Like the Soviet Union, they seldom have labor trouble. If these techniques failed, Rockefeller would then be saddened by a reluctant decision to use violence; beating the rival workers as they went to and from their jobs, or burning or blowing up the competing refinery.

These techniques convinced the Rothschilds that they had found their man. They sent their personal representative, Jacob Schiff, to Cleveland to help Rockefeller plan further expansion. At this time, the Rothschilds controlled 95% of all railroad mileage in the United States, through the J.P. Morgan Company and Kuhn Loeb & Company according to official Department of Commerce figures for the year 1895. J.P. Morgan mentions in his Who's Who listing that he controlled 50,000 miles of U.S. railways.

Schiff worked out an elaborate rebate deal for Rockefeller, through a dummy corporation, South Improvement Company. These rebates ensured that no other oil company could survive in competition with the Rockefeller firm. The scheme was later exposed, but by that time Rockefeller had achieved a virtual monopoly of the oil business in the United States. The daughter of one of his victims, Ida Tarbell, whose father was ruined by Rockefeller's criminal operations, wrote the first major expose of the Standard Oil Trust. She was promptly denounced as a "muckraker" by the poseur, Theodore Roosevelt, who claimed to be a "trust buster". In fact, he ensured the dominance of the Standard Oil Trust and other giant trusts.

During the next half century, John D. Rockefeller was routinely caricatured by socialist propagandists as the epitome of the ruthless capitalist. At the same time, he was the principal financier of the world Communist movement, through a firm called American International Company. Despite the fact that the House of Rothschild had already achieved world control, the sound and fury was directed exclusively against its two principal, representatives, John D. Rockefeller and J.P. Morgan. One of the few revelations of the actual state of affairs appeared in Truth magazine, December 16, 1912, which pointed out that "Mr. Schiff is head of the great private banking house of Kuhn, Loeb & Company, which represents the Rothschild interests on this side of the Atlantic. He is described as a financial strategist and has been for years the financial minister of the great impersonal power known as Standard Oil." Note that this editor did not even mention the name of Rockefeller.

Because of these concealed factors, it was a relatively simple matter for the American public to accept the "fact" that the Rockefellers were the preeminent power in this country. This myth was actually clothed in the apparel of power, the Rockefeller Oil Trust becoming the "military-industrial complex" which assumed political control of the nation; the Rockefeller Medical Monopoly attained control of the health care of the nation, and the Rockefeller Foundation, a web of affiliated tax exempt creations, effectively controlled the religious and educational life of the nation. The myth succeeded in its goal of camouflaging the hidden rulers, the Rothschilds.

After the present writer had been exposing this charade for some twenty-five years, a new myth began to be noised about in American conservative circles, effectively propagated by active double agents. This myth found a host of eager believers, because it heralded a growing crack in the monolithic power which had been oppressing all the peoples of the world. This new "revelation" was that a struggle to the death for world power had developed between the Rockefellers and the Rothschilds. According to this startling development, one faction or the other, depending on which agent you were listening to, had gained control of the Soviet Union and would use its power as the basis for achieving the overthrow of the other faction. The sudden death of several members of the Rockefeller family was cited as "proof" that such a struggle was taking place, although no Rothschild is known to have succumbed during this "war". This ignored the general understanding that Nelson Rockefeller had been "eliminated" as the result of losing deposit slips for several billion dollars of drugs from the Colombian cartel, or that the other Rockefeller deaths showed no trace of a "Rothschild connection".

Having maintained extensive files on this situation for several decades, the present writer could not believe anyone could be so misinformed as to think that "the Rockefellers" were now trying to seize power from the Rothschilds, at a time when the influence of members of the Rockefeller family was already in great decline, their family finances being handled by J. Richardson Dilworth, their legal affairs being handled by John J. McCloy, and other faithful retainers; none of these retainers would have been willing to engage in a genuine power struggle, as they were faceless managers who lived only for their weekly paycheck. They had no ambitions of their own. Nevertheless, many hopeful Americans grasped the will-o-the-wisp notion that the Rockefellers were now "good Americans" who were willing to risk all to overthrow the Rothschilds. Amazingly enough, this pernicious story persisted for almost a decade before being relegated to the curiosities of history.

Like J.P. Morgan, who had begun his commercial career by selling the U.S. Army some defective guns, the famous fall carbine affair, John D. Rockefeller also was a war profiteer during the Civil War ; he sold unstamped Harkness liquor to Federal troops at a high profit, gaining the initial capital to embark on his drive for monopoly. His interest in the oil business was a natural one; his father, William Rockefeller had been "in oil" for years . William Rockefeller had become an oil entrepreneur after salt wells at Tarentum, near Pittsburgh, were discovered in 1842 to be flowing with oil. The owners of the wells, Samuel L. Kier, began to bottle the oil and sell it for medicinal purposes. One of his earliest wholesalers was William Rockefeller. The "medicine" was originally labeled "Kier's Magic Oil". Rockefeller printed his own labels, using "Rock Oil" or "Seneca Oil," Seneca being the name of a well known Indian tribe. Rockefeller achieved his greatest notoriety and his greatest profits by advertising himself as "William Rockefeller, the Celebrated Cancer Specialist". It is understandable that his grandsons would become the controlling power behind the scenes of the world's most famous cancer treatment center and would direct government funds and charitable contributions to those areas which only benefit the Medical Monopoly. William Rockefeller spared no claim in his flamboyant career. He guaranteed "All Cases of Cancer Cured Unless They Are Too Far Gone." Such were the healing powers that he attributed to his magic cancer cure that he vas able to retail it for $25 a bottle, a sum then equivalent to two months' wages. The "cure" consisted of a few well known diuretics, which had been diluted by water. This carnival medicine show barker could hardly have envisioned that his descendants would control the greatest and the most profitable Medical Monopoly in recorded history .=20

As an itinerant "carnie," a traveling carnival peddler, William Rockefeller had chosen a career which interfered with developing a stable family life. His son John rarely saw him, a circumstance which has inspired some psychological analysts a conjecture that the absence of a father figure or parental love may have contributed to John D. Rockefeller's subsequent development as a money mad tyrant who plotted to maim, poison and kill millions of his fellow American during almost century of his monopolistic operations and whose influence, reaching up from the grave, remains the most dire and malignant presence in American life. This may have been a contributing factor - however, it is also possible that he was totally evil. It is hardly arguable that he is probably the most Satanic figure in American history.

It has long been a truism that you can find a horse thief or two in any prominent American family. In the Rockefeller family it was more than a truism. William seems to have faithfully followed the precepts of the Will of Canaan throughout his career, "love robbery, love lechery." He fled from a number of indictments for horse stealing, finally disappearing altogether as William Rockefeller and re-emerging as Dr. William Levingston of Philadelphia, a name which he retained for the rest of his life. An investigative reporter at Joseph Pulitzer's New York World received a tip that was followed up. The World then disclosed that William Avery Rockefeller had died May 11, 1906 in Freeport, Illinois, where he was interred in an unmarked grave as Dr. William Levingston.

William Rockefeller's vocation as a medicine man greatly facilitated his preferred profession of horse thief. As one who planned to be in the next county by morning, it was a simple matter to tie a handsome stallion to the back of his wagon and head for the open road. It also played a large part in his vocation as a woman-chaser; he was described as being "woman-mad". He not only concluded several bigamous marriages, but he seems to have had uncontrolled passions. On June 28, 1849, he was indicted for raping a hired girl in Cayuga, New York; he later was found to be residing in Oswego, New York and was forced once again to decamp for parts unknown. He had no difficulty in financing his woman-chasing interests from the sale of his miraculous cancer cure and from another product, his "Wonder Working Liniment," which he offered at only two dollars a bottle. It consisted of crude petroleum from which the lighter oils had been boiled away, leaving a heavy solution of paraffin, lube oil and tar, which comprised the "liniment." William Rockefeller's original miracle oil survived until quite recently as a concoction called Nujol, consisting principally of petroleum and peddled as a laxative. It was well known that Nujol was merely an advertising sobriquet meaning "new oil," as opposed, apparently, to "old oil". Sold as an antidote to constipation, it robbed the body of fat-soluble vitamins, it being a well-established medical fact that mineral oil coated the intestine and prevented the absorption of many needed vitamins and other nutritional needs. Its makers added carotene as a sop to the health-conscious, but it was hardly worth the bother. Nujol was manufactured by a subsidiary of Standard Oil of New Jersey, called Stanco, whose only other product, manufactured on the same premises, was the famous insecticide, Flit.

Nujol was hawked from the Senate Office Building in Washington for years during a more liberal interpretation of "conflict of interest." In this case, it was hardly a conflict of interest, because the august peddler, Senator Royal S. Copeland, never had any interests other than serving the Rockefellers. He was a physician whom Rockefeller had appointed as head of the New York State Department of Health and later financed his campaign for the Senate. Copeland's frank display of commercialism amazed even the most blasé Washington reporters. He devoted his Senate career to a daily program advertising Nujol. A microphone was set up in his Senate office each morning, the first order of business being the Nujol program, for which he was paid $75,000 a year, an enormous salary in the 1930s and more than the salary of the President of the United States. Senator Copeland's exploits earned him a number of nicknames on Capitol Hill. He was often called the Senator from the American Medical Association, because of his enthusiastic backing for any program launched by the AMA and Morris Fishbein. More realistically, he was usually referred to as "the Senator from Standard Oil". He could be counted on to promote any legislation devised for the greater profit of the Rockefeller monopoly. During congressional debate on the Food and Drug Act in 1938, he came under criticism from Congresswoman Leonor Sullivan, who charged that Senator Copeland, a physician who handled the bill on the Senate floor, frankly acknowledged during the debate that soap was exempted from the law, because the soap manufacturers, who were the nation's largest advertisers, would otherwise join with other big industries to fight the bill. Congresswoman Sullivan complained the "Soap was officially declared in the law not to be a cosmetic . .. The hair dye manufacturers were given license to market known dangerous products, just so long as they placed a special warning on the label - but what woman in a beauty parlor ever sees the label on the bulk container in which hair dye is shipped ?"

Just as the elder Rockefeller had spent his life in the pursuit of his personal obsession, omen, so his son John was equally obsessed, being money-mad instead of women-mad, totally committed to the pursuit of ever-increasing wealth and power. However, the principal accomplishments of the Rockefeller drive for power, the rebate scheme for monopoly, the chartering of the foundations to gain power over American citizens, the creation of the central bank, the Federal Reserve System, the backing of the World Communist revolution and the creation of the Medical Monopoly, all came from the Rothschilds or from their European employees. We cannot find in the records of John D. Rockefeller that he originated any one of these programs. The concept of the tax exempt charitable foundation originated with the Rothschild minion, George Peabody, in 1865. The Peabody Educational Foundation later became the Rockefeller Foundation. It is unlikely that even the diabolical mind of John D. Rockefeller could have conceived of this devious twist. A social historian has described the major development of the late nineteenth century, when charitable foundations and world Communism became important movements, as one of the more interesting facets of history, perhaps equivalent to the discovery of the wheel. This new discovery was the concept developed by the rats, who after all have rather highly developed intelligences, that they could trap people by baiting traps with little bits of cheese. The history of mankind since then has been the rats catching humans in their traps. Socialism - indeed any government program - is simply the rat baiting the trap with a smidgen of cheese and catching himself a human.

Congressman Wright Putman, chairman of the House Banking and Currency Committee, noted from the floor of Congress that the establishment of the Rockefeller Foundation effectively insulated Standard Oil from competition. The controlling stock had been removed from market manipulation or possible buy-outs by competitors. It also relieved Standard Oil from most taxation, which then placed a tremendous added burden on individual American taxpayers. Although a Rockefeller relative by marriage, Senator Nelson Aldrich, Republican majority leader in the Senate, had pushed the General Education Board charter through Congress, the Rockefeller Foundation charter proved to be more difficult. Widespread criticism of Rockefeller's monopolistic practices was heard, and his effort to insulate his profits from taxation or takeover was seen for what it was. The charter was finally pushed through in 1913 (the significant Masonic numeral 13 - 1913 was also the year the progressive income tax and of the enactment of the Federal Reserve Act). Senator Robert F. Wagner of New York, another senator from Standard Oil (there were quite a few), ramrodded the Congressional approval of the charter. The charter was then signed by John D. Rockefeller, John D. Rockefeller, Jr., Henry Pratt Judson, president of the Rockefeller established University of Chicago, Simon Flexner, director of the Rockefeller Institute, Starr Jameson, described in Who's Who as "personal counsel to John D. Rockefeller in his benevolences," and Charles W. Eliot, president of Harvard University.

The Rockefeller Oil Monopoly is now 125 years old, yet in 1911, the Supreme Court, bowing to public outrage, had ruled that it had to be broken up. The resulting companies proved to be no problem for the Rockefeller interests. The family retained a two per cent holding in each of the "new" companies, while the Rockefeller foundations took a three per cent stock holding in each company. This gave them a five per cent stock interest in each company ; a one per cent holding in a corporation is usually sufficient to maintain working control.

The involvement of the Rockefellers in promoting the world Communist Revolution also developed from their business interests. There was never any commitment to the Marxist ideology; like anything else, it was there to be used. At the turn of the century Standard Oil was competing fiercely with Royal Dutch Shell for control of the lucrative European market. Congressional testimony revealed that Rockefeller had sent large sums to Lenin and Trotsky to instigate the Communist Revolution of 1905. His banker, Jacob Schiff, had previously financed the Japanese in their war against Russia and had sent a personal emissary, George Kennan to Russia to spend some twenty years in promoting revolutionary activity against the Czar. When the Czar abdicated, Trotsky was placed on a ship with three hundred Communist revolutionaries from the Lower East Side of New York. Rockefeller obtained a special passport for Trotsky from Woodrow Wilson and sent Lincoln Steffens with him to make sure he was returned safely to Russia. For traveling expenses, Rockefeller placed a purse containing $10,000 in Trotsky's pocket.

On April 13, 1917, when the ship stopped in Halifax, Canadian Secret Service officers immediately arrested Trotsky and interned him in Nova Scotia. The case became an international cause celebre, as leading government officials from several nations frantically demanded Trotsky's release. The Secret Service had been tipped off that Trotsky was on his way to take Russia out of the war, freeing more German armies to attack Canadian troops on the Western Front. Prime Minister Lloyd George hurriedly cabled orders from London to the Canadian Secret Service to free Trotsky at once--they ignored him. Trotsky was finally freed by the intervention of one of Rockefeller's most faithful stooges, Canadian Minister Mackenzie King, who had long been a "labor specialist" for the Rockefellers. King personally obtained Trotsky's release and sent him on his way as the emissary of the Rockefellers, commissioned to win the Bolshevik Revolution. Thus Dr. Armand Hammer, who loudly proclaims his influence in Russia as the friend of Lenin, has an insignificant claim compared to the role of the Rockefellers in backing world Communism. Although Communism, like other isms, had originated with Marx's association with the House of Rothschild, it enlisted the reverent support of John D. Rockefeller because he saw Communism for what it is, the ultimate monopoly, not only controlling the government, the monetary system and all property, but also a monopoly which, like the corporations it emulates, is self-perpetuating and eternal. It was the logical progression from his Standard Oil monopoly.

An important step on the road to world monopoly was the most far-reaching corporation invented by the Rothschilds. This was the international drug and chemical cartel, I.G. Farben. Called "a state within a state," it was created in 1925 as Interessen Gemeinschaft Farbenindustrie Aktien gesellschaft, usually known as I.G. Farben, which simply meant "The Cartel". It had originated in 1904, when the six major chemical companies in Germany began negotiations to form the ultimate cartel, merging Badische Anilin, Bayer, Agfa, Hoechst, Weiler-ter-Meer, and Greisheim-Electron. The guiding spirit, as well as the financing, came from the Rothschilds, who were represented by their German banker, Max Warburg, of M.M. Warburg Company, Hamburg. He later headed the German Secret Service during World War I and was personal financial adviser to the Kaiser. When the Kaiser was overthrown, after losing the war, Max Warburg was not exiled with him to Holland, instead he became the financial adviser to the new government. Monarchs may come and go, but the real power remains with the bankers. While representing Germany at the Paris Peace Conference, Max Warburg spent pleasant hours renewing family ties with his brother, Paul Warburg, who, after drafting the Federal Reserve Act at Jekyl Island, had headed the U.S. banking system during the war. He was in Paris as Woodwow Wilson's financial advisor.

I.G. Farben soon had a net worth of six billion marks, controlling some five hundred firms. Its first president was Professor Carl Bosch. During the period of the Weimar Republic, I.G. officials, seeing the handwriting on the wall, began a close association with Adolf Hitler, supplying much needed funds and political influence. The success of the I.G. Farben cartel had aroused the interest of other industrialists. Henry Ford was favorably impressed and set up a German branch of Ford Motor Company. Forty per cent of the stock was purchased by I.G. Farben. I.G. Farben then established an American subsidiary, called American I.G., in cooperation with Standard Oil of New Jersey . Its directors included Walter Teagle, president of Standard Oil, Paul Warburg of Kuhn Loeb & Company and Edsel Ford, representing the Ford interests. John Foster Dulles, for the law firm, Sullivan and Cromwell, became the attorney for I.G., frequently traveling between New York and Berlin on cartel business. His law partner, Arthur Dean, is now director of the $40 million Teagle Foundation which was set up before Teagle's death. Like other fortunes it had become part of the network. Like John Foster Dulles, Arthur Dean has been a director of American Banknote for many years; this is the firm which supplies the paper for our dollar bills. Dean also has been an active behind the scenes government negotiator, serving as arms negotiator at disarmament conferences. Dean was also a director of Rockefeller's American Ag & Chem Company. He was a director of American Solvay, American Metal and other firms. As attorney for the wealthy Hochschild family, who owned Climax Molybdenum and American Metal, Dean became director of their family foundation, the Hochschild Foundation. Dean is director emeritus of the Council on Foreign Relations, the Asia Foundation, International House, Carnegie Foundation, and the Sloan Kettering Cancer Center.

In 1930, Standard Oil announced that it had purchased an alcohol monopoly in Germany, a deal which had been set up by I.G. Farben. After Hitler came to power, John D. Rockefeller assigned his personal press agent, Ivy Lee, to Hitler to serve as a full-time adviser on the rearmament of Germany, a necessary step for setting up World War II. Standard Oil then built large refineries in Germany for the Nazis and continued to supply them with oil during World War II. In the 1930s Standard Oil was receiving in payment from Germany large shipments of musical instruments and ships which had been built in German yards.

The dreaded Gestapo, the Nazi police force, was actually built from the worldwide intelligence network which I.G. Farben had maintained since its inception. Herman Schmitz, who had succeeded Carl Bosch as head of I.G., has been personal advisor to chancellor Brüning; when Hitler took over, Schmitz then became his most trusted secret counselor. So well concealed was the association that the press had orders never to photograph them together . Schmitz was named an honourary member of the Reichstag, while his assistant, Carl Krauch, became Göring's principal advisor in carrying out the Nazis' Four Year Plan. A business associate, Richard Krebs, later testified before the House Un-American Activities Committee, "The I.G. Farbenindustrie, I know from personal experience, was already, in 1934, completely in the hands of the Gestapo." This was a misstatement; the I.G. Farben had merely allied itself with the Gestapo.

In 1924 Krupp Industries was in serious financial difficulty; the firm was saved by a $10 million cash loan from Hallgarten & Company and Goldman Sachs, two of Wall Street's best known firms. The planned re-armament of Germany was able to proceed only after Dillon Read floated $100 million of German bonds on Wall Street for that purpose. It was hardly surprising that at the conclusion of the Second World War, General William Draper was appointed Economic Czar of Germany, being named head of the Economic Division of the Allied Military Government. He was a partner of Dillon Read.

In 1939 Frank Howard, a vice-president of Standard Oil visited Germany. He later testified, "We did our best to work out complete plans for a modus vivendi which would operate throughout the term of the war, whether we came in or not." At this time American I.G. had on its board of directors Charles Mitchell, president of the National City Bank, the Rockefeller bank, Carl Bosch, Paul Warburg, Herman Schmitz and Schmitz' nephew, Max Ilgner.

Although his name is hardly known, Frank Howard was for many years a key figure in Standard Oil operations as director of its research and its international agreements. He also was chairman of the research committee at Sloan Kettering Institute during the 1930s; his appointee at Sloan Kettering, Dusty Rhoads, headed the experimentation in the development of chemotherapy. During the Second World War Rhoads headed the Chemical Warfare Service in Washington at U.S. Army Headquarters. It was Frank Howard who had persuaded both Alfred Sloan and Charles Kettering of General Motors in 1939 to give their fortunes to the Cancer Center, which then took on their names . A member of the wealthy Atherton family, Frank Howard (1891-1964) had married a second time, his second wife being a leading member of the British aristocracy, the Duchess of Leeds. The first Duke of Leeds was titled in 1694, Sir Thomas Osborne, who was one of the key conspirators in the overthrow of King James II and the seizure of the throne of England by William III in 1688. Osborne had made peace with Holland during the reign of King Charles II, and singlehandedly promoted the marriage of Mary, daughter of the Duke of York, to William of Orange in 1677. The Dictionary of National Biography notes that Osborne "for five years managed the House of Commons by corruption and enriched himself." He was impeached by King Charles II for treasonous negotiations with King Louis XIV and imprisoned in the Tower of London from 1678 to 1684. After his release, he again became active in the conspiracy to bring in William of Orange as King of England and secured the crucial province of York for him. William then created him Duke of Leeds. The placing of William on the throne of England made it possible for the conspirators to implement the crucial step in their plans, setting up the Bank of England in 1694. This enabled the Amsterdam bankers to gain control of the wealth of the British Empire. Osborne's biography also notes that he was later accused of Jacobite intrigues and was impeached for receiving a large bribe to procure the charter for the East India Company in 1695, but "the proceedings were not concluded". It was further noted that he "left a large fortune".

AntiSionist - March 15, 2009 05:14 AM (GMT)

The 11th Duke of Leeds was Minister to Washington from 1931 to 1935, Minister to the Holy See from 1936 to 1947, that is, throughout the Second World War. One branch of the family married into the Delano family, becoming relatives of Franklin Delano Roosevelt . A cousin, Viscount Chandos, was a prominent British official, serving in the War Cabinet under Churchill from 1942 to 1945, later becoming a director of the Rothschild firm, Alliance Assurance, and Imperial Chemical Industries.

Frank Howard was the key official in maintaining relations between Standard Oil and I. G. Farben. He led in the development of synthetic rubber, which was crucial to Germany in the Second World War; he later wrote a book, "Buna Rubber". He also was the consultant to the drug firm, Rohm and Haas, representing the Rockefeller connection with that firm. In his later years, he resided in Paris, but continued to maintain his office at 30 Rockefeller Center, New York.

Walter Teagle, the president of Standard Oil, owned 500,000 shares of American I.G., these shares later becoming the basis of the Teagle Foundation. Herman Metz, who was also a director of American I.G., was president of H.A. Metz Company, New York, a drug firm wholly owned by I.G. Farben of Germany. Francis Garvan, who had served as Alien Property Custodian during the First World War, knew many secrets of I.G. Farben's operations. He was prosecuted in 1929 to force him to remain silent. The action was brought by the Department of Justice through Attorney General Merton Lewis, the former counsel for Bosch Company. John Krim, former counsel for the German Embassy in the United States, testified that Senator John King had been on the payroll of the Hamburg American Line for three years at a salary of fifteen thousand dollars a year; he appointed Otto Kahn as treasurer of his election fund. Homer Cummings, who had been Attorney General for six years, then became counsel for General Aniline and Film at a salary of $100,000 a year. During the Second World War, GAF was supposedly owned by a Swiss firm; it came under considerable suspicion as an "enemy" concern and was finally taken over by the United States government. John Foster Dulles had been director of GAF from 1927 to 1934; he was also a director of International Nickel, which was part of the network of I.G. Farben firms. Dulles was related to the Rockefeller family through the Avery connection. He was attorney for the organization of a new investment firm, set up by Avery Rockefeller, in 1936 which was called Schröder-Rockefeller Company. It combined operations of the Schröder Bank, Hitler's personal bank and the Rockefeller interests. Baron Kurt von Schröder was one of Hitler's closest confidantes, and a leading officer of the SS. He was head of the Keppler Associates, which funneled money to the SS for leading German Corporations. Keppler was the official in charge of Industrial Fats during Göring's Four Year Plan, which was launched in 1936. American I.G. changed its name to General Aniline and Film during the Second World War, but it was still wholly owned by I.G. Chemie of Switzerland, a subsidiary of I.G. Farben of Germany. It was headed by Gadow, brother-in-law of Herman Schmitz. I.G. Farben's international agreements directly affected the U.S. war effort, because they set limits on U.S. supplies of magnesium, synthetic rubber and, crucial medical supplies. The director of I.G. Farben's dyestuffs division, Baron George von Schnitzler, was related to the powerful von Rath family, the J.H. Stein Bankhaus which held Hitler's account and the von Mallinckrodt family, the founders of the drug firm in the United States. Like other I.G. officials, he had become an enthusiastic supporter of the Hitler regime. I.G. Farben gave four and a half million reichsmarks to the Nazi Party in 1933; by 1945, I.G. had given the Party 40 million reichsmarks, a sum which equaled all contributions by I.G. to all other recipients during that period. One scholar of the Nazi era, Anthony Sutton, has focussed heavily on German supporters of Hitler, while ignoring the crucial role played by the Bank of England and its Governor, Sir Montague Norman, in financing the Nazi regime. Sutton's position on this problem may have been influenced by the fact that he is British. In view of the outspoken statements from Adolf Hitler about Jewish influence in Germany, it would be difficult to explain the role of I.G. Farben in the Nazi era. Peter Hayes' definitive study of I.G. Farben shows that in 1933 it had ten Jews on its governing boards. We have previously pointed out that I.G., from its inception was a Rothschild concern, formulated by the House of Rothschild and implemented through its agents, Max Warburg in Germany and Standard Oil in=20

Prince Bernhard of the Netherlands joined the SS during the early 1930s. He then joined the board of an I.G. subsidiary, Farben Bilder, from which he took the name of his postwar supersecret policy making group, the Bilderbergers. Farben executives played an important role in organizing the Circle of Friends for Heinrich Himmler, although it was initially known as Keppler's Circle of Friends, Keppler being the chairman of an I.G. subsidiary. His nephew, Fritz J. Kranefuss, was the personal assistant to Heinrich Himmler. Of the forty members of the Circle of Friends, which provided ample funds for Himmler, eight were executives of I.G. Farben or of its subsidiaries.

Despite the incredible devastation of most German cities from World War II air bombings, the I.G. Farben building in Frankfort, one of the largest buildings there, miraculously survived intact. A large Rockefeller mansion in Frankfort also was left untouched by the war, despite the saturation bombing. Frankfort was the birthplace of the Rothschild family. It was hardly coincidental that the postwar government of Germany, Allied Military Government, should set up its offices in the magnificent I.G. Farben building. This government was headed by General Lucius Clay, who later became a partner of Lehman Brothers bankers in New York. The Political Division was headed by Robert Murphy, who would preside at the Nüremberg Trials, where he was successful in glossing over the implication of I.G. Farben officials and Baron Kurt von Schröder. Schröder was held a short time in a detention camp and then set free to return to his banking business. The Economic Division was headed by Lewis Douglas, son of the founder of Memorial Cancer center in New York, president of Mutual Life and director of General Motors. Douglas was slated to become U.S. High Commissioner for Germany, but he agreed to step aside in favor of his brother-in-law, John J. McCloy. By an interesting circumstance, Douglas, McCloy and Chancellor Konrad Adenauer of Germany had all married sisters, the daughters of John Zinsser, a partner of J.P. Morgan Company.

As the world's pre-eminent cartel, I.G. Farben and the drug companies which it controlled in the United States through the Rockefeller interests were responsible for many inexplicable developments in the production and distribution of drugs. From 1908 to 1936 I.G. held back its discovery of sulfanilamide, which would become a potent weapon in the medical arsenal. In 1920, I.G. had signed working agreements with the important drug firms of Switzerland, Sandoz and Ciba-Geigy. In 1926, I.G. merged with Dynamit-Nobel, the German branch of the dynamite firm, while an English firm took over the English division. I.G. officials then began to negotiate with Standard Oil officials about the prospective manufacture of synthetic coal, which would present a serious threat to Standard Oil's monopoly. A compromise was reached with the establishment of American I.G., in which both firms would play an active role and share in the profits.

Charles Higham's book, "Trading with the Enemy," offers ample documentation of the Rockefeller activities during the Second World War. While Hitler's bombers were dropping tons of explosives on London, they were paying royalties on every gallon of gasoline they burned to Standard Oil, under existing patent agreements. After World War II, when Queen Elizabeth visited the United States, she stayed in only one private home during her visit, the Kentucky estate of William Irish, of Standard Oil. Nelson Rockefeller moved to Washington after our involvement in World War II, where Roosevelt named him Coordinator of Inter-American Affairs. Apparently his principal task was to coordinate the refueling of German ships in South America from Standard Oil tanks. He also used this office to obtain important South American concessions for his private firm, International Basic Economy Corporation, including a corner on the Colombian coffee market. He promptly upped the price, a move which enabled him to buy seven billion dollars worth of real estate in South America and also gave rise to the stereotype of the "Yanqui imperialismo". The attack on Vice President Nixon's automobile when he visited South America was explained by American officials as a direct result of the depredations of the Rockefellers, which caused widespread agitation against Americans in Latin America.

After World War II, twenty-four German executives were prosecuted by the victors, all of them connected with I.G. Farben, including eleven officers of I.G. Eight were acquitted, including Max Ilgner, nephew of Herman Schmitz. Schmitz received the most severe sentence, eight years. Ilgner actually received three years, but the time was credited against his time in jail waiting for trial, and he was immediately released. The Judge was C.G. Shake and the prosecuting attorney was Al Minskoff.

The survival of I.G. Farben was headlined by the Wall Street Journal on May 3, 1988 -

GERMANY BEATS WORLD IN CHEMICAL SALES. Reporter Thomas F. O'Boyle listed the world's top five chemical companies in 1987 as 1. BASF $25.8 billion dollars. 2. Bayer $23.6 billion dollars. 3. Hoechst $23.5 billion dollars. 4. ICI $20 billion dollars. 5. DuPont $17 billion dollars in chemical sales only.

The first three companies are the firms resulting from the "dismantling" of I.G. Farben from 1945 to 1952 by the Allied Military Government, in a process suspiciously similar to the "dismantling" of the Standard Oil empire by court edict in 1911. The total sales computed in dollars of the three spin-offs of I.G. Farben, some $72 billion, dwarfs its nearest rivals, ICI and DuPont, who together amount to about half of the Farben empire's dollar sales in 1987. Hoechst bought Celanese corp. in 1987 for $2.72 billion.

O'Boyle notes that "The Big Three (Farben spin-offs) still behave like a cartel. Each dominates specific areas; head to head competition is limited. Critics suspect collusion. At the least, there's a cosiness that doesn't exist in the U.S. chemical industry."

After the war, Americans were told they must support an "altruistic" plan to rebuild devastated Europe, to be called the Marshall Plan, after Chief of Staff George Marshall, who had been labeled on the floor of the Senate by Senator Joseph McCarthy as "a living lie". The Marshall Plan proved to be merely another Rockefeller Plan to loot the American taxpayer. On December 13, 1948, Col. Robert McCormick, editor of the Chicago Tribune, personally denounced Esso's looting of the Marshall Plan in a signed editorial. The Marshall Plan had been rushed through Congress by a powerful and vocal group, headed by Winthrop Aldrich, president of the Chase Manhattan Bank and Nelson Rockefeller's brother-in-law, ably seconded by Nelson Rockefeller and William Clayton, the head of Anderson, Clayton Company. The Marshall Plan proved to be but one of a number of lucrative postwar swindles, which included the Bretton Woods Agreement, United Nations Relief and Rehabilitation and others.

After World War II, the Rockefellers used their war profits to buy a large share of Union Miniere du Haut Katanga, an African copper lode owned by Belgian interest, including the Societe Generale, a Jesuit controlled bank. Soon after their investment, the Rockefellers launched a bold attempt to seize total control of the mines through sponsoring a local revolution, using as their agent the Grangesberg operation. This enterprise had originally been developed by Sir Ernest Cassel, financial advisor to King Edward VII - Cassel's daughter later married Lord Mountbatten, a member of the British royal family, who was also related to the Rothschilds. Grangesberg was now headed by Bo Hammarskjold, whose brother, Dag Hammarskjold was then Secretary General of the United Nations - Bo Hammarskjold became a casualty of the Rockefeller revolution when his plane was shot down during hostilities in the Congo. Various stories have since circulated about who killed him and why he was killed. The Rockefeller intervention in the Congo was carried out by their able lieutenants, Dean Rusk and George Ball of the State Department and by Fowler Hamilton.

In the United States, the Rockefeller interests continue to play the major political role. Old John D. Rockefeller's treasurer at Standard Oil, Charles Pratt, bequeathed his New York mansion to the Council on Foreign Relations as its world headquarters. His grandson, George Pratt Shultz, is now Secretary of State. The Rockefellers also wielded a crucial role through their financing of the Trotskyite Communist group in the United States, the League for Industrial Democracy, whose directors include such staunch "anti-communists" as Jeane Kirkpatrick and Sidney Hook. The Rockefellers were also active on the "right-wing" front through their sponsorship of the John Birch Society. To enable Robert Welch, a 32nd degree Mason, to devote all of his time to the John Birch Society, Nelson Rockefeller purchased his family firm, the Welch Candy Company, from him at a handsome price. Welch chose the principal officers of the John Birch Society from his acquaintances at the Council On Foreign Relations. For years afterwards, American patriots were puzzled by the consistent inability of the John Birch Society to move forward on any of its well-advertised "anti-Communist" goals. The fact that the society had been set up at the behest of the backers of the world Communist revolution may have played some role in this development. Other patriots wondered why most American conservative writers, including the present writer, were steadily blacklisted by the John Birch Society for some thirty years. Despite thousands of requests from would be book buyers, the John Birch Society refused to review or list any of my books. After several decades of futility, the Society was totally discredited by its own record. In a desperate effort to restore its image, William Buckley, the CIA propagandist, launched a "fierce" attack against the John Birch Society in the pages of his magazine, the National Review. This free publicity campaign also did little to revive the moribund organization.

The Rockefeller monopoly influence has had its effect on some of New York's largest and wealthiest churches. Trinity Church on Wall Street, whose financial resources had been directed by none other than J.P. Morgan, owns some forty commercial properties in Manhattan and has a stock portfolio of $50 million, which, due to informed investment, actually yields a return of $25 million a year! Only $2.6 million of this income is spent for charitable work. The rector, why receives a salary of $100,000 a year, lives on the fashionable Upper East Side. Trinity's mausoleum sells its spaces at fees starting at $1250 and rising to $20,000 . St. Bartholomew, on Fifth Avenue, has an annual budget of $3.2 million a year of which only $100,000 is spent on charity. Its rector resides in a thirteen room apartment on Park Avenue.

In medicine, the Rockefeller influence remains entrenched in its Medical Monopoly. We have mentioned its control of the cancer industry through the Sloan Kettering Cancer Center. We have listed the directors of the major drug firms, each with its director from Chase Manhattan Bank, the Standard Oil Company or other Rockefeller firms. The American College of Surgeons maintains a monopolistic control of hospitals through the powerful Hospital Survey Committee, with members Winthrop Aldrich and David McAlpine Pyle representing the Rockefeller control.

A medical fraternity known as the "rich man's club," the New York Academy of Medicine, was offered grants for a new building by the Rockefeller Foundation and the Carnegie Foundation, its subsidiary group. This "seed money" was then used to finance a public campaign which brought in funds to erect a new building. For Director of the new facility, the Rockefellers chose Dr. Lindsly Williams, son-in-law of the managing partner of Kidder, Peabody, a firm strongly affiliated with the J.P. Morgan interests (the J.P. Morgan Company had originally been called the Peabody Company). Williams was married to Grace Kidder Ford. Although Dr. Williams was widely known to be an incompetent physician, his family connections were impeccable. He became a factor in Franklin D. Roosevelt's election campaign when he publicly certified that Roosevelt, a cripple in a wheelchair who suffered from a number of oppressive ailments, was both physically and mentally fit to be the President of United States. Dr. Williams' opinion, published in an article in the widely circulated Collier's Magazine, allayed public doubts about Roosevelt's condition. As a result, Williams was to be offered a newly created post in Roosevelt's cabinet, Secretary of Health. However, it was another thirty years before Health became a cabinet post, due to the politicking of Oscar Ewing.

The Rockefellers had greatly extended their business interests in the impoverished Southern states by establishing the Rockefeller Sanitary Commission. It was headed by Dr. Wickliffe Rose, a longtime Rockefeller henchman whose name appears on the original charter of the Rockefeller Foundation. Despite its philanthropic goals, the Rockefeller Sanitary Commission required financial contributions from each of the eleven Southern states in which it operated, resulting in the creation of State Departments of Health in those states and opening up important new spheres of influence for their Drug Trust. In Tennessee, the Rockefeller representative was a Dr. Olin West, who moved on to Chicago to become the power behind the scenes at the American Medical Association for forty years, as secretary and general manager.

The Rockefeller Institute for Medical Research finally dropped the "Medical Research" part of its title; its president, Dr. Detlev Bronk, resided in a $600,000 mansion furnished by this charitable operation. Rockefeller's general Education Board has spent more than $100 million to gain control of the nation's medical schools and turn our physicians to physicians of the allopathic school, dedicated to surgery and the heavy use of drugs. The Board, which had developed from the original Peabody Foundation, also spent some $66 million for Negro education.

One of the most far-reaching consequences of the General Education Board's political philosophy was achieved with a mere six million dollar grant to Columbia University in 1917, to set up the "progressive" Lincoln School. From this school descended the national network of progressive educators and social scientists, whose pernicious influence closely paralleled the goals of the Communist Party, another favorite recipient of the Rockefeller millions . From its outset, the Lincoln School was described frankly as a revolutionary school for the primary and secondary schools of the entire United States. It immediately discarded all theories of education which were based on formal and well-established disciplines, that is, the McGuffey Reader type of education which worked by teaching such subjects as Latin and algebra, thus teaching children to think logically about problems. Rockefeller biographer Jules Abel hails the Lincoln School as "a beacon light in progressive education "

Rockefeller Institute financial fellowships produced many prominent workers in our atomic programs, such as J. Robert Oppenheimer, who was later removed from government laboratories as a suspected Soviet agent. Although most of his friends and associates were known Soviet agents, this was called "guilt by association." The Rockefeller Foundation created a number of spin-off groups, which now plague the nation with a host of ills, one of them being the Social Science Research Council, which single-handedly spawned the nationwide "poverty industry," a business which expends some $130 billion a year of taxpayer funds while grossing some $6 billion income for its practitioners. The money, which would amply feed and house all of the nation's "poor," is dissipated through a vast administrative network which awards generous concessions to a host of parasitic "consultants".

Despite years of research, the present writer has been able to merely scratch the surface of the Rockefeller influences listed here. For instance, the huge Burroughs Wellcome drug firm is wholly owned by the "charitable" Wellcome Trust. This trust is directed by Lord Oliver Franks, a key member of the London Connection which maintains the United States as a British Colony. Franks was Ambassador to the United States from 1948 to 1952. He is now a director of the Rockefeller Foundation, as its principal representative in England. He also is a director of the Schröder Bank, which handled Hitler's personal bank account, director of the Rhodes Trust in charge of approving Rhodes scholarships, visiting professor at the University of Chicago and chairman of Lloyd's Bank, one of England's Big Five.

Other Rockefeller Foundation spin-offs include the influential Washington think-tank, the Brookings Institution, the National Bureau of Economic Research, whose findings play a critical role in manipulating the stock market; the Public Administration Clearing House, which indoctrinates the nation's municipal employees ; the Council of State Governments, which controls the nation's state legislatures; and the Institute of Pacific Relations, the most notorious Communist front in the United States. The Rockefellers appeared as directors of this group, funneling money to it through their financial advisor, Lewis Lichtenstein Strauss, of Kuhn, Loeb Company.

The Rockefellers have maintained their controlling interest in the Chase Manhattan Bank, owning five per cent of the stock. Through this one asset they control $42.5 billion worth of assets. Chase Manhattan interlocks closely with the Big Four insurance companies, of which three, Metropolitan, Equitable and New York Life had $113 billion in assets in 1969.

With the advent of the Reagan Administration in 1980, the Rockefeller interests sought to obscure their longtime support of world Communism by bringing to Washington a vocally "anti-Communist" administration. Reagan was soon wining and dining Soviet premiers as enthusiastically as had his predecessor Jimmy Carter. The Reagan campaign had been managed by two officials of Bechtel Corporation, its president, George Pratt Schultz, a Standard Oil heir, and his counsel, Casper Weinberger. Shultz was named Secretary of State, Weinberger, Secretary of Defense, Bechtel had been financed by the Schröder-Rockefeller Company, the 1936 alliance between the Schröder Bank and the Rockefeller heirs.

The Rockefeller influence also remains preeminent in the monetary field. Since November, 1910, when Senator Nelson Aldrich chaired the secret conference at Jekyl Island which gave us the Federal Reserve Act, the Rockefellers have kept us within the sphere of the London Connection. During the Carter Administration, David Rockefeller generously sent his personal assistant, Paul Volcker, to Washington to head the Federal Reserve Board . Reagan finally replaced him in 1987 with Alan Greenspan, a partner of J.P. Morgan Company. Their influence on our banking system has remained constant through many financial coups on their part, one of the most profitable being the confiscation of privately owned gold from American citizens by Roosevelt's edict. Our citizens had to turn over their gold to the privately owned Federal Reserve System. The Constitution permits confiscation for purposes of eminent domain, but prohibits confiscation for private gain. The gold's new owners then had the gold revalued from $20 an ounce to $35, giving them an enormous profit.

In reviewing the all-pervasive influence of the Rockefellers and their foreign controllers, the Rothschilds, in every aspect of American life, the citizen must ask himself, "What can be done?" Right can prevail only when the citizen actively seeks justice . Justice can prevail only when each citizen realizes that it is his God-given duty to mete out justice. History has documented all of the crimes of the usurpers of our Constitution. We have learned the painful lesson that the Rockefeller monopolists exercise their evil power almost solely through federal and state agents. At this writing, former Congressman Ron Paul is running for the Presidency of the United States on an eminently sensible and practical campaign - abolish the Federal Reserve System - abolish the FBI - abolish the Internal Revenue Service - and abolish the CIA. It has been known for years that 90% of the Federal Bureau of Investigation, ostensibly set up to "fight crime" has been to harass and isolate political dissidents.

The criminal syndicalists are now looting the American nation of one trillion dollars each year, of which about one-third, more than three hundred billion dollars per year, represents the profitable depredations of the Drug Trust and its medical subsidiaries . Before a sustained effort to combat these depredations can be mounted, Americans must make every effort to regain their health. As Ezra Pound demanded in one of his famous radio broadcasts, "Health, dammit"! America became the greatest and most productive nation in the world because we had the healthiest citizens in the world.

When the Rockefeller Syndicate began its takeover of our medical profession in 1910, our citizens went into a sharp decline. Today, we suffer from a host of debilitating ailments, both mental and physical, nearly all of which can be traced directly to the operations of the chemical and drug monopoly and which pose the greatest threat to our continued existence as a nation. Unite now to restore our national health - the result will be the restoration of our national pride, the resumption of our role as the inventors and producers of the modern world, and the custodian of the world's hopes and dreams of liberty and freedom.

Originally from the 'New World Order Intelligence Update'web site at http://www.nwointelligence.com http://www.survivalistskills.com/ROCKSYN.HTM

AntiSionist - March 15, 2009 05:19 AM (GMT)

http://www.scribd.com/doc/3920620/Eustace-...er-by-Injection

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: MASSIVE ARCHIVE ON VACCINES

Title: MASSIVE ARCHIVE ON VACCINES

craig-oxley - September 13, 2008 11:48 PM (GMT)

http://z13.invisionfree.com/THE_UNHIVED_MI...php?showforum=7

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: Compulsory Vacc bill "BioShield 2" MUST Be Stopped

Title: Compulsory Vacc bill "BioShield 2" MUST Be Stopped

craig-oxley - September 13, 2008 04:24 PM (GMT)

Compulsory Vaccination Bill, "BioShield 2" MUST Be Stopped!

From Dr. Len Horowitz, http://www.drlenhorowitz.com http://educate-yourself.org/cn/lenhorowitz...ne20oct05.shtml
October 20, 2005

For Immediate Release

"CODE RED" VACCINE BILL ALERT-

Road to Destruction is Paved with Deadly Deception

Sandpoint, ID: "This is incredibly serious," wrote Ingri Cassel, National Vaccination Liberation Organization (VacLib) director. "So serious that the National Vaccine Information Center (NVIC)," led by President, Barbara Loe Fisher, issued a red alert on the Senate HELP Committee's passage of the "Biodefense and Pandemic Vaccine and Drug Development Act of 2005."

The bill, nicknamed "BioShield 2" is expected to pass in the Senate by year's end. In its technically accurate assessment, the NVIC warns the legislation will "strip Americans of the right to a trial by jury if harmed by an experimental or licensed drug or vaccine that they are forced by government to take whenever federal health officials declare a public health emergency."

Ms. Cassel issued the "CODE RED alert" for health groups nationwide to launch a concerted effort to stop Richard Burr's Republican bill co-sponsored by Senate Majority Leader Bill Frist (R-TN), Senate Health, Education, Labor and Pensions Committee Chairman Mike Enzi (R-WY), and Senate Budget Committee Chairman Judd Gregg (R-NH). According to Cassel everyone should oppose this bill by calling and e-mailing their senators to make them aware.

The bill:

a) undermines drug safety laws;

B) violates the constitutional right to a trial by jury in case a vaccine or drug causes injuries;

c) keeps the public in the dark about every aspect of vaccine research, development, injuries, and deaths resulting from the partnership between government and the pharmaceutical lobby; and

d) forces mandatory compliance with public health proclamations demanding vaccinations and/or drugs be taken by anyone declared at risk, not necessarily infected.

"This is the latest deception and distraction issued by government and grassroots activists espousing public protectionism," said Dr. Leonard Horowitz, author of 15 books including the national bestseller, Emerging Viruses: AIDS & Ebola--Nature, Accident or Intentional?
(http://www.tetrahedron.org). "There is nothing new in this legislation that hasn't already been politically dictated."

Technically, Dr. Horowitz is also correct. Drug safety laws have been violated since their inception. The constitutional right to a jury trial fell years ago in cases brought against all federal officials including those engaged in public health practice. The National Vaccine Injury Act of 1986, co-sponsored by NVIC and initially promoted by Ms. Fisher, shielded drug companies from vaccine injury lawsuits. The public, even medical doctors, have always been in the dark about "proprietary" pharmaceutical intelligence, the nitty-gritty on drug testing for FDA approval, and vaccine injury data. And following 9-11, the Model State Emergency Health Powers Act passed by most states forced compliance with public health vaccination/intoxication mandates.

The only message worthy of social, not political, activism at this point is, "WAKE-UP! At least half of the world's population is targeted for elimination under the global elite's depopulation agenda," Dr. Horowitz insists. "Avian flu over the cuckoos nest. DO NOT, UNDER ANY CIRCUMSTANCES, GET VACCCINATED WITH ANYTHING!"

Russian dissident Alexander Solzhenitsyn wrote the opening quote in the aforementioned bestseller. He claims, "To do evil, a human being must first of all believe that what he's doing is good. . . . Ideology is the social theory which helps to make his acts seem good instead of bad in his own and others' eyes, so that he won't hear reproaches and curses but will receive praise and honors."

This offers a great explanation of why "the road to destruction is paved with good intentions."

-End-

Note to journalists: For interviews on this topic, or copies of Dr. Horowitz's many books, please call Jackie Lindenbach at 208-265-8065. (E-mail: tetra@tetrahedron.org)

See also: http://www.drlenhorowitz.com http://www.healingcelebrations.com http://www.tetrahedron.org http://www.originofAIDS.com

Tetrahedron Publishing Group Health Science Communications for People Around the World 206 North 4th Avenue, Suite 147 • Sandpoint, ID 83864 • 208-265-2575 • FAX: 208-265-2775

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: Prominent Doctor Agrees Vaccination May Increase

Title: Prominent Doctor Agrees Vaccination May Increase Description: Autism Risk

TheUnhivedMind - July 21, 2011 04:15 AM (GMT)

Prominent Doctor Agrees Vaccination May Increase Autism Risk

Monday, 18 Jul 2011 12:41 PM
http://www.newsmax.com/FastFeatures/autism...3#ixzz1Sg5YKZwH

Autism, a neurological condition that affects children's social and communicative abilities, is becoming increasingly common. In the United States today, one of out every 150 babies is affected by autism or another similar brain development disorder.

Dr. Russell Blaylock has attributed this rise in brain development disorders to the inclusion of harmful preservatives in today's most common vaccines. Since most children receive 12 or more injections before their first birthday, according to Dr. Blaylock, the preservatives in vaccines must be playing a role in affecting the brain development of babies.

For example, one of the additives commonly used in vaccines today contains mercury. Mercury has been known for years to be harmful to health and, more specifically, has been linked to autism and Alzheimer's. Furthermore, some of the vaccines containing these dangerous additives are only minimally effective in the first place.

Therefore, increased reliance on vaccination puts children at risk to experience brain development effects from these various additives without even realizing the health benefits of the vaccination, accoding to Dr. Blaylock.

The need for many of these vaccines can be eliminated with certain nutritional adjustments, so experts like Dr. Blaylock urge parents to research the vaccines recommended to their infants to make sure that the vaccine is, in fact, necessary.

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: Bill Gates Wants to Register All New Babies on

Title: Bill Gates Wants to Register All New Babies on Description: the Planet for Vaccines [TEUTONIC FILTH]

TheUnhivedMind - July 21, 2011 02:45 AM (GMT)

Bill Gates Wants to Register All New Babies on the Planet For Vaccines

NaturalNews
By David Gutierrez
http://theintelhub.com/2011/01/17/bill-gat...t-for-vaccines/

Bill Gates is promoting a plan to use wireless technology to register every newborn on the planet in a vaccine database.

In a keynote address to the mHealth Summit, which focuses on using mobile technology to improve health care, Gates said that improving survival rates among children under the age of 5 would benefit not just individual families, but societies and the planet as a whole.

“The key thing, the most important fact that people should know and make sure other people know: As you save children under 5, that is the thing that reduces population growth,” he said. “That sounds paradoxical. The fact is that within a decade of improving health outcomes, parents decide to have less children.”

The number of children who die before their fifth birthday has already dropped from 20 million in 1960 to 8.5 million today, a statistic Gates attributes mostly to vaccination.

“About one-third [of that improvement] is by increasing income,” Gates said. “The majority has been through vaccines. Vaccines will be the key. If you could register every birth on a cell phone — get fingerprints, get a location — then you could [set up] systems to make sure the immunizations happen.”

Gates suggested using cell phones to record each birth and send the information, including biometric identifiers, to a central database. This database would then send reminders to parents' phones when it was time to come in for vaccines or other treatments. He said a prime location to implement such programs would be northern Nigeria or northern India, where vaccination rates are less than 50 percent.

Acknowledging that registering every single birth has never been done before, Gates called for "1,000 new ideas" to "blossom" in order to make it happen.

Such ideas could conceivably involve using the GPS devices inside phones to physically track parents who do not bring their children in for vaccines.

Gates also called for use of mobile technology to implement more continuous monitoring of vaccine supply chains.

Sources for this story include: http://www.smartplanet.com/people/b…
Learn more: http://www.naturalnews.com/031031_Bill_Gat...l#ixzz1BJhVQGH5

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: SIMPLE JAB THAT CAN CURE HEART DISEASE

Title: SIMPLE JAB THAT CAN CURE HEART DISEASE
Description: [WATCH WHAT ELSE IT CAUSES]

TheUnhivedMind - July 21, 2011 12:24 AM (GMT)

SIMPLE JAB THAT CAN CURE HEART DISEASE

An injection could reverse the ravages of heart disease

Thursday July 21,2011
By Jo Willey
http://www.express.co.uk/posts/view/260168...e-heart-disease

AN injection could reverse the ravages of heart disease, effectively curing the condition.

The revolutionary technique could transform the lives of many thousands of people in Britain with ailing hearts.

Scientists have found a way to make hearts beat stronger and to even overcome the damage caused by previous heart attacks. The gene injection takes just 12 weeks to start working.

Hailed as “the next great thing”, the ground-breaking research is ready for testing in humans.

This means that it could be just a few years before it is used on heart attack and heart failure patients.

It could rejuvenate hearts, prolonging and vastly improving the quality of patients’ lives.

The new technique could also cut the need for heart transplants, with diseased hearts being able to mend themselves.

It works by raising levels of a calcium-controlling protein in the diseased heart muscle cell to normal. A gene – called S100A1 – makes the protein which is vital for regulating the heart's contraction. Research has shown that, in heart failure patients, the protein is massively depleted.

The revolutionary technique could transform the lives of many thousands of people in Britain

In the new study, researchers at Thomas Jefferson University in Philadelphia, US, injected the gene into pigs with heart failure. Twelve weeks later, the protein created by S100A1 had improved their heart function.

The researchers, whose work is published in Science Translational Medicine, said that, while previous studies have shown similar results in rodents, using it on a large animal which is closer physically to humans shows it is likely to be safe to treat people.

Dr Walter Koch, director of the centre for translational medicine at the university, said: "It's the next great thing in heart failure."

About 750,000 people in the UK are living with heart failure and it is estimated that there are more than 27,000 new cases each year.

Many heart attack victims develop heart failure, in which the weakened heart gradually loses its ability to pump blood.

Treatment includes diuretics, which help to remove pools of excess fluid, as well as "beta-blocker" drugs. But these cannot restore normal heart function and more than half of patients who develop heart failure die within five years of diagnosis.

Professor Jeremy Pearson, associate medical director at the British Heart Foundation, said: "This careful and successful study in pigs provides real hope that similar trials will soon be possible in patients."

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: Testimony To Massachusetts Legislators on H1055 &

Title: Testimony To Massachusetts Legislators on H1055 &
Description: Right to School For Vaccine Exempt Child

TheUnhivedMind - July 18, 2011 12:46 AM (GMT)

Testimony To Massachusetts Legislators on H1055 & Right to School For Vaccine Exempt Children

http://www.ageofautism.com/2011/07/testimo...t-children.html

Bill H.1055
An Act relative to childhood immunizations

By Mr. Keenan of Salem (by request), a petition (accompanied by bill, House, No. 1055) of Andrea Rupert for legislation to allow students not immunized to be admitted to schools upon the written request of a parent. Education.An Act relative to childhood immunizations

By Mr. Keenan of Salem (by request), a petition (accompanied by bill, House, No. 1055) of Andrea Rupert for legislation to allow students not immunized to be admitted to schools upon the written request of a parent. Education. Sponsors:

John D Keenan (By Request)
Referred to Joint Committee on Education
Current Bill Text
Bill History
Miscellaneous
http://www.malegislature.gov/Bills/187/House/H01055#

Click to PrintDownload PDF
http://www.malegislature.gov/Bills/PDF?bil...eneralCourtId=1

Click to View TextView & Print Full Page

http://www.malegislature.gov/Bills/BillHtm...eneralCourtId=1

Allison Chapman, Mark Blaxill, Dr. Richard Deth, Mish Michaels and others give testimony:

[dohtml]<object style="height: 390px; width: 640px"><param name="movie" value="http://www.youtube.com/v/5m_1X_iLVGA?version=3"><param name="allowFullScreen" value="true"><param name="allowScriptAccess" value="always"><embed src="http://www.youtube.com/v/5m_1X_iLVGA?version=3" type="application/x-shockwave-flash" allowfullscreen="true" allowScriptAccess="always" width="640" height="390"></object>[/dohtml]

TheUnhivedMind - July 18, 2011 12:50 AM (GMT)

The true inventor of the inoculation was a Jesuit soldier by the name of Francis Xavier SJ who hides behind the front of Lady Mary Mongau aiding to hide the Jesuits behind the inoculation inquisition which was created to poison all enemies of the Jesuits. Now study the Council of Trent and see that you are that very enemy. Edward Jenner SJ was a Jesuit soldier who pushed this crime on humanity whilst Louis Pasteur was a Roman Catholic fraud trying to keep Pierre Jacques Antione Beauchamp from the spotlight.

May I also remind you that the Jesuit inquisition lives on through this program which is controlled by The Worshipful Company of Apothecaries at the sovereign state of the City of London working for the Crown which has been covertly controlled since the 14th Century by the Knights of Malta based now at Via Condotti, Rome and St John's Wood, England and subordinate since 1798 to the Society of Jesus. The Grandmaster, Matthew Festing is a Cardinal of the Roman Catholic Church. Do the math!

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: Swine flu breath test would 'save thousands from Title: Swine flu breath test would 'save thousands from Description: having needless vaccines [FALSE POS's?]

TheUnhivedMind - July 15, 2011 10:12 PM (GMT)

Swine flu breath test would 'save thousands from having needless vaccines'

Last updated at 9:46 AM on 15th July 2011
http://www.dailymail.co.uk/health/article-...d-pandemic.html

A new breath test which measures the immune response to swine flu could ease future vaccine shortages by revealing those who already have the strain.

The 'fast acting, non-invasive' test would measure biomolecules which accumulate in the body in response to H1N1.

A recent study found that more than half the people vaccinated in Glasgow during the 2009 pandemic were already infected with the flu virus and therefore vaccinated unnecessarily.

It is thought that similar situations would have occurred throughout the UK.

Although the vaccine is not harmful it would have wasted precious stockpiles, reports the Journal of Breath Research.

Researchers from Cleveland Clinic and Syft Technologies say that the breath test they are working on could stop this occurring.

Patients are often vaccinated unnecessarily because they have unknowingly contracted the virus

The test would monitor exhaled nitric oxide (NO) - a biomolecule whose production has previously been linked to influenza and viral infection.

It is believed to play a beneficial role in viral clearance and is is thought that the level of the gas in the breath could indicate whether or not swine flu has been contracted.

Professor Raed Dweik said, 'This study adds to the growing evidence for the utility of breath analysis in medical diagnostics.

'More work still needs to be done, however, to identify the specific compounds that change in response to vaccination and to find the biologic link between those compounds and the host response to the vaccine or the actual disease.'

The H1N1 swine flu pandemic in 2009 affected over 200 countries. It killed close to 500 people in the UK when it first struck and hospitalised thousands.

Last month scientists at the University of Edinburgh found that nearly half the British population probably caught swine flu, although many had it so mildly they didn't realise it.

Blood taken from 1,600 Britons after the 2009/10 H1N1 outbreak revealed that 44 per cent tested positive for the virus.

Extrapolated across the country, this means that 20 times more people had swine flu than previously thought.

Professor Mark Woolhouse, of the University's Centre for Infectious Diseases, said: 'This flu spread very quickly.

'There were about 20 times as many people found to have contracted the disease, as we first thought, which was surprising.

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: 131 Children Vaccinated at Gunpoint in Malawi

Title: 131 Children Vaccinated at Gunpoint in Malawi

TheUnhivedMind - July 15, 2011 06:53 PM (GMT)

131 Children Vaccinated at Gunpoint in Malawi

July 13, 2011
http://www.faceofmalawi.com/2011/07/131-ch...oint-in-malawi/

Here is the totalitarian downside to Bill Gates' global vaccination campaign. The Gates' Foundation website features a gushing video narrated by Melinda Gates praising Malawi for its 'health surveillance assistants' and their vaccine enforcement programs.

This article from Malawi suggests political and health officials would apparently not hesitate at killing children who refuse vaccines.

Bill Gates said in a CNN interview 'the people who go and engage in those anti-vaccine efforts — you know, they, they kill children.'

Guess what, Bill? The developing world governments who are your partners don't mind using lethal force to implement vaccine mandates. What do you call that – killing children to protect them?
****

131 children vaccinated at gunpoint in Nsanje

'About 131 children from Nsanje who fled into neighboring Mozambique during the anti-measles vaccine a few months ago were vaccinated this week at gunpoint. The children, belonging to Zion and Atumwi Churches were taken into Mozambique by their parents to hide them from officials fearing they might get vaccinated. According to Dr Medison Matchaya District Health Officer for Nsanje, medics went to vaccine the children in Nsanje under police escort.'

Read the Malawi Voice Article http://www.malawivoice.com/latest-news/131...oint-in-nsanje/

****

Melinda Gates on Maternal, Newborn, and Child Health in Malawi

'How is it that they do that? What I found was that the vision and dedication of the country's top leadership has been absolutely instrumental in terms of making success in this area. So the country, one of the commitments that they've made is to build out this cadre of front line workers they call them in their country health surveillance assistants. So every month these 11,000 health surveillance assistants spend 3 weeks out in the villages, talking with the villagers providing basic vaccinations … They make sure the vaccinations happen, not only at the village level but all the way back through the system.'

View Gates Foundation Slideshow: Melinda Gates on Maternal, Newborn, and Child Health in Malawi
http://www.gatesfoundation.org/maternalnew...-slideshow.aspx

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: Some pediatricians taking stand for vaccine prg

Title: Some pediatricians taking stand for vaccine prg
Description: [GOOD STOP USING DOCTORS OF DEATH]

TheUnhivedMind - July 6, 2011 01:28 AM (GMT)

Some pediatricians taking stand for vaccine program

Doctors at certain practices refuse to treat kids whose parents refuse immunization schedule

By Deborah L. Shelton, Tribune reporter
July 6, 2011
http://www.latimes.com/health/ct-x-0706-va...0,7407793.story

A small but growing number of parents think vaccines against childhood diseases are unsafe and are refusing or delaying shots for their children, despite the discrediting of a medical study linking vaccines and autism that stirred alarm.

Ground zero in the debate is the pediatrician's office.

Some frustrated pediatricians are drawing a line in the sand by requiring parents in their medical practices to vaccinate their children or seek health care elsewhere, a position that rubs some medical professionals the wrong way.

Among those taking a stand are the eight pediatricians of Northwestern Children's Practice in Chicago. They no longer see children whose parents refuse to follow the childhood immunization schedule developed by the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention and the American Academy of Pediatrics. A letter and email sent to parents this year announced the policy, which went into effect in June.

"All of the available research shows that the safest and most effective way to vaccinate children is on the schedule set by the CDC and AAP," said Dr. Scott Goldstein, one of the pediatricians. "To go against that schedule goes against proven scientific research and puts patients who do follow the schedule at risk."

So far, fewer than a dozen families have chosen to leave the practice of about 5,000 to 6,000 patients, said Goldstein, who participates in the Illinois Immunization Patient Advocacy Leadership Initiative run by the Illinois chapter of the AAP.

Statistics show that the vast majority of parents support vaccination, regarded by many physicians as one of the greatest success stories in public health. But the number of parents resisting shots for their children has been increasing.

"Our data clearly shows that in most counties, the percentage of parents seeking (vaccine) waivers has gone up over the last 10 years," said Dr. Douglas S. Diekema, referring to statistics from his home state of Washington. "I think that reflects what's going on in the nation."

Diekema, lead author of an AAP policy paper, Responding to Parental Refusals of Immunization of Children, said it's too early to know if the trend will continue because statistics were gathered before the medical journal Lancet more than a year ago retracted a highly publicized study that suggested that the measles, mumps and rubella vaccine could cause autism.

The 1998 report by Dr. Andrew Wakefield, whose British medical license was revoked last year, had an immediate impact on vaccination rates. A study last year in the journal Pediatrics reported that about 12 percent of parents have declined at least one recommended vaccine.

Of those who refused a vaccine, human papilloma was the most commonly refused, followed by varicella (chickenpox), meningococcal conjugate and MMR.

Diekema said vaccine refusals deeply trouble many physicians. About 5 percent to 10 percent of pediatricians have discharged a family if, after educational efforts, parents still withheld permission for an immunization, he said.

But the AAP and its Illinois chapter encourage pediatricians to continue to provide care to children whose parents are unwilling to follow the vaccination schedule.

"Families with doubts about immunization should still have access to good medical care, and maintaining the relationship in the face of disagreement conveys respect and at the same time allows the child access to medical care," the AAP policy states. "Furthermore, a continuing relationship allows additional opportunity to discuss the issue of immunization over time."

Unvaccinated children are vulnerable to potentially fatal but preventable diseases, and they also can put the health of others at risk.

This year, the U.S. has recorded the highest number of measles cases since 1996: 118 through May, according to the CDC. Most of the cases were linked to people who got measles overseas, and most, but not all, were unvaccinated.

Overall, vaccination rates remain high in Illinois schools, at 98 percent. But a recent Tribune analysis of public and private schools found that the immunization rate against certain diseases fell below 60 percent in some schools, and the number of schools below 90 percent for measles, mumps, polio, rubella or the diphtheria, tetanus, pertussis vaccination more than doubled between 2003 and 2010, from 83 to 198.

Health officials aim for an immunization rate of no lower than 90 percent in order to prevent epidemics, and say clusters of unvaccinated people weaken the "herd immunity" made possible through vaccines. That raises the risk of disease outbreaks.

Those who cannot be vaccinated, such as infants too young to get all their shots and children with underlying medical problems, rely on herd immunity, as do children who have gotten their shots but don't develop immunity.

Dr. Minal Giri, medical director of Melrose Park Pediatrics, said only a handful of parents expressed concern after her medical practice implemented a vaccine policy in fall 2008.

"The impetus behind the policy was to protect our patients," she said. "We have newborns, we have pregnant moms, we have kids with cancer who are immune-compromised, and it is a risk for them to have people coming in who have not been vaccinated."

Experts say educating parents is paramount.

"Pediatricians need to do a better job of letting parents know the risks of not getting vaccinated," Diekema said. "Parents don't have a lot of first-hand experience with these diseases anymore."

dshelton@tribune.com

Twitter @deborahlshelton

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: Deadlier Whooping Cough Epidemic Likely Caused by Title: Deadlier Whooping Cough Epidemic Likely Caused by Description: Vaccine

TheUnhivedMind - June 30, 2011 10:09 PM (GMT)

Deadlier Whooping Cough Epidemic Likely Caused by Vaccine

Submitted by Lois Rain on June 29, 2011 – 10:28 pm
http://12160.info/profiles/blogs/deadlier-...source=activity

The whooping cough epidemic is receiving a big “ahem” in the media but we’re not hearing the whole story. There is probable reason to believe that the new virulent strain is a result of the pertussis vaccine, yet the blame for the spread is directed at those who won’t vaccinate.

More alarming, is the very recent call for pregnant women to run out and receive a whooping cough vaccine booster during their late second to third trimester.

Why? Because the Advisory Committee on Immunization Practices says so. They believe the immunity will pass on to their unborn children before they will have to receive it within two months of their birth. They also want teens and adults nearby the newborn to receive the vaccine to form a family “cocoon” of immunity. The panel also voted to recommend that babies receive a bacterial meningitis vaccine within nine months of birth.

~Health Freedoms

Whooping Cough Epidemic Caused by Virulent New Pertussis Strain—And It’s the Result of Vaccine
The CDC and NIH keep pushing the pertussis vaccine, in spite of info that it’s causing the new whooping cough epidemic that is 10 times more deadly than the old whooping cough.

The Centers for Disease Control (CDC) and the National Institutes of Health (NIH) would prefer that you remain unaware of a couple of highly significant facts about the whooping cough resurgence. It is most likely caused by the pertussis vaccine and it's ten times more deadly than the original variety.

To top it all off, they are blaming the unvaccinated for the new more lethal strain of whooping cough, and they are pushing people even harder to be vaccinated with the same vaccine that's almost certainly responsible for it!

More than one new strain of Bordetella pertussis has been found. However, the one that seems to consistently pop up in different countries is called ptxP3.
Medical Journal Discussions of ptxP3

In BioMed Central's 2008 report by Audrey J. King, et al, several changes in B. pertussis were noted. Significantly, the article discusses a divergence from the vaccine strains and the new types, stating:

In the Netherlands this divergence between vaccine and circulating strains has played a role in the reemergence of pertussis.(1)

The August 2009 issue of Emerging Infectious Diseases published research by Frits R. Mooi, et al, entitled "Bordetella pertussis Strains with Increased Toxin Production Associated with Pertussis Resurgence". This paper's introduction states:

We present evidence that in the Netherlands the dramatic increase in pertussis is temporally associated with the emergence of Bordetella pertussis strains carrying a novel allele for the pertussis toxin promoter, which confers increased pertussis toxin (ptx) production. Epidemiologic data suggest that these strains are more virulent in humans.(2)

The Mooi report focuses on the virulence of the new whooping cough strain and makes a direct association with the vaccine. It points out that the strain was first isolated in the United States in 1984, and that the virulent ptxP3 strains have been replacing the vaccines' ptxP1 strains. They also note that the greater prevalence of whooping cough in older age groups (that is, adolescents and adults) is directly related to the new ptxP3 strains.

The ptxP3′s greater virulence is shown in a table of increases in illness and death in The Netherlands between the years 1981-1992 and 1993-2004. The salient points are reproduced here:

Parameter Deaths/
100,000
1981-1992 0.00057
1993-2004 0.00582

Increase 10.21 times greater

In November 2010, BMC Genomics published “Comparative genomics of prevaccination and modern Bordetella pertussis strains” by Marieke J Bart, et al. This paper focuses on “how B. pertussis has adapted to vaccination”(3). That leaves little room for question about the issue. The new strains of B. pertussis have developed in response to vaccinations for whooping cough.

Lest there be any doubt that the CDC is fully aware that a new strain of B. pertussis is causing the new epidemic of whooping cough, refer to Bordetella pertussis Strains with Increased Toxin Production Associ..., which includes a graph created for the Mooi article quoted above.
Vaccination Insanity

There can be no doubt that the agencies responsible for tracking disease and our vaccination programs are fully aware of the fact that the unvaccinated cannot be held responsible for the outbreaks of whooping cough. They also know that the new strains are more than ten times deadlier, and that the reason is adaptations to existing vaccines.

Yet, what is their strong recommendation to the general public? It’s to vaccinate even more! As discussed in the prior article, Whooping Cough Outbreaks in Vaccinated Children Become More and Mor..., the B. pertussis vaccine carries grave risks.

So, they’re advising ever more vaccinations with the vaccine that’s creating a far more virulent form of whooping cough, cannot protect against the disease it’s creating—and and carries severe risks of death and lifelong disability!

Not only are these agencies not telling us the truth about the whooping cough outbreaks, but they are also misleading us. They have told us nothing about the ten-fold increased rate of death. They have told us nothing of its cause. They have blamed those who cannot possibly have been the cause of the new disease. And they push us to get vaccinated with the cause of the new deadlier strains!

Is there any reason to doubt that the CDC, the NIH, and other agencies are beholden to Big Pharma? Is there any reason to trust anything that they suggest?

This article is with deep appreciation to the anonymous reader who provided a reference of the reality of the new strains of whooping cough. Thank you!by Heidi Stevenson
References:
(1)Comparative genomic profiling of Dutch clinical Bordetella pertussi...

(2)Bordetella pertussis Strains with Increased Toxin Production Associated with Pertussis ...(PDF)
(3)Comparative genomics of prevaccination and modern Bordetella pertus...
Bordetella pertussis Strains with Increased Toxin Production Associated with Pertussis ...
Appearance of Fim3 and ptxP3-Bordetella pertussis strains, in two r...

Sources:

http://gaia-health.com/articles451/000485-...-virulent.shtml
http://www.msnbc.msn.com/id/43502623/ns/health-pregnancy/http://www.webmd.com/news/20110623/pregnan...rtussis-vaccine

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: Vaccines as ‘Cluster Bombs’

Title: Vaccines as ‘Cluster Bombs’

TheUnhivedMind - June 30, 2011 01:08 AM (GMT)

Vaccines as ‘Cluster Bombs’

Posted on June 28, 2011 by coto2admin| 12 Comments
By Rowan Contraho
http://coto2.wordpress.com/2011/06/28/vacc...cluster-bombs’/

Shiv Chopra, the Canadian microbiologist known for having helped stop the approval of rBGH, did so not by making true but complex arguments about its association to cancers, but by reducing the issue to an undeniable biological fact and thus simple legal issue.

The law said that no factory containing so much as a single rat dropping or feather is considered clean. rBGH gives cows mastitis which leads to pus in their milk. rBGH thus turns cows into pus factories.

Wikipedia (articles there on vaccines appear to have been written by industry), says that “Vaccines are among the greatest achievements of modern medicine.” Dr. Chopra calls them “cluster bombs.”

“A vaccine is a biological preparation that improves immunity to a particular disease.” Dr. Chopra says vaccines do nothing of the sort and, in fact, violate the very laws of biology.

As with rBGH, he has a talent for reducing things to understandable and undeniable facts and when it comes to vaccines, he begins at the beginning by describing how the immune system works to protect people from disease.

He says there is a constant war going on between an individual’s bodily integrity and invading organisms.

Most people would most easily recognize this war when they think of bodies rejecting organs from another person or animal. That very same rejection occurs at a microlevel – against foreign viruses and bacteria. But rejecting what is foreign, no matter the size, is not just a nice thing or just “how the immune system protects the body” but it does so for a cardinal purpose – to maintain bodily integrity.

And the definition of “integrity” is crucial to understanding the brilliance of the immune system. “Integrity: the quality or state of being complete; unbroken condition; wholeness; entirety; the quality or state of being unimpaired; perfect condition …”

In the simplest terms, Dr. Chopra explains that the immune system maintains wholeness or “self” versus “non-self” in the face of invaders.

And it is precisely that wholeness or integrity which vaccines destroy.

The immune system works by breaking down whatever foreign matter enters your body – be it protein, fat, starch or sugar – into single molecules in the digestive system. Starches and sugar must be broken into glucose, fat to fatty acids, and proteins into amino acids. The last two the body then takes and rebuilds into the person’s own, no longer foreign, protein and fat. Anything that remains foreign is and must be rejected.

Bodily integrity must be maintained so the immune system repels invaders by breaking them to pieces or ejecting or destroying them.

In this context, sneezing, coughing, diarrhea, vomiting can be appreciated as protective immune mechanisms to get rid of foreign protein or other matter, while foreign material that gets past into the body is deconstructed by the gut and fever is stimulated as a means weaken or destroy it.

With this background, one understands that in four steps, Dr. Chopra is laying bare the core scientific fallacy of vaccines.

Chopra says that anyone knowing the basics of biology should know:

1. That all vaccines by their very nature are antigens and that every antigen by defintion must be a foreign protein …;

2. That no foreign protein can be absorbed into the blood stream unless it is digested in the alimentary canal into its basic amino acids;

3. That it is these amino acids which after being absorbed into the blood stream are reconstituted into one’s own proteins and it is these proteins which distinguishes every being of existence into self and non-self.

4. That any interference or tampering with these laws of existence can bring calamity to the being in which it occurs such as by causing auto-immune conditions like autism, etc.

Why calamity?

What happens is that vaccines force foreign protein into the body, bypassing all mechanisms used by the immune system to avoid such invasion.

Think of organ transplants. The immune system must rid itself of what is foreign. It will not stop until it has. It will attack itself to do so if necessary – so fundamental is integrity of self versus invader.

Imagine this were happening to your own home. People have doors and windows and alarm systems exactly to stop invaders. Normally we think of them coming to steal but imagine they came to stay, to take over. The need to eject them and keep the home your own would be unceasing. Imagine they came in not through the doors or windows for which you had defenses, but through the chimney, through the ventilation system, though the electrical system, and there was no way to be rid of them. Would it be your home anymore? Would you be safe? Would you ever be able to function normally again or would you be on a permanent state of high alert and stress trying again and again to get rid of them? Might you throw things and damage the walls, or shoot and break things, tearing up your own home? Would you become exhausted? Might you break down physically from trying, but could you ever stop trying? If you did, would it not mean it was no longer your home, but indistinguishable from theirs or maybe even more theirs, having defeated you?

So what happens to the immune system when vaccines jump past its neutralization of foreign proteins before they can enter the bloodstream, and instead foreign matter is injected into the body? Just like you, the immune system must attack whatever is shot into it, and in being unable to rid itself of that matter or break it down, it attacks again and again, attacking the body itself. Thus, autoimmune reactions, which are self-attacks. The more vaccines, the more foreign protein is being shot into the body, the more the reactions, the more the body attacks itself.

Vaccines do not, as claimed, “improve immunity.” Even the most rudimentary understanding of what the immune system does would make that obvious. Vaccines jump the immune system to deliver foreign matter that could never have gotten past it otherwise. This is foreign matter that the immune system is left helplessly unable to rid itself of. Foreign matter is lodged permanently in the body, leaving it no longer perfect but broken, impaired. Bodily integrity is literally destroyed.

From Should I Vaccinate My Child? by Patel Thompson:

“[R]esearchers argue that these attenuated forms of the viruses remain in the body causing continual antigenic stimulation of the immune system – meaning the immune system is always in ‘attack’ mode – which also weakens it and leads to auto-immune diseases.

“A placebo-controlled trial of acellular pertussis vaccines in Sweden compared vaccinated children with un-vaccinated children of the same birth grouping. During the trial, an invasive bacterial infection occurred among the vaccinated group resulting in numerous deaths. A review of the trial data led researchers to conclude that ‘The hypothesis of an immunosuppressive effect of the vaccines, which would explain the deaths…could not be refuted by the data.’ (xvi)

“As further evidence, one of the few double-blind trials that have ever been conducted on a vaccine shows the same immunosuppressive effect. In the trial, of the group who were vaccinated with the Salk polio vaccine, over 200 people went on to contract polio. Among the control group (unvaccinated), not one of them developed polio. (xvii)

“Citing references from numerous valid sources, including four recognized textbooks on paediatrics and immunology, Harold Buttram, MD and John Hoffman, PhD, conclude that childhood vaccination “cannot help but have adverse effects on the immunologic system of the child, possibly leaving this system crippled in its ability to protect the child throughout life…opening the way for other diseases as a result of immunologic dysfunction.” (xviii)

And it is not only foreign virus or bacteria that causes a problem. Chopra writes:

“The foreign proteins in vaccines originate from not only the infectious organisms against which one wishes to produce infection-fighting antibodies but also the artificial media in which these organisms are grown. Contained in such media may include one or more of the following materials: bovine serum, horse serum, chicken egg, monkey kidney, insect cells and even human fetal cells.

“Apart from the foreign proteins, vaccines may also contain other harmful substances, including mercury, aluminum, formalin, oily adjuvants, etc., plus untold number of stray viruses with the potential to cause cancer, HIV, serum-hepatitis, and so on.”

The body is being filled with foreign protein from other human beings and from other species, none of which the immune system can expel, and yet it must if it is to maintain functional integrity – keeping the distinction between “self” and non-self.

“Meanwhile, evidence indicates that except for smallpox, no other infectious disease, e. g.: tuberculosis, cholera, typhoid, anthrax, measles, mumps, rubella, DPT, polio, influenza and others, has been eradicated and that this continues to be so despite the decades of vaccinations against each of these diseases.

“Also, during the same period, the incidence of many previously uncommon diseases such as autism, diabetes, allergies, and cancer, has been increasing in pandemic proportions.”

The person is now contaminated with foreign matter, the “invader” now residing the body, the body attacking itself.

Patel Thompson, again:

“Vaccinal attenuated viruses attach their own genetic ‘episome’ to the genome (half set of chromosomes and their genes) of the host cell, and are thus capable of surviving or remaining latent within the host cells for years. The presence of foreign antigenic material within the host cell sets the stage for their unpredictable provocation of various auto-immune phenomena such as herpes, shingles, warts, tumors – both benign and malignant – and diseases of the central nervous system, such as varied forms of paralysis and inflammation of the brain.” (xix)

“Dr. Markowitz states that in addition, vaccines do not just produce mild versions of the original disease, but all of them commonly produce a variety of their own symptoms. In some cases, ‘these illnesses may be considerably more serious than the original disease, involving deeper structures, more vital organs, and less of a tendency to resolve spontaneously. Even more worrisome is the fact that they are almost always more difficult to recognize.’” (xx)

“In addressing scientists at a conference sponsored by the American Cancer Society, Rutgers University professor R. Simpson warned:

“‘Immunization Programs against flu, measles, mumps, polio and so forth may actually be seeding humans with RNA to form latent proviruses in cells throughout the body. These latent proviruses could be molecules in search of diseases, including rheumatoid arthritis, multiple sclerosis, systemic lupus erythematosus, Parkinson’s disease and perhaps cancer.’” (xxi)

In claiming vaccines “improve immunity,” the pharmaceutical industry seems to have no idea that the purpose of the immune system is not just to react but to protect biologic integrity, core to human health and life. Instead, the industry is filling the body with foreign protein, devastating the human immune system. They are using vaccines containing foreign DNA and a long list of toxic substances that “explode inside the body and hit every part of the body, every cell and molecule” – the “cluster bomb” Chopra speaks of.

“Apart from the foreign proteins, vaccines may also contain other harmful substances, including mercury, aluminum, formalin, oily adjuvants, etc., plus untold number of stray viruses with the potential to cause cancer, HIV, serum-hepatitis, and so on.”

So distant is the pharmaceutical industry from protecting immune function that with each “generation” of vaccines, the vaccines become more harmful. They went from inserting whole viruses which they now admit were causing the very diseases they were supposed to prevent, to using “recombinant components” (genetically engineered pieces) of a number of viruses, but still they could not get the response they wanted. So, now they have moved to the third generation of vaccines, DNA vaccines, that inject genetically engineered matter. Are they called DNA vaccines because they are supposed to be taken up by the person’s DNA?

If so, they would be hitting not just organs and cells but would potentially be contaminating the very biologic code of the person’s life, their DNA.

If this occurs, now the home invader analogy would include mutant (genetically engineered) invaders who would take over the host’s body, as well as her house.

If the new vaccines can imbed or cross contaminate with mutant (genetically engineered) pathogens that affect the DNA, vaccination would be undermining the integrity of self in terms of its instructional messages, the biologic coding of the runs everything in the human body. The immune system would be left struggling at a much deeper level of reaction, a spasm of reaction. The most core functions of the body, such as mitochondrial function (basic energy production) might be disrupted.

Was Wakefield seeing damage to fundamental bodily integrity, in seeing mitochondrial dysfunction? Was Robin MacNeil of PBS seeing it as well in his own sick autistic grandson?

Chopra’s explanation of the immune system and how vaccination bypasses the immune system and leaves in place just what the immune system is tasked to get rid of (foreign protein), makes apparent why it is mistaken to refer to vaccination as “immunization.” Vaccines damage the immune system. Vaccination would more appropriately be called “anti-immunization.”

Patel Thompson says:

“The bulk of the evidence gathered from numerous countries points out that not only is vaccination ineffective at preventing the spread of infectious disease, but vaccinated children are actually at a higher risk of contracting these illnesses. In addition, the adverse reactions to vaccination are much higher than presently documented in the medico-pharmaceutical literature and the long-term damaging effect of suppressing the immune system is rarely addressed.

“In light of all the evidence to the contrary, why have vaccines been pressed upon the public as a necessary, beneficial way of preventing our children from getting sick? In the words of Dr. Raymond Obomsawin (who’s held senior positions in UNICEF and CUSO), referring to mass vaccination, “It is reprehensible that such actions continue to be enforced by authorities, while parents and local health workers are not accorded any practical knowledge of the known dangers involved, and the extent to which there prevails a general ignorance of the longer term consequences.” (xxii)

Patel Thompson is not alone in seeing that something other than science is behind vaccines.

“Combine this ignorance with the millions of dollars in profit generated by vaccination that goes straight into the pockets of manufacturing companies, governments and medical doctors, and it becomes clear that vaccination is more of a political and economic issue, than a health issue.”

One sees that reality in the behavior of those invested in vaccines, such as Bill Gates. Rather than addressing the solid and increasing scientific evidence exposing the biologic irrationality of his massive financial commitment in vaccines (as well as the extreme danger a leading scientist is warning of), he is instead suggesting now that those who question his investment (vaccines) are committing involuntary manslaughter. Did the pharmaceutical industry insert the article on vaccines in Wikipedia? It too suggests that expression of concerns over vaccines are tantamount to manslaughter.

“[C]oncern has been raised [by anyone not financially connected to vaccine production?] that spreading unfounded information about the medical risks of vaccines increases rates of life-threatening infections, not only in the children whose parents refused vaccinations, but also in other children, perhaps too young for vaccines, who could contract infections from unvaccinated carriers (see herd immunity). A more extreme response to this concern is the claim that spreading false information about vaccine risks amounts to involuntary manslaughter, claiming that celebrity promotion of the vaccine-autism link was followed by “an increase in the number of vaccine preventable illnesses as well as an increase in the number of vaccine preventable deaths” and thus “may be indirectly responsible for at least some of these illnesses and deaths.” (Wikipedia, Vaccines) [Emphasis added.]

As the above quote indicates, the promotion of vaccines is relying on fear. Vaccine investors are using it (fear of swine flu, of meningitis, of hepatitis, of cervical cancer, of common childhood diseases – adding new fears all the time) to try to put in place the ultimate form of marketing – government mandates of their products. But educated people are learning that vaccines suppress and even damage the immune system, which is essential for fighting off diseases, and that vaccines were not responsible for the decrease in infectious diseases but can actually increase diseases.

So, to stop such information and the spreading rejection of vaccines, those invested in vaccines (with 200 more in the works) are portraying information (concerns, questions, etc.) about vaccines as lethal.

Yet the pharmaceutical industry and Bill Gates cannot dispute the central biologic fact about vaccines – they are catastrophic to the immune system and it is the immune system that keeps people well or heals them of disease. The “science” behind the new vaccines is so shaky, the pharmaceutical industry admits it doesn’t know how their DNA vaccines, which are based on “DNA uptake,” are alleged to work:

“This phenomenon has not been the subject of much research, so the actual mechanism of DNA uptake is not known.” (Wikipedia)

Ignorance of the immune system combined with intense international promotion of an early pharma product (aspirin) is now associated with deaths during 1918, not a flu or virus. The National Institute of Allergies and Infectious Diseases discovered that common upper respiratory bacteria were responsible for the deaths, nothing viral. Aspirin is thought to have played a part as doctors did not realize it suppresses the immune system (or the value of fever), and that suppression allowed infections to take hold and worsen.

Additionally, aspirin killed healthy people outright (“well in the morning, dead by evening”) because of medical ignorance of its toxic qualities. Government, medical, and industry promotion came together to urge aspirin on the world, and multiplied the losses. (And now coming to light is the corollary – natural practitioners who avoided aspirin and supported immune system function, had stunning success in saving lives.)

Vaccines are promoted as a miracle of modern medicine, just as aspirin was touted in 1918. The WHO even promotes vaccines as the means to save the world from another flu pandemic like 1918. But 1918 wasn’t a flu pandemic in the first place! To counter how many times people were wrongly told that a virulent virus (or flu) killed millions in 1918, it bears repeating that there was no flu pandemic in 1918 and that there has never been a flu pandemic in human history that killed millions.

Instead, 1918 appears most likely to have been a pharmaceutical disaster of global proportions based on global distribution of aspirin and global advertising.

Vaccines make no sense as any response to 1918 unless the drug industry wishes to replicate the calamity of 1918 by intensely promoting yet another pharmaceutical industry product which even more severely suppresses the immune system than aspirin and can permanently damage it. Today the pharmaceutical industry has gone further than promotion, and has gotten laws in place which mandate their “immune system damaging” product to everyone, without exception.

The millions of 1918 deaths offer a dire warning against any product – no matter how much said to prevent death, no matter how much fear-mongering, no matter how much government agencies, medical authorities, or industry spokespeople urge – that tampers with the immune system.

Vaccines don’t just tamper. Vaccines are cluster bombs.

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: Why are Babies Vaccinated for a STD?

Title: Why are Babies Vaccinated for a STD?

TheUnhivedMind - June 26, 2011 11:33 PM (GMT)

Why are Babies Vaccinated for a STD?

Pedophiles now pepper the professional landscape like warts on a witch.

June 26, 2011
by Jack Ragnarok
http://www.henrymakow.com/why_are_babies_v...nated_agai.html

The widespread medical practice of administering Hepatitis B vaccines to newborns is something that should sound mental alarm bells.

Why? Hep B is contracted chiefly by sexual contact, first appearing among male homosexuals then later spreading to the general population by adult heterosexual promiscuity.

Hep B is but one of many STDs, but is not yet an epidemic. Why not vaccinate for common contagions that become epidemics? And why subject newborns to their first Hep B vaccination at 12 hours, then a booster shot at 4 months, and another at 4 years when the vaccine 'memory' has faded?

Is it because babies are going to be sexually active in their first 4-5 years? The answer is Yes, but this type of sexual contact never happens by mutual consent; it's called child molestation.

Pedophiles now pepper the professions landscape like warts on a witch. Some pedophiles are members of parliament that legislated exceptional powers be given to Child Protection agents.

Other pedophiles are police; others are found in religious orders, there are doctors and lawyers, and teachers, and engineers, etc.etc.. Many pedophiles have Hepatitis B and are carriers infecting others, including children and babies.

Where though is the wholesale threat of Hep B infection to children?

Enter the thugs of Child Protection agencies. These regularly abduct, or forcibly remove, children from parents straight into the waiting arms of individuals of an elite pedophile clientele.

In nearly every office of any Child Protection agency there is at least one Frau Goebbels that liaises with the elite clientele. Sometimes it's upon request for a particular victim that a child is forcibly removed.

An MP or doctor or policeman is attracted to the child through official capacity and requests Child Protection agents to intervene to remove the child on the flimsiest of pretexts.

Other times a child is removed by Child Protection from foster care by midnight raids, or foster care perverts are actively engaged providing the elite client with 'meat'.

Many children that die in Child Protection care were victims of a blind eye policy to satanic practises.

To avoid the scandal that too many children and sucking infants in Child Protection care get infected with Hep B, complicit legislators drafted a series of Hep B vaccinations into law or into standard medical practice as something good and healthy for the nation's infants.

Fortunately, most children are not sexually molested during their tender years; those that are may never remember the incidents.

For the former, the side-effects of vaccination cause death or maim by contaminants carefully planted within the witch's brew of vaccines. The range of vaccine contraindications is extensive but seldom are parents informed.

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: A Look Inside The Immunization Dilemma

Title: A Look Inside The Immunization Dilemma

TheUnhivedMind - June 26, 2011 03:52 AM (GMT)

A Look Inside The Immunization Dilemma

By Jaclyn Gallucci on June 23rd, 2011
http://www.longislandpress.com/2011/06/23/...zation-dilemma/

The 1952 polio epidemic was one of the largest and most frightening public health crises in the United States, with outbreaks in all 50 states. Of the nearly 58,000 cases reported that year, 3,145 people died and 21,269 were left paralyzed. Until 1955, when New York City's Dr. Jonas Salk introduced his vaccine, polio was a constant terror. When asked in a televised interview who owned the patent for the vaccine, Salk replied, "There is no patent. Could you patent the sun?"

Well, times have changed. Now pharmaceutical companies are highly protective of their assets, because vaccines are not just medical breakthroughs, they are also big business. In fact, Salk's vaccine went on to raise manufacturer Eli Lilly's profit by 90 percent in 1956, bringing in a total of $13.7 million in revenue for the company, in addition to the millions it made other manufacturers of the time. Today, companies like Merck bring in billions by manufacturing vaccines for everything from chicken pox to the flu.

advertisement

And, today, children who follow the U.S. Centers for Disease Control and Prevention (CDC) recommended schedule receive 69 doses of 16 vaccines—46 more doses than they did 30 years ago, and the highest amount given in any country in the world.

Parents, faced with a barrage of polarizing opinions and a handful of conflicting studies, remain in a constant search for definitive answers. But right now, there aren't any.

A recent University of Michigan study found that 76 percent of parents rely on their pediatricians to make the decision.

Vaccine proponents and the medical community at large argue that vaccination is safe and that illnesses including pertussis (whooping cough), rubella and diphtheria—epidemics that once killed thousands every year—are now prevented by vaccination and the enforcement of government mandates requiring children to have certain vaccinations before they are allowed to attend school.

“Thanks to immunizations, diseases like polio that were once common, are now only distant memories for most Americans,” says the New York State Department of Health. “Today there are few visible reminders of the suffering, injuries and deaths caused by diseases that are now prevented with vaccines.”

Vaccine opponents, namely parent activists and a very small minority of doctors and scientists, argue that infant immune systems are too weak to handle these shots, and that the possible side effects of vaccination, including seizures, paralysis and death, are overlooked by pharmaceutical companies and are not worth the risk. These critics say vaccines can trigger developmental problems like autism.

“Selling vaccines is extremely profitable and the process of mandating vaccines is fraught with conflicts of interest,” Michael Belkin, father of a child who died post-vaccination, told health officials. “The business model of having the government mandate [that] everyone must buy your product is a monopolist’s delight.”

The vaccine argument has reached a stalemate, leaving the general public wondering whom they should believe. Meanwhile, parents across Long Island and the nation are faced with their first vaccination decision within hours of their infants’ birth—and, one way or the other, they need to make a choice.

The current U.S. childhood immunization schedule calls for 28 injections with 11 different vaccines against 15 different diseases by the time a child reaches 2 years of age—the first is the hepatitis B vaccine, normally given within 24 hours of birth. In New York State—unless a parent refuses the shot—newborn babies will receive that one-dose hepatitis B vaccination before they are released from the hospital.

Some ask why babies need to be vaccinated against a potentially deadly disease most prevalent in high-risk groups such as intravenous drug users and sexually promiscuous adults.

advertisement

“Vaccinating persons engaged in high-risk behaviors, lifestyles or occupations before they become infected generally has not been feasible,” the Advisory Committee on Immunization Practices (ACIP), an adjunct of the CDC, declared in the 1991 mandate. “For example, programs directed at injecting drug users failed to motivate them to receive three doses of the vaccine… In the long term, universal infant vaccination would eliminate the need for vaccinating adolescents and high-risk adults."

Simply put, it's easier. It also provides a safety net for children born to mothers with hepatitis B—those who either don't know they have the disease or whose test results are faulty.

"Routine vaccination at birth prevents these all too common mistakes from becoming tragedies," states the Section of Epidemiology of Alaska in its public health recommendations.

But why the child of a mother who knows for certain she is hepatitis B negative still needs this vaccine is a question Belkin, whose newborn daughter died hours after she received her second hepatitis B vaccine, asked again, before Congress, more than a decade ago.

"My 5-week-old daughter, Lyla Rose, died within 16 hours of her hepatitis B vaccination, which she received because of the universal vaccination policy this Committee instituted in 1991," Belkin testified before the ACIP in February 1999. "The NY Medical Examiner observed brain swelling at the autopsy but refused to record that or mention the hepatitis B vaccine Lyla received in the autopsy report. I hold each one of you who participated in the promulgation or perpetuation of that mandated newborn vaccination policy personally responsible for my daughter's death."

Lyla Rose Belkin's official cause of death is listed as Sudden Infant Death Syndrome (SIDS), said her father, simply because there was no other specific reason for her death.

"SIDS is a diagnosis of exclusion…'It wasn't this, it wasn't that, everything has been ruled out and we don't know what it is,'" he continued. "A swollen brain is not SIDS."

But a swollen brain is one of the documented reactions to any vaccination in medical literature, and a SIDS ruling for vaccination-related deaths is not uncommon, according to Barbara Loe Fisher, co-founder of the National Vaccine Information Center (NVIC), who interviewed parents of babies who died suddenly after Diphtheria (DPT) vaccinations for her book DPT: A Shot in the Dark.

"The death certificates of many babies, who die shortly after vaccination, list Sudden Infant Death Syndrome or SIDS as the cause of death, which means that no specific symptoms or other reason for death could be found," she comments in her webpage Barbara Speaks Out. "Most doctors continue to deny that vaccination is a risk factor for SIDS."

But the Association of American Pediatricians (AAP), which represents 60,000 doctors across the United States, stands by the hepatitis B vaccine, saying negative reactions are a rarity.

“A vaccine, like any medicine, is capable of causing serious problems, such as severe allergic reactions,” states the AAP. “The risk of hepatitis B vaccine causing serious harm, or death, is extremely small. Getting hepatitis B vaccine is much safer than getting hepatitis B disease.”

Although the hepatitis B vaccine is required for children to enter daycare or school, it is not required to be given after birth, unless the mother tests positive for the disease herself. A parent has the right to refuse this shot and delay it for months—or years if they choose.

The same applies to other vaccinations as well. While the CDC has a “recommended schedule” for vaccination, parents are not required to comply with it by law. But the law does require that proof of these immunizations be shown upon entry to daycare or school (both public and private institutions).

According to the CDC-recommended schedule, beginning at 2 months of age, a child should receive three doses of diphtheria toxoid-containing vaccine, three doses of tetanus toxoid-containing vaccine and pertussis vaccine (combined), three doses of polio vaccine, one dose of measles, mumps and rubella vaccine (combined), three doses haemophilus influenza type b vaccine, four doses of pneumococcal conjugate vaccine, and the varicella (chickenpox) vaccine.

The AAP recommends that kids get combination vaccines, rather than single vaccines, “whenever possible” to help reduce the number of shots a child receives.

Because many parents were questioning the safety of the combination vaccines—after the now disgraced UK doctor Andrew Wakefield (more about him later) said this was a toxic cocktail—the vaccines were separated.

Parents had the option of giving the measles, mumps and rubella (MMR) vaccine as three separate shots given weeks apart.

“If you give three viruses together, three live viruses, then you potentially increase the risk of an adverse event occurring, particularly when one of those viruses influences the immune system in the way that measles does,” Wakefield announced following his study.

But, due to a lack of demand, and no definitive studies showing high risks of the combined shot, the manufacturing of these separate vaccines was discontinued in 2009.

All in all, by the time a child enters school, she has received 18 to 22 vaccinations over four years. Of these vaccines, only the MMR shot has been studied in association with autism. Meanwhile, different vaccines contain different toxic ingredients and preservatives—including formaldehyde and aluminum—only one of which, the mercury-containing Thimerosal, has ever been tested in association with autism.

In 1999, in response to growing concern over a link between vaccination and autism, the AAP and the US Public Health Service recommended that Thimerosal be removed from vaccines “as soon as possible.”

By 2009, mercury had been phased out of all vaccines in the U.S. with the exception of certain influenza, meningococcal and tetanus vaccines.

But a study that same year by Stony Brook University Medical Center found that giving another shot, the hepatitis B vaccine, to newborn baby boys may triple the risk of developing an autism spectrum disorder.

“Boys who received the hepatitis B vaccine during the first month of life had 2.94 [times] greater odds for Autism Spectrum Disorder compared to later, or unvaccinated, boys,” the study reported. “Findings suggest that U.S. male neonates vaccinated with hepatitis B vaccine had a three-fold greater risk of ASD; risk was greatest for non-white boys.”

This study was among the first university studies to suggest an association between vaccines and autism. Does that mean that hepatitis B vaccine causes autism? Not exactly, but it shows a possibility.

“It is unscientific and perilously misleading for anyone to assert that vaccines and autism have been studied and that no link has been found,” writes health author and journalist David Kirby. “That’s because the 16 or so studies constantly cited by critics of the hypothesis have examined just one vaccine and one vaccine ingredient.”

THE POWER OF ONE

Congress recognized that vaccines may have the ability to injure and kill children in 1986, when it passed the National Vaccine Injury Act, in response to a large number of lawsuits being filed claiming vaccines were causing adverse reactions including brain damage and death. The act serves to compensate victims and to protect medical professionals and vaccine manufacturers from liability if an individual suffered injury from receiving vaccines. This means doctors and pharmaceutical companies cannot be sued for injuries resulting from their products, and the government will essentially pay victims in the event an injury can be proven in connection with a vaccine.

advertisement

“Exactly 25 years ago, in May 1986, I joined with mothers and fathers whose babies died after DPT shots and gave a presentation to the Centers for Disease Control in Atlanta,” says the National Vaccine Information Center’s Fisher. “We told physician members of the CDC’s vaccine policy-making committee, who wanted state legislators to strictly enforce laws legally requiring children to get 23 doses of seven vaccines starting at 2 months through age 6, that doctors did not really know how many children were dying after vaccination."

More than 30,000 cases of adverse reactions to vaccines have been reported to the federal government since then, including permanent, life-threatening disabilities, illnesses and death. Since 1988, the government has awarded compensation to more than 1,300 families whose children suffered brain damage from vaccines, totaling more than $2 billion.

"You can read the transcript of that 1986 CDC meeting on NVIC's website and decide for yourself whether anything has really changed in 25 years," she says. "Except the fact that, now, public health officials are ordering doctors to give children 48 doses of 14 vaccines starting on day of birth through age 6, with half of those doses given before age 1."

For parents attempting to avoid these shots altogether, they have few options if their child doesn't have a medical reason for exemption: homeschooling or God.

I FOUGHT THE LAW…

In the United States today, patients' and parents' rights on mandatory vaccination varies from state to state. All 50 states offer exemptions on one of at least three grounds —medical, religious or philosophical. In New York, exemption is based purely on medical or religious grounds.

"Immunization requirements shall not apply to children whose parent, parents, or guardian hold genuine and sincere religious beliefs which are contrary to the practices herein required," states New York law.

advertisement

In some states a signed letter is all that is needed, but in New York, if parents want a religious exemption, a sincerity hearing is required.

"It is not sufficient merely that the beliefs that they assert as grounds for exemption be religious in nature," the law continues. "It must also be demonstrated that the espoused beliefs are sincerely held."

In other words, you can't change religions just to escape immunization laws in New York State.

Sherr v. Northport-East Northport Union Free School District was a 1986 case brought by Alan Sherr, a Long Island doctor who didn't want to immunize his kids. Sherr now runs the holistic health care practice, Northport Wellness Center.

“I tried to create an opportunity to not vaccinate my kids,” Sherr told the Press in 2009. Sherr’s anti-vaccination stance was grounded in his scientific and medical background and beliefs. At that time there was no religious sincerity exemption; a parent had to belong to a recognized religious group like the Jehovah’s Witnesses or Christian Scientists. Sherr decided to join a “mail order” religious group, the Missionary Temple at Large, Universal Religious Brotherhood. The school district didn’t buy it and neither did the court. Their request for exemption was denied.

“Although the Sherrs’ voiced resistance to vaccination is no doubt sincere, their claims of a sincerely religious basis for their objections to inoculation are not credible,” stated the judge.

But the Sherrs’ fight did change the law. The court found that New York’s limitation of the religious exemptions “violated both the Establishment and Free Exercise clauses of the First Amendment.” The law was changed to a third option: religious sincerity—it doesn’t matter what religion you practice, if it is recognized or not, as long as you are sincere in your beliefs.

Why all the trouble? Why not let those who want their children vaccinated be vaccinated—and those who don’t face the consequences?

It’s not so simple, says the medical community.

“When a large percentage of a population is vaccinated against a pathogen, the entire community—both those vaccinated and unvaccinated—receive additional protection,” states Ben Kleifgen, Temple University School of Medicine and Justin Silpe, University of Michigan, both contributors on VaccineEthics.org. “This concept, known as ‘herd immunity,’ is a primary justification for mandatory vaccination policies in the United States.”

This means that an unvaccinated child can not only get sick, but she can infect a vaccinated child, with a deadly disease, or act as a carrier.

In fact, just this week on Long Island, 13 children in the Smithtown school district were said to be infected with pertussis or whooping cough.

Health officials said June 21 that all 13 had been vaccinated against the disease and therefore had milder cases (no vaccine is 100 percent effective).

Pertussis is a highly contagious bacterial infection that causes an uncontrollable, violent cough lasting several weeks or even months.

“The most effective control measure is maintaining the highest possible level of immunization in the community,” says Dr. Kathy Thompson, director of Communicable Diseases for Suffolk County.

Suffolk County Health Commissioner Dr. James Tomarken says whooping cough has become more common in recent years.

“While most individuals will recover fully from pertussis, we are concerned about infants who have not received full immunization and to whom pertussis is particularly dangerous and can be fatal,” he says.

For those on the pro-vaccination side, this kind of herd immunity is one more substantial reason why immunization is necessary. Besides, in 2010, Dr. Wakefield, who produced the most influential study connecting autism and vaccination turned out to be a fabricated hoaxer, didn’t he?

…AND THE LAW WON (FOR NOW)

On Feb. 2, 2010, the British Medical journal Lancet retracted Wakefield’s influential peer-reviewed 1998 study, which first linked vaccines with autism, claiming the study had failed to have its child subjects approved by an ethics committee. The journal called it “an elaborate fraud.” Wakefield had his medical license revoked three months later for “serious professional misconduct” stemming from the retracted study.

Wakefield contends that the investigation of his work is part of a conspiracy to “discredit and silence his research” in order to “shield the government from exposure on the vaccine scandal” and “to crush any attempt to investigate valid vaccine safety concerns.”

advertisement

It may sound far-fetched, but looking a little closer, some believe that theory isn’t all that unbelievable.

Thirty years ago, the vaccine market consisted of 35 vaccine manufacturers in the United States. Today, nearly all vaccines on the worldwide market are produced by just a handful of pharmaceutical companies: GlaxoSmithKline, Merck, Novartis, Sanofi Pasteur, Pfizer and Wyeth.

With the passing of the 1986 Vaccine Injury Act, which protects vaccine manufacturers against liability, these companies have gone on to create new vaccines with catchy ad campaigns like Gardasil’s “One Less” slogan.

Right now strep throat vaccines are also being tested, and Merck’s relatively new chickenpox vaccine (varicella) has already been added to the CDC-recommended childhood vaccine schedule, which some claim is no coincidence.

“The American Academy of Pediatrics, a major supporter of mandatory chickenpox and other vaccine mandates across the country, shares incestuous financial ties with Merck," says Kristine M. Severyn, PhD, a registered pharmacist, in an editorial to the Association of American Physicians and Surgeons. "Profitable well-baby visits are timed to coincide with vaccination schedules established by the AAP and the CDC… The Advisory Committee on Immunization Practices, a group of individuals hand-picked by the CDC, recommends which vaccines are administered to American children…Federal vaccine funds can be denied to states which do not 'vigorously enforce' mandatory vaccination laws. Conversely, the CDC offers financial bounties to state departments of health for each 'fully-vaccinated' child."

Adding further proof of the close-knit relationship between Big Pharma and government agencies, CDC director Julie Gerberding was hired by Merck in 2010 to head its vaccine division—one year after she left the post of CDC director, the minimum waiting time for taking a position with a CDC-regulated business.

"She will be responsible for the commercialization of the current portfolio of vaccines, planning for the introduction of vaccines from the company's robust vaccine pipeline, and accelerating Merck's ongoing efforts to broaden access to its vaccines in the developing world," the 2009 announcement reads.

Merck currently markets at least 12 of the CDC-recommended vaccines, as well as Gardasil.

And if there is any doubt that vaccines are big business, three major vaccination manufacturers made the Fortune 500 list in 2011. Pfizer came in at #31, with a profit of $8.2 billion for the previous year, Merck at #53 with a profit of $861 million, and Eli Lilly at #115 with profits of $5.1 billion.

While neither these relationships nor profits negate the value of vaccinations—nor do either of these things prove immunization dangerous—they do raise the question that, in the event there is something to hide, is it being directly covered up or are these companies and government merely not seeking answers to questions they don't want answers to?

Actress and autism advocate Jennifer McCarthy defended Wakefield in a blog post in January, asking, "Why does one journalist's accusations against Dr. Wakefield now mean the vaccine-autism debate is over?"

"I know children regress after vaccination because it happened to my own son," she continued. "Why aren't there any tests out there on the safety of how vaccines are administered in the real world, six at a time? Why have only two of the 36 shots our kids receive been looked at for their relationship to autism?"

A picture of the smallpox vaccine, the first successful vaccine to be developed in 1796.

The federal government continues to be the largest buyer of vaccines in the country, administering these vaccines through government-funded public immunization programs that provide millions of vaccines to babies each year.

On Aug. 27, 2010 the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Federal Circuit ruled once again that there is no link between vaccination and autism in the case of Cedillo v. Secretary of Health and Human Services. The decision upheld two earlier rulings stating the same thing.

On Feb. 22, 2011, the U.S. Supreme Court ruled in the case of Bruesewitz v. Wyeth that vaccine-injury claims must continue to be filed with the U.S. Court of Federal Claims set up under the National Childhood Vaccine Injury Act of 1986, and cannot be filed directly against physicians or vaccine manufacturers in civil court.

Vaccine opponents have very few options—barring a medical or religious exemption—if they want their children to attend school. But they can consider an alternative vaccination schedule and postpone required shots until their children are more developed.

Dr. Salk's last years were spent searching for a vaccine against HIV. Today those studies continue, but so do studies for vaccines against much less serious illnesses like strep throat, leaving many to not only wonder how big the risks are but, at what point do we draw the line? And who will draw it?

"If the State can tag, track down and force citizens against their will to be injected with biologicals of known and unknown toxicity today, there will be no limit on which individual freedoms the State can take away in the name of the greater good tomorrow," says Fisher.

But the ACIP insists that foregoing scheduled immunizations is a coin toss.

"If you decide not to immunize your child, you put your child at risk," states the ACIP. "You need to get all the scientific facts from a medical professional you can trust before making any decisions based on stories you may have seen or heard on TV, the Internet, or from other parents."

Vaccine critic Dr. T.B. Allison said more than a century ago, in an 1883 conference on vaccination safety, that doctors, as a rule, believe in vaccination because they know no other way. Right, wrong or somewhere in between, it's what they have been taught.

"Be fair, therefore, to the doctors, and ask yourselves whether you would not believe as they do, and act as they do, if your training and interest coincided with theirs," the doctor said. "We believe our teachers. I never heard of anti-vaccinators except as fools and fanatics, whose existence was marvelous. My aim has been to show that you have a powerful body to fight in the medical profession. We cannot be stirred without great effort. We are a kind of Juggernaut; we have to be dragged; we will not go. Let each one take his doctor, or, if he be so fortunate as not to need one, the doctor who lives nearest to him, and try and instruct him. Send him the literature of the subject; he may not read it—but he may."

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: Newly published research in leading journals

Title: Newly published research in leading journals
Description: AGAINST fluoride and vaccines

TheUnhivedMind - June 26, 2011 02:35 AM (GMT)

Newly published research in leading journals AGAINST fluoride and vaccines

Carl Herman, Contributing Writer
Friday, June 24, 2011
http://www.activistpost.com/2011/06/newly-...in-leading.html

Excerpts below, articles here and here. To understand that Big Pharma and "health care" companies do not act for the public benefit, continue reading the excerpt from this. Explanation, documentation and proof that US corporate media makes the choice to keep Americans ignorant of these game-changing stories is here, with an excerpt of one game-changing examples.

Fluoride:
"The prolonged ingestion of fluoride may cause significant damage to health and particularly to the nervous system," concludes a review of studies by researchers Valdez-Jimenez, et al. published in Neurologia (June 2011), reports New York State Coalition Opposed to Fluoridation, Inc. (NYSCOF).

The research team reports, "It is important to be aware of this serious problem and avoid the use of toothpaste and items that contain fluoride, particularly in children as they are more susceptible to the toxic effects of fluoride." (1)

"Fluoride can be toxic by ingesting one part per million (ppm), and the effects are not immediate, as they can take 20 years or more to become evident," they write.

Most fluoridating U.S. public drinking water suppliers add fluoride chemicals to deliver 1 ppm fluoride (equal to about 1 milligram per quart) intending to benefit teeth and not to purify the water.

Vaccines:
A shocking new study published in a prestigious medical journal has found a direct statistical link between higher vaccine doses and infant mortality rates in the developed world, suggesting that the increasing number of inoculations being forced upon children by medical authorities, particularly in the United States which administers the highest number of vaccines and also has the highest number of infant deaths, is in fact having a detrimental impact on health.

The study, entitled Infant mortality rates regressed against number of vaccine doses routinely given: Is there a biochemical or synergistic toxicity?, was conducted by Neil Z. Miller and Gary S. Goldman. It was published in the reputable Human and Experimental Toxicology journal, which is indexed by the National Library of Medicine...Despite the fact that the United States administers the highest number of vaccine doses to children in the entire developed world, 26 before infants reach the age of one, its infant mortality rate is higher than 33 other nations, all of which administer less vaccines. The study clearly illustrates the fact that developed countries which administer less vaccines have lower infant mortality rates, suggesting a direct statistical link between vaccination side-effects and infant deaths.

For example, the two developed countries that require children be immunized with the least amount of vaccines, Japan and Sweden, also top the table for the lowest infant mortality rates.

Big Pharma, "Health care":

The cartels taking billions of our dollars are in many industries. Dr. Marcia Angell, former Editor in Chief of the New England Journal of Medicine and currently a Senior Lecturer at Harvard Medical School documents:
“The combined profits for the ten drug companies in the Fortune 500 ($35.9 billion) were more than the profits for all the other 490 businesses put together ($33.7 billion).”

Importantly, “profit” is distinct from “research” in understanding these figures. This is prima facie evidence of unlawful collusion among a cartel, yet government doesn’t investigate. Dr. Angell concludes that US government will never provide universal health care because both political parties’ “leadership” obeys health insurance companies’ lobbyists rather than legislate for the public good. The lack of health care kills about 45,000 Americans every year according to the recent study championed by Harvard’s Medical School. Cost-benefit analyses range between $100 to $300 billion annual cost increase to the US by keeping health care companies between doctors and patients.

Corporate media "reporting":

You should also know that the King family's civil trial found the US government guilty of Dr. King's assassination (click link for a summary and documentation of the overwhelming evidence). US Corporate media refused to cover the trial or interview Dr. King's wife. His family's opinion is that the US government murdered Dr. King to end his protests against unlawful US wars and his call to end poverty.

In conclusion: The century within which we were all born witnessed over 250 million human beings slaughtered by governments in war and atrocities. War is used as a continuous “foreign policy,” with the US in present egregious and unlawful abuse of their superpower status. History will judge when Americans developed the education competence to evolve beyond endless wars.

We can help make that time now.

Carl Herman is a National Board Certified Teacher in economics, government, and history. His hobby is research, education, and lobbying for improved public policy. A principal project of his 30-years’ experience working with US “leadership” in government, economics and corporate media was to grow the citizen’s lobby, RESULTS, that led to two UN Summits (1990 World Summit for Children - the largest meeting of heads of state in world history - and the 1997 Microcredit Summit - topic of the 2006 Nobel Peace Prize). Because US political leadership of both parties reneged on each and every public and private promise to end poverty, and US corporate media behaved as their political propagandists, Carl shifted his hobby to "follow the money." His conclusions are explained and documented in these two articles (academic/ professional voice, and more passionate citizen voice):

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: SHEOPLE FALL FOR MMR VACS OR IS IT A LIE?

Title: SHEOPLE FALL FOR MMR VACS OR IS IT A LIE?

TheUnhivedMind - June 24, 2011 05:02 PM (GMT)

MMR vaccine rate increase prompts measles warning

Measles can be highly dangerous and in some cases fatal.

24 June 2011 Last updated at 12:23
http://www.bbc.co.uk/news/health-13903374

Ninety per cent of two-year-old children in the UK have received their first dose of the MMR vaccine - the highest level for 13 years, says the Health Protection Agency.

But this is still short of the 95% uptake rate which would stop the spread of the disease in the community.

A measles epidemic spreading across Europe in recent months is thought to be behind the rise in immunisations.

The HPA is urging parents to vaccinate their children before they travel.

In the UK, two doses of the MMR vaccine are usually given, the first at around 12 months and the second around the time of starting school.

The increase in the number of children aged two receiving their first dose is a 0.6% rise on the previous quarter.

The uptake rate for two doses in children aged five increased by 0.3% from the previous quarter to 85.1%, show the HPA's figures.

Children who received their first dose of the MMR vaccine by the age of 5 in the UK remains at 92.8%.
Taken on trust

Dr Mary Ramsay, head of the immunisation department at the HPA, said she was pleased by the figures.

"We're very encouraged to see that UK MMR uptake has reached 90 per cent in children aged two, indicating increasing levels of trust by parents in the immunisation programme."

The Health Protection Agency says that in England and Wales there has been a total of 496 confirmed measles cases between January and May 2011.

This is more than the 374 total for the whole of last year.

It says the new cases of measles in England and Wales are predominately in children and adults under 19 years old, the vast majority of whom are unvaccinated.

Mary Ramsay said: "Anyone who missed out on MMR as a child will continue to be at risk of measles, which explains why we are seeing these new cases in a broad age range."

European travel

The outbreak is thought to be linked to an epidemic in Europe where more than 11,000 cases have been reported across 35 European countries in the first four months of this year.

In France, where the outbreak appears to have started, more than 7,000 cases were reported between January and April this year.

Dr Ramsay said families should plan to vaccinate their children before the summer.

"It's that time of year when children are travelling on school trips and family holidays and we are reminding parents and young adults of the importance of immunisation before they travel.

"We cannot stress enough that measles is serious and in some cases it can be fatal."

TheUnhivedMind - June 25, 2011 04:44 PM (GMT)

So they've gone from a target of 90 out of a 100 sheep to now wanting 95. These tyrannical governments just keep pushing their luck as the dumbness sets in and the propaganda winds up. We really need to cut all this nonsense out once and for all. Notice now the next propaganda below hoping to get that extra 5 out of a 100 rushing to the quack of death to destroy their child of God with wicked sorcery of the pharmaceutical inquisition:

QUOTE

CASES OF MEASLES SOAR AS PARENTS BOYCOTT MMR JAB

MMR jabs now on increase

Saturday June 25,2011
By Jo Willey, Health Correspondent
http://www.express.co.uk/posts/view/254840...boycott-MMR-jab

BRITAIN is in the grip of a measles crisis after cases of the illness in the first five months of this year have already overtaken the total for the whole of 2010.

The country has experienced a surge in cases in recent years after parents boycotted the controversial MMR – measles, mumps, rubella – triple vaccine over fears it causes autism.

Despite the link being discredited, millions of parents are reluctant to have children immunised even though measles can cause brain damage, blindness, deafness and, in extreme cases, death. The latest data from the Health Protection Agency reported 496 cases of measles in England and Wales up to the end of May this year, compared with 374 for the whole of 2010.

Small outbreaks have occurred in universities, schools and families. There is also a link with foreign travel after a surge in cases across Europe.

But despite this, HPA data also show a rise in the proportion of children having the MMR jab. The first vaccination is given when youngsters are 13 months of age, with a booster before they start school.

Among youngsters aged two, figures for January to March show 90 per cent had received their first jab – the highest level for 13 years and a 0.6 per cent rise on the previous quarter.

Dr Mary Ramsay, head of the HPA immunisation department, said: “We’re on the way to reaching our goal of 95 per cent uptake. But we cannot stress enough that measles is serious and in some cases can be fatal.”

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: New focus on vaccines could spell new pharmaceuti

Title: New focus on vaccines could spell new pharmaceuti
Description: jobs

TheUnhivedMind - June 25, 2011 04:33 AM (GMT)

New focus on vaccines could spell new pharmaceutical jobs

October 19, 2009 By Leave a Comment
http://www.pharmaceutical-jobs.com/pharmac...maceutical-jobs

With the threat of influenza pandemics on the rise, three big pharmaceutical companies have announced deals for rights to influenza vaccines. The moves mark a shift within the industry to a focus on one of its most promising, but riskiest, segments.

The Wall Street Journal reports that there is a “growing conviction among pharmaceutical executives that vaccines against a variety of maladies, long an industry stepchild, will become an increasingly important source of growth to replace aging blockbusters that are poised to lose patent protection.”

Although low prices, hefty investment and the threat of lawsuits drove most large drug companies to all-but-abandon the vaccines business several decades ago, today vaccine sales are growing faster than those of other prescription medicines, the WSJ says, and are largely immune to generic competition.According to recent reports, Johnson & Johnson has paid $441 million for an 18% stake in Crucell NV, a Dutch biotech company, to jointly develop vaccines. In addition, Abbott Laboratories has announced a •4.5 billion deal under which it will acquire a unit of Solvay SA, which includes a vaccine group. And Merck & Co. has obtained the US marketing rights to a seasonal flu vaccine from Australia’s CSL Ltd. for an undisclosed sum.

Although the vaccines business still carries risks, the promise of healthy returns are once again enough to prompt pharmas to begin to look past the downsides. And the market is proving to be an area in which pharmas are finding ways to reinvent its traditional business model to include products and services far beyond its standard niche.

For instance, GlaxoSmithKline has spent several years upping its investment• to the tune of $3.2 billion in research, acquisitions and extra manufacturing in anticipation of a flu pandemic. But in addition to vaccines, GSK also is banking on non-traditional portfolio expansions such as medicated face masks and diagnostic tools.

In fact, GSK chief executive Andrew Witty wants his company to be a “one-stop shop” for managing influenza. The company’s new H1N1 vaccine began reaching health departments this week and Glaxo reports governments around the globe have ordered 440 million doses for delivery in 2009 and early 2010.

The shift in focus around pharma likely spells new job opportunities for workers with skills in vaccine research, production, marketing and sales. In fact, the WSJ reported that at one point GSK doubled the number of people it had working on pandemic flu vaccines in order to develop an H1N1 vaccine quickly. A good sign for pharma and its workforce.

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: 5 year olds targeted for population control with Title: 5 year olds targeted for population control with Description: Flu vac

TheUnhivedMind - June 25, 2011 01:56 AM (GMT)

Flu jab for all under fives could save 'thousands of people'

Thousands of lives could be saved a year if all young children were vaccinated annually against flu, say Oxford University academics.

By Stephen Adams, Medical Correspondent
6:30AM BST 24 Jun 2011
http://www.telegraph.co.uk/health/8595005/...-of-people.html

Doing so would not only protect against the most vulnerable children, but also save the lives of many more elderly people who would avoid being infected.

Last winter the Joint Committee on Vaccination And Immunisation (JCVI), whose rulings are legally binding, came in for criticism after limiting the seasonal flu vaccine to 'at risk' under fives, such as those with asthma or neurological problems.

That criticism reached a peak with the death of Lana Ameen, a formerly healthy three-year-old, who died on Boxing Day after after apparently catching a cold and developing a high temperature.

Her parents, a doctor and nurse from Quinton, Birmingham, said the "price was too high" not to vaccinate children universally.

Writing today (FRI) in the British Journal of General Practice Prof David Mant and Dr Richard Mayon-White, two leading Oxford University public health experts, say Britain should follow the example of the US and vaccinate those aged six months to five years.

They quote research by fellow doctors, published simultaneously in the BJGP, showing that only a quarter of 'at risk' children aged two to 16 were actually vaccinated last winter.

They write: "Universal influenza vaccination for children aged over six months is now recommended in the US.

"As the selective vaccination policy currently recommended in the UK has not been successfully implemented — certainly in comparison with the success of universal vaccination in older people — we should also give serious consideration to vaccinating all children."

Estimating how many children and adults die from flu every year is an inexact science.

While the JCVI estimates that only 500 die in an 'average' year, virologists and others think that is a gross underestimate. Flu can often be the first trigger in a cascade of health problems, experts say, while many doctors loathe putting flu on death certificates.

The two academics refer to Japanese research indicating that vaccinating children prevents between 37,000 and 42,000 deaths "of mainly older people" a year, or one for every 420 children vaccinated.

Applied to Britain, that ratio would equate to 7,000 lives saved annually. Speaking to The Daily Telegraph, Dr Richard Mayon-White said that was a "credible" figure.

He did not directly criticise the JCVI's stance last winter, saying it had to be "economical" with vaccines at a time of limited supply.

But he said: "The problem with all selective vaccination programmes is it's very hard to reach the target group."

Exactly which children were "at risk" was difficult for GPs to determine, let alone "the man in the street" to understand, he said.

While he and Prof Gant accept that universal vaccination would be costly, they argue it would cut the number of GP appointments for children with chest infections by 20 per cent. The Department of Health should examine both sides of the cost equation, they say.

The JCVI is currently reviewing the issue.

(DH comment to come)

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: Bill Gates And The SV40 Cancer-Causing Virus

Title: Bill Gates And The SV40 Cancer-Causing Virus

TheUnhivedMind - June 23, 2011 02:32 AM (GMT)

Bill Gates And The SV40 Cancer-Causing Virus

By David Jenkins
6-22-11
http://rense.com/general94/bill.htm

The new (GMO-DNA) vaccines contain SV40.

Wikipedia, in an article on DNA vaccination includes this reference to SV40:

"The SV40 promoter was conventionally used until research showed that vectors driven by the Rous Sarcoma Virus (RSV) promoter had much higher expression rates.[2] ... An example of DNA vaccine plasmid is pVAC, it uses SV40 promoter.

The SV40 Cancer Foundation, however, goes into more detail.

"SV40 was the 40th virus found in rhesus monkey kidney cells when these cells were used to make the polio vaccine. This virus contaminated both the Inactivated Polio Vaccine (IPV) created by Dr. Jonas Salk and the Oral or "Live" Polio Vaccine (OPV) created by Dr. Albert Sabin.

"In 1961, SV40 was discovered by Dr. Bernice Eddy of the National Institute of Health, Division of Biologics when she took the material used to grow polio vaccines and injected it into hamsters. Tumors grew in the hamsters. Her discovery was subsequently validated by Drs. Maurice Hilliman and Benjamin Sweet of Merck.

Children being fed sugar cubes with the oral polio vaccine. Circa 1961.

"Upon the discovery that SV40 was an animal carcinogen that had found its way into the polio vaccines, a new federal law was passed in 1961 that required that no vaccines contain this virus. However, this law did not require that SV40 contaminated vaccines be thrown away or that the contaminated seed material (used to make all polio vaccines for the next four decades) be discarded. As a result, known SV40 contaminated vaccines were injected into children up until 1963. In addition, it has been alleged that there have been SV40-contaminated batches of oral polio vaccine administered to some children until the end of the 1990's.

Dr. Robert Bell, once Vice President International Society for Cancer Research at the British Cancer Hospital said:

"The chief, if not the sole, cause of the monstrous increase in cancer has been vaccination."

Hillerman, chief of vaccines at Merck not only validated Bernice Eddy's discovery but he admitted that all Merck's vaccines contain cancer viruses and other viruses and that their Hepatitis vaccine caused the AIDS epidemic in the US.

Dr. Larry Palevsky, a NY board certified pediatrician, agrees as well that vaccines contain viruses and says that most of the viruses in vaccines can not be removed.

The new vaccines are GMO-DNA vaccines. The material that they wish to inject has been genetically engineered (thus GMO) using parts of viruses, cancers, animal poxes, and combined, and are then shot or inhaled or injected into the body, to be "taken up by the DNA" (thus DNA) . This material is meant to affect the body in the most fundamental way possible, by affecting the very coding of the body (the DNA) which controls functions for the existence of the person.

And doesn't SV40's potential uptake by the child or adult's DNA present a much graver danger than previously? Could this cancer virus now become part of the body's coding itself?

SV40 was removed by federal law. So, is against federal law to introduce it into vaccines again? And is it not an extreme threat to anyone taking the new vaccines, to have it taken up by their DNA?

Bill Gates wants every newborn on earth registered for vaccination, with cell phones to alert parents as well as locate people.

The Redmond, Wash.-based company's cofounder and chairman envisioned collecting biometric information on babies via handsets and transmitting the data to a central health registry, which could be used to remind parents about vaccinations. GPS data from the phone could also help guide medical personnel to remote locations to administer vaccines.

Gates imagined trialing the program in areas with low vaccination rates like Nigeria or northern India.

"If you could register every birth on a cell phone-get fingerprints, get a location-then you could systems to make sure the immunizations happen," said Gates. ....

Gate's plan didn't address the privacy implications of a birth database, which could be more or less substantial depending on how the information was structured.

Bill Gates is heavily invested in the new vaccines, that is the GMO-DNA vaccines. His plan would establish a global tracking system of everyone on earth which includes biometric identity information. While it clearly violates fundamental privacy rights as a prelude to violating human rights (i.e. giving governments power to inject things into anyone on earth in the name of "health"), Mr. Gates has come up with a unique marketing device for his own products. His plan arranges to track people down wherever they may be and force his products on them via government agencies.

One sees the downside in terms of health rather quickly. Wouldn't every newborn, via the new vaccines, be injected with this known cancer virus at birth (or with Rous Sarcoma Virus RSV- another cancer virus) and then be injected with it or other viruses many, many, many, many, many times more over the course of infancy, childhood, adolescence and adulthood?

Assuming that almost all parents want to protect their children from cancer, wouldn't Mr. Gates' seeking to vaccinate every newborn on the planet with his GMO-DNA vaccines with SV40, be reason for even more parents and grandparents to reject vaccines. They are are already doing so, not just because of the studied connection between vaccines and autism, bowel disease, and mitochondrial dysfunction but because of personal experience through knowing personally what has been happening to children of friends, relatives and co-workers after vaccination.

The article quoted above about Gates says "Unfortunately, phones can't fight the ignorance that leads some Americans to leave their children unvaccinated." Is the writer referring to Robin MacNeil's daughter who said in her father's PBS series on autism that it was after the MMR, DTap and Hib vaccines that her son became autistic? One would assume she might be leaving her children unvaccinated after that, not out of ignorance but out of direct, unmediated by media, information of what happened after vaccination.

The article concludes with these words: "The Bill and Melinda Gates Foundation has given billions of dollars to charitable causes, making the couple the most generous philanthropists in America." Philanthropy is defined as the desire to promote the welfare of others, expressed by the generous donation of money to good causes. But Mr. Gates is doing quite the reverse. He would be using his money to ensure that viruses proven to cause cancer would be injected into every possible child on the planet and has devised a plan to try to make sure none can escape. Mr. Gates would be hurting millions, perhaps billions, helping international health agencies funded in fact by himself, to seize their rights to control their own bodies and that of their children, while guaranteeing himself profits with no end in sight. Were people to become ill, he would make more money from selling yet more vaccines.

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: Dr. Andrew Wakefield And GMOs

Title: Dr. Andrew Wakefield And GMOs

TheUnhivedMind - June 23, 2011 02:20 AM (GMT)

Dr. Andrew Wakefield And GMOs

By Richard Brown
6-22-11
http://rense.com/general94/drandrew.htm

"Why is it significant that many of Bush's staff and cabinet appointees are former pharmaceutical company executives as was GW's father, former President George Bush? These corporations are voraciously patenting the earth's life forms-its plants, bacteria, viruses, animals and even human genetic lineages. Reproduction of plants, animals and humans may eventually be totally controlled by these corporations, genetically-altered, recombined into chimeric life forms and exploited for profit." Robert Lederman

GMO-salmon has caused an uproar but GMO-fish, altered by the biotech industry, are already being sold, marketed as "pets."

There is uproar over GMOs in the food supply but over GMO vaccines, produced by the biotech/pharmaceutical industry and being given to millions of children (23 of them, called DNA vaccines), being marketed for "disease prevention," there is almost total silence.

Or is there?

The biggest international story surrounding vaccines today is the Lancet's removal, many years after its acceptance, of an article by Dr. Andrew Wakefield and others investigating mitochondrial dysfunction and digestive issues in autistic children.

The allegations against Wakefield have already been proved untrue and questions as to the connections between the journalist making the allegations, the owner of the London Times, and the pharmaceutical industry are coming to light. Wakefield is demanding a retraction from the BMJ after documents proved his innocence.

The question is what significant thing did Wakefield touch on which has led to the almost unheard of - the removal many years after publication of an accepted and peer reviewed article - and his being drummed out of medicine in the UK?"

The issue swirling around Wakefield was his allegedly saying that the MMR vaccine causes autism. He did not say that. He and his co-authors asked for further investigation into the condition of the children and its possible relation to the MMR vaccine. Wakefield did not recommend that parents stop giving their children vaccines for measles, mumps or rubella, only to not take them in combination. (The UK government immediately removed the single measles vaccine from the market, voiding a less worrisome choice.)

But is the MMR vaccine distinguishable from the single vaccines not only in being a combination vaccine, but in another way? Is it, in fact, a DNA vaccine? Those vaccines have affinity for the DNA of the person receiving the vaccine, and can potentially affect their DNA.

It represents a whole new class of vaccines.

Are the problems Wakefield wrote about not just related to the MMR vaccine or even a DNA MMR vaccine, but endemic to all the DNA vaccines - the third generation of vaccines? Below is background on these DNA vaccines.

It should be noted that the article from Wikipedia from which this material is excerpted may come from the vaccine industry, which makes admissions of unknowns more significant. The article begins with: "Vaccines are among the greatest achievements of modern medicine ..." while erroneously claiming " in industrial nations, they have eliminated naturally-occurring cases of smallpox, and nearly eliminated polio ... " when statistics do not bear that out.
Emphasis has been added.
"First generation vaccines are whole-organism vaccines either live and weakened, or killed forms.[2] Live, attenuated vaccines, such as smallpox and polio vaccines, are able to induce killer T-cell (TC or CTL) responses, helper T-cell (TH) responses and antibody immunity. However, there is a small risk that attenuated forms of a pathogen can revert to a dangerous form, and may still be able to cause disease in immunocompromised people (such as those with AIDS). While killed vaccines do not have this risk, they cannot generate specific killer T cell responses, and may not work at all for some diseases.

"In order to minimise these risks, so-called second generation vaccines were developed. These are subunit vaccines, consisting of defined protein antigens (such as tetanus or diphtheria toxoid) or recombinant [genetically engineered] protein components (such as the hepatitis B surface antigen). These, too, are able to generate TH and antibody responses, but not killer T cell responses.

"DNA vaccines are third generation vaccines, and are made up of a small, circular piece of bacterial DNA (called a plasmid) that has been genetically engineered to produce one or two specific proteins (antigens) from a pathogen. The vaccine DNA is injected into the cells of the body, where the "inner machinery" of the host cells "reads" the DNA and converts it into pathogenic proteins. Because these proteins are recognised as foreign, when they are processed by the host cells and displayed on their surface, the immune system is alerted, which then triggers a range of immune responses.[1][2] These DNA vaccines developed from "failed" gene therapy experiments. ...

"It is not understood how these different methods of DNA immunization, or the forms of antigen expressed, raise different profiles of T-cell help.

"When DNA uptake and subsequent expression was first demonstrated in vivo in muscle cells,[37] it was thought that these cells were unique in this ability [uptake of DNA] ... However, subsequent research revealed that other cells (such as keratinocytes, fibroblasts and epithelial Langerhans cells) could also internalize DNA.[30][39] This phenomenon has not been the subject of much research, so the actual mechanism of DNA uptake is not known.

What does it mean to say cells "internalize DNA"? Does this mean that the genetically engineered material being injected into children becomes part of their own DNA? DNA is the very code of life, and of everyone's existence. Are genetically engineered DNA vaccines altering children's DNA?

Is it possible that the driving issue behind the vicious attacks on Wakefield which have so mystified people, is bigger than "autism and the MMR vaccine"?

Wakefield was broadening of the picture of "autism" by investigating mitochondrial disfunction in autistic children. Would he and fellow researchers have questions next about the children's DNA? Would that bring them closer to issues of genetic engineering. Would the question arise as to whether these children are so sick because they have being contaminated at the level of their DNA by GMOs? And not just any GMOs but ones built from segments of pathogenic viruses and animal poxes.

Wakefield and others were seeing mitochondrial disfunction. Once one begins thinking in terms of genetic engineering, it might be hard not to notice that mitochondrial dysfunction is a central problem in cloned animals and in genetically engineered animals. for those promoting cloned and GE-animals the dysfunction of mitochondria, the part of the cell that provides energy for life, is not a small problem.

Dysfunction of mitochondria exposes that altering DNA is not working. "Tampering with previously perfect DNA" would be more accurate to describe "altering DNA" and it has thus far resulted in profoundly defective beings.

Is this not what parents of autistic children are saying - something suddenly went terribly wrong with their previously perfectly normal child?

This is not to argue that only GMO-DNA vaccines can produce damage a child severely. Microbiologist Shiv Chopra says that vaccines are "cluster bombs" affecting every cell of the body and violating the basics of biology. Cell microchemist Garth Nicolson says they all are contaminated with mycoplasm that destroys cell membranes. And vaccines contain one thing after another known to harm.

pestivirus
mycoplasma
viral fragments
DNA fragments bacterial components adjuvants like squalene MF59 and ASO3
thimerosal aluminum beta-propiolactone animal cancer cells nucleic-acid fragments live organisms pathogenic viruses simian cytomegalovirus ethylene glycol (antifreeze) Formaldehyde embalming fluids phenol (carbolic acid)
antibiotics like Neomycin and streptomycin
Pus fromm sores of diseased animals
Horse Serum
Calf Serum
Fecal Matter
Macerated Cancer Cells
Sweepings from diseased children
Lactalbumin hydrolysate Aluminum phospha
Retro-virus (SV-40) - contaminant virus of some polio vaccines
Chick Embryo
Sodium Phosphate
Foreign animal tissues containing genetic material (DNA/RNA) - from growth medium

But GMO-DNA vaccines may be going beyond such damage, to do something new in the history of mankind, something more rudimentary - scrambling people's DNA code itself, and with pathogenic DNA.

Is this where Wakefield's work may have taken on threatening significance to those invested in GMOs, especially in GMO- DNA vaccines? For DNA vaccines are not even mentioned in the vaccine debate though they are current vaccines now. In investigating mitochondrial failure in children taking the MMR vaccines, did Wakefield come too perilously close to looking into whether these children's DNA was normal? And from there, would it be only a small step to recognizing that their DNA would have been altered by "DNA" vaccines?

At that point, the association of GMO vaccines with mitochondrial failures might bring up the mitochondrial dysfunction of cloned animals and GMO-animals

Things were already adding up.

1. There is no question now that autistic children have mitochondrial dysfunction, a problem at the most fundamental level of physiologic functions - production of energy.
2. Robin MacNeil described this as well on his PBS autism series, which also implicated the MMR vaccine (as well as the DTaP and HIb vaccines).
3. A retired pharmaceutical industry scientist has done a study now linking autism to the new DNA vaccines.
4. Wakefield's work considered autism in relation to the MMR vaccine, a new vaccine, most likely a DNA vaccine.

Had Wakefield and the other researchers begun looking at the DNA of the sick children? Is it altered? Did the MMR - assuming it is a DNA vaccine - introduce foreign DNA into the child which changed his or her own DNA code for the rest of his existence? Was the child, in receiving an MMR injection, contaminated by GMOs, and at the level of his or her DNA? Do the sick children now have pathogenic material built into their DNA?

If so, could one say accurately that the child has become a genetically engineered organism?

Wakefield simply wanted further investigation into the MMR vaccines (never spoken of as a GMO-DNA vaccine) and autism. His questioning the safety of the MMR led to inexplicably virulent media attacks against him internationally, to the end of his stellar medical career, and to his leaving his home country. What was done to him could certainly be effective as a warning to any doctor or researcher to steer clear of vaccine research and safety issues. Where did it come from? The journalist who brought the charges did so under the aegis of the London Times, owned by James Murdock, son of Rupert Murdock who controls a huge international media empire. James Murdock joined the board of Glaxo Smith Kline which manufacturers the MMR vaccine.

In India, a bill proposed by the biotech industry, the BRAI (Biotech Regulatory Authority of India), would treat those who question as harshly as Wakefield, if not more so, but is explicit as to what should be walled off from public questioning - GMOs. BRAI seeks prison for anyone questioning the safety of GMOs, including in vaccines.

Was Wakefield drummed out of medicine in the UK and is he now experiencing ceaseless media attacks all the while not even realizing his investigation of mitochondrial failure in autistic children may have accidentally been the leading edge of questions into the safety of a GMO-DNA MMR vaccine? For there is no question there are endlessly complex problems once anyone begins playing with genes.

Did Wakefield, unawares, come too close to exposing the biologic failure of the first attempts to genetically modify people? Are the dysfunctional children - mentally and biologically - the poster children for GMO contamination of human beings via vaccines? Is the world not just looking at autism but GMO-DNA experimentation on millions ... and without informed consent?

This would certainly throw into a cocked hat all mandated vaccines, especially as most of the new ones are GMO-DNA vaccines. The slew of legal "alterations" occurring around vaccines increases safety concerns: the FDA has written a new rule allowing manufacturers to insert or change any ingredient with the approval of only one person at the FDA; all liability has been removed by the Supreme Court for the manufacturers; and the FDA is arguing in court that the public has no fundamental right to health. Bush, creating false fear around flu pandemics, introduced state pandemic laws which mandate vaccines based solely on a declared emergency by a suspect CDC. Logically, forcing vaccines on the entire population would mean contaminating the DNA of millions of people.

The world is already working to stop a biotech push for GMOs in seed, fish, trees, in all kinds of food plants, etc. even as information is flowing in on the dangers and failures, including Monsanto and regulators having hid data since 1980 on birth defects. But the world, in watching the push for GMOs - , has not yet realized that the Gates' push for vaccines is also a push for GMOs.

The concern around the first is of whole scale contamination of nature. But now, with recognition that the new vaccines are GMO-DNA vaccines, concern over whole scale contamination of human beings could follow. Whole scale would be no exaggeration as Bill Gates, heavily invested in Monsanto's GMOs, is also invested in GMO-DNA vaccines, and he wants every newborn on earth registered for vaccination.

Why have there been attacks on doctors investigating the cause of severe illness in children and disparagement of parents asking what happened to their once normal children after vaccines? If mitochondrial dysfunction is linked to GMO-DNA vaccines and tampering with human DNA, what is left of the vaccine industry's assertion of themselves as "humanitarians" working for human health and vaccines as miracles of medicine?

What could possibly be going on with vaccines that would induce Bill Gates to go on TV to attempt to silence parents by accusing them of killing children simply for questioning vaccines. What was so important that international media would fraudulently discredit Wakefield and his work?

Is the uproar around Wakefield, actually an uproar over GMOs?

The world has been subjected to the corrupt insertion of GMOs into food chain and nature. Keeping them unlabeled has trapped people into a GMO experiment people have little way to avoid.

Is the uproar over Wakefield meant to focus away from an immense reality - that the vaccines being pushed on the world are also GMOs, also "unlabeled" - a parallel on the medical side to what is happening in food, but literally mandated and more dangerous?

Is the Wakefield uproar meant to divert from the new vaccines that alter DNA with GMOs?

Are these GMA-DNA vaccines part of the largest, most profound, on-going and forced experiments on human beings ever conducted?

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: GMO-DNA Vaccines And Cytokine Storms

Title: GMO-DNA Vaccines And Cytokine Storms

TheUnhivedMind - June 23, 2011 02:19 AM (GMT)

GMO-DNA Vaccines And Cytokine Storms

By Richard Brown
6-22-11

Of particular note for anyone concerned about autism are parental claims that the vaccines led immediately to intense reactions in the children - screaming, severe diarrhea, seizures, etc.

Work by Russell Blaylock, a neurosurgeon investigating vaccination damage, points to cytokine reactivity as the inherent danger in all vaccines and the responses he lists dovetail with autism (and other disorders).

"The flu virus is supposed to cause a "cytokine storm," and this inflammatory overreaction is what causes the damage, not the virus itself. This is interesting because all vaccines also cause a cytokine storm, one that can last for decades. This is why vaccines are linked to sudden death, joint pains, depression, weakness and fatigue, mental cloudiness, seizures, neurological disorders, and autoimmune diseases. (No one seems to be concerned about vaccine-caused cytokine storms, which are, in fact, immunoexcitotoxicity.)"

And yet developers of GMO-DNA vaccines applaud as a special advantage, that GMO-DNA vaccines induce large cytokine reactions.

Cytotoxic T-cell responses

One of the greatest advantages of DNA vaccines is that they are able to induce cytotoxic T lymphocytes (CTL) without the inherent risk associated with live vaccines [creating the disease itself]. CTL responses can be raised against immunodominant and immunorecessive CTL epitopes,[31] as well as subdominant CTL epitopes,[21] in a manner which appears to mimic natural infection. This may prove to be a useful tool in assessing CTL epitopes of an antigen, and their role in providing immunity.

Cytotoxic T-cells recognise small peptides (8-10 amino acids) complexed to MHC class I molecules (Restifo et al., 1995). These peptides are derived from endogenous cytosolic proteins which are degraded and delivered to the nascent MHC class I molecule within the endoplasmic reticulum (ER).[32] Targeting gene products directly to the ER (by the addition of an amino-terminal insertion sequence) should thus enhance CTL responses. This has been successfully demonstrated using recombinant vaccinia viruses expressing influenzaproteins,[32] but the principle should be applicable to DNA vaccines too. Targeting antigens for intracellular degradation (and thus entry into the MHC class I pathway) by the addition ofubiquitin signal sequences, or mutation of other signal sequences, has also been shown to be effective at increasing CTL responses.[16]

CTL responses can also be enhanced by co-inoculation with co-stimulatory molecules such as B7-1 or B7-2 for DNA vaccines against influenza nucleoprotein,[31][33] or GM-CSF for DNA vaccines against the murine malaria model P. yoelii.[34] Co-inoculation with plasmids encoding co-stimulatory molecules IL-12 and TCA3 have also been shown to increase CTL activity against HIV-1 and influenza nucleoprotein antigens.[33][35]

"Cytotoxic T cells usually kill virally infected cells. However, they can also be stimulated to secrete antiviral cytokines such as INF- and TNF-, which don't kill the cell but place severe limitations on viral infection by down-regulating the expression of viral components.[45]

"In general, co-administration of pro-inflammatory agents (such as various interleukins, tumor necrosis factor, and GM-CSF) plus TH2 inducing cytokines increase antibody responses, whereas pro-inflammatory agents and TH1 inducing cytokines decrease humoral responses and increase cytotoxic responses (which is more important in viral protection, for example). Co-stimulatory molecules like B7-1, B7-2 and CD40L are also sometimes used.

"... the potential toxicity of prolonged cytokine expression has not been established, and in many commercially important animal species, cytokine genes still need to be identified and isolated. In addition, various plasmid encoded cytokines modulate the immune system differently according to the time of delivery.

"Plasmid DNA itself appears to have an adjuvant effect on the immune system. Bacterially derived DNA has been found to trigger innate immune defence mechanisms, the activation of dendritic cells, and the production of TH1 cytokines.

"DNA-primed immune responses can be boosted by the administration of recombinant protein or recombinant poxviruses.

As they stress the advantages of boosting cytokine production in multiple areas, they admit not knowing THE most relevant thing they must - the potential toxicity of what they are doing.

Worse, any trust in their knowing the basic science behind what they doing falls away in reading that "the actual mechanism of DNA uptake is not known." But once must realize that GM0-DNA vaccines are entirely about DNA uptake. This leaves their complex, optimistic "scientific" assertions above under a cloud since they admit not knowing the fundamental mechanism of what they are attempting to achieve. They have gotten as far as genetically engineered DNA which they want to insert into the body, to be taken up by the body. But they have no idea how that would occur. And all the methods for their introduction of the genetically engineered DNA below show how crude their methods are to get that GMO material into the cells, including a gun. (They use a "gene gun" in the same primitive way to genetically engineer seeds, creating mutations.)

It is important to realize that GMO-DNA vaccines arose from a failed genetic experiment to begin with, and GMOs for food are associated with diseases while the biotech developers said they were perfectly safe. The companies involved have been lying, about safety, about great humanitarian plans to feed the poor of the world. With GMO-DNA vaccines, the promises are for health for the poor of the world, but health is drastically declining, even in the US, and that decline may be related to vaccines.

If one looks at the report of the basic methods of insertion, one sees constant unknowns, along with dangers. Repeatedly they say that the "response may not be the response required." And if this is an industry article promoting GMO-DNA vaccines, one would reasonably expect that dangers listed here are being minimized.

Advantages and disadvantages of commonly used DNA vaccine delivery methods
Method of Delivery Advantage Disadvantage Intramuscular or Intradermal injection

No special delivery mechanism
Permanent or semi-permanent expression pDNA spreads rapidly throughout the body

Inefficient site for uptake due to morphology of muscle tissue Relatively large amounts of DNA used
Th1 response may not be the response required [What response might it be? Might it be dangerous, bizarre, lethal?]

Gene Gun

DNA bombarded directly into cells
Small amounts DNA

Th2 response may not be the response required [What response might it be? Might it be dangerous, bizarre, lethal?]
Requires inert particles as carrier

Jet injection

No particles required
DNA can be delivered to cells mm to cm below skin surface Significant shearing of DNA after high-pressure expulsion [What do that mean about what gets into the body? Is it dangerous, bizarre, lethal?]

10-fold lower expression, and lower immune response Requires large amounts of DNA (up to 300 g)

Liposome-mediated delivery

High levels of immune response can be generated
Can increase transfection of intravenously delivered pDNA
Intravenously delivered liposome-DNA complexes can potentially transfect all tissues
Intranasally delivered liposome-DNA complexes can result in expression in distal mucosa as well as nasal muscosa and the generation of IgA antibodies

Toxicity
Ineffectiveness in serum
Risk of disease or immune reactions

However they attempt to get this material into the cells of people and have DNA "uptake," and beyond their unknowns from it, what is known is that they are shooting recombinant poxvirus, Mason-Pfizer monkey virus, SV40, cytomegalovirus (CMV), synthetic introns, adenovirus, cationic liposome-DNA preparations, biodegradablemicrospheres, attenuated Shigella or Listeria vectors for oral administration to the intestinal mucosa, recombinant adenovirus vectors, recombinant vaccinia viruses expressing influenza proteins - mixtures of genetically engineered viruses and animal poxes.

Advantages And Disadvantages Of Nucleic Acid-Based Immunization

Advantages Disadvantages

Subunit vaccination with no risk for infection[1]

Antigen presentation by both MHC class I and class II molecules[1]
Able to polarise T-cell help toward type 1 or type 2[1]
Immune response focused only on antigen of interest
Ease of development and production[1]
Stability of vaccine for storage and shipping
Cost-effectiveness
Obviates need for peptide synthesis, expression and purification of recombinant proteins and the use of toxic adjuvants[8]
Long-term persistence of immunogen[2]
In vivo expression ensures protein more closely resembles normal eukaryotic structure, with accompanying post-translational modifications[2]

Limited to protein immunogens (not useful for non-protein based antigens such as bacterial polysaccharides)
Risk of affecting genes controlling cell growth
Possibility of inducing antibody production against DNA
Possibility of tolerance to the antigen (protein) produced
Potential for atypical processing of bacterial and parasite proteins[1]

The table mention cost effectiveness, along with ease of development, production, shipping and storage for the manufacturer along with promises of what the vaccines can do, but the dangers are immense. Three stand out.

Risk of affecting genes controlling cell growth
Possibility of inducing antibody production against DNA
Potential for atypical processing of bacterial and parasite proteins

In the list of disadvantages (which they do not call dangers), they mention immune reactions. That would include the cytokine storm they are designing for maximum impact, an immune reaction that itself can lead to "sudden death, joint pains, depression, weakness and fatigue, mental cloudiness, seizures, neurological disorders, and autoimmune diseases." (Blaylock)

TheUnhivedMind - June 23, 2011 02:20 AM (GMT)

Remember we use Boldo and Boneset to control cytokine storms.

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: Is The H1N1 Vaccine Safe? Shocking Stories From

Title: Is The H1N1 Vaccine Safe? Shocking Stories From Description: Pregnant Women Who Have Had Miscarriages

TheUnhivedMind - June 22, 2011 01:58 AM (GMT)

Is The H1N1 Vaccine Safe? Shocking Stories From Pregnant Women Who Have Had Miscarriages After Taking The Swine Flu Vaccine

http://organichealthadviser.com/archives/s...ancy-do-not-mix

U.S. health authorities have made pregnant women one of the highest priority groups for getting the H1N1 swine flu vaccine, but is it actually safe for pregnant women and their babies? Well, the truth is that miscarriage reports from pregnant women who have taken the H1N1 swine flu vaccine are starting to pour in from all over the nation. Vaccines and pregnancy simply do not mix safely. In fact, the package inserts for the swine flu vaccines actually say that the safety of these vaccines for pregnant women has not been established.

What you are about to read below should shock and anger you. If they are telling us that the swine flu vaccine is not safe for children under 6 months of age, then why in the world would it be safe for pregnant women and their babies? That doesn't make an ounce of sense, does it?

The following H1N1 swine flu vaccine miscarriage horror stories are from a June 2010 birth club.....

EBWashington:

I am so upset. I was so excited to be pregnant after trying for a year. As soon as I found out I was pregnant, I joined this birth club and I was due June 25th. We have two healthy boys with no history of miscarriage. Everything was going great. Last Monday, I got the H1N1 vaccine thimerosal reduced (mercury reduced for pregnant women). On Tuesday morning, I started cramping and on Wednesday I started bleeding heavily. My hcg was 50 on Wednesday and I was almost 6 weeks along so it was low. They still thought that I might be pregnant but on Friday my hcg was down to 22. I am an emotional wreck. I feel like I had a healthy baby and I caused this by getting the H1N1 vaccine. My doctors pushed it. I researched online and there have been many miscarriages after the H1N1 vaccine but they haven't been reported since it is hard to say what caused the miscarriages. I hope that I did not cause this. I wish everyone the best.

Tayla08

I don't have an answer for you, but a friend of a friend just had a miscarriage 2-3 days after getting the shot. She was 7weeks. She had no previous history of m/c... No one can answer if they're related...it hasn't been out long enough and there haven't been any studies done on pregnant women. I will tell you, that it has made up my mind on getting it...I won't and I'm not going to get it for my DD either. My daughter and I both had H1N1 last week, and although it truly sucks...I think I'll take my chances. One doctor will tell you to get it and the next will tell you not too...you have to do what's in your heart.

90707

my heart goes out to you as i recently miscarried as well and was due in june. i had a healthy heart beat at 6wks. then at 7.5 wks my son got the h1n1 mist vaccine which has live vaccine in it. the nurse said to be careful b/c it could technically spread if he rubbed his nose and touched a surface etc. the next night i miscarried and 5 days later was diagnosed with h1n1. i work from home, kids are home, hadnt been anywhere during that time. so the chances that it is all related are very high. the flu mist vaccine warns for immunocompromised patients (which includes prego) to stay away from recipients of the flu mist for 21 days.

This next set of H1N1 swine flu vaccine miscarriage horror stories is from an About.com page about miscarriage.....

Jo:

I got the flu vaccine (regular not H1N1) at 8 weeks pregnant. Three days later I miscarried. I am not going to get the H1N1.

Regrets:

I got both vaccines on Thursday. I was 9 weeks pregnant. I miscarried on Sunday. I was told by several doctors to get these vaccines. Now I wish I followed my gut feeling and not get them at ALL!

:

i work in a hospital like setting and was told ‘the benefits outweigh the risks” 1am i got the vaccine, 3am i started bleeding and craming, 3pm miscarried. you decide sue:

I had the H1N1 vaccination and 24 hours later had a miscarriage.

Linda Hill:

My daughter in law was 10 weeks pregnant and had the H1N1 vaccine on Friday that night she miscarried.

SoSorry:

I was so ready to get the H1N1 vaccine last week and they were only giving them to pregnant women. I was 6 weeks along and got it and the next day I started cramping and miscarried. I already had two healthy pregnancies and never miscarried or had any problems. My doctors think I am crazy to think it was the H1N1 but if no one looks into this than other women will not know. I am so sorry that I got it.

Connie:

I also received the H1N1 vaccination on October 22nd, 2009 and went into labor on October 25th, at 16 weeks pregnant and we just heard the heartbeat and everything was fine with my pregnancy on October 16th, 2009, then on October 28th my water broke then on October 29th, I delivered a stillborn baby boy, and no one can tell me why…Everyone wants to say it did not come from the shot but I believe it did. My baby was growing at the correct pace and everyone wants to brush off the vaccination. I say if you have the vaccination and suffer a miscarriage if they are able to perform an autopsy have it done.

I also agree something needs to be done and looked more into with this vaccination because most women are being advised it’s just something that happens, but I also had two healthy children normal pregnancies and when I received this vaccination with my third pregnancy, my baby is gone.

sioux falls, south dakota:

I received the H1N1 vaccine on October 16th and started experiencing cramping on the 22nd. I was nearly 17 weeks pregnant and gave birth to a stillborn baby boy on the 23rd. Like many of the other women here, the first thing I suspected was the H1N1 vaccine. I immediately asked a nurse at the hospital if that would have anything to do with it. Without hesitation, she told me “absolutely not.” I had reservations about getting the vaccine, but followed the advice of my long trusted family doctor. In a follow up appointment with my doctor 3 days after I lost my baby, I asked him if the vaccine would have had any adverse effects on my baby. He also said that it was not possible. I don't believe that my doctor was necessarily lying to me, he was simply following the accepted practices and opinions of his field. I do, however, believe that as a nation, we are being lied to. This vaccine is NOT safe during pregnancy. There has not been enough testing done to determine this and there are far too many "coincidences" for this to be anything but a result of a vaccine that was hastily pushed into production and distribution in an effort to stop widespread panic. I have read so many stories in defense of the vaccine that will talk about how common miscarriages are, but I would challenge you to ask ANY health care professional how common second trimester miscarriages are. My baby was doing perfect developmentally and I had felt him move earlier that day. My heart goes out to all of you out there who have had to go through the same heartache and loss that I have had in the last couple of weeks. There is no reason that any woman or family should have to go through this. Get the word out to all of the pregnant women that you know. I know that if I had heard that women had been losing their babies shortly after they received the vaccine, I would have followed my gut and not gotten it myself. Maybe then Wyatt would have had a chance at life.

Marina Rossi:

I recently got the H1N1 vaccine and miscarried 3 days later. I thought it could have been the vaccine but didnt ask. After finding this site I believe it was the vaccine. Sorry to everyone else out there who has just experienced a miscarriage.

kathy-sd:

I'm from a town of 2000 in SD, there are several women pregnant and we are all due within a few weeks of each other. Four of us got the H1N1 vaccine 2 weeks ago and one by one each of us started to have preterm contractions. We are all due in Nov and Dec so we are further along than most of the people that lost their babies. There is no way you can tell us that our preterm labor was not caused by the H1N1 vaccine. It may look like a "fluke" to some people when these women are scattered all over the country but we are talking about 4 of us in our small community. My heart goes out to all of you that lost your babies.

ashley:

Im not sure but not only myself, i know someone that withing 4 days of getting the shot we both miscarried, i was only 6 weeks and she was 4 months along, not sure if the shot caused it and cant find any other information but i am a little concerned about this coincidence.

Time Machine:

I got a flu shot in pregnancy, developed incredibly strange symptoms immediately (numb hands, feet and mouth, heart palpitations, sudden weakness in my legs, a bright red face), began bleeding and miscarried by 11 weeks. I had no idea there was mercury in most flu shots but once I found out after the fact, I was assured that I'd had the "mercury free" form. As it turned out, the shot wasn't completely mercury free and, according to the EPA website, it still had 5,000 times the limit for mercury in drinking water– not to mention a list of other toxins (MSG, formaldehyde, etc.).

I'd had no idea the shots were so dirty. I guess I'd been under the impression they were something like sterile water and a dead virus, that's it.

The strange symptoms– which I'd been told were "just pregnancy" lasted six months. No one could figure out what was wrong with me, why I couldn't make stairs, why I felt like I'd been shot with novocaine. I learned later from a book by Jane Hightower that these were all symptoms of mercury exposure. I guess I'm one of those susceptible people. No one in my family is getting the H1N1– no one even gets regular flu shots anymore, we all read labels.

If you are a pregnant mother, please do not take the H1N1 swine flu vaccine. Instead, do everything that you can do to avoid public places and make sure to wash your hands more than you usually would. Take extra large doses of immunity building vitamins and research many of the great natural ways for fighting the flu that are out there on the Internet.

The truth is that if you do take the vaccine and then something happens, you will NOT be able to sue anyone (thanks to Congress). You will have to bear all the responsibility yourself. That doctor who kept pushing and pushing it on you will tell you that it could not have been the vaccine and that you probably would have miscarried anyway.

Do you honestly want to inject a vaccine that may contain mercury, formaldehyde, polysorbate 80 (associated with infertility), triton X100 (a strong detergent), phenoxyethanol (antifreeze) and a whole bunch of other toxic ingredients into your system when you know that your baby will absorb it too and has no defenses against most of these things?

In the very short video posted below, you will see one health expert explain to Sean Hannity that not even the swine flu vaccine package insert says that it is safe for pregnant women.....

[dohtml]<object width="640" height="390"><param name="movie" value="http://www.youtube.com/v/VQwaHxlHJuE&hl=en_US&feature=player_embedded&version=3"></param><param name="allowFullScreen" value="true"></param><param name="allowScriptAccess" value="always"></param><embed src="http://www.youtube.com/v/VQwaHxlHJuE&hl=en_US&feature=player_embedded&version=3" type="application/x-shockwave-flash" allowfullscreen="true" allowScriptAccess="always" width="640" height="390"></embed></object>[/dohtml]

The reality is that if you are pregnant, you need to hear what both sides have to say before ever subjecting your baby to the swine flu vaccine. You do NOT want to end up like one of the mothers above. Please help us out by sharing this information with as many people as you can. If you know of any additional H1N1 swine flu vaccine miscarriage horror stories please post them below in the comments section.

UPDATE: More Stories From Our Own Readers

AlinafromOz:

I had the normal Flu shot, and i had a misscarriage at 8wks… they told me it wasnt related pfftt yeah right and now no way in hell i would get a barely tested H1N1 vaccine..

Kayte:

My husband's pregnant coworker (5 months along) called her doctor on the day they were giving the regular flu shots at work. He said she should get it. She did, and lost her baby the next week. This enrages and sickens me that the medical industry is pushing these shots on pregnant women and children, especially the new, little-tested, experimental H1N1 vaccine!

Kevin:

I work with someone who was 4 months pregnant. Her husband got swine flu, so both she and her son got the vaccine "just to be safe." A week later, she had a miscarriage. Any supposed benefits from the vaccine are clearly outweighed by the tremendous risks.

JK:

I was in support of vaccines and was comfortable with the fact that there is a national database that records "all" vaccine reactions so they can see trends and such – which is the info I got from my doctor.

Then, my daughter had a reaction to a vaccine at 18 months old. It was horrifying to watch her body swell for three days and not be able to do anything (Benadryl slowed the swelling, but couldn't reverse it until three days had passed). I knew there were risks to vaccines, but it had seemed that the benefits outweighed the risks. I could have accepted that.

I was not prepared for the reaction of the medical community. My doctor's office refused to admit it was a reaction – even while she was swelling! They were concerned about the swelling, asked me if I knew how it started, then, when I mentioned that I suspected the vaccine they sent me home and said I was imagining things. A few hours later she had to go to the ER. Later I took her to an allergist who confirmed that it was a reaction. He told me that a lot of people react to the 3rd DTaP shot – even if they've been fine before. Still, he encouraged me to continue getting all the shots except for the last DTaP.

No one ever reported any of this to the national database.

My pediatrician pressured me to get more shots for my kids, but I refused. I've recently found out my kids' medical records falsely state that my kids DID get additional vaccines.

My daughter had been ahead on speech milestones at the time of the reaction, from that date (October) to the following July, she only learned 8 new words, and her language development froze. We've done three years of therapy now and she is in special ed.

Lynn:

My heart goes out to all who have suffered horrific events due to these vaccines. I have a beautiful 2 and 1/2 year old daughter who was born a month premature, at the time, all the health care practitioners involved in our lives strongly were pushing that she receive all the 'necessary' vaccines…. My mothers heart and gut reaction strongly said "no" but being a first time mom and feeling the pressures of our health care advisors I agreed to having her first set of shots done. Days later she developed a horrible 'chest cold' which never really cleared… she would have good days only to relapse into endless nights of trying to clear her little chest and holding her while she cried. Of corse….. none of this was vaccine related. Then came time for her second set of shots… oh boy…. the stomach aches began… but our health unit would not stop calling until I made an appointment to bring her in, so, I did…. only agreeing to a select few of the vaccinations, resulting in more congestion toped with ear infections and many bouts of anti biotics. Her condition quickly spiraled downward into 2am visits to the hospital for a Ventilator because her chest was so tight each breath was a huge effort. Each doctor who saw her assured me that this was more common than I thought and that she would likely 'grow out of it'. Needless to say I will never let another vaccination needle touch her little body again. Weather our health system wants to admit it was related or not I cant help but believe that it was. Other than being small she was 100% healthy at birth and remained that way for 3 months…. until her first set of shots.

For many more testimonies from average people who have had their lives absolutely wrecked by the H1N1 vaccine, check out our new article entitled "70 Heartbreaking Stories From People Who Have Had Their Lives Destroyed By H1N1 Swine Flu Vaccine Side Effects" and please help get it out to as many people as possible. The truth is that the more these stories are shared, the more people will wake up and do their own research before subjecting themselves and their children to these shots.

For the absolute latest on adverse H1N1 swine flu reactions, the rapidly developing mystery flu situation in Ukraine and all the other hottest breaking news, please visit and bookmark our new daily news site: The Most Important News.

If you have an H1N1 swine flu vaccine story that you would like to share, we would encourage you to visit our brand new site on this issue: Vaccine Side Effects.

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: Autism Ideas

Title: Autism Ideas

TheUnhivedMind - June 3, 2011 02:44 AM (GMT)

Autism Ideas - Part 1: The Brainy Ms Grandin

By Mary W Maxwell, PhD
6-2-11

When I was in college, my classmate Ginny told me that her 16-year-old brother had autism. One of the telltale signs, she said, was that in a restaurant he would give the waitress his order by reading out the menu item in full. "Eight ounces of juicy New York Sirloin, cooked to your liking, accompanied by fluffy potatoes and served with a fresh garden salad."

I'll bet I formed a subconscious prejudice as soon as Ginny told me that. Okay. I was young and stupid, thinking "How awful that a man-sized boy would say something so silly, so 'off.'" In retrospect I realize that I must have gone on for years harboring a mild dislike for anyone who was autistic. The only saving grace was that I saw a TV show perhaps three decades ago called "Joshua." It conveyed the plight of the parents of a boy with that name who screamed non-stop.

TEMPLE GRANDIN, AUTOBIOGRAPHER AND LECTURER

Not long ago I was introduced to the book "Animals in Translation" by Temple Grandin. Some book! It led me to buy her earlier book "Thinking in Pictures"(1995), and quite recently I found her first publication, "Emergence."(1986?) Suffice it to say that I now like and admire autistic people. Ms Grandin is quite the lady. Like myself, she was born in Boston in 1947 -- but has spent most of her adult life on cattle ranches.

Some people who are not autistic (definition to be provided below) may have one or more traits that feature in autism. Temple points out that some of her relatives have these. For instance her mother is skilled at visualization, her father had a way of fixating on a goal, a nephew is having trouble learning to read. Amazingly, her grandmother told Temple that she, in her own childhood, had found the sound of coal going down the chute to be 'torture' which is just the way some noises affect an autistic person.

In her three books, and on the lecture circuit (where she mainly helps "high-functioning autistics"), Temple has made it clear that the person inside the shell is just like us. At least that is how I take her message. I also take the message to be that I am like her. Any talent she has, such as for excellent memory, or the ability to empathize with animals, must be something that all of us are capable of. God did not invent a special kind of brain for a few oddballs.

TEMPLE GRANDIN, CHILD JOINING THE WORLD A BIT LATE

Apparently Temple was normal until age six months. The developmental disorder known as autism does not usually begin at birth. Age 18 months is a common time the baby is doing fine, walking and talking, and then starts to lose speech and seems to withdraw into a shell. Since Temple had not started to talk anyway, she did not lose speech. She lost the ability top accept a hug from her mother when she was 6 months old. Typically, the autistic child does not hug.

Temple, who made it back into the world in more or less miraculous fashion, reveals that the child in the shell often wants a hug, even craves it, but has to pull away because touch has become painful. Indeed she says, the tactile sense is the big sense. Tasting and smelling are very big too, whilst the other two senses that most of us consider the biggies sight and sound are tossed aside.

The name of the game is sensory overload. Loud noises are horrible, the fall of water on the skin in the shower may be painful (can you imagine such a thing!), and focusing on two things at once is more or less impossible. Temple credits her mother with seeing to it that she received all the help possible to overcome her handicaps.

She also credits luck. At one point during adolescence she took a ride on the Roro at an amusement park. It's the one where you stand against the inside of a huge barrel that whirls around and holds you by centrifugal force. This seems to have jogged Temple out of her state of chronic fear, perhaps by creating a new terror. (The floor of the barrel falls away during the ride!) She was grateful that the situation provided her no way to escape so she had to 'deal with it.'

MS GRANDIN, INVENTOR

Ms Grandin's maternal grandfather is the man who invented autopilot for airplanes. So it is not too surprising that she became an inventor. Her first production of a machine was one that she desperately needed for her own use. She already had the idea of it before she encountered a cattle chute on her aunt's ranch, but that clinched the deal. She had noticed that body pressure, if delivered uniformly, was comforting and calming. So she created a 'squeeze machine' that she could climb into, and take naps in.

During college, Temple switched her major from psychology to animal science and has made a living as an advisor to livestock owners. Her main contribution (a national and worldwide contribution) has been the invention of devices that eliminate some of the cruelty to animals that goes on in slaughterhouses. More than anyone I know, this lady thinks about, and does something about, improving the quality of life of farm animals.

MS GRANDIN, INTELLECTUAL AND RESEARCHER IN NEUROSCIENCE

Don't be fooled by the casual way in which Temple Grandin, in her three books, spits out facts about the human brain. She has done exhaustive research and knows the score as well as any professor. The following is a quote from her book "Emergence" (pp. 20-24):

"I had a fixation on spinning objects, a preference to be alone, destructive behavior, and my intense interest in odors. I started to speak at 3 and a half. Before that I could understand what was being said. Screaming and flapping hands was my only way to communicate. Spinning was another favorite. I'd sit on the floor and twirl around. This self-stimulatory behavior made me feel powerful, in control.

"Mechanism in the inner ear controls balance and integrates visual and vestibular input. Through a series of nerve connections the eyes, after some amount of spinning, will start jumping about, and the stomach gets queasy. Autistic kids demand more spinning as a kind of corrective factor in their immature nervous system. When I was preoccupied with a spinning coin, I saw nothing and heard nothing. It was as if I were deaf.

"Autistic kids are over-responsive to some stimuli and under-sensitive to other stimuli. Could this be due to an inability to integrate incoming sensory input and choose which stimulus to attend to?" The answer is yes and it is an important answer. It has led Temple Grandin to advise families to call on the services of sensory integration specialists who can help the child make some progress.

INTRODUCING MY SERIES OF "AUTISM IDEAS" ARTICLES

I am writing this series of articles on Autism Ideas in conjunction with a larger theme I have been working on, and which is described in my book "Prosecution for Treason" (free, online, to all comers!). Its subtitle is "Weather War, Epidemics, and Mind Control." The key word here is "Epidemics." I consider it settled that the AIDS epidemic is a well-planned genocide. Could autism, too, be something that was deliberately leashed on the population?

Reading the online magazine "Age of Autism" has also stimulated my interest. I am duly furious about what has been going on, with doctors and government making families of autistics look like baddies. The parents' 'bad behavior' has consisted both of looking for new treatments now more correctly called 'interventions' for their children, such as vitamins and art therapy, and for taking a position (rightly or wrongly) against vaccinations. Some of them have become activists -- God forbid.

Here is an example of the crazy put-downs by doctors that demoralize citizens here in Australia (and demoralize many doctors too).This is from the Channel 7show 'Sunrise':

Channel 7:Well, heated debate continues over plans to vaccinate a million Australians against Meningococcal disease. Some groups say it could even cost more lives than it saves.. Here with us from Lismore is Meryl Dorey from the [activist] Australian Vaccination Network. And from Adelaide we're joined by Doctor Trevor Mudge from the Australian Medical Association.

Meryl, just to start with you, why are you against the (meningococcal) vaccination process? DOREY: Well, I believe that this vaccination has not been investigated thoroughly by the government. If you look at the information from the manufacturer, it says specifically that this vaccination has never been tested for effectiveness. And when we look at what's happened overseas with this vaccination, we see that when they used it in the United Kingdom they had over 16,000 serious adverse reactions.

Channel 7: Trevor, some frightening statistics that Meryl's just given us there. 16,000 adverse reactions. What's your comment? MUDGE: Well, I haven't seen that data, but the history of the anti-vaccination movement is that the science doesn't hold up. Their claims really have never had any scientific veracity, and I doubt very much if this one has either.

Channel 7: So do you not see the vaccination as any more dangerous than any other? MUDGE: There's absolutely no reason in theory, or indeed in the wide experience in the UK, to suggest that it does anything other than save lives.

DOREY: Well, I find that absolutely shocking, I've got to say. Because all of the statements that my [Meryl Dorey's] organization issues are backed by references. And almost always from medical journals. And I have the papers on 16,000 serious adverse reactions and I have faxed that around to quite a few news media. We simply rely on overseas testing and many times that testing is funded lock, stock and barrel by the very same companies that actually release the vaccines to market.

Channel 7: Trevor, are you saying that Meryl's claim could be responsible for more damage than the vaccines could? [Note: I take that to be a planted question.] MUDGE: Oh, absolutely. Look, I think if you look worldwide the anti-vaccine movement has been responsible for a number of deaths and I think that they really should not be given any scientific veracity at all.

In my opinion, Mudge was probably programmed to answer the way he did. I tend to judge who is programmed according to the (small) amount of embarrassment they show when delivering foolish talk. Many evince no embarrassment at all. Now consider the fact that the Australian Medical Association is so proud of Dr Mudge's performance that it has published the entire Channel 7 interview. (It's at ama.com.au/node/583.) Would you say we are in trouble?

The mission I'm on (yes, mission) is to not let those things pass uncriticized. My general approach is "It doesn't have to be like this." I hope you agree!

Please stay tuned for further episodes in my little series of articles about autism. The next one, entitled, "Offit, Come Off It," reviews a book by pediatrician Paul Offit, who seems to think the within-science censorship of anti-vaccine research is quite acceptable. Fancy that. The article after that one will be about "Finding the Causes of Autism."

^^^^^^^^^^^^^^^^^^^^^^^^^^^^^^^^^^^^

Mary W Maxwell, PhD, is the editor of "The Sociobiological Imagination." She can be found at credosbooks.com. As for Ms Grandin, she is the subject of a new Home Box Office movie. If you don't have access to that, you can see her 'author's video;' at Amazon.com.

TheUnhivedMind - June 3, 2011 02:44 AM (GMT)

Autism Ideas - Part 2: Offit, Come Off It

By Mary W Maxwell, PhD
6-2-11

Even-handedness has its place, but for me, today, it's not going to be a priority. I have read from cover to cover Dr Paul Offit's book, "Autism's False Prophets" and Andrew Wakefield's "Callous Disregard." While Offit does reveal, in his book, one astonishing misdeed committed by Wakefield, the Wakefield book wins hands down. In fact it is an eye-opening and very touching report on what many autism parents have gone through, being constantly dismissed and being given the run-around.

The Offit book contains loads of helpful data. Nevertheless, I feel sure it was written by public relations professionals, as it is so slanted. What doctor would write in a smug tone of voice about this extremely serious issue? The 'false prophets' referred to in Offit's title are the quacks who try to sell a cure for autism. If you were a pediatrician writing about that, wouldn't you stake some territory for non-quacks? I mean, given the huge numbers of new autism cases, shouldn't Offit (who recently was head of the American Pediatrics Association) scream out "Hey, let's get some action going here!"?

As for "Callous Disregard," it was written by Wakefield who was struck off the register by Britain's General Medical Council in 2010 -- one of his alleged sins being that he showed 'callous disregard' for patients. He now works at Thoughtful House in Austin, Texas, with his physician wife, Carmel. (It's a wonder they didn't revoke her license too, on grounds of association with the sinner!) This all has to do with a long-running investigation of an article he wrote for Britain's leading medical journal, The Lancet.

Wakefield states and I believe him that the article, dated 28 February 1998, was not intended as a research paper. It was a 'series-of-cases' report, regarding 12 patients. That is a legitimate and well-established method by which doctors make available to other doctors their observations of something new or interesting. It doesn't require the paraphernalia that a research article does -- such as a control group and permission from an Ethics Board. The cases speak for themselves, as it were. Take 'em or leave 'em.

The Lancet has said that it publishes only 5% of the thousands of submissions it receives.
We can assume that while an article is undergoing peer review, it will be tossed into the bin if it fails to include such standard formalities as a brief summary of the literature, and an explanation as to why the author makes the deductions that she makes. Andrew Wakefield and his two co-authors, Simon Murch and John Walker-Smith (all pediatric gastroenterologists) handled those formalities properly.

Let me paraphrase their message: "We have twelve children presenting with symptoms of bowel disease who also are autistic. This is very interesting and makes us wonder if the bowel disease somehow travelled to the brain and caused the autism. This could be a biggie!" Naturally these physicians-researchers were eager to get into print with their scoop. Nevertheless, they state their findings in The Lancet in a very restrained way, as follows:

"If there is a causal link between measles, mumps, and rubella vaccine and this [bowel] syndrome, a rising incidence might be anticipated after the introduction of this vaccine in the UK in 1988. Published evidence is inadequate to show whether there is a change in incidence or a link with measles, mumps, and rubella vaccine. A genetic predisposition to autistic-spectrum disorders is suggested by over-representation in boys and a greater concordance rate in monozygotic than in dizygotic twins. Urinary methylmalonic-acid concentrations were raised in most of the children, a finding indicative of a functional vitamin B12 deficiency. B12 deficiency may, therefore, be a contributory factor in the developmental regression." Well, I'll be a monkey's aunt! Vitamin deficiency is one of the possible culprits in autism.

The concluding paragraph states: "We have identified a chronic enterocolitis in children that may be related to neuropsychiatric dysfunction. In most cases, onset of symptoms was after measles, mumps, and rubella immunisation. Further investigations are needed to examine this syndrome and its possible relation to this vaccine."

Nowhere do you see "MMR jab (measles/mumps/rubella jab) causes autism," right? But on page 186 of his "False Prophets" book, Paul Offit says, "After Andrew Wakefield published his paper in the Lancet claiming that MMR caused autism" Wait. Did I read it wrong? Am I having trouble understanding English? What are we to think of all this?

It needs to be said that Wakefield has affirmatively told everyone that children should continue to get the measles shot -- just not in combo with mumps and rubella vaccine. He reports, in his "Callous" book, that six months after he gave that advice, the British government made the single shot unavailable! (Pause. Read that last statement again.)

One of Offit's criticisms of The Lancet article is that it deceives readers -- I agree -- by its implication that the 12 patients merely popped up in the population, when in fact some of them were recruited via the activist grapevine. The authors could have simply said "We heard that mothers all over England were complaining about their babies getting autism a few days after a vaccination, and we sought the chance to investigate them medically."

In any case, it doesn't matter where Wakefield et al got the children. Their Lancet conclusion didn't claim that the percent of vaccine-complainers among this small set (eight of the twelve) should be extrapolated to the whole population. The general value of the article has to do with reporting a new syndrome, the presence in autistic children of bowel disease; it's not about the role of any vaccine in bringing about that syndrome. Until now no one caringly asked, "Why do autistic children have bright yellow diarrhea?"

I should also mention that, since 1996, Wakefield had been acting as scientific consultant for a lawyer, Richard Barr. This lawyer had received a $20 million grant from the Legal Aid Board of the UK to deal with potential litigation about the MMR vaccine. Conflict of interest? Well, we typically do not like to see a scholar poring over a problem when the outcome in one direction rather than another could benefit that scholar, do we? In academic medicine these situations are now commonplace but it sure does spoil the atmosphere.

I suspect Wakefield's main indiscretion lay in his not informing his co-authors that he was working for Barr. This has apparently miffed them no end. Not because they considered that connection unethical -- it is not unethical for doctors to be expert witnesses in lawsuits -- but because it gave scope later for the opposing camp to have a field day. (You can see the full field day, if you like that sort of thing, at briandeer.com.)

Offit's book points out that the very day the Lancet article was published, Wakefield called a press conference to announce the findings, which 'led to' scare headlines in the March 1, 1998 Guardian and Daily Mail. Hmm. (That's a loud 'Hmm.') Why would media create hype against drug companies? They never do that. And later, one of the autism moms, Jenny McCarthy, got to tell her anti-vaccine story on the Oprah program and on CNN's Larry King Live. Sorry, but that tells me something peculiar is going on.

Back around 1995 I attended a political science meeting in Canada. The men were discussing the fact that the New York Times had carried a human-interest story, for the first time, about a Cuban family being reunited with relatives in the United States. Since no one could figure out how it got published, I said, "Maybe a reporter simply learned of it and decided to write it up." My Canadian colleagues looked at me like I was the jerk of the century. They said, "Nothing ever happens by chance at the New York Times. Every editorial decision is controlled at the top."

Here's my take: the whole government and media hype about a doctor causing a vaccine scare is itself a well-planned project with two intended goals. One is to get everybody worried about health issues, and to start distrusting their doctors. The other is to let every doctor and every scientist know that Normal Science has ended. If they wish to keep their jobs, they must now denounce any scientist who is identified as a dissident.

So what was the dissidence here? I reckon it may be the discovery that there is a way into the brain through the gut. "You are not supposed to have figured that out, guys. It's classified." I will have more to say on that later in this little series of Autism Ideas. (Remember, I'm a dab hand at conspiracy theory!) But for now I can only be certain that the way this whole thing is being conducted indicates a concerted effort to stir people up and create enmities. The well-worn routine of divide-and-rule.

That said, I discovered in Offit's book an accusation about Andrew Wakefield that I had not previously heard and which, if true, is really sad news. Offit says that a pathology company in Ireland told Wakefield that the results were not positive regarding specimens he had sent to them, yet he went ahead and published that they were. Yu-uck. Sorry, I won't be able to resolve the details of that, but it does need to be aired.

To the older member of the team, Walker-Smith, I proffer my consolation for what he says was the devastating experience of having his medical license revoked. I have read his memoirs (on the Internet) which suggest that he fell in love with the small intestine when he was 26. He wrote: "I applied to work for Professor Chris Booth, who was an inspirational teacher of gastroenterology, and I was lucky enough to be appointed. This changed my life. I realized that gastroenterology, and the small intestine in particular, was my life's vocation."

You can't beat that. Born, 1936; graduated Sydney Church of England Grammar School, 1953; fell in love with small intestine, 1962. Men of that type don't cheat on research. I know because I lived with 'that type' in a blissful marriage for 20 years. (Not that my George gave a hoot about intestines, but he was in love with Medicine generally and pediatrics in particular.) Is it unscientific of me to generalize about such men? Pardon me, but 'science' is what is done in the lab. In real life we make judgments about people all the time by applying past experience and common sense. Based on gut feeling, no pun intended, I support Walker-Smith.

One more item: Professor Offit provides what looks to me to be a good refutation of the theory that it was the mercury in the vaccines preservative (known as thimerosal) that caused damage to babies. He repeatedly says that there were careful studies done and the result was a finding that babies whose vaccines had thimerosal were less likely to become autistic than the ones without thimerosal. Holy Moley! Does that mean we should run out and buy thimerosal? And if it's so salubrious shouldn't researchers be made to investigate it further "for public health"?

Or is somebody totally and utterly having a joke on us?

^^^

TheUnhivedMind - June 7, 2011 01:31 AM (GMT)

Autism Ideas - Part 3 -
Kissinger's Brice's Mind Files
By Mary W Maxwell, PhD
6-5-11
The species Homo sapiens has a fantastic capacity to memorize information. Of course every mammal can remember some things, and so can invertebrates, but I'm talking major. I'm talking about being able to record every detail of what one is exposed to, day after day.

A man named Kim Peek, who passed away two years ago, had committed 12,000 books to memory. His brain knew what was on each page of those books! (His life story was presented in the movie "The Rain Man.")

A century earlier, Russian psychiatrist A R Luria recorded the case of a 'mnemonist,' named 'S,' who couldn't seem to shed even his short term memories, something we normals or to use the current buzzword, we neurotypicals -- do after the passage of less than five minutes.

I am here to say something about autism, this article being third in my Autism Ideas series, but I have a hidden agenda as well. I am here to clobber Henry Kissinger, and the many, many doctors who have for decades participated in an evil program of mind control. So there! the agenda is no longer hidden! Mine is a polemical position, and a cri de coeur. Or as we say in the land of freedom fries, C'est un cri de coeur bigtime."

ONE AUTISTIC INDIVIDUAL'S WAY OF THINKING IN PICTURES

Dr. Temple Grandin proudly wrote the book "Thinking in Pictures" (2006 free online) to describe how her mind developed. Probably owing to her autism, Temple has a way of storing all her information, all her knowledge, visually. Most of us store it symbolically.

(As far as I know, my knowledge is stored in words, and words are but symbols.) Temple Grandin says, "When I was a child and a teenager, I thought everybody thought in pictures. I had no idea that my thought processes were different."

Grandin compares herself to the aforementioned guy named 'S.' She says: "My own thought patterns are similar to those described by A. R. Luria in "The Mind of a Mnemonist" [about] a man who worked as a newspaper reporter and could perform amazing feats of memory. Like me [Temple], the mnemonist had a visual image for everything he had heard or read."

Grandin also recognizes an affinity with "rain man" -- who, by the way, was not autistic although the movie producers decided it would be helpful to the audience to portray him that way. She says, "When I read, I translate written words into color movies or I simply store a photo of the written page to be read later. WHEN I RETRIEVE THE MATERIAL, I SEE A PHOTOCOPY OF THE PAGE IN MY IMAGINATION" (emphasis added)

She thinks it likely that the rain man "used a similar strategy to memorize telephone books, maps, and other information. He simply photocopied each page of the phone book into his memory. When he wanted to find a certain number, he just scanned pages of the phone book that were in his mind. To pull information out of my memory, I have to replay the video."

Grandin is ever grateful for her skill at visualizing, as it helped her to become an inventor of farm machinery. She can rotate images in her mind and perform many a neat trick. This was also a talent of Nikola Tesla (and on that note, may God help us all).

All was not advantageous, however, for rain man Kim Peek, who hardly coped with daily life. As for the Russian known only as 'S,' Jerome Bruner deduces, from Luria's book, that 'S' was so unselective "that what remains behind is a kind of junk heap of impressions." The patient "suffered from a failure to organize or 'regularize' what was remembered into schemata."

Amazingly, it is possible to deliberately doctor someone's brain, early in life, so that they end up with an eidetic memory (one that can photograph pages of books), as will be argued below.

CLOBBERING HANK

Let's get straight to the clobbering. Oh dear. No sooner have I said that than I feel guilty. I actually do not want to clobber Henry Kissinger at this late date, but I wish we had threatened him with vile punishment in order to deter him from the unbelievable crimes he has committed. He did his worst in Asia, Africa and Latin America, in other words the developing world (developing? what exactly is being developed, one wonders).

But he did not forget the nation that gave him the honor to serve, first as National Security Advisor -- "Just call me Excellency"-- and then as Secretary of State -- "How divine I am!"

He started to work for the US Army in the 1940s and was groomed at Harvard for greater things. (Actually there's reason to query whether one can get greater than Harvard in those things, but we won't go into that today. If you're not aware of ol' Veritas's role in mind control you could be in for a shock.)

By the 1968 election Henry was ready to be Cabinetized, in either a Democrat or Republican administration! That, plus moonlighting in the KGB. The phrase 'one-stop shopping' comes to mind, doesn't it? It does if you be as skeptical of the "Cold War" as I.

WHO IS MS BRICE TAYLOR?

You get born in California in 1951 and you think you are going to have a nice life. Oh, but you don't realize that there are two America's. One is normal and the other is about as perverted as the human imagination can conjure. Thanks to wholesale importing of fascist psychiatrists from Europe after World War II, there were major 'studies' going on in the US.

Well, they were called 'studies' -- as in "We'll need new psychological weapons should we ever have the misfortune to be dragged into another war." (The army is STILL saying that.) But there was also sadism for its own sake.

'Brice Taylor' is the pseudonym for Sue Ford, born into a family of the kind called 'multi-generational.' Not that every family doesn't have multi-generationality, but in the jargon of mind control it means that the child's parents and grandparents were themselves twisted from infancy.

The story is that they were in religious cults and had to commit ritual atrocities. More likely the cabal (a.k.a., the Illuminati), that has run the world since about 1770, made sure to invent cults for the very purpose of producing a 'crop' of people who'd then be available as torturers.

Am I sure of what I am talking about? Yes. Excellent research has been published, and on the Internet you can look for "Svali," who tells pretty thoroughly a day in the life of a cult. Svali also shows how well penetrated is every occupational group, all answering ultimately to the Illuminati. Note: I'd prefer a different name for them, but they do call themselves 'Illuminati,' the enlightened (!). Sure, they are pathetic but it is a colossal mistake for us to ignore them.

One reason I'm so confident about mind control is that doctors absolutely refuse to breathe a word about this subject. There are declassified CIA documents galore, on the 'Net, so it would be easy for doctors to verify this but instead they are silent. Like they have been brainwashed.

Sue Ford, whom I will refer to as Brice, since that is the name under which she wrote her 1999 book "Thanks for the Memories," was a slave owned by Bob Hope that's Bob Hope the comedian. (His theme song, you may recall, was "Thanks for the Memories.") He was 'in' with Kissinger. Or they were both in the mafia, or whatever. Brice Taylor was happily married to a dentistry student Craig Ford, at University of Southern California, and was herself a student at Pepperdine.

The fact that her husband did not object to her being regularly kidnapped from the home and consigned to prostitution indicates that he, too, was probably 'under control.'

Eventually, she claims, their son was also turned into a slave for Henry. (That boy needs Society's protection TODAY. It is completely up to us to put a stop to the flourishing slave trade in the US.)

Every member of the Secret Service is indubitably aware of what happened to Brice. She had access to residence at 1600 Pennsylvania Av for three decades and was tasked with delivering messages, from the cabal, to various US leaders and others such as California's governors Ronald Reagan and Pete Wilson.

KISSINGER HAS NARY A SCRUPLE ABOUT TAKING OVER BRICE'S BRAIN

In her book, Brice says: "Henry spent time at UCLA Neuropsychiatric Institute in Westwood, California, in the area where they tested me and worked on my brain with all of their high tech equipment; bright lights, goggles, drugs, electroshock, CAT scan tubes, etc. Henry told me to hop up on the table. The doctor examined my reflexes and looked into my eyes with different lights and gave me tastes and smells and all sorts of things that they said would powerfully affect my brain." (How interesting.)

"Another time doctors in white coats played perceptual mind games with me at a NASA installation. They put huge eye machines up to my face and had me close one eye and then the other in order to program each side of the brain separately. Some things were then reversed and programmed into another area of my brain through the opposite eye. They called this "cross-programming." Information for mind file use was stored only on one side of my brain. Then, they allowed me to rest a moment before they injected me with some drug "

I pause here to apologize to any reader who has hitherto been aware of these macabre dealings that take place right in our 'university hospitals.' But now you'll attempt to stop it, won't you?

A word about Luria's patient, the mnemonist known as 'S'. I suspect 'S' may have been fiddled with. It's true that Kim Peek and Temple Grandin acquired their memorizing ability without being fiddled with. It does occur in Nature (indeed the Peek/Grandin skill is possessed by every one of us, just not in such abundance). But Luria was working in the heady, pioneering days of psychology. And it is now believed that, in Illuminati-land, many scientific achievements were made on the QT, and were given a public debut decades later. (See Greg Hallett on that.) Without doubt Brice had an eidetic memory created for her by Kissinger.

THE MIND FILE SYSTEM AND THE PENTAGON

Henry, wearing a disguise, took 8-year old Brice to Disneyland. "Once I got off the ride Henry said something hypnotic to me to lock in the program. Henry put me on ride after ride, and after I got off the rides, dizzy, nauseated, lightheaded, disoriented, frightened, or whatever, he told me to 'listen intently,' while he programmed all sorts of things into my mind file system." (All these quotes are from "Thanks for the Memories")

"Henry also programmed me in front of a carousel ride. and the files in my mind were to glide smoothly and as easily as the carousel turning. Then it would come to a stop, like the wheel of fortune, at the mind file that Henry would ask for."

Much of the story takes place well before Kissinger was a member of government. If he wanted to fetch data from federal buildings, for his bosses in the Illuminati (i.e., World Government), he had to steal it. He would often take the child with him at night with his heavy bunch of keys and simply break in. At the Pentagon he had to grease somebody's palm this could be done with cash or by volunteering Brice's sexual services (age being no bar in Washington D.C.). He had, in advance burned into her brain a map of the Pentagon's filing cabinets 12 rows of 12 cabinets.

"Like a rat in a maze, I knew my way exactly to the desired destination and I used a small flashlight that Henry had given me for this purpose. The file area had cameras that filmed the area, like in banks. Those had to somehow be shut down. Henry told me to pull the file, photographically memorize its entire contents within a prearranged mind-file." Brice had only minutes to do this mental photographing and get back to where the guard was waiting. "There were certain Pentagon officials who were more cooperative than others."

"Henry was well greased into the inner network of the FBI and CIA. The director was always 'one of theirs' [that'd be Mueller and Panetta today], but Henry had a lot of important information to give these agencies in order for things to groove, like well-oiled cogs. Henry had a lot of business with the CIA and the FBI and it was all a big secret. Sometimes it was [coded with] a long string of numbers, or a word like "Ajax" or "coma," or "barley him "or "make him into a ham on rye," or "tonight, 3 a.m. Federal Building job."

After Brice had been with Kissinger for years, she says that he remarked "Like in a good marriage, after a while there is unconscious communication going all the time." She says: "He meant that it was like knowing each other so well that you know each other's thoughts, and that's how he trained me to be attuned to him." (Excuse me, is this taxpayer-funded?)

"Thanks for the Memories" is not super-affordable for purchase but it is downloadable. I think there's too much White House sex in it making people afraid to quote it. To conclude this article, I offer the following paragraph, which claims there is a mandatory downtime between the use of the mind-files and sexcapades. (Elsewhere in the book she specifies that it is a two-hour wait.) I shall redact the president's name -- not that it matters, they're all horribly guilty.

"I was used with President Redact hundreds of times if not more, ever since I was a teenager. He knew that I had to have time in between when he used my mind files for demonstration or information and sex. So having a leisurely lunch provided the time necessary."

^^^^^^^^^^^^^^^^^^^^^^^^^^^^^^^^^^^^

Mary W Maxwell, PhD, is the author of "Prosecution for Treason," on sale at Barnes and Noble. She isn't quite sure why she hasn't been run over by a bus. Still, she has not and so is slogging away with this series of 'Autism Ideas.' Maxwell recommends, in her book, that criminal charges be brought against any doctor who has committed menticide (the killing of a mind). That should go without saying, shouldn't it?

TheUnhivedMind - June 7, 2011 01:31 AM (GMT)

Autism Ideas - Part 4 - The Vaccine Court As Such

By Mary W Maxwell, PhD
6-5-11

Upfront disclosure: I am a maniac for the separation of powers. At the founding of our nation, some limited powers were given by the 13 states to the Federal government. They are very clearly listed in the Constitution (e.g., the coining of money, the making of treaties, the raising of an army). "Guarding the public's health" does not happen to be one of the federal powers. It's not listed in the Constitution of 1787, nor has it ever been added thereto by amendment. No amount of legislation by Congress can alter that plain fact.

So, please take my chat below about the National Childhood Vaccine Injury Act of 1986, or my apparent going along with other crazy federal nonsense, to be just that a 'going along with nonsense.' Having made my statement about the unconstitutionality of federal involvement in health, I shall not further argue it, turning instead to an exposition of the Vaccine Court. (Actually, to be honest, the separation of powers problem might slip back into the conversation, but the intent here is to describe the 'law' as it stands. -- See? There I go with the innuendos!)

THE JUDICIARY ACT OF 1789

Because the Constitution assigned Congress the task, or at least gave Congress the power, to "establish tribunals inferior to the Supreme Court," a law was passed by the very first Congress -- The Judiciary Act. It announced that federal district courts would come into existence. The subject matter brought to those courts, whether civil or criminal had, of course, to be of a federal nature. (Nope, you can't trip me up; I'm not going to 'go there.')

This proper legislative enactment, The Judiciary Act of 1789, contains, in its original wording, some interesting points, such as the requirement for clerks of court to take an oath "that I will truly and faithfully enter and record all the orders, decrees, judgments and proceedings of the said court," and furthermore get a load of this: "the said clerks shall also severally give bond, with sufficient suretiesto the United States, in the sum of two thousand dollars, faithfully to discharge the duties of his office." Brilliant, no? (and two thousand then would be like a krillion now).

The Act also limited the jurisdiction of the district court to lesser crimes, such as those for which "no other punishment than whipping, not exceeding thirty stripes is to be inflicted."

Interruption -- Islamic Law alert! Your humble writer had recalled the basic phrase "not exceeding thirty stripes," but needed to get the exact quote from the Judiciary Act, so I put "not exceeding 30 stripes" into the search engine, and lo and behold, up came the 1979 text of Pakistan's Zina law which says: "Whoever attempts to commit an offence punishable under this Ordinance, shall be punished with whipping not exceeding thirty stripes." (Well, we all came from the same seed, didn't we?)

Over the next two centuries, Congress set up some additional courts. For instance, today we have an immigration court and a bankruptcy court. (Don't get me started on that latter one, but do listen to Sherman Skolnick's yellings on the subject.) In 1986 we got the National Childhood Vaccine Injury Compensation Court. It comes under the supervision of the United States Court of Federal Claims.

SUING FOR DAMAGES DUE TO NEGLIGENCE

Normally a government does not allow itself to be sued by anyone, although it may 'grant leave' for this to happen in a particular case. That is, it may waive its sovereign immunity. As of 1948, Congress decided to allow anyone to sue the United States in civil actions for torts, if federal employees have been negligent (you slip on a banana peel sort of thing). As published in the Code, at 28 USC 1346, you can sue "under circumstances where the United States, if a private person, would be liable to the claimant in accordance with the law of the place where the act or omission occurred."

Yet in the vaccine saga, the person who does the neglecting is not the government; it is the manufacturers of the vaccine, perhaps, or the doctor or nurse who went a jab too far. The only way the feds got to create this court was on the justification that the vaccine recipient, that is, the jabee, was doing a public good. (Not to be immunized is to run up the chances of getting a disease and spreading it to others?) So those persons who suffered can ask for compensation in these special courts.

Qualifications for an award are as follows:

The claimant (technically called "the petitioner") must be a child, not an adult.
The injury must have occurred shortly after the jab (but up to 30 days if paralytic polio).
The claim must be filed within 36 months of injury.
The court must rule on the case within 8 months.

Unusual aspects of the litigation are as follows:
'Discovery' is not available (you can't subpoena your opponent's records).
Instead of judges, there are 'special masters,' appointed for four-year renewable terms.
Attorneys can be paid even if the case does not win. (A lose-win situation for law firms!)
The injured party can opt to reject an award (presumably hoping for more $$); if he does, he's then allowed to sue manufacturers in regular state court (state? did someone say 'state? Yay!)

Payments are as follows:
The average award as of 2010 was $822,000, the top award being $4.9 million.
The 'pain and suffering' component of the calculation is capped at $250,000.
All death cases are paid exactly $250,000. (This figure is the same as it was in 1986.)

Congress ordered that the claims be handled "quickly, easily, and with certainty and generosity." The 'ease' comes from the fact that no individual has to prove her case, provided she meets the factors listed on the "Vaccine Table." Thus, many cases are for a foregone conclusion. For example, if the injury sustained after a vaccination is encephalopathy, chronic arthritis, paralytic polio, etc. (but not autism), the case will be paid. If the child's injury is not shown on the Table, she may yet prove vaccine causality 'on the balance of probabilities.'

ENTER, THE AUTISM OMNIBUS TRIAL

A great increase in the number of new autism diagnoses in the US began around 1990. (At present it is more that 1 per 100 births.) Many parents told their doctors that trouble started soon after the MMR immunization (a combined injection of vaccines against measles, mumps and rubella rubella is also called German measles). The immediate reaction included such things as fever, listlessness, crying, and diarrhea; a further reaction included standard symptoms of autism, such as loss of acquired speech, social withdrawal, and self-harm.

Since autism did not appear on the Vaccine Table, there was no guarantee of payment. Persons wishing to pursue a claim had to prove the causal link between the vaccination and the illness. By 2008, nearly 5000 families were saying that the MMR vaccine had caused their child to have a developmental disorder along the "Autism Spectrum." The court decided that it would combine all autism claims into one, calling it the Omnibus Autism Proceedings.

Remember these masters of the court are not physicians or chemists, and yet their task now, since the Table could not be employed, was to make a determination as to causality. They divided the Omnibus claims into two groups. One group claimed that thimerosal, a preservative used to give vaccines shelf life (i.e., to kill bacteria), was the culprit. Another group claimed that it was specifically the mercury, within the thimerosal, that was doing the damage.

The result of all this, except for the Hannah Poling case and some others that got quietly paid, was that the Omnibus claims were defeated en masse. Three judges heard the first group by using "test cases." The selected children in the first group were: Michelle Cedillo, Colten Snyder, and Yates Hazlehurst. This test case lost, no 'causality' having been found. The court had the gall to rebuke doctors for having misled the parents!

Two of those first three appealed to the Circuit Court and lost. The second group had William Mead, Jordan King, and Colin Dwyer as its representative children. That case lost and they did not appeal. One thing that seems likely is that the attorneys would not have quite the same get up and go that they'd have if their remuneration depended on a win for the claimants! Another thing is that the parents probably threw in the towel when they heard that the main expert witness physician (opposing them) was not subjected to cross-examination.

DHHS's 'CONCESSION' ABOUT MISS HANNAH POLING

That said, it came to light that an autistic child named Hannah Poling had received a $1.5 million payment. (Her case is No. 02-1166v, 2002 WL 1883059. Fed Cl April 10, 2008). The explanation the government has provided is that her case, which was slated to be one in that first group of test cases, had received a 'concession,' meaning that it was conceded that the vaccine was the cause of her injury. The conceding entity was the US Department of Health and Human Services.

(Note: I have lived abroad for a along time and did not realize that our Department of Health whose unconstitutionality I have 'committed' not to mention -- and which verb I would never use intransitively -- has added a phrase "and Human Services." What the Sam Hill are human services? And why do we need the word 'human' there? Would anyone think the 'Department of Health and Services' was referring to goat services?)

Now then, if you know the judicial routine (that which whistleblower Eustace Mullins aptly called "The Rape of Justice"), you will be able to discern the meaning of the Poling concession. First let's describe it. This lovely child, they said, had a pre-existing condition something to do with mitochondria (but I believe anything would have sufficed). The Department of HHS let's not spell it out, it irritates me, just call it DHHS said that, yes, it was the thimerosal and what it did was aggravate Hannah's condition.

Hence the case does not 'open the floodgates' not many children have that pre-existing condition. Let's look at the government report (may we please just call it 'government report'? even the acronym could make me go postal at the moment):

"The facts of this case meet the statutory criteria for demonstrating that the vaccinations the child received on July 19, 2000, significantly aggravated an underlying mitochondrial disorder, which predisposed her to deficits in cellular energy metabolism, and manifested as a regressive encephalopathy with features of autism spectrum disorder."

If I am correct, the wierdo's who like to get citizens riled up went out of their way to say that although Hannah received 9 antigens that day, it was the 3 in the MMR component that harmed her. They also stated that she does have autism, not just the qualifying encephalopathy. Yet the website of the Vaccine Injury Compensation Program continues to say: "HHS has never concluded in any case that autism was caused by vaccination."(See Mary Holland,"Unanswered Questions" at digitalcommons.pace.edu.)

OPINION

Having thus far held my tongue, I now say that I am sure the entire affair is a psy-op. Caveat: I do tend to say that about a lot of things, and at times I say it recklessly -- though this is not one of those times. A psy-op, that is, a 'psychological operation' is usually designed to make everyone feel impotent and agitated. In this case it was probably meant, additionally, to waste the parents' time if you can in your wildest dreams imagine anyone being so mean as to do that to the nation's most time-pressed families.

Here are three more complaints (from our customer service department, or our goat services, or whatever). First, there should never have been a vaccine court. Shielding the pharmaceutical industry from liability is plainly daft, not to say disgusting. One of the excuses given was that if we didn't protect their bottom line one wants to say 'or their bottoms,' but don't worry, one won't they would stop making vaccines and we would be left with a dangerous situation.

Second, even if a tribunal were needed, to cover a particular problem, why abandon the principle of transparency? Just as I was sending my book to press, "Prosecution for Treason: Weather War, Epidemics, and Mind Control," I got nervous about the fact that, on page 40, I had retailed Dr Andrew Wakefield's remark that there are 'secret' vaccine courts in the US. Naturally I should not report things second-hand like that. I should have checked. But I was down to the wire, so I let it go. Turns out he was right; the vaccine court is secretive indeed.

Third, no amount of payment will 'compensate' the child. What an awful word! But then, as I have hinted elsewhere, I strongly suspect autism is intentional, part of a big war against the people. (I am certain that the military deliberately harms our soldiers, including via injections.)

So the goings-on in the Claims Court are not what we should be concentrating on. As far as identifying the baddies, however, some people associated with the courts, and also with the goats, need to be interrogated. Pronto.

^^

Mary W Maxwell, PhD, can be contacted at credosbooks.com, which is a blog page run by her wonderful publisher Trineday.

TheUnhivedMind - June 13, 2011 03:30 AM (GMT)

Autism Ideas - Part 5: Spinning

And Sensory Integration
By Mary W Maxwell, PhD
6-8-11

Perhaps I sounded crude when, in Part 3, I compared one of the 'symptoms' of autism the ability to memorize a printed page 'photographically' -- with the cruel practices of mind control. I should have said, and I do now say, that there is NO CONNECTION.

Rather, the two phenomena have something in common. Some autistic persons (e.g., Dr Temple Grandin) say that they think in pictures. That's God-given - nobody stood over them with a whip and made them learn how to do it. But Henry Kissinger did stand over Brice Taylor with a whip, of sorts, to create mind-files in her brain so that he could store information 'offshore.' (That was in 1959; today he could probably just buy a big memory stick.)

The four parts of my 'Autism Ideas' series, so far, are: 1. Grandin, 2. Offit, 3. Kissinger, and 4. Vaccine Court. Now, in Part 5, there will be a parallel to Part 3. The natural, spontaneous behavior of an autistic child includes spinning (several families have video'd their kids spinning; see Youtube). But the deliberate act of spinning a child, with a whip over her head, so to speak, was done by men ('the Sidney Gottliebs of this world') in the MK-Ultra program.

SOME EXAMPLES OF SPINNING, AS A BASIS FOR COMPARISON

The goal of this paper is mainly to publicize those two different ways in which spinning is used. If the facts stated here should lead anyone to have a Eureka moment, -- and I think they will that will be lovely. I myself have not done any Eureka-ing, and I personally am not planning any further neuroscience research. I'm just hoping that readers who already knew about one of the two kinds of spinning (the autistic and the mind-control), but didn't know t'other, will come away from this juxtaposition with more clues about either one or both.

Let's begin with three quotes from women who, as children, were forcibly programmed:

"I was placed in large metal chambers and left in isolation, sometimes spun, with colored lights, always with only one color at a time. I was restrained in sophisticated chairs with electrodes attached to my head Often loud, piercing sounds were relayed through earphones, usually with different sounds being fed into each ear." - Brice Taylor, "Thanks for the Memories." (1999)

"This chair was used from about age two At first, when I was placed in the chair it was used, with drugs, to gently vibrate and electrically stimulate me into FEELING FLOATY.. The chair's bucking and spinning was used to create INTERNAL TORNADOES through little pulses and zaps Over the years, the chair was used to vibrate me into an 'open channel' state with really amazing lighting and special effects added. Later it was used more harshly for 'repairs,' by making me near crazy and TOTALLY SUGGESTIBLE." (emphasis added)

- Trish Fotheringham, "Patterns," a chapter in Randy and Pamela Noblitt, eds. "Ritual Abuse in the 21st Century" (2008).

"Dr Green performed Radiation Experiments on me in 1970. Each time I became dizzy, nauseous, and threw up. Chris De Nicola, testifying at a presidential hearing, 1995.

Many of the victims of the CIA's MK-Ultra report that they were spun on tables or 'rotisseries,' or on a vertical wheel (as in roulette). It may be that the only purpose of the spinning was to make the child suggestible. After all, the centerpiece of MK-Ultra was behavior control -- turning the person into the slave of the government master. Yet there may have been a type of research going on that has yet to be revealed. (Betcha five dollars there was.)

VESTIBULAR INVOLVEMENT

Darned if I'll walk into the trap of trying to give a medical lecture when I am in fact a medical ignoramus. But I do at least know that dizziness has got something to do with the inner ear I qualify by being a seasickness-sufferer. (Actually I take it to extremes: if there's a newspaper on the floor and I try to read the headlines upside-down, I get nauseated.) They say Lord Nelson, British admiral in the war against Napoleon, got seasick every day at work. And now he stands atop the pole in Trafalgar Square you hope he doesn't have agoraphobia as well!

I also acquired some basics from medicinenet.com. For example, the inner ear provides sense of balance as well as auditory stuff. "Patients' complaints" include vertigo, migraine, and dizziness, which likely reflect a change in fluid in the inner ear. (Don't trust me. I am throwing terms around, hoping the penny will drop for one of y'all.) The reason one gets seasick is that the information coming in from the eye (that the landscape is moving) does not agree with the sensation from his balancing mechanism that tells him he is in fact standing on something flat. The two should match. If they don't, your healthy body is not going to take that lying down, is it?

That balancing mechanism, I forgot to say, is the 'vestibular' function (not related to the vestibule at church, or maybe it is related, I don't know). A person innately has awareness of the body's motion, e.g., whether one is going left or right, or front or back. Indeed the human, like any mammal, does not have to plan his posture, or his defensive re-balancing if he starts to fall down an incline; it is all worked out instinctively. Thank God for the vestibular -- at least in those of us who aren't afflicted with autism.

AUTISM'S VESTIBULAR DEVIANCE FROM THE NORM

Temple Grandin, as mentioned in Part 1 of this series, says that a rotor ride at the amusement park helped her. She also notes: "Research says stimulating the vestibular system by spinning the child in an office chair twice weekly reduces hyperactivity" ("Emergence," 1986). On a website called telusplanet.net I found this note entitled "Sensory Integration" for autistic children:

"The body senses movement, force of gravity, and body position through the muscles and joints. This is referred to as proprioception When sensory input is not organized or aligned properly, problems in learning, development or behavior may be evident. When individuals engage in rigorous activity, it helps them define their body in space and provides feedback through their muscles and joints. The very way in which autistic children stand (elbows bent, hands nearly together in front, drooping at wrists, fingers slightly curled) is indicative of their efforts to sense their body through movements of their muscles and joints."

Telusplanet.net says: "Many children enjoy spinning in chairs to help reduce hyperactivity When autistic children run, they often flap their hands, or jump up and down. Some walk on their tiptoes, while bending and swooping forward on stiff legs, while others stomp their feet loudly. Most prefer to rock back and forth or side to side in attempts to calm themselves. Some spin round and round, while twisting and turning their fingers in front of their eyes. Merry Go Rounds, mini-trampolines and stationary bicycles also provide stimulation to the vestibular receptors."

That website also says "Some autistic children have shown an increase in eye contact immediately following swinging." This accords with what Shelly Birger of awakeparent.com says: "Believe it or not, when we get lots of motion through space (like on a swing, dancing, or spinning) it actually helps our senses work better. With some well-timed rocking or spinning, stimulation, your little dude could be settling down with his dinosaurs for some sustained play time. In other words, you may get to shower today! Hooray!"

Birger adds: "When I worked in Montessori schools, we'd often use this tool to help our most active kids settle in to their work. If we noticed someone wandering around, bothering other kids, and unable to decide what activity to choose -- we'd just send him or her out to the swings for five minutes. After a few minutes of swinging, the child would almost magically come back into the classroom, decide on an activity, sit down and really concentrate for a half an hour or more! I sometimes couldn't believe it was the same kid."

That also accords with what I (Mary) was told by a friend of mine who was forcibly mind- controlled from infancy. She says that after she was spun she felt very eager to being told something new! Her ordeal in mind control is the subject to which we now turn.

SPINNING FOR THE CIA JOHN LOVERN'S REPORT

John Lovern, PhD, presented at paper at a psychology conference entitled "Spin Programming: A Newly Uncovered Technique of Systematic Mind Control." He offered his work to "be copied and distributed freely," so I shall give an abridged version here. The tone he adopts is that of a therapist advising colleagues as to what they may expect to see in a patient who has dissociative identity disorder -- "DID" -- a revised diagnosis for what use to be called 'multiple personality.'

"This is a coercive technique previously unknown to psychotherapists. This technique here labeled 'spin programming,' appears designed to spread effects such as pain, painful emotions, and other feelings or urges globally throughout a patient's personality system for purposes of either designing and building a young victim's personality system, or harassing older victims and disrupting psychotherapy. Spin programming appears to be based on a combination of physical spinning, cognitive and imagery training"

Lovern continues: "Examples of the types of effects that may be spread in this way are physical pain, confusion, depression, self-destructive or suicidal urges, alienation, apathy, hopelessness, fear of abandonment or rejection, panic, terror, urges to run away, jealousy, doubt, suspicion, rage, violent urges, sexual arousal or urges, lethargy, immobility, sleepiness, sleeplessness, hunger, loss of appetite, and urges to use drugs or alcohol." (We are talking about CIA deliberately doing that!)

Hmm. Does this remind you that in the Soviet Union, pre-1991, political protesters were given psychiatric hospitalization? It was alleged (or boasted, either one) that drugs could be administered to make the prisoner feel almost any emotion ordered by his captors. If true, there must be an easy chemical way to mimic depression, frustration, fear, despair, etc. Oh, wait a minute! My first Eureka: perhaps the Soviet method was not injection of drugs but recourse to a spin program!

Returning to Lovern on spin: "Programmers may spread these effects throughout a personality system as a method of disrupting the total functioning of the person, or they may use the possibility of spreading them as a threat to enforce compliance with directives or prohibitions they have issued. Spin programs are also useful in system-building, both because of their ability to quickly transmit information within or throughout a personality system [!] and because of their ability to establish power relationships between alters and groups of alters [an alter is a multiple]."

"Patients who have experienced a great deal of spinning have a number of sensitivities that they usually do not understand until they are consciously aware of having been spun. For example, many patients become very disturbed by flashing lights, because they are similar to the lights they had to watch while being spun. For similar reasons, they are also often disturbed by watching rapidly changing colors or circular, swirling motions of any kind, as well as by certain types of music." Lovern also says that such patients constantly draw doodles of swirling tornadoes.

"CONCLUSION"

This conclusion must contain questions not answers. (Mary, can you spell 'ignoramus'?) The main question is What makes a normal child, at the age of 18 months, regress into autism? I don't mean Was it caused by vaccination? I mean What is it, that is taking place in the brain, that can make a child's development regress? No one knows. (The amount of research is unbelievably meager.)

As mentioned in my Part 2, which was called "Offit, Come Off It," Prof John Walker-Smith of the UK, along with Andrew Wakefield and Simon Murch (ALL of whom are greatly appreciated by parents), identified a syndrome that associates autism and bowel disease. They do not yet have a theory as to how it works. One thing that seems likely is that the 'disease,' once it arrives in the brain, affects the vestibular area, judging from the kids' characteristic behaviors described above.

Temple Grandin, who is -- you can take my word for this a goldmine of knowledge, want us to look at 'disconnections' in the cortex, as in the research by Eric Courchesne of U Cal San Diego and Nancy Minshew of Carnegie Mellon. They have found that local areas of processing in the brain are just as sharp for autistics as for normals (maybe even better), but that the long-distance connections of a brain with autism are pardon me lousy. Grandin offers this metaphor:

"Think of the normal brain as a big corporate office building. All the different departments such as legal, accounting, advertising, sales, and the CEO's office are connected together by many communication systems such as e-mail [and] telephones. The autistic/Asperger brain is like an office building where some of the interdepartmental communication systems are not hooked up. The great variability in autistic/Asperger symptoms probably depends on which 'cables' get connected and which do not. People on the spectrum are often good at one thing and bad at something else. To use the computer cable analogy, the limited number of good cables may connect up one area and leave the other areas with poor connections."

Finally, do genes make a child autistic? Well, in one sense, yes. Grandin, you may recall, admits in her book "Thinking in Pictures" that some of her relatives have a trait or two that feature on the autism list of traits. And of the hundreds of autistic persons she has spoken to, around the world, she notes that many have family members gifted in art, mathematics, etc.. But this doesn't mean that a genetic 'cause' of autism has been found. No, just the vulnerability. In other words, if an autism epidemic sweeps the country, it may selectively hit those genetically prone to be hit.

We need to know how it does that hitting, and who the hell made this epidemic start in 1989.

^^

Mary W Maxwell, PhD, can be contacted at ProsecutionForTreason.com

POSTSCRIPT: More items for the sleuth: 1. Haloperidol, an anti-psychotic drug, is given in hospices for relief of nausea. 2. Autistic boys love to spin the wheels of toy trucks. 3. Some migraines are preceded by an aura. 4. 'Fragile X syndrome' (genetic) leads to failure to express a certain protein required for normal neural development. 5. Whirling dervishes achieve ecstasy.

TheUnhivedMind - June 13, 2011 03:31 AM (GMT)

Autism Ideas - Pt 6: The Thalidomide Doctor Who Got Struck Off

By Mary W Maxwell, PhD
6-8-11

This Monday, June 13, which is Queen's Birthday here in Australia, marks the 50th anniversary of the day in 1961 when a fine young obstetrician, Dr. Willliam McBride, submitted a very urgent article to the British medical journal, "The Lancet."

Doctors in Sydney had been prescribing a sedative called thalidomide for patients with 'nerves' or insomnia. McBride saw that thalidomide worked well as an anti-emetic, so he prescribed it for morning sickness in early pregnancy. Then, unexpectedly, three of the women in his practice gave birth to boys with no radius, i.e., upper arm bone, and with missing fingers. These boys also had a bowel obstruction, which led to death in a week.

The Lancet's deputy editor, Dr I Douglas-Wilson, said that owing to a large number of important (!) papers awaiting publication, McBride's submission was being returned to him. Impossible, you say? Yes, of course, impossible -- in a decent world. But perfectly possible if the powers-that-be were aware of what was going on, and wished it to remain unnoticed until a lot of damage had been done. Ill argue that below. (Yes, I do believe The Lancet knows what its doing, especially these days re autism. Yessir.)

At the end of his career, Dr McBride was subjected to an unbelievable show trial that lasted four years, leaving him with a legal bill of $2.2 million. It ended with the unfair decision, dated 1993, that he was unfit to practice medicine. This story needs a re-look!

Here are the relevant events of 1961 and 1962. This timeline is derived from the book, "Killing the Messenger," by William McBride (1996). I shall use three abbreviations:

T for thalidomide / McB for McBride / Dis for Distillers Biochemicals (makers of T)

THE YEAR IS 1961.

4 May: first malformed baby born, but McB has no idea what caused it.

24 May: second baby born. McB and hospital director Newlinds puzzle over coincidence.

8 June: third baby, looks like the other two. McB now realizes the connection must be T.

13 June: Newlinds withdraws T from use at hospital; McB informs local branch of the UK manufacturer, Dis, about the malformations, and mails his short article to The Lancet.

14 June: Dr Murray Moyes recommends animal studies, so McB and Norman Frost give pregnant mice and rabbits high dose of thalidomide. Yet all offspring are normal!

13 July: Lancet rejects McBride's article. Thus, women of the world remain unwarned. ("Rejection was a stunning blow, almost too much to have to tell my wife Patricia.") mid-Sept: McB tell pharmacologist Roland Thorp at Wellcome his theory: that deformities were produced by T competing with glutamic acid, which is important in the metabolism of nervous tissue. Thorp disagrees, and still disagrees after birth of a 5th baby, 26 Sept.

4 Sept: McB delivers another baby without radius and with short legs; the baby dies.

30 Sept: Lancet [tipped off by Thorp?) writes editorial: Drugs taken by pregnant women may enter and upset the fetus. It behooves all who care to be on the alert for it.

mid-Nov: Dr Richmond Jeremy urges McB to send The Lancet a "Letter to the Editor." McB drafts letters to Lancet and the Medical Journal of Australia, but delays mailing them, as Wal Hodgetts at Dis says: Please hold off until we withdraw T from the market.

27 Nov: The German manufacturer of thalidomide tells Distillers of the UK that a doctor in Germany, W. Linz, suspects T is teratogenic (i.e., leads to deformities).

28 Nov: Dis withdraws T from market worldwide. No publicity; doctors are not told why.

16 Dec: McBs Letter to Editor of Lancet gets published, half-year after he sent the article!

THE YEAR IS 1962

January: woman aborts twins at 16 weeks. McB sends one of the two fetuses, in formalin, to Dis. [Distillers Biochemicals, the makers of thalidomide] for examination.

19 Feb: A.D. Claireaux does the post-mortem, finds limb deformities and duodenal atresia.

10 Feb: Lancet writes an editorial: "A few months ago we discussed drugs that may be harmful to the fetus." [Oh, did we? No drug was named in that Sept 30 editorial.]

25 Feb: Story finally breaks in media. Sydney headline: Sleeping Tablet Cripples Babies.

18 Aug: Medical Journal of Australia recounts the facts, without giving credit to McB. He hand-delivers to Ronald Wilton, the editor, a letter telling the story as it happened.

24 Aug: Wilton replies: "Your original reporting of your suspicions may well warrant reporting in due course. However the present seems a particularly impolitic time to publish your letter. I think it might well embarrass you as well as others." (Wha?)

28 Dec: Sydney's Daily Mirror names Dr William McBride Australia's Man of the Year.

AFTERMATH

Only 35 children in Australia were affected, but thousands elsewhere. The US had never approved the drug, so had few casualties. Frances O Kelsey of the FDA held off, allegedly on the basis of Dr Leslie Florence's 1960 article which claimed the drug causes peripheral neuropathy. The FDA later formed a Subcommittee on Teratology, to include eminent doctors (uh-oh, not too eminent I hope). It drew up a charter recommending, inter alia:

"Thalidomide should be the first drug to be analyzed and investigated beyond the experimental level. It must be understood [Read, in my opinion: "It must never be learned"] why this drug, composed of two non-toxic substances, is toxic to human embryos but relatively harmless to other mammals."

In his book "Killing the Messenger" (whose title will be explained below), McBride states:

"In an attempt to solve the thalidomide enigma, Distillers Biochemicals gave large financial grants to the University of Edinburgh and to St Mary's Hospital, London for research. The St Mary's group, under Prof R T Williams, FRS, carried out extensive research for many years. [One member] Sergio Fabro was to spend many years working on the mechanism of thalidomide toxicity; later he settled at George Washington University. In spite of this extensive research, neither group solved the problem." (p. 89)

That is what the Big Boys (I mean the Really Big Boys) call a job well done, if my theory be correct. And by gosh, the later years of McBride do show my theory to have much merit.

THE SLOW KILLING OF THE MESSENGER, WILLIAM MCBRIDE

The man had spunk. And if you have spunk you pay. McBride paid in many ways. Surely one of the worst ways was having to sit in a witness box for 36 days (possibly a record?) undergoing cross-examination about virtually everything he had done in his life. Wasn't he Man of the Year in 1962? Yes and, in 1972, Father of the Year. But then he 'went bad.'

May I interject a quick lesson in how to go bad? Three points should do it: 1. Be honest; 2. Take responsibility for what you do; 3. Love science and scientific investigation (oops, could this be why so many microbiologists have suicided in the last decade?). No doubt there are other ways to go bad, but you get my drift.

In 1973 McBride unfortunately hit upon another drug that could harm an embryo if taken early in pregnancy -- the anti-depressant Imipramine. He found babies in whom the drug appeared to have caused malformations. A colleague had hinted to him that all the tricyclcic anti-depressants were a problem. Moreover the pills were dispensed free of charge under Australia's socialized medicine scheme.

AUNTY AND SOME TORTURE

It appears that McBride should not have 'gone there.' He gave expert witness in courtrooms against the drug manufacturers. He also questioned the safety of scopolamine. Punishment eventually came, through a third party: In 1987, the Australian Broadcasting Corporation, a government-based TV and radio broadcaster (the ABC, or Aunty), let McBride have it between the eyeballs.

Hard to say when the plan for this was hatched, but it may have been in 1977 when there was a vacancy at Foundation 41, a research group that McBride had founded. Professor Robert Walsh, a leader in the group, chose a candidate whom McBride did not favor, to wit: Philip Vardy.

McBride listed Vardy as coauthor of a paper; it got unfavorably peer-reviewed. The rabbits under study were being given scopolamine via their drinking water, fed to them by bottles hooked to the side of the cage at a 45-degree angle and "invariably some of the water leaked." McBride later changed his estimate of how much water actually got imbibed. It did not influence the outcome -- the pregnant females either bore healthy litters or bore deformed litters.

On returning from a trip to America, McBride was noisily smeared by the ABC and the Sydney Morning Herald.. One can only think he had it coming to him for being such a 'naïve' whistleblower. Norman Swan, head of ABC radio (sort of public, like BBC), played the part of -- indeed was almost indistinguishable from -- a certain journalist in UK well known to the autism community, one whose name rhymes with Flyin' Beer.

To feel the Moscow show trial atmosphere, we look at the conclusion reached by the New South Wales Complaint Unit after a four-year trial of the accused. No patient of the good doctor had ever stepped forward to complain to the Complaints Unit; the matter was self-initiated by the Complaints Unit. The ostensible purpose was to get answers to the allegations that Norman Swan and Phil Vardy had raised in the media.

The presiding judge, Judge Wall called the accused, Dr McBride," the classic tragic character the person of eminence in public life whose good deeds and interest in human welfare command respect but who is brought down by a fatal flaw in character." And the flaw is? May I have the envelope please? The flaw is:

"He invented the data of resorptions in the control group of rabbits for the purpose of statistical exercise which was required by editors of the journal to be included in the Article for publication. When questioned for an explanation of his conduct [McBride] attempted to justify it in a way which indicated his intellectual dishonesty."

Note: The offending behavior had occurred eight years before, but the Tribunal felt it "must do what Parliament has charged the Complaints Unit to do." That is, it must decide whether a doctor should have his medical license revoked as a protection for the public. God knows, you wouldn't want to be asked to strip your clothes off for a physician who had fudged the data on rabbit resorptions would you? I know I wouldn't!

I am omitting the fact that the Tribunal spent a year grilling 'the stork' for his having performed too many Caesarian sections. "Douglas Keeping [a witness] was a Scot trained in Aberdeen, a city known for its obstetric care. He was quite definite that he would not have treated some of my patients as I had. However he repeatedly emphasized that there was a wide range of obstetric opinion and that my treatment was acceptable and fell within the tram lines, as he called the confines of acceptable management."

That's a quote from page 197 of "Killing the Messenger," which by the way, is a full autobiography. It wonderfully describes how William and his parents attended the 1932 opening of the Sydney Harbor Bridge -- a right-wing rebel rider pierced the ribbon with his sword, from horseback, whereupon the ribbon had to be mended so the Governor could cut it with a scissors! (Hear a lovely song on Youtube: "The Bridge We've Been Waiting For")

HIGHER POWERS, AND CAUSE FOR THANKS

Perhaps it was the publicity -- the almost daily headlines about this fraudulent scientist -- that caused Westpac Bank to foreclose the mortgage on a building that McBride had re-designed to accommodate his new laboratories. This was the Foundation 41, that he had established with the 250,000 franc prize awarded to him by L'Institute de la Vie in Paris. (Or maybe Westpac was told by a Higher Power to put the squeeze on our hero?)

I am pretty shameless when it comes to conspiracy theory, so please be warned that I'm about to go to town. I think the closure of Women's Hospital, where his nibs had much seniority, was probably done to deprive him of his base. I think that his supporter, Jan Langman of the University of Virginia, who died of cancer, was possibly knocked off. (Jan was the one person who could have vouched for McBride about the rabbit study.)

I think it possible that the deformity of children by thalidomide was intended I'm sure AIDS and the 1954 polio were criminal, as I say in my new book "Prosecution for Treason." I think the Irish potato blight of 1849 was cooked up by the House of Rothschild -- it led to the British government taking out the biggest loan in history up to that time. And so on.

We naturally understand the gratitude McBride must have felt toward a handful of people (it only ever takes a handful of people) who were driven to tell the truth. Dr Keeping, the aforementioned Aberdonian, said to the Tribunal, "It is my genuine belief that the clinical case against McBride is a vicious persecution and thoroughly reprehensible." Right on, Professor! McBride also thanks Phillip Knightley, a journo, for writing the books Foreword.

But the grandest praise must be reserved for Royal Australian Navy rear-admiral G J B

Crabb. He found himself being set up, by a pharmaceutical company, to spy on and discredit McBride. Crabb wasn't having any of that, and as soon as he figured out that McBride was being targeted for a smearing, he voluntarily made a deposition, dated August 25, 1980, and gave it to McBride to be put in file for later use if necessary. Wow!

"Dear Doctor [it says], A lawsuit had been held recently in the State of Florida where a husband and wife sued a pharmaceutical company for the malformation of their child. [A man told me] that you have agreed to give evidence as an expert witness and I was told that, in this case, money is no object in achieving their aim of discrediting new witnesses."

There! Wouldn't it be great if everyone had a friend who would stick up for him or her like that? And Crabb wasn't even a friend; he was a complete stranger.

Compare that to what you get, even today, from ABC (a.k.a. Aunty) if you search "McBride, thalidomide." It's an old 2001 item, but it's the first thing that comes up on google. It starts with: "Hello. I'm Adam Spencer from the ABC's Science Team. Tonight's Australian Story is about a man who blew the whistle on major scientific fraud in Australia, and in doing so, forever changed the rules and ethics of scientific research. His name is Phil Vardy." Oh my achin' corns.

Why is such garboodge still being displayed in 2011? I presume it's to keep burning the message into doctors, especially new ones: "Don't support the truth, you'll get creamed."

And don't worry -- you will.

Mary W Maxwell, PhD, is at credosbooks.com. She has a special message for Veritas types: When I ordered a used copy of Killing the Messenger, from alibris.com, the one they sent me is the one Harvard had tossed out of its Cabot Science Library. You medical students really do need to read this inspiring book. Do you realize you could turn today's miserable situation around in a trice, just by showing a bit of 'tude? Also, if God gave you real intellectual gifts, please see the June 10, 2011 article by Teresa Conrick at "Age of Autism." She shows areas of research that may intrigue you. And she will woo you into watching "Burzinsky, the Movie," a McBride-like story on the extremely important subject of cancer research. Come on, young medicos, the Big Boys are counting on you to be pushovers. You're not pushovers, are you?

TheUnhivedMind - June 20, 2011 02:15 AM (GMT)

Autism Ideas - Part 7: The Big Picture

Posted By: MaryMaxwell
Date: Tuesday, 14-Jun-2011 11:42:17
Autism Ideas -- Part 7: An Interview about the Big Picture
By Mary W Maxwell, PhD, with That Very Helpful Interviewer, Ms Clara Fye

Clara: You have now published six essays on autism, although two of them, by your own admission, were really about something else.

Mary: Yes. Number 6 was about thalidomide and Number 3 was about ‘mind files.’ But even there I was making a point about autism. The thalidomide doctor’s punishment for pursuing the truth is quite revealing, and Henry Kissinger’s use of Brice Taylor as a ‘memory stick’ shows that the National Security types must know a lot about the brain that could help us regarding autism.

Clara: Some readers won’t believe what you said about Henry Kissinger

Mary: True. I write what I know in hopes that some who can accept it will see it on the Internet and make use of it. By the way, Clara, do you believe me?

Clara: Mostly I do, but of course I reserve my right to doubt anything at any time. In regard to Kissinger, I felt that you went on to make a parallel point about ‘spinning’.

Mary: The mind-control experts put children on spinning tables to deliberately prepare them for indoctrination. Autistic children use spinning on their own initiative, reportedly so they can relieve their problem of lack of sensory integration. I have nothing to contribute about this, but I want to call it to the attention of the autism families who are working so hard to understand the brain. The mind-control literature is eye-opening.

Clara: A main focus of the families, such as those who contribute to the online magazine “Age of Autism,” has to do with their belief that the vaccination for Measles Mumps Rubella, given at 18 months, caused their child to regress from normalcy into autism. Where do you stand on that?

Mary: There is a very high correlation, although it does not explain every case. For example, Dr Bernard Rimland, author of the important autism checklist, tells us that he saw that his son was autistic from the day he was born.

Clara: I thought your point in Article 2 was that Dr Paul Offit was not honest in his put-down of the vaccine skeptics, in his book “Autisms’s False Prophets.”

Mary: Correctaroonie. I find his book very dishonest and I find Andrew Wakefield’s book “Callous Disregard” very honest. I re-read it today and saw that he did not call that press conference in February, 1998. Prof Zuckerman and his ‘media group’ did. Woo-hoo, that raises a big question. Namely, was the ‘vaccine scare’ done by, say, ‘agents provocateurs’?

Clara: Oh, Mary, I'm glad you said that because I have been wanting to ask you: don't you think you are beginning to sound like a broken record, always referring to conspiracy?

Mary: I certainly hope readers note my broken record. The broken record's the thing! For instance, it's because we see the use of agents provocateurs to stir up 'race' 'riots,' that we are tipped off to see them elsewhere. Another recurring theme is the abuse of judicial machinery. Thus, Dr John Walker-Smith in the UK and Dr William McBride in Australia, after very distinguished careers, were 'broken on the rack,' or as near as dammit, in trials.

Clara: You also claimed that the so-called Omnibus Autism Proceeding in the Vaccine Court was improper.

Mary: The setting up by Congress of a court that is not really a court must lead to disaster.

Clara: Isn't this your specialty – looking at judicial peculiarities?

Mary: Yes. If I may be permitted an autobiographical note, I got into the conspiracy business in 2005 by way of reading, on a jurist-news website, that Lord Hutton had done some technically wrong things at the U.K.'s Inquiry [read: whitewash] regarding the death of David Kelley. I had led such a sheltered life that I thought judicial independence actually existed. That is, I believed in Santa Claus.

Clara: I see that you have now grown up and are hosting a new website: kisskiss.us.com.

Mary: Good heavens, people will think you mean that it's an 'adult' website. It is about two branches of government in the US , the executive and the judicial, getting all kisskiss with each other when, of course, they shouldn't. Still, that website is just a hobby. My main website is ProsecutionForTreason.com, where I provide a free copy of my book. It's a steal at $0.00.

Clara: I have actually bought a copy for $9.95 at Trineday.com and found it very helpful.

Mary: Clara, you're a girl after my own heart.

Clara: Now, I want you to level with me. You say in the book that AIDS is a genocide. You at least hint that autism is, also. I realize people don't die of autism, so strictly speaking it can't be a genocide, but you know what I mean. Do you think autism is 'deliberate'?

Mary: Allow me to correct you on a legal point. The 1947 Genocide Convention, and the American legislation by which it was 'brought home' (see 18 USC 1091), provides for genocides that are less than death. As for my leveling with you, I am hesitant to knock the autism families for a loop by suggesting that there is malice in the air. But yes, I think so.

Clara: How could it be done?

Mary: I hope this is the one and only time I have to comment, because I'm so conscious of my ignoramusicity. If I use a word here like 'immune system' or 'inflammation' I don't want people to think I have studied such things. I have not. I only skim through the research -- in fact I may get an idea by reading merely the title of a medical article.

Clara: I promise I will not take what you say to be correct – just give me some idea of what you have picked up. Plus, I will take it as already stated that you accuse Kissinger of knowing more than his prayers. His knowledge of what spinning does to the brain means that he -- or someone else -- may be able to find their way into the brain to create autism.

Mary: In my articles I alleged that the Rothschilds caused the potato blight in Ireland in 1849 and that the baddies caused the London fire of 1666 and the Black Death plague, also in London, a year earlier. Have you heard of '9/11' m'dear? At the same time I have the impression that some famous disasters simply did not take place at all. Betcha those Congressmen did not receive a letter with white-powdered anthrax, and betcha betcha there was no poisoning of Tylenol pills that "led to the death of six innocent customers."

Clara: Kind of a mixed bag. What have you got on autism?

Mary: Clara, are you paying attention? What I've got on autism is that things like the London fire do get set. (I know for an absolute fact that two main bushfires in Australia --- 1983 and 2009 -- were set by 'the powers that be.') The spinning technique was used on mind control. So -- this is my 'connection' -- it's thin -- if somebody is out to harm the kids in the mind control program, they are out to harm kids, period.

Clara: Could 'autism' have been distributed in the injections?

Mary: Dr Alan Cantwell, author of "Queer Blood," is my teacher on this. He has proof that the 'Experiment' that was done on volunteers in New York in 1979, and for which only gay males were selected, was the source of the HIV infection. It was dispensed as the alleged Hep-B vaccine.

Clara: You're getting spooky. You're saying that someone would harm innocent children.

Mary: Pardon me, Clara, aren't gay males human beings too? Is it okay to kill them for fun?

Clara: Point taken. What do you mean “for fun?”

Mary: Who writes the script for these things? How many anchorpersons did they have to have ready at city news stations to react on cue when the Towers were ‘hit’ on 9/11? The day it was all planned, the planners must have been getting their rocks off.

Clara: You shouldn’t say that in my interview.

Mary: Hello? I shouldn’t say ‘get their rocks off’ but it’s ok to say they destroyed the WTC?

Clara: I’m not sure. Perhaps we’ll edit you later. Just go on, now, please. We want info.

Mary: I am new to autism but I have picked up the following, which some doctors or medical students should brainstorm with: 1. The Simpsonwood conference of the CDC (which I call Sins-in-wood), and whose transcripts were obtained by Robert F Kennedy, Jr., show that there was great concern to cover up the connection between vaccines and autism; it was the reason for the conference. 2. The thalidomide exposer, McBride, asked a drug company to provide him with dicyclomine so he could study it: he was refused.

Clara: That has nothing to do with autism, does it?

Mary: Well, it might. I searched a medical database today for just one word, dicyclomine, and came up with a wide range of studies. Anyway it's a clue. Ask what the Sins-in-wood people are hiding and that is a trail to follow. A Sherlock Holmes dog-did-not-bark thing. And don't forget that the anti-psychotic Haliperidol works on nausea.

Clara: Go back to what you said about the immune system and inflammation.

Mary: Same thing – it’s just a clue. Many of the families have noticed either, or both. For example they notice – I may be wrong on the particulars – that certain foods or vitamins are helpful to their child’s immune system. As for inflammation, go look at a study done by Scripps Institute seven years ago. To my beady little mind it looks as though, right on the face of the document, something is being discussed in a too-gingerly way.

Clara: In your essay, “The No New Diseases Hypothesis,” you said that your late physician-husband was very puzzled by autism and Alzheimer’s. Did he suspect that these could be genocidal?

Mary: I don’t think so. He died before 9/11, so never heard the big conspiracy theories. He also would have been incapable of imagining that members of the medical profession could engage in evil (though if he read the Sins-in-wood transcripts he might have twigged). But he did say for sure that autism and Alzheimer's can't increase so rapidly.

Clara: Do you think it is evil?

Mary: As far as I know (See my "Twentieth Century Was a Hoax"), the guys who run the world actually planned world wars I and II well in advance. Never mind the nonsense about "Archduke Ferdinand's being shot at Sarajevo triggered the Great War." The top dogs are evil in that they do what they 'must' in order to stay in control. Supposedly now they have a plan to reduce the world population. Fires and earthquakes are tools for this, and so are epidemics.

Clara: I see that the subtitle of your book is "Weather War, Epidemics, and Mind Control."

Mary: My publisher, Kris Millegan, who is no dope, wanted the subtitle to be "What We the People Can Do…" That would have better reflected the contents, which have much more to do with remedies than with conspiracies. It's actually a cheerful book.

Clara: Is there any cheer regarding autism?

Mary: I can think of two things. First, and I say this with awareness that the families have had their hopes raised and dashed a number of times: I think that if Kissinger (or his many, many comrades) were made to reveal what they know from mind control, from the dispensing of AIDS, etc., the existing children could possibly be helped. Second: it is truly amazing how intelligent and purposeful the autism families are. Can they do what needs to be done in terms of 'inviting' Kissinger to sing? If anybody can, they can.

Clara: One more thing, Mary. You are on record as having raised the subject of XMRV -- you said that you remember it as "Malcolm X re-versed." Could this be a lab-created virus or some sinister thing?

Mary: There you go again. How the crikey would I know? I read about it on "Age of Autism" website, written by a parent named Heckenlively. The offending item has turned up in prostate cancer, and other odd places, so tongues are wagging. I say: Wag away!

Clara: I guess we'll wrap it up there. Thank you for your time, Mary. And good luck.

Mary W Maxwell, PhD wants to hear from you at prosecutionfortreason.com. No CIA please. Note: Her last chat with Clara was published April 9 as "Clarification Interview." Need to learn about mind control? Google for 'Svali,'or 'Sidney Gottlieb,' or 'Carol Rutz.' Also, see Chapter 7's section on the crime of menticide in "Prosecution for Treason."

TheUnhivedMind - June 20, 2011 02:16 AM (GMT)

Autism Ideas Part 8 - 'Rimlanders', Etiology, And TB Infection
By Mary W Maxwell, PhD,
6-16-11
Thanks to the Internet, the mothers of autistic children are now able to be in contact with one another in a way that could never have happened in the past. Way back in the 1960s, however, one man started his own Internet-like way of contacting autism families. Quite possibly he is the man most responsible for identifying what autism really consists of.

I am referring to psychologist Bernard Rimland, PhD. (1928-2006). In 1965 he founded the Autism Research Institute, having published a year earlier a book ambitiously entitled "Infantile Autism: The Syndrome and Its Implications for a Neural Theory of Behavior." He composed a Diagnostic Checklist, and by 1980 had received over 6,700 responses from people in 40 countries!

BERNARD RIMLAND'S CHECKLIST

Perhaps it would have helped if he had given the tag "Rimlander" to any child whose parents answered Yes to the questions shown below. Note: he asked a total of 109 questions. I lifted the 35 shown here from Temple Grandin's book "Emergence," in which she provides the answers her Mother gave. Temple was a Rimlander child for sure.

Does child react to bright lights? Did he behave normally before his abnormal behavior? Does the baby rock in his crib? Does he have an unusually good memory for songs, rhymes, or TV commercials? Is the child deaf to some sounds but hears others? Does he hold his hands in strange postures? Does he want to be on a rocking-horse, jump-chair, or swing? Does he crave salty foods? Does he chew on metal objects? Would you describe him as being 'in a shell'? Does he deliberately hit his head? Does he whirl himself like a top? Does he do fine work with his fingers? Does he like to spin a jar lid? Is he very good at jigsaw puzzle, arithmetic, has perfect musical pitch or can tell the day of the week a certain date will fall on? Does he line things up precisely in even spaced rows and insist that they not be disturbed? Does he like mechanical objects such as vacuum cleaner? Does he react badly to being interrupted? Does he resist new clothes? Is he upset by certain things that are not right, like a crack in the wall? Does he adopt complicated rituals like putting dolls to bed in a certain order or insisting that only certain words be used in a given situation? Does he get upset if furniture or toys rearranged? Is he destructive? Does he watch TV quietly for long periods? Is he sensitive to criticism? Is there a problem that makes him hit, pinch, and bite himself? How well did he pronounce his first words unusually good? Does the child repeat sentences he heard which are irrelevant now, and does he use a hollow or parrot-like voice? Does he typically say "yes" by repeating the question "shall we go for a walk honey?". If you say "do you want some milk?", does he answer "you want some milk". Does he use one word for another, such as, always uses "ketchup" to mean "red", or uses "penny" for drawer after seeing pennies in a drawer? Does he have inconsolable crying? After a delay, does he repeat whole sentences he has heard? Does he get hooked on something like maps? Does he hide his skill or knowledge so you are surprised later on?

Naturally, Dr Rimland interwove some questions (not shown here) that would eliminate some respondents from the diagnosis of autism, plus some questions merely meant to give internal validation to the questionnaire.

HESITATION AS TO AUTISM'S NOSOLOGY (DIAGNOSIS) AND ETIOLOGY (CAUSE)

I said above of Rimland: "Quite possibly he is the man most responsible for identifying what autism really consists of." That is not to suggest that he made strong assertions. He was in fact cautious and humble. (The fact that his own son, born 1956, is autistic would probably have sufficed to keep him from thinking he had all the answers!)

There is considerable disagreement as to what constitutes the diagnosis of autism. It will probably remain like this until more is known about the cause. Granted, that goes against the medical principle "Etiology must await nosology." No point trying to find out where yellow fever came from, for example, until we have records of a number of people all exhibiting a certain group of symptoms. If we can say "Here this is what yellow fever is," then maybe we can say "And it is caused by X." Nosology does logically precede etiology.

I am not eager to put my foot into the question of autism's diagnosis, other than to say that today it is widely labeled a 'developmental disorder.' Many doctors refer to ASD autism spectrum disorders to include both autism and Asperger's syndrome. Hans Asperger was a colleague of Leo Kanner, who published the first study of autism, in 1943, based on 11 cases. Asperger recognized what might be called a milder type of autism.

(Today there are many 'Aspie's' who make out well in the world. The series of articles I'm writing here, called "Autism Ideas" is mainly about 'Rimmie's,' not Aspie's. Probably I am influenced by empathy for 'Rimlander moms' who have constantly to worry that their children cannot in any way look after themselves. By the way, healthy siblings are often remarkably devoted. See, on Youtube "For my baby brother Lucas." It is sooo poignant.)

VACCINATION AS 'ETIOLOGY' AND THE PROBATIVE VALUE OF PARENTS'

REPORTS

It seems to me that a cause of autism, or at least a trigger of it, is vaccination. And who am I to be Mrs Smartypants about this? Easy. I am someone who has read many statements by families describing the onset of the troubles immediately after vaccination. Don't I think some of them got confused about the dates? Sure, a few probably have inaccurate recollection. Big deal.

Don't I realize that it may be in a parent's interest to out-and-out lie about the onset in hopes of receiving compensation due to vaccine liability? Sure, I'm not stupid. I believe it would be a miracle if no parent ever lied about it. But that has no bearing on the fact that a huge number of parents have excellent proof, including videos, about the onset of their child's autism.

Being not stupid, I also can recognize a campaign to discredit people (witness Dr Mudge's extraordinary put-down of Meryl Dorey, quoted in Part 1 of this series). All of that indicates guilt on the part of the vaccine, does it not? However, it is quite likely that the receiving of the jab may be only an environmental trigger of an illness that is lurking from some other cause. Below we turn to one that has so far not got much press: tuberculosis.

Note: I have this strange hunch which may yet prove to be worth nada that a lot of illnesses have heretofore unrevealed connections, AND that the reason for the connection is that it was not the hand of God that put these ailments into the population, rather it was a matter of malice. I already presented that in my essay "The 'No New Diseases' Hypothesis" and in two parts of this series of Autism Ideas #6 concerning thalidomide, and #7 about genocide. For today, though, I am not going off on that toot.

A POSSIBLE ETIOLOGY OF AUTISM: MATERNAL TUBERCULOSIS INFECTION

Lawrence Broxmeyer, M.D., proposes that the child gets a tubercular infection from the mom before birth., or genetically from either parent. His article, posted only on the Net, is: "John Langdon Down's Autism A Stealth Disease, Part 2." The same article covers interesting biographical facts about some psychiatrists and pathologists who did their research from 1880 to 1945, which you may wish to 'stickybeak.' (Aussie word, both a verb and a noun, referring to the habits of a Nosey parker.)

According to the California Department of Developmental Services, Broxmeyer says, "Level-one autism, without any of its 'spectrum,' went from almost 5,000 cases in late summer, 1993, to approximately 20,377 by December, 2002" (i.e., the autistic population got multiplied by four in a decade). He asks, "What was behind this epidemic?" A major clue, he observes, "was contained in the timeline of the Department's own 1999 Autism report, which concluded that [autism] had increased dramatically between 1987 and 1998."

And now for the amazing correlation: "While autism exploded in California a major spike in the number of tuberculosis cases [was] reported by the Tuberculosis Control Branch of California's Division of Communicable Disease. There, head Dr. Sarah Royce, proclaimed a TB epidemic in California, which peaked in 1992, an epidemic with the same male preponderance as autism." Moreover, "by 1993, the World Health Organization (WHO), declared a global tuberculosis emergency, a warning that has been in existence ever since."

To know more about Broxmeyer's theory, you may wish to hear that he "pursued as lead author and originator, a novel technique to kill TB and the mycobacteria with outstanding results." (See The Journal of Infectious Diseases, October 15, 2002, pp 1155-60.) Sorry, I am not qualified to analyze the merits of it. But note: according to Alan Cantwell's book, "The Cancer Microbe," microbe hunters are considered politically naughty.

In Broxmeyer's present article, the "John Langdon Down" referred to in the title, is the doctor for whom "Down syndrome" was named. A mere two years after the American civil war ended, that is, in 1867, Down published a link between childhood mental illness and the parent's tuberculosis. (I hesitate to say he published it in "The Lancet," but that is the case.) Broxmeyer writes:

"As a result of such tuberculosis from conception or soon thereafter, and nothing else, such children's life expectancy would be shortened, as the same tuberculous infection would lead to their early demise. Moreover, brain and central nervous system tuberculous account for 20- 45% of all types of tuberculosis among children, much higher than its 2.9-5.9% for all adult tuberculosis." [Wow.] Broxmeyer continues: "In fact tuberculosis of the nervous system has consistently been the second most common form of TB in the very young outside of the lung."

He goes on to say: "of those infants and children that did survive, nearly 20-25% manifest mental retardation, and mental disorders -- serious and long term behavioral disturbances, seizures, and motor handicaps in addition to the various other anomalies associated with autistic and Down's 'neurodevelopment' behavior problems. For his Lancet study, Down submits one-hundred post-mortem records of children He had found no fewer than 62% of these children to have tubercular deposits in their bodies."

Readers wanting more detail should follow two footnotes in Broxmeyer's article. One refers to a theory that "schizophrenia and autism probably sharing a common origin, both with physical abnormalities which form from 20 to 40 days after fertilization, when the embryo is highly susceptible to disruption." (For this, see Ploeger A Raijmakers ME "The association between autism and errors in early embryogenesis: what is the causal mechanism?" Biological Psychiatry, April 1, 2010, pp 602-7.)

The other is SH Fatemi's idea of prevention. See " Multiple Pathways in Prevention of Immune-mediated Brain Disorder: Implications For the Prevention of Autism" in the Journal of Neuroimmunology, December 10, 2009, pp.8-9. Also -- intriguingly, for suspicious minds Broxmeyer mentions the following:

"The Department of Defense is currently and actively recruiting participants to determine the effectiveness of an anti-tubercular antibiotic to determine if it can improve social impairment in children with autism, Asperger's Disorder, and the Pervasive Developmental Disorders. This particular anti-tuberculosis drug, first tested in the laboratory at the Eastern Virginia Medical School, previously worked to improve the sociability of mice with limited social behavior."

Excuse me, is there any justification for the Defense [and I use that word loosely] Department to spend taxpayer money on a study of sociability, whether in mice or in humans? Indeed, can the military have even the remotest business in studying "children with autism"?

I CERTAINLY HOPE NOT!

Mary W Maxwell, PhD, is planning a tour for her book "Prosecution for Treason: Weather War, Epidemics, Mind Control, and the Surrender of Sovereignty." Starting next week, Insha'allah, she has a new series of articles, rather jauntily entitled "Delenda Est Cabal."

TheUnhivedMind - June 20, 2011 02:16 AM (GMT)

Autism Ideas - Part 9:
The Secret Lavender Liquid
By Mary W Maxwell, PhD
6-18-11
Enter at your own risk. This article may look scientific, but it's written by an amateur. I am going to play a game here, pretending that some liquid was maliciously put into the injections that children received shortly before they developed autism. I give that substance a perfectly fanciful identity by saying its color is lavender. The properties of this 'lavender liquid?' That is what we need to figure out.

This is the ninth article in my series of "Autism Ideas." Looking back over the previous eight, two can be ignored for our purposes here: #4 on the Vaccine Court, and #7 on the thalidomide doctor who got struck off the register for his later nosing into the properties of tricyclic anti-depressants. The remaining six contain ideas that bear on the new hypothesis about the 'lavender liquid.'

Those include: #1. The self-report of an adult who 'broke through' her childhood autism, namely, Temple Grandin; #2 the medical establishment's super-hyped rebuttal of the successful research by gastroenterologists Andrew Wakefield and John Walker-Smith; and #3. The resemblance of gifted autistic minds to the Kissinger-induced gifts of Brice Taylor, particularly her photographic memory.

Article #5 covered the fact that spinning has several consequences, such as bringing relief to autistic persons, causing nausea to the healthy, and preparing persons for indoctrination in mind control; and #7 contained both Lawrence Broxmeyer's theory of maternal TB infectiion and the autism diagnostic checklist of Bernard Rimland.

As for #8, which used 'Clara' as an interviewer to intrude the horrific idea of malice, we can skip over it. It is enough that I now proclaim that I suspect there was a 'lavender liquid.' You don't have to accept anything about malice to get some value out of the exercise here. Just try to imagine "What could have happened?" Such an approach might have the lucky effect of making a real scientist remember something that I haven't thought of!

QUICK REVIEW OF SOME WELL-CANVASSED POSSIBILITIES

My 'lavender liquid' hypothesis does not imply that I think other leads should be abandoned. Not at all. Three top contenders at the moment are: that autism was brought on by mercury (via the thimerosal that is often used as a preservative of vaccines); that the vaccine itself in some way caused the damage; and that bowel disease, whether or not related to a vaccination, was capable of reaching up to the brain to cause the autism.

Quite possibly the answer lies in one of those theories. As for why there would suddenly be a huge increase in autism starting around 1990, some believe it is quite simply the fact that children today get many more shots than they used to (a minimum of 14).

Another line of theories, concerned with the autistic child's social dysfunction can, perhaps, be set aside. I do not deny that an autistic child can live in his own world, that he lacks eye contact, and so forth. But many of the vaccine-related cases are children who had already developed normal social affections, so the key to what has happened can't be that there is some 'missing cog' in the child's head related to social performance.

Also, many parents of autistic kids -- and adult autistics such as Temple Grandin -- say that even when the child appears his unsocial worst he may be experiencing plenty of social sensitivity about it. By the way, Temple says she not only wished for a hug from her teacher, she 'craved' it.

This means, too, that we shan't dwell on the hypothesis of Jaak Panksepp who, extrapolating from animal studies, came to the view that mother-child attachment may be neurologically impaired in autism. Granted, he has done remarkable work on the neurochemistry of bonding, determining that maternal-offspring attachment involves opiates.

(In 1979, thirty-two years ago, Panksepp called attention to a possible resemblance between alcohol addiction, and the human urge for the comfort of opiates that must have come from the initial experience of the comfort of the mother. He thus envisioned that the drug Naxolone might help autistics, and indeed in some cases it does!)

Now to three more ideas that have currently got research attention. First: inflammation, that normally happens to every person after a vaccination, could be the cause of autism if it 'gets out of hand.'

Second: a surge in autism cases in California in the 1990s coincided with a surge in tuberculosis there, and Lawrence Broxmeyer thinks it may be causal. Third: something called XMRV has been showing up in odd places such as in prostate cancer and may be connected to the autism mystery.

Note that those last two: the TB and the XMRV, could in fact be the 'lavender liquid!' In other words, someone could be maliciously, or accidentally, introducing either of them into the vaccines. Recall that a simian virus, known as SV-40, somehow slipped into the widely-distributed polio vaccine of the 1960s, and is now recognized as a factor that predisposes the whole baby-boomer generation to cancer. (See "Me and Lee" by Judith Vary Baker.)

AMISH CHILDREN AND MINNESOTA'S SOMALI IMMIGRANTS

Robert F Kennedy, Jr. (who looks strikingly like his late father, and is now way older that RFK lived to be!) prepared a talk for ABC TV, which got pulled at the last minute, in July 2005. In it he condemned the Center for Disease Control, and its director Walt Orenstein, for trying to suppress studies that prove the correlation between vaccination and autism. The factor that Kennedy assumed was being suppressed was the mercury-bearing thimerosal.

Of interest to his theory, and mine, is the fact that Amish children, who do not accept vaccinations, had virtually no autism at the relevant time. Dan Olmsted, a journalist, is the person who thought to search for such groups. He found the Amish, and is roaring mad that this is not looked upon by doctors as a key discovery (as it surely is!). Olmsted is co-author with Mark Blaxill of a book, "The Age of Autism," and he runs an in-depth website by that name.

Why is it wrong to mention the Amish's lack of autism? Recall the reprimand meted out to John Walker-Smith (not to mention the cancelling of his medical license) by the UK's General Medical Council. That was for his daring to publish a correlation that could lower the public's desire for vaccinations.

Probably there are scientists in America, too, who follow the twisted logic that if a doctor discovers that a vaccine is rendering the lives of thousand of children hellish, the right thing to do is suppress that information lest the population starts to resist immunizations of all kinds.

(Hmm. Another idea emerges. Does it not seem that the wise thing to do re the controversial MMR injection would be to admit there is trouble with that one, and then parents would be more willing to accept the remaining shots? Under present circumstances, with 'scare' happening, may people are refusing all shots. Could this be the 'desired' outcome? The stirring up of fear is a regular thing by the media these days. Chaos is a goal!)

A situation that is opposite that of the Amish children is that of Somali youngsters in Minnesota. They were born in the US but their families had, not long before, immigrated from Somali, as refugees. The children have a very high incidence of autism (1 in 28 schoolchildren). It seems not to be blamable on their Somali-ness, as children in Somalia are not autistic. Note: that latter point is a reminder that we have plenty of places in the world that can serve as comparisons, too.

The 'lavender-liquid' theory goes well with a sudden high incidence of autism like that of the refugees in Minnesota. If the harmful thing is just the ordinary vaccine preservative, mercury, there shouldn't be a group of people in whom the rate of autism-as-reaction is particularly high. That is, mercury ought to result in the same rate of autism outcomes wherever it is used. And the same is true if it is the vaccine itself that is to blame. So one must pay attention to the Somali 'outbreak.'

WHAT EXACTLY NEED THE 'LAVENDER LIQUID' CONTAIN?

Now to the main purpose of hypothesizing about a substance that could cause autism. What part of the brain would it need to attack? And don't forget, if what the liquid does is cause bowel disease, which then goes to the brain and results in autism, that liquid still has to somehow 'know' what it is aiming at in the brain. I mean it has to end up at the part of the brain that will make the child start to show autistic symptoms.

We know some of the main things that go wrong. (Note: this discussion isn't about the type of autism that begins at birth; the 'going wrong' here is the kind of thing that happens around 18-20 months.) The child gets cranky or listless, may start to cover its ears as if it hates noise, may pull away from touch -- often not because of unsociability but because the tactile sense has become painful.

He may start to do repetitive things, including using words repetitively, he may hit his own head, he may be aggressive with others, he may scream, he may like to swing and spin, he may want to put objects in a neat row and get upset if the order is disturbed. He'll start to sniff things if his olfactory sense has become more prominent that his visual and auditory senses. Yet he might become a savant with incredible capacity for memorizing visual data.

I cannot answer the question "What must the 'lavender liquid' contain in order to result in those symptoms?" but it does seem to me that the structure of the research would include the following three things:

1. an exposition of the normal brain. For example, neuro-linguistics scientists know how the normal brain comes up with the right pronoun in speech (autistic children often use "you" for "I"). Much is known about the parts of the brain that like to impose neatness on the environment. Much is known about sensory overload and sensory integration, and so forth.

2. a charting of which interventions work well with autistic children. Naxolone was mentioned. Some children respond to the kind of drugs that are given to persons with obsessive-compulsive disorder. The point here is not to find the best intervention. Rather this item is connected to the previous one, the exposition of the normal brain. Reports of how well a certain drug works is a clue to what function of the brain has gone wrong in autism (hence, what function of the brain has been hit by 'the lavender liquid').

3. an investigation of the vaccines when they arrive in the doctor's office. Has anyone put the stuff under a microscope? I do not mean so we can see the structure of the virus. I mean so we can detect anything that does not belong there!

Finally, let's recall that the US government was a major surreptitious distributer of LSD for many years (see Hank Albarelli's "A Terrible Mistake"), and a lot of people may have developed schizophrenia as a result. The headquarters for this was Ft Detrick, Maryland, which has since become a center for cancer research. It would be foolish to rule out that autism has been deliberately caused. (Could the 'lavender liquid' in fact be LSD?)

You may wish to follow a case that is proceeding right now, in 2011, in federal district court in San Francisco. Frank Rochelle is the main plaintiff in a class action suit for thousands of US army veterans who were treated as guinea pigs without their consent during their service. They were made to sign an oath that they would not tell anyone, including their physician, what had been done to them.

Given all that has happened with regard to such 'experimentation,' I urge, with regard not only to autism, but to all the newly spreading neurological diseases - Alzheimer's, multiple sclerosis, Parkinson's, dystonia, etc. -- that the scientist do a thought experiment. She should ask if there could be a way for a chemical, maliciously delivered, to bring about the symptoms.

^^^^^^^^^^^^^^^^^^^^^^^^^^^^^^

Mary W Maxwell, PhD, is the author of "Prosecution for Treason: Weather War, Epidemics, and Mind Control." The book is sold at Barnes and Noble and at alibris.com.

TheUnhivedMind - June 22, 2011 12:59 AM (GMT)

Autism Ideas Part 10:

When Is A Syringe Not A Syringe?

By Mary W Maxwell, PhD
6-21-11
http://rense.com/general94/aut10.htm

The answer, we shall see below, to the question "When is a syringe not a syringe?" is "When it's a Kalashnikov." And that brings us straight to the question of whether it is proper to use humor when discussing tragedies. I have received a bit of criticism for it and have cut back accordingly. But, of course, when the bozos in charge of the tragedies make statements that are roll-in-the-aisles funny, I have to quote them verbatim. And they often do.

Next, there is the great Political Correctness issue of the moment, which goes like this: Public health is a beautiful thing. Public health requires that everyone use the miracles of modern science by submitting to vaccination. If you raise doubts in your neighbor's mind by speaking of the hazards of immunization in general, or the XXX [name redacted] shot in particular, you are a worthless scumball, and ought to be silenced.

Needless to say I am having none of that. Yet it should not be thought that I want to tell anyone to stay off the bottle. I mean the syringe. I mean the Kalashnikov. Whatever. I'm a New Hampshire-style conservative Republican holding the normal conservative, i.e., anti-liberal, position that a Nanny state is not desirable. Let every man think for himself, and if he wants a Kalashnikov stuck in his arm, that's fine.

There are at least three amazing things that have lurked in syringes WITH FULL APPROVAL OF GOVERNMENTS. One is an anti-fertility toxoid that affects the chorion of young women; another is AIDS-infested blood from Arkansas prisoners (who were probably given the AIDS in the first place via a syringe, why not). Still another is nano-particles that lead to death by way of a damaged lung. I shall now describe these, but you can skip over the section if it's already part of your Weltanschauung that government does malicious things.

THE CHORION THING AND THE ARKANSAS PRISONERS' BLOOD

Question: Why did the World Health Organization -- if you can even imagine an entity operating under such a name -- undertake to run a tetanus vaccine campaign in Philippines, Mexico, and Nicaragua? It gets better: Why did the WHO choose as its target population only women , no men (wait, who is more likely to step on a rusty nail in the shed, a female or a male?). And better: why were only women of child-bearing age included?

Answer no prize if you get this right - WHO wanted to lower the fertility in those countries. The tetanus shot had a little something extra in it. As one would have known if one had been following the research for anti-pregnancy drugs, the female body produces hCG (human chorionic gonadotropin) to help the fertilized egg settle into the uterus. Thus, an ability to interfere with a woman's hCG would have an aborting effect.

In fact it was Catholic anti-abortion groups who figured out what was going on. They noticed that many Filipina women were unable to get pregnant. They asked Why were the women being required to get boosters for their 'tetanus' shots, when everybody know a tetanus protection lasts ten years? In 1994 these same groups grabbed a few vials of the offending liquid and had them lab-tested. They contained hCG.

The point of mixing actual hCG into the tetanus vaccine is that they wanted the woman's body to react to the hCG not in the normal way but as an invader. This was accomplished by tying it to 'the tetanus toxiod.' Then, later, if the woman gets pregnant and she creates her natural supply of hCG, her immune system fights against it. The WHO "Special Programme in Reproductive Health" (oh dear) began in 1972, and by 1993 this vaccine was in use. Ohio State University participated in the research. Rockefellers and the NIH did too, natch. And did I mention the World Bank?

Now to the incredible story of Bill Clinton's team, including Vince Foster (who had to be taken out, but then so were dozens of Clinton staffers). In the 1980s they sold blood, to Canada, from prisoners in Arkansas. Any person with an IQ in the double digits can see that prisoners should not be blood donors, as the likelihood of coercion is too great. This blood, moreover, was contaminated with the HIV virus -- and also with Hepatitis C.

A Canadian man, Mike McCarthy, who has hemophilia and therefore needs occasional blood transfusions, caught onto the problem. Of course he could get no help from our attorney general, Janet Reno. He found that one of the "health companies" trafficking in the blood was Connaught which, incidentally, was also named as a provider of the aforementioned tetanus vaccine in the Philippines! (Leave your conspiracy theories at the door, please.)

JERRYISTICS # 3, 4, and 5

A remarkable moment occurred in Parliament in regard to the fact that the then cabinet member (later, prime minister) Paul Martin, was being chased down because of his business dealings with Connaught. As writer Paul Likoudis put it:

"During the raucous session of Parliament where Martin was grilled intensely by Commons members, Canadian Prime Minister Jean Chretien jumped to the defense of his fellow Quebecois, and chastised those asking Martin to come clean. 'I think the opposition is reaching very far when they want to attack the minister of finance who is very well known for his integrity. For the opposition to reach that far into the past to try to find something against the minister who was doing his job properly is making a mockery of democracy,' said Chretien."

In my opinion, when an incident like that occurs, nothing more needs to be said. It all clicks at that moment. Click! Allow me to interject a mention of my project on "Jerryistics." That is the name I give to 'epistemological tools' that can help us get around some of the illogic and irrationality that comes at us from the media and the courts.

My collection thus far has only two Jerryistics. Number One holds that when the government frames someone up for a crime (such as James Earl Ray for the assassination of MLK), we should take it as a rebuttable presumption that the government itself was the perpetrator of that crime. Logical, eh?

Jerryistic #2 is as follows: a sudden gap in information should be taken to mean (again, rebuttably) that someone is deliberately hiding something. For example Greg Hallett, who has good reason to think Adolf Hitler was Tavistock-trained in 1912, shows how every biographer of Hitler skirts around that year. Woo-oo-oo.

Now for Number Three. Nothing of merit could cause Chretien to come up with the notion that to hold a minister accountable in parliament "makes a mockery of democracy." The statement is itself absurd and should lead right straight to another rebuttable presumption. Thus, I hereby identify, as Jerryistic #3, a new epistemological tool, which holds that when a politician resorts to 'value words' -- such as apple pie or democracy it's an indication of guilt and cover-up.

For another tool, we can go back to the hCG story. In the article "Are New Vaccines Laced with Birth Control Drugs?" we find: "When the first reports surfaced in the Philippines of tetanus toxoid vaccine being laced with hCG hormones, the WHO and the Philippine Department of Health (DOH) immediately denied that the vaccine contained hCG."

When "confronted with the results of laboratory tests that detected its presence in three of the four vials of tetanus toxoid examined, the WHO and DOH scoffed at the evidence coming from 'right-to-life and Catholic' sources. So let's say that Jerryistic #4 will apply when parties confronted with their guilt start to 'scoff.'

And Jerryistic #5 will cover, as in the following, the sudden morphing of a denial into a whole new excuse (in this case, two excuses):

"Four new vials of the tetanus vaccine were submitted to St. Luke's (Lutheran) -- and all four vials tested positive for hCG! From outright denial the stories now shifted to the allegedly 'insignificant' quantity of the hCG present. But of 30 women tested subsequent to receiving tetanus toxoid vaccine, 26 tested positive for high levels of anti-hCGWhy were the women harboring anti-hCG antibodies? New arguments surfaced: hCG's apparent presence in the vaccine was due to "false positives" resulting from particular substances mixed in the vaccine."

NANO-PARTICLES

Bill Engdahl, who deserves to be trusted, because his book "Seeds of Destruction" gives such a wonderful warning about our imperiled agriculture, has pointed out, in an article at <http://globalresearch.ca>globalresearch.ca, that the next thing we have to worry about finding in our syringes is nano-particles. Unlike the Arkansas AIDS blood, and the surreptitious anti-fertility vaccination, this potential disaster has not yet received coverage by activists.

Engdahl notes that two approved vaccines containing nano-particles are about to be mass distributed in Germany, despite the fact that Beijing Chaoyang Hospital recently discovered, in the case of women who were exposed to nanoparticles at their workplace, that serious lung damage is to be expected. Their report said:

"Pathological examinations of patients' lung tissue displayed nonspecific pulmonary inflammation, pulmonary fibrosis and foreign-body granulomas of pleura.Nanoparticles were observed to lodge in the cytoplasm and caryoplasm of pulmonary epithelial and mesothelial cells, but are also located in the chest fluid." (See Y. Song, "Exposure to nanoparticles," European Respiratory Journal, 9/2009, 559-567.)

CONCLUSION

Of course it is not my wish to add a new fear. Quite the opposite. If health officials are aware of the lung-damage threat and would yet subject their people to it, all we have to do is understand clearly that this is not an act of God. It is plain ordinary crime. We should make the criminals do a little dance -- in an arboreal setting, so to speak.

Enough is enough. I recommend we find out who it was that recently re-engineered the 1918 flu virus. Call me a spoilsport but I say that's murder. And if he or she happens to be an American, working for the government and thus performing such 'work' in my name, I want to have a go at him/her personally. Why not? I can't very well look to the government, i.e., the accused, to sort it out, can I? Ah, but that opens another matter that cannot easily be discussed here. Please see my series of articles entitled "Delenda est cabal."

The present article is the final entry in my 'Autism Ideas' series. Granted, this one did not discuss autism at all. I hope it gives the autism families the notion that malice cannot be ruled out in regard to the autism epidemic. I am ashamed to be the bearer to them of the news that anyone could have knowingly caused their child's devastation. But Mike McCarthy, mentioned above, says 1,000 hemophiliacs died from the tainted blood, and it certainly looks if on no stronger grounds that Cretin's defense of Paul Martin in parliament that those deaths were planned.

I used to babysit for a hemophiliac boy who grew up to be a fine choir director in Cambridge MA. At the age of 35 he died of AIDS. That left a big hole in his family. And what wonders might he have accomplished in music if some sick minds -- the minds of the cabal had not played God with him!

I once asked Dr Alan Cantwell why more gay men had not kicked up a fight when he and others (such as Robert Strecker and Len Horowitz) laid out the truth about AIDS, namely that it was a genocide. (Twenty five million human beings dead so far.) He said they were too sad to handle it, as so many of their friends had died.

We can help each other. We are a society. Margaret Thatcher said there is no society. What did she know? Poor thing.

^^

Mary W Maxwell, PhD, can be found at Trineday.com. She welcomes republication of her articles.

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: Vaccines in Pakistan, Drones in Yemen [Vd]

Title: Vaccines in Pakistan, Drones in Yemen [Vd]

TheUnhivedMind - June 20, 2011 02:35 AM (GMT)

Vaccines in Pakistan, Drones in Yemen

http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=r22rG9cfXIU

[dohtml]<object style="height: 390px; width: 640px"><param name="movie" value="http://www.youtube.com/v/r22rG9cfXIU?version=3"><param name="allowFullScreen" value="true"><param name="allowScriptAccess" value="always"><embed src="http://www.youtube.com/v/r22rG9cfXIU?version=3" type="application/x-shockwave-flash" allowfullscreen="true" allowScriptAccess="always" width="640" height="390"></object>[/dohtml]

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: Vaccine hope for prostate cancer sufferers

Title: Vaccine hope for prostate cancer sufferers

TheUnhivedMind - June 20, 2011 12:38 AM (GMT)

Vaccine hope for prostate cancer sufferers

By James Gallagher
19 June 2011 Last updated at 18:13
http://www.bbc.co.uk/news/health-13807205

A new approach to developing cancer vaccines has been used to treat prostate tumours, an international team of scientists has said.

DNA from healthy cells was used to create a vaccine which cured 80% of mice, Nature Medicine reports.

The researchers believe the principle could be applied to other cancers and have begun studies on melanoma.

Cancer Research UK said it was a significant development, but human trials would be needed.

Cancer vaccines are not new. Unlike traditional vaccines which protect against infection, these work by making the immune system attack tumours already in the body.

Specifically they target markers on the surface of cancerous cells, known as antigens.

Professor Alan Melcher, of the University of Leeds, said: "The biggest challenge in immunology is developing antigens that can target the tumour without causing harm elsewhere."

Mobilising defences

Researchers in Leeds and at the Mayo Clinic, in the US, broke up chunks of DNA from healthy prostate cells and inserted them into a virus.

The mice were then repeatedly infected with the virus.

The prostate DNA made the virus produce a wide range of prostate antigens, so when the immune system battled the virus it learned to attack the cancerous prostate cells.

Crucially, healthy prostate cells and other parts of the body were not affected.

In the lab, a course of nine injections with the virus cured 80% of mice with prostate tumours.

Professor Melcher said human trials were years rather than months away.

"We have reason to be quite excited. It's not out-of-the-blue research, but based on immunotherpay and virus treatments which are looking very promising and that is what is really exciting," he added

Doctors recently claimed that the drug Ipilimumab, which stimulates the immune system to fight cancer, could increase life expectancy.

Researchers say using healthy DNA is a "proof of principle" which could have implications for vaccines for other cancers. They are trialing the same technique in mice with skin cancer.

Professor Peter Johnson, Cancer Research UK's chief clinician, said: "This is an interesting and significant study which could really broaden out the field of immunotherapy research.

"Although the vaccine didn't trigger the immune system to overreact and cause serious side effects in mice, it will need to be further developed and tested in humans before we can tell whether this technique could one day be used to treat cancer patients."

Dr Kate Holmes, research manager at the Prostate Cancer Charity, said the study provided "new hope".

"Although we are hopeful that the results of this study could help to form the basis of a new cancer vaccine in future, it is important to remember that the researchers have only investigated the potential of their vaccine in mice.

"Further research looking at its effect in men is needed. We look forward to the outcome."

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: Glaxo steps up presence in China with purchase of Title: Glaxo steps up presence in China with purchase of Description: flu vaccine partner

TheUnhivedMind - June 15, 2011 03:41 AM (GMT)

Glaxo steps up presence in China with purchase of flu vaccine partner GlaxoSmithKline (GSK) has stepped up its presence in China, a key battleground for pharmaceutical companies, by buying out its partner in a Chinese flu vaccine joint venture.

By Rachel Cooper
11:33PM BST 14 Jun 2011
http://www.telegraph.co.uk/finance/newsbys...ne-partner.html

Britain's biggest drug maker said yesterday it would pay £24m to acquire the remaining 51pc stake held by Shenzhen Neptunus Interlong Bio-Technique in the joint company, Shenzhen GSK-Neptunus Biologicals.

GlaxoSmithKline

In June 2009, GSK took a 40pc stake in the joint venture for £21m and raised this to 49pc in August the following year. The drug maker has always said its aim was to gain majority control within two years.

"The announcement represents an expansion of GSK's long-term commitment to vaccine supply, manufacturing and development in China," said John Lepore, a vice-president at GSK China.

Analysts highlighted the opportunities for GSK to increase its vaccine offering in China.

"China is the world's third-largest vaccine market, and yet still significantly underdeveloped, with annual sales of [about] $1bn and double-digit annual growth," said Navid Malik, an analyst at Matrix.

Brian White, an analyst at Shore Capital, added: "We have previously highlighted the importance of GSK's vaccine franchise to rejuvenate the company's previously lacklustre position in China (number 12 pharmaceutical company).

"While paediatric vaccines will likely require collaborative partnerships to capitalise on the Chinese opportunity, there is substantial scope... for GSK's new vaccines such as Cervarix (cervical cancer) to make significant inroads in what is an as yet untapped market."

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: Massive depopulation push against the Third World

Title: Massive depopulation push against the Third World

TheUnhivedMind - June 6, 2011 05:31 PM (GMT)

Drug firms cut vaccine prices to the developing world

The vaccines will be sold at a price that covers the drugmakers' costs

6 June 2011 Last updated at 16:50
http://www.bbc.co.uk/news/business-13665501

Several major drugs companies have announced big cuts to the amounts they charge for their vaccines in the developing world.

GlaxoSmithKline (GSK), Merck, Johnson & Johnson and Sanofi-Aventis have agreed to cut prices through the international vaccine alliance Gavi.

GSK said it would cut the price of its vaccine for rotavirus by 67% to $2.50 (£1.50) a dose in poor countries.

Rotavirus-related diarrhoea kills more than 500,000 children a year.

The vaccine will be subsidised by higher prices being charged in richer countries.

The rotavirus vaccine, for example, would cost about $50 in the US.
'Helped out'

"What we need is a return to invest in the next generation of new vaccines and drugs and that has to come from the profits of the medicines or the vaccines," Andrew Witty, chief executive of GSK told the BBC.

"But it's obvious that if you're in Kenya or a slum in Malawi or somewhere like that there is no capacity for those people to contribute to it, so they have to be helped out by the contribution from the middle and the richer (countries)."

Gavi is a partnership representing public and private sector organisations that helps to fund mass vaccination programmes in developing countries.

It is committed to funding the introduction of rotavirus vaccinations in 40% of the poorest countries by 2015, but it faced a $3.7bn funding shortfall and so has been appealing for price cuts and donations.

It will be holding a pledging conference in London on 13 June.

Anti-poverty campaigners welcomed the move but also called on world leaders to act.

"The pricing commitments announced today help drive momentum, but Gavi's ambition to save four million lives in the next five years is only achievable if the international donor community steps up to the plate on 13 June," said Jamie Drummond, executive director of campaign group ONE.

Malaria vaccine

Andrew Witty from GlaxoSmithKline explains their drugs pricing system

Merck has said it will provide its own rotavirus vaccine for $5 a dose, coming down to $3.50 once more than 30 million doses have been sold.

The price Gavi pays for pentavalent vaccines, which protect against diphtheria, tetanus, pertussis, hepatitis B and Haemophilus influenzae type B will be cut by two Indian firms, Serum Institute and Panacea Biotec.

GSK also said it was very close to developing the world's first malaria vaccine, which is unusual because there is no market for it in the West.

That means there is no opportunity for patients in richer countries to subsidise those in poorer countries.

As a result, GSK said that if the vaccine comes to market it would be sold at a price that provides a small return of 5%, which would be used to fund the next generation of malaria treatments.

Save the Children called on other companies to replicate the "landmark move" which it said could prevent hundreds of thousands of "needless deaths".

"It's important that Gavi now uses this to spur other vaccine producers to reduce prices and work to foster greater competition amongst producers to drive prices down even further and help even more children," said chief executive Justin Forsyth.

trk - June 13, 2011 11:40 PM (GMT)

Bill Gates and others pledge $4.3 billion for vaccines for children in poor countries

Bill Gates, the Microsoft cofounder who has recently been focusing most of his efforts on philanthropy, joined several world leaders to pledge billions for vaccines for children in poor countries.

"This is absolutely human generosity at its finest," Gates told reporters Monday at the Global Alliance for Vaccines and Immunization conference in London.

"For the first time in history, children in developing countries will receive the same vaccines against diarrhea and pneumonia as children in rich countries," Gates, who founded the alliance, said, according to Reuters.

http://latimesblogs.latimes.com/washington...countries-.html

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: NEW POISONOUS VAC FOR MENINGITIS NEXT

Title: NEW POISONOUS VAC FOR MENINGITIS NEXT

TheUnhivedMind - June 10, 2011 09:47 PM (GMT)

NEW JAB GIVES HOPE IN WAR ON MENINGITIS

Trials of the new vaccine have produced “exciting” results

Friday June 10,2011
By Jo Willey
http://www.express.co.uk/posts/view/251786...r-on-meningitis

A JAB which protects against the most deadly form of meningitis could be available by the end of the year.

Trials of the new vaccine have produced “exciting” results that could help combat the disease and save the lives of hundreds of children each year.

There is currently nothing available to protect against strains of meningitis B which account for about 90 per cent of cases in the UK.

Nine out of 10 infants given the new injection showed “robust” levels of protection against the infection and almost eight out of 10 showed a stronger than expected response, the European Society for Paediatric Infectious Diseases was told in the Hague.

Meningitis B is particularly deadly and can kill babies and toddlers in under four hours. Those who survive can be left with amputations and even brain damage.

The effectiveness of the new 4CMenB vaccine was confirmed in three large-scale studies which were unveiled at the conference.

Robust

Data on the vaccine found it guarded against about 80 per cent of 1,000 meningitis B strains from across Europe. Results from 1,800 children found it worked well alone or with vaccines for other strains of the disease. A further study on 1,500 toddlers found that it offered protection when given as a booster jab, while another showed an immune response in adolescents.

Steve Dayman, chief executive of the charity Meningitis UK, said the results were exciting. He added: “This data is a very positive step in the fight to eradicate meningitis B which is the biggest killer of all types of meningitis in the UK.

“This vaccine is the first of its kind and has the potential to save thousands of lives.”

The European licence for the vaccine was applied for last December which means that it could be available by the end of the year – although it is not yet known how much it will cost.

Harpinder Collacott of the Meningitis Research Foundation said: “The results in terms of protection look fantastic and it’s really useful to get some of the safety data which shows very few problems. It’s very, very good news.”

Until now, there has been no vaccine to guard against the deadly bug and the only hope of beating the infection is administering antibiotics as quickly as possible.

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: Fund vaccines for poorest children, pleads charity

Title: Fund vaccines for poorest children, pleads charity

TheUnhivedMind - June 10, 2011 04:38 PM (GMT)

Fund vaccines for poorest children, pleads charity

David Ferriera, from the Global Alliance for Vaccine and Immunisation: "1.7million children die every year from vaccine preventable diseases"

10 June 2011 Last updated at 05:34
http://www.bbc.co.uk/news/health-13717202

Save the Children is urging David Cameron and other world leaders to help fund the £2.3 billion cost of immunising the world's poorest children over the next four years.

The Global Alliance for Vaccines and Immunisation (GAVI) would use the money to immunise 243 million children by 2015 and save four million more lives.

Nearly two million children die from vaccine-preventable diseases each year.

It is a "make-or-break" situation, says the charity.

GAVI leads worldwide efforts to improve access to vaccines, bringing together governments, international organisations and pharmaceutical companies to achieve its aims.

Since 2001, it has enabled 288 million children to be vaccinated and has already averted five million deaths.

But to introduce new vaccines in the poorest countries of the world, GAVI requires £4.2 billion, of which £1.9 billion is already pledged.

In a report called 'Vaccines for All', Save the Children is calling on developed countries to pledge donations at a conference in London on Monday 13 June.

Justin Forsyth, the charity's chief executive, said that everyone has a part to play.

"World leaders have to find the funds, the private sector has to supply the vaccines at special discount prices, and developing world governments have to prioritise the delivery of vaccines, through their national health services, to help millions more children survive."
Life savers

Vaccines already save the lives of around 2.5 million children every year but Save the Children says they have the potential to save many, many more.

Statistics from Sierra Leone show that a child who receives all his or her basic immunisations is at least six times more likely to survive than a child with none.

Yet one-fifth of the world's children - around 24 million - still do not receive any life-saving vaccines.

Most of the world's unvaccinated children live in its poorest countries.

Chad has the highest percentage of unvaccinated children, at around 77%. Somalia, Equatorial Guinea and Nigeria are not far behind.

India has over nine million unvaccinated children - more than any other country.

Save the Children says donors must commit enough money "to ensure that the true potential of vaccines is realised".

Some of GAVI's more recent activity has involved introducing new vaccines against major causes of pneumonia and diarrhoea - the two of the biggest killers of children under five.

But the alliance's work also includes distributing and administering the vaccines, which means arranging for nurses and doctors to be trained, supported and paid.

Save the Children is also calling on vaccine manufacturers to work together to reduce the prices of new and existing vaccines.

Earlier this week drugs company GlaxoSmithKline (GSK) said it would cut the price of its vaccine for rotavirus by 67% to $2.50 (£1.50) a dose in poor countries.

Several other major drugs companies have announced big cuts to the amounts they charge for their vaccines in the developing world.

"That way, donors can buy more vaccines and poor countries can afford them long-term," the charity says.

The UK government is currently GAVI's largest government donor, contributing $360 million dollars over 20 years.

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: 20 NEW POISON VACCINES ON THE WAY

Title: 20 NEW POISON VACCINES ON THE WAY

TheUnhivedMind - June 10, 2011 04:37 PM (GMT)

Researchers' hope of 20 new vaccines in next decade

By Jane Dreaper
9 June 2011 Last updated at 16:10
http://www.bbc.co.uk/news/health-13714224

Researchers writing in The Lancet say there is the potential to develop 20 new or improved vaccines in the next decade.

A group of scientists says funding is crucial - but so is trust and confidence in vaccines.

They identify AIDS and malaria vaccines as the most important areas for research.

But the authors say neglected tropical diseases, such as leprosy, should also be investigated.

And in a "call to action", the scientists say: "We must also consider vaccines beyond classic infections, such as insulin-dependent diabetes, cancers and degenerative diseases.
'Fragile' confidence

"We need to find the requisite funds for the research and development of about 20 improved or novel vaccines in the next decade or beyond.
Continue reading the main story
“
Start Quote

It is perhaps surprising that the public aren't always comfortable with immunisation.”
Professor Richard Moxon
Oxford University

"This call to action comes at a crucial time. In some communities, recent declines in vaccine uptake provide a stark reminder that public confidence and trust in immunisation is fragile and requires attention."

Professor Richard Moxon, from Oxford University, came up with the idea for the series of papers looking at the future of vaccine research.

He said: "Considering the unambiguous and beneficial track record of immunisation, it is perhaps surprising that the public aren't always comfortable with it.

"It's complex. Perhaps one of the things that's most important is that vaccines are given to healthy people - often children.
Safety issues

"Safety issues loom very large because there's very little awareness of many of the diseases that have been prevented by vaccines, such as polio and whooping cough."

Professor Moxon said he believed an AIDS vaccine was still many years away, but there might be an effective malaria vaccine within five years.

He and his fellow authors are calling on developing countries to shoulder more of the responsibility for financing vaccination programmes.

They said: "Most developing countries accord too low a priority to health in their budgets.

"They must be persuaded to take more of the burden themselves on behalf of their poorer citizens."

Funding for vaccines in developing countries will be examined at a crucial meeting in London on Monday, when an effort is made to raise more than £2m for immunisation programmes over the next four years.

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: An Interview About Vaccines with Helen V. Ratajcza

Title: An Interview About Vaccines with Helen V. Ratajcza
Description: PhD

TheUnhivedMind - June 8, 2011 02:42 AM (GMT)

Part 1 of 3: An Interview About Vaccines with Helen V. Ratajczak, PhD

By Catherine J. Frompovich | June 6th, 2011 | Category: Catherine Frompovich, Interviews, http://vactruth.com/2011/06/06/part-1-of-3...-ratajczak-phd/

"The only safe vaccine is one that is never used."
Dr. James R. Shannon, former Director, National Institute of Health [1955-68]

In today's environment of mandatory vaccines with no safety studies performed on them by the U.S.FDA—at least according to Congressional Hearings on vaccines and autism held 1999-2004—since they would cost too much per FDA, health consumers are left in the dark as to why their children experience horrible health problems post-vaccination. That is not a rash statement. All one has to do is check out the thousands of vaccine adverse reaction reports filed with the CDC's VAERS reporting system. See http://vaers.hhs.gov/index. Until September 2, 2010, almost $2Billion in claims was paid for vaccine-related damages. Here's where to file a vaccine adverse reaction http://vaers.hhs.gov/resources/vaers_form.pdf.

Wanting to know more from a scientist's point of view—especially one who worked in the field of immunology and toxicology, I thought that an interview with Helen V. Ratajczak, PhD, could shed some light on a few questions that I had. Dr. R was extremely gracious about the interview. She answered every question I put to her along with providing citations and documentation. She has more than 100 publications and presentations to her credit.

Since retirement, Helen V. Ratajczak, PhD, is focusing on research on Autism. Her most recent pre-retirement position was that of senior scientist at Boehringer Ingelheim Pharmaceuticals, Inc., where she performed safety testing on components of medicines. In addition, Dr. R measured biomarkers and other substances in the peripheral blood of different species of animals and conducted hypersensitivity tests.

Prior to that position, she worked at IIT Research Institute, and was the leader of the Immunology Group. Research there included designing and performing hypersensitivity testing, studying the chronobiology of immunologic endpoints in the mouse and directing the research of graduate students. Ratajczak also taught applied immunology to graduate students at IIT.

Former positions that Ratajczak occupied in her long career included working at medical schools where she studied a mouse model of breast cancer, immunology of the eye, and hypersensitivity pneumonitis in the rabbit model of farmers' lung disease. Her PhD research was on respiratory syncytial virus in a golden Syrian hamster model. The research for her MS degree was on rheumatoid arthritis in the human. Her BS degree was in chemistry with a mathematics and physics minor.

Throughout Ratajczak's illustrious career she focused on immunology and toxicology with an emphasis on hypersensitivity.

With such impeccable credentials, Dr. Ratajczak is more than qualified to discuss immunological and hypersensitivity issues currently surrounding mandatory vaccinations for infants, toddlers, and teens in the United States.

During our interview I asked questions pointed at specifics that seem to have become "untouchables" for the media—especially investigative journalists—that provide the foundation of Big Pharma's vaccine ideology.

Globally, parents are prosecuted at law for harming their children when, in reality more often than realized, the damage to children is vaccine-related brain encephalopathy that medical personnel are quick to label as Shaken Baby Syndrome (SBS).

Q. 1. Shaken Baby Syndrome is now suspected as a vaccine adverse reaction when no real trauma is present on the body and/or head. How do vaccines cause intracranial swelling and /or bleeding?

Vaccines cause intracranial swelling and/or bleeding by their action as vaccines. In other words, a vaccine causes an immune response, which involves production of antibodies and sensitization of thymic-dependent lymphocytes that are specific for the antigen (bacterium or virus in the vaccine). In some cases there are cross-reactions of the antibodies specific for the vaccine antigen(s) with brain antigens. For example, measles IgG positive autistic sera were also positive for brain antigens: 90% were positive for anti-myelin basic protein and 73% for anti-neuron-axon filament protein. A cross-reaction was also present for human herpesvirus-6 antibody in autistic sera that was similarly positive for brain antigens. Eighty-four (84) % were positive for anti-myelin basic protein and 72% for anti-neuron-axon filament protein. (See Ratajczak, 2011; Singh et al., 1993, 1998, 2002.) In addition, in children with autism, neuron-specific antigens may cross-react with encephalitogenic proteins from milk, Chlamydia pneumoniae and Streptococcus group A. The antibodies may have been synthesized as a result of an alteration in the blood-brain barrier, allowing preexisting T-lymphocytes and central nervous system antigens access to immunocompetent cells, which may start a vicious cycle (Vojdani et al., 2002). The immune system would react against those targets for which specific reactions (antibody and cell-mediated immunity) were made, killing them.

When cells of the immune system are sensitized, the cells divide. Therefore, there is more cellular mass in the lymph nodes that drain the antigen presentation site. In addition, the cells make cytokines, which cause other cells to come into the area. Inflammation is a protective and restorative reaction of the body. However, when it is not controlled, and becomes chronic, there is continued presence of lymphocytes, polymorphonuclear leukocytes, monocytes, and plasma cells, antibodies and cytokines. Chronic inflammation may be caused by persistence of foreign material, such as a vaccine. The adjuvant in the vaccine causes its absorption by the body to be very long in duration so that adequate sensitization is achieved to provide protection against the antigen in the vaccine.

Q. 2. From 32 to 52 weeks of an infant's life, there is accelerated brain growth with limited myelin protection. However, during that time infants receive about 21 vaccines. What impact is there upon infants' CNS, physical brain, and immune system?

In the USA, in 2010, 50 doses of 14 vaccines are given by the age of six years with Hip B given at birth, and again at 2 months along with Rotavirus, Diphtheria, Tetanus, Pertussis (three vaccines in one injection), Homophiles influenza type b, pneumococcal, and inactivated poliovirus (CDC, 2010). Two months is the most vulnerable age immunologically. Most infant mortality occurs at 2 months because the protection from the mother's immunity is waning, and the child's immunity is still immature. At two months, the polymorphonuclear cells are less in number than the lymphocytes in the peripheral blood, opposite the normal situation with the polymorphonuclear cells being about twice the number of lymphocytes (Diem, 1962). In addition, the phagocytic cells and complement system of a newborn are decreased in function (Xanthou et al., 1975; Madden et al, 1989). Thus, the immune system is compromised at two months. A challenge by so many vaccines while the immune system is compromised might contribute to an onset of autism (Ratajczak, 2011). The inflammation caused by the vaccines would damage the central nervous system and brain.

The inflammation persists, resulting in increased head circumference, noted at one month of life and peaking at 6 months with a smaller difference at 12 months, compared to neurotypical controls (Fukumoto, 2008). When the brain is growing so rapidly (between 32 and 52 weeks of age), the infants receive over 21 vaccines (Buttram, 2008).

Q. 3. What can happen if an infant suffered an earlier brain hemorrhage (possibly undetected during birth, i.e., during vacuum extraction or from forceps) and then receives vaccines, e.g., Hep B at birth, then at 2, 4, 6 month schedules. Is there any probability of vaccine-induced lipid peroxidation? If yes, what happens to an infant's brain?

The hemorrhage would deplete the body of blood cells, and the regeneration of those cells would take more time than in an older host. The infant would be even more vulnerable after a hemorrhage, and the insult of vaccines at birth and at 2, 4, and 6 months could cause death. It is best not to give vaccines to an immune-compromised individual. Vaccines do cause lipid peroxidation, which, along with antibody specific for the antigens in the vaccines cross-reacting with elements of the brain, cause cell death.

Q. 4. What role, if any, do vaccines play in Sudden Infant Death Syndrome (SIDS)?

Epidemiology links vaccines with the Sudden Infant Death Syndrome. Cherry et al. (1988) suggested a link between the Japanese vaccination schedule and SIDS because after infant deaths occurred directly after vaccination between 1970 and 1974 in Japan, some doctors gave no vaccines to infants for two months, and then began vaccinations only to children 2 years old or older. Japan jumped from 17th place in child mortality to the lowest child mortality in the world (Vaccine Awareness Network, 05 May, 2011). Similar results happened in other countries, such as the United Kingdom. The postneonatal mortality dropped in 1976 when there was publicity about the whooping cough vaccine causing brain damage, and the vaccination rate fell to only 10 – 30%, with a concomitant fall in infant mortality rate. Similar results were achieved in India.

Q. 5. Are you familiar with the Pourcyrous brain inflammation studies reported in the Journal of Pediatrics in 2007? If yes, any comments, please.

The Pourcyrous study (2007) was conducted to determine the incidence of cardiorespiratory events and abnormal C-reactive protein level associated with administration of a single vaccine or multiple separate vaccines simultaneously. The subjects were 239 preterm infants at >2 months of age in the neonatal intensive care unit. Each infant received either a single vaccine or multiple vaccines on one day. CRP levels and cardiorespiratory manifestations were monitored for 3 days following immunization. CRP levels were elevated in 85% of those given multiple vaccines and up to 70% of those given a single vaccine. Sixteen (16) percent had vaccine-associated cardiorespiratory events within 48 hours. Abnormal CRP values were associated with multiple vaccines and severe intraventricular hemorrhage. Cardiorespiratory events were associated marginally with receipt of multiple injections and significantly with gastroesophageal reflux. The study was the first of its kind, and presents a unified theory of adverse vaccine reactions (Buttram, 2010). The data provide evidence for a unified theory of adverse vaccine reactions: Brain inflammation, as indicated by elevations of CRP; brain swelling (edema), as one of the cardinal manifestations of inflammation; potentially lethal cardio-respiratory events (bradycardia and apnea); and intraventricular brain hemorrhages.

The brain hemorrhages in the study were intraventricular rather than subdural because the subjects were preterm infants, in whom intraventricular hemorrhages are characteristic. In preterm infants the skull is highly flaccid, providing little if any resistance to a swollen (edematous) brain. In contrast, in term infants, the inner surface of the skull is a relatively firm surface, and when brain inflammation and edema take place from vaccines, it requires very little brain swelling for the outer surface of the brain to impact against the inner surface of the skull, cutting off the passive outflow of blood in the subdural venous network. With cranial arterial blood coming in at much higher pressures, this would bring a precipitous rise in intracranial venous pressure, causing an extrusion of blood into the subdural spaces.

At this point I'd like to interject that Harold E. Buttram, MD, and I co-authored a comprehensive paper on brain encephalopathy using the Pourcyrous study as our "jumping off point" for what we call, "Vaccines and Brain Inflammation." Our paper is being published in an online vaccine medical journal. I'd be interested in hearing your comments about it. To which Dr. Ratajczak replied, I am looking forward to reading it. Please give me a copy when it is available.

Q. 6. Formaldehyde is an EPA-declared carcinogen that is in many vaccines. Can you please talk about it and how it reacts in the body?

The Children's Hospital of Philadelphia (2010) has addressed the issue of formaldehyde and concerns for safety. In cells grown in the laboratory, high concentrations of formaldehyde can damage DNA and cause cancerous changes. They state that formaldehyde does not appear to be a cause of cancer in man or in animals. Formaldehyde is essential in human metabolism and is required for the synthesis of DNA and amino acids. In all humans there are detectable quantities of natural formaldehyde. For a 2-month-old child, the total quantity of formaldehyde would be about 1.1 mg, at least five-fold greater than that to which an infant would be exposed by vaccines.

Q. 7. Polysorbate 80 causes infertility in lab rat studies, and it's an ingredient in vaccines. What can you say about it?

Polysorbate 80 (also known as Alkest TW80, Tween 80, Polyoxyethylene (80) sorbitan monooleate, (x)-sorbitan mono-9-octadecenoate poly(oxy-1,2-ethanediyl), POE (80) sorbitan monooleate, and E433) is a nonionic surfactant and emulsifier derived from polyethoxylated sorbitan and oleic acid, and is often used in foods. Polysorbate 80 is an excipient used to stabilize aqueous formulations of medications for parenteral administration and in some influenza vaccines, and the culture of Mycobacterium tuberculosis. (See Wikipedia, 2011a.)

It is important to remember what Paracelsus said centuries ago: “What is there that is not poison? All things are poison and nothing [is] without poison. Solely the dose determines that a thing is not a poison.” (Eaton and Klassen, 1996.) With this is mind, the amount of any ingredient might be safe in a particular vaccine. However, when combined with other vaccines or when given repeatedly, other mechanisms can be brought into play. For example, vaccines typically contain adjuvants. Several vaccines containing adjuvants, either the same adjuvant or ones of different compositions, can add up to a toxic situation, either additively, or, worse, synergistically. [CJF emphasis added] In addition, the components of the adjuvants can themselves be antigenic, causing immune responses specific for their constituents.

Some toxic aspects of Polysorbate 80 follow: Polysorbate 80 has been identified as the causative agent for the anaphylactoid reaction of nonimmunologic origin in the human. Polysorbate specific IgE antibodies were not identified, confirming the nonimmunologic nature of the anaphylactoid reaction (Coors et al.,, 2005). In addition, delayed effects of neonatal exposure to Tween 80 on female reproductive organs in rats have been documented (Gajdova et al., 1993). Also in rats, a study in 1956 saw no effect of Polysorbate 80 on reproduction at up to 5% of their diet. But reproduction decreased at 20% of the diet. This study was performed when the rats were sexually mature (110 days old). (See Oser and Oser, 1956.) In contrast, a study on neonatal female rats injected with Polysorbate 80 on days 4-7 after birth showed that the Polysorbate 80 prolonged the estrus cycle, and induced persistent vaginal estrus. The relative weight of the uterus and ovaries was decreased relative to untreated controls. These two studies exemplify the critical windows of time during which individuals are more vulnerable (Dietert and Dietert, 2008; Ratajczak, 2011).

The data suggest Polysorbate 80 could cause reproductive problems in vaccine recipients. Therefore more safety tests are needed prior to use of products containing this product. [CJF emphasis added]

Q. 8. Many folks are turned off of vaccines because of aborted fetal cell mediums they are grown on. There’s speculation that diploid cells, as they are referred to, interact adversely within an infant’s brain, almost like turning against brain cells? What can you say about the diploid cell connection to Autism?

The theory about the harm caused by growth in human tissue of viruses to be used in vaccines is that human DNA will be in the resultant viruses. (When a virus grows, it must be inside a cell, and as the virus matures, it takes part of the cell – in this case, DNA – with it.) And that human DNA will be from a different individual that the recipient of the vaccine. When DNA from one human is introduced into another human, there is the possibility of homologous recombination (Wikipedia, 2011b), with the new DNA being incorporated into the recipient's DNA. Now the recipient of the vaccine would have altered DNA (altered self) in his body. The immune system kills altered self or this altered DNA. This constitutes an autoimmune situation, which is ongoing throughout life. It is known that there are autoimmune components to autism. In recipients of vaccines containing human DNA, the autoimmunity could be caused by the DNA from the human tissue in which the virus was grown. Homologous recombination only occurs if the DNA is from the same species. So the use of viruses grown in tissue from other animals would not result in homologous recombination.

Q. 9. What do you have to say about foreign DNA from insects, monkeys, chicks, pigs, bovine calf, etc. in vaccines?

Foreign DNA from insects, chickens, or mammals other than humans would not be incorporated into the DNA of the recipient of the vaccine. However, there are sometimes other concerns about the use of these sources in which to grow the vaccine components.

Dr. Ratajczak, what are some of those other concerns? Can you please clue us in on that?

For example, viruses likely to be encountered in vaccine production using monkey kidney cells include B virus, miscellaneous simian viruses, "foamy agent", "measles"-like agent, haemadsorption viruses, lymphocytic chorio-meningitis (LCM) virus and arbor viruses. The B virus, LCM, measles and the arbor viruses are definite human pathogens. (See Tobin, 1960).

There is a possibility that allergies to the tissue in which the vaccine components are grown will develop in recipients of the vaccines.[I]

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: GlaxoSmithKline and Crucell to test malaria jab

Title: GlaxoSmithKline and Crucell to test malaria jab
Description: [MORE POISON]

TheUnhivedMind - June 7, 2011 10:43 PM (GMT)

GlaxoSmithKline and Crucell to test malaria jab

GlaxoSmithKline (GSK) and Crucell are joining forces to test a next-generation vaccination against malaria.

By Rachel Cooper
6:21PM BST 07 Jun 2011
http://www.telegraph.co.uk/finance/newsbys...alaria-jab.html

Britain's biggest drug maker already has a malaria shot, known as Mosquirix, in late-stage development.

But in an attempt to improve its effectiveness, the new vaccine takes an amended version of GSK's shot and adds an engineered common cold virus developed by Crucell, which was recently bought by Johnson & Johnson (J&J).

This "primes" the immune system to get a stronger response. Patients will get one dose of Crucell's weakened virus vaccine, followed by two doses of Mosquirix.

"We are at an important moment in malaria vaccine development," said Dr Christian Loucq, director of the PATH Malaria Vaccine Initiative, which is collaborating with the two companies.

The move comes in the same week that drug makers including GSK, Merck, J&J and Sanofi cut their prices on vaccines for people in developing countries in an effort to sustain supplies.

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: The depopulation agenda continues in Liberia

Title: The depopulation agenda continues in Liberia

TheUnhivedMind - June 6, 2011 04:58 PM (GMT)

Community vaccine programme helping reduce child deaths in Liberia

Outreach immunisation initiative in Liberia is preventing disease among women and children

Liz Ford in Kingsville, Liberia
guardian.co.uk, Monday 6 June 2011 14.00 BST

Jemama Weegie fills in the immunisation record for Prince Roberts and his mother, Sianeh, at Garzon school in Liberia. Photograph: Jane Hahn/Save the Children

The long line of women, with babies strapped to their backs and young children by their sides, suddenly rush forward when the motorbike pulls up in the grounds of Garzon village school, about an hour and a half's drive from the Liberian capital of Monrovia.

Many of the women have been waiting for hours in the humid morning heat for the arrival of the bike's passenger, community immuniser Jemama Weegie.

Dressed in a medical uniform of dark green smock and black trousers, and carrying a small cold box of vaccines, Weegie is here to immunise pregnant women, new mothers and babies under the age of one as part of an outreach programme that covers around 27 villages in the area each month.

With two helpers, Weegie sets up a table, takes out a pile of child medical records and paper from her bag and arranges an orderly queue. Over the next two hours she will screen and counsel more than 70 women and children and offer free vaccination against diseases including measles, yellow fever and polio. She also administers pentavalent, a vaccine that immunises against five diseases (diphtheria, tetanus, pertussis, hepatitis B and Hib).

"We do outreach to hard to reach areas where people don't have transportation to get to the clinic," says Weegie. "Before we do the outreach work, we go to the village and talk to women about the importance of immunisation - why it is good to do - and we tell them when to bring their children. I'm very happy we do this because it means children will not get sick and diseases will stop destroying lives."

The outreach programme is organised by Kingsville clinic, where Weegie has worked since 1998. The clinic is a government-owned facility that is managed by Save the Children and provides free medical care to a community of more than 20,000.

Garzon is only 5km from the clinic, but it's a journey over potholed roads and can take up to an hour when the rains come.

Sianeh Roberts, 19, has just received a tetanus injection, and her tearful seven-month-old son, Prince, has been given polio and pentavalent shots. Roberts left her home at 7am to make sure she was seen. She says she worries that her son will get sick as she has no money to pay for drugs. While government health centres offer free healthcare and medicine, people with little money will often buy drugs from a local private source because it's cheaper than paying for transport to a clinic.

"I will tell other people to come for vaccines. The vaccines will make my son well, so I know it's important," says Roberts.

Outreach programmes are providing a lifeline in a country where, according to government figures, 67,830 children died last year before reaching their fifth birthday. The under-five population is around 595,000.

But Liberia has made significant progress in cutting its under-five mortality rate.

According to Unicef, in 1990 there were 247 deaths per 1,000 live births; by 2009, the number had been slashed to 112. Increasing immunisation is a major part of the government's strategy to reduce this figure still further. It recently published its five-year plan to increase routine immunisation coverage from around 69% to 90% by 2015. It is also hoping to receive funding from the Global Alliance for Vaccines and Immunisation (Gavi) to roll out the pneumococcal vaccine next year.

Next week London will host a Gavi conference on vaccination funding.

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: MARY TOCCO - CHILDHOOD VACCINE DANGERS [Vd]

Title: MARY TOCCO - CHILDHOOD VACCINE DANGERS [Vd]

TheUnhivedMind - June 4, 2011 03:06 AM (GMT)

MARY TOCCO - CHILDHOOD VACCINE DANGERS

Listen to Dr Stan Monteith interview Mary Tocco about the Vaccine Inquisition. This broadcast took place on the 10th of May 2011.

Parts 1-4:
http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=L3StoHzbAFU
http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=43HsG0DE1dA http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=5DgkoYWTUgg
http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=XPuxag68EUk

[dohtml]<iframe width="480" height="390" src="http://www.youtube.com/embed/L3StoHzbAFU" frameborder="0" allowfullscreen></iframe>

<iframe width="480" height="390" src="http://www.youtube.com/embed/43HsG0DE1dA" frameborder="0" allowfullscreen></iframe>

<iframe width="480" height="390" src="http://www.youtube.com/embed/5DgkoYWTUgg" frameborder="0" allowfullscreen></iframe>

<iframe width="480" height="390" src="http://www.youtube.com/embed/XPuxag68EUk" frameborder="0" allowfullscreen></iframe>[/dohtml]

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: TB vaccination for all London newborns proposed

Title: TB vaccination for all London newborns proposed Description: [TIME TO UP TO DEPOPULATION/MISERY!]

TheUnhivedMind - June 3, 2011 03:36 PM (GMT)

TB vaccination for all London newborns proposed

London has the worst rate of cases of TB in Britain

3 June 2011 Last updated at 14:08
http://www.bbc.co.uk/news/uk-england-london-13639892

All newborn children in London could be vaccinated to reduce the spread of tuberculosis (TB), under proposals that are out for consultation.

Cases of TB have risen 50% in the capital, according to London Health Programmes (LHP), which has produced the draft plan.

LHP hopes its range of proposals, which also includes targeted testing, will help to cut the rate of the respiratory illness by 50% over the next 10 years.

The consultation runs until 13 July.

London has the poorest rate of cases of TB in Britain at 40 per 100,000 people, and it is also one of the worst in Western Europe.

The LHP draft plans say all newborn children should be vaccinated within six weeks of birth.
'Serious issue'

The BCG jab was discontinued for school children in 2005, after it was deemed unnecessary.

Other proposals include improved early identification of people with infectious TB, targeted testing and treatment of latent TB infection and an awareness and education programme.

A Department of Health spokesman said: "We recognise that tuberculosis is a serious issue in London, particularly in more deprived boroughs and among the migrant community.

"We welcome the consultation on the draft TB Plan for London.
Early detection

"However, consideration of future vaccination needs is just one of a range of areas the plan identifies for further control of TB."

Dr John Moore-Gillon, Vice President at the British Lung Foundation and TB specialist, said: "People can unknowingly have TB bacteria present in their bodies without being ill, and early detection through screening programmes is also important.

"Crucially, both the public and health care professionals need to be aware that TB is back, and growing fast."

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: 78 percent of Pakistani children with polio were Title: 78 percent of Pakistani children with polio were Description: given polio vaccines

TheUnhivedMind - June 2, 2011 06:15 PM (GMT)

78 percent of Pakistani children with polio were given polio vaccines

Thursday, June 02, 2011 by: Daniel Erickson http://www.naturalnews.com/032587_polio_va...s_Pakistan.html

In the last year, as Pakistan has lost favor with the US and UNICEF, polio virus has paralyzed increasing numbers of Pakistani youth, casting doubt on the good intentions of those who fight polio. To make matters worse, most of the new cases have occurred in children already vaccinated. Is the US attempting to fight Pakistan by tainting inoculation doses?

The medical data suggests that the vaccine has changed in its efficacy against the disease. Last year, there were 136 cases of infected youth, and 107 of these had been administered multiple polio vaccinations. These figures are the largest the Polio Global Eradication Initiative has seen since 2006, despite heavy treatment in the most affected areas, South Punjab and the Federally Administered Tribal Area (FATA).

Even the more peaceful provinces have suffered. As reported by the Pakistan Daily times, there were 10 cases of polio in Sindh province in the first four months of the year. The article morbidly notes each of the cases, citing the children's names and the number of vaccinations they had received before the onset of polio virus: "Mohammad Asif, aged 40 months with all his limbs affected... was administered oral anti polio vaccine (OPV) four times... The three and a half years old Ameera... had one of her arms and legs paralyzed... Ameera was first of the confirmed cases of polio during the current year."

As one might imagine, Pakistani citizens are beginning to suspect foul play. Dr. Mazhar Khamisani, a manager of the health department in Sindh has noted that he has seen Pakistani parents begin to refuse treatment and do so on repeated occasions. And how could we, when confronted with the facts, ask them to do otherwise?

The type of polio vaccine administered may be a significant cause of the problem. There are two main types of polio vaccine, Inactivated Polio Vaccine (IPV) and Oral Polio Vaccine (OPV). The first of these uses dead cells of poliomyelitis. IPV was developed by Jonas Salk before being disseminated throughout the US in the 1950s, to quell the outbreak that was then infecting roughly 22,000 American children each year. Within 20 years, polio was all but forgotten in America.

However, The Polio Global Eradication Initiative chooses to use the second type, Oral Polio Vaccine. OPV was developed by Albert Sabin and runs the virus through a number of animals in order to weaken the strain rather than kill it. The weakened strain is then injected into children, whose immune systems are strong enough to defeat the infection. It is easy to see how treatment could backfire, in cases when the strain has not been weakened enough for human contact.

Despite the fact that it was not widely disseminated in the US, possibly because of the dangers associated with its use, OPV is the vaccine of choice in countries like Pakistan because, soon after vaccination, weakened virus can be found in children's fecal matter. Immunity can then spread to communal water sources and increase immunity for greater portions of the population. So even if parents refuse OPV treatment, their children may still receive it indirectly through the drinking water.

Historically, there have been cases of outbreak when a weakened strain becomes strong enough to infect rather than immunize. In these cases, OPV is typically replaced by IPV because it is no longer considered safe. But OPV is still the vaccine of choice in Pakistan, even as it continues to prove its potency to the Polio Global Eradication Initiative. Why?
One explanation is that researchers have not collected enough data yet to say with certainty whether the vaccine is causing the outbreak. But how much longer will this go on?

It is equally plausible that the vaccine is not being handled properly. If the requisite temperature is not maintained, the vaccine can be rendered completely ineffectual. In remote areas, where power can be disrupted for hours and even days, the OPV treatments may have exceeded their temperature requirements and consequently lost their usefulness from temperature fluctuations. But surely, medical practitioners would know if their vaccine had potentially been compromised.

Unfortunately, both of these possibilities point to some kind of negligence. Either the doctors administering treatment are aware that their vaccine may not have the capacity to immunize their patients, or the people in charge are disseminating harmful vaccinations, then playing the victim to the 'inconclusiveness of the data' when it is clear that something has gone awry.

The Polio Global Eradication Initiative receives the majority of its funding through UNICEF and the US, both of which are beginning to look at Pakistan as an enemy, rather than a friend. Are political relations trickling down to the medical practitioners who are supposedly fighting a disease, not a country?

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: European patient groups call for mandatory vaccine

Title: European patient groups call for mandatory vaccine
Description: surveillance systems

TheUnhivedMind - June 1, 2011 11:38 PM (GMT)

European patient groups call for mandatory vaccine surveillance systems

http://www.anh-europe.org/news/european-pa...illance-systems

The European Forum for Vaccine Vigilance (EFVV) – a coalition of European support groups and individuals concerned about vaccine safety and related issues – is calling on major international bodies to take immediate action to introduce mandatory surveillance of routine vaccinations.

ANH-Intl fully supports the EFVV in this matter, which ties into our Vaccine Choice campaign. We believe that it is impossible for individuals to make informed choices about whether or not to vaccinate in the absence of the type of evidence being demanded by EFVV: that is, comprehensive and rational scientific evidence of the safety and efficacy of vaccines. ANH-Intl Executive and Scientific Director, Dr Robert Verkerk, said of the EFVV campaign, “We hope this initiative helps to shine a clearer light on the often shaky scientific basis on which vaccination decisions are made, both by healthcare authorities and the population at large. In the absence of good-quality data, authorities must provide scientifically backed information for people who choose either to vaccinate or not vaccinate. Critical to this are dietary, lifestyle and herbal approaches that have been demonstrated to support the immune system.”

In a press release issued by EFVV (reproduced in full below), Dr Meryl Nass, a US microbiologist and board-certified internist, is quoted as saying, “We urgently need to establish surveillance systems that analyze diagnosis made at outpatient visits and hospitalisations for at least one year post-vaccinations so that statistically significant links can be identified and assessed for causality”.

The EFVV request was made to European Union (EU) Member States, the World Health Organization (WHO) and the EU Environmental Committee for Public Health and Food Safety (ENVI Committee) following safety concerns highlighted during EU Immunisation Week, April 23–30, 2011. Particularly worrying are potential links between vaccination and narcolepsy, the total lack of double-blind, placebo-controlled trials of vaccines and an overly lax adverse-event reporting scheme, whereby doctors are not obliged to notify authorities of side effects.

European patient groups are supporting the EFVV in its call for vaccine surveillance. Anna Watson of the Arnica Network for Natural Immunity in the UK explained that, “Patient groups around Europe, Arnica Network for Natural Immunity and The Informed Parent in the UK for example, have joined together in their concern over inadequate vaccine safety testing and surveillance of adverse drug reactions, and have called on the WHO to support a mandatory system that monitors possible side effects from vaccines.”

European patient groups call for mandatory vaccine surveillance systems

Safety concerns at the end of EU Immunisation Week (April 23-30, 2011) have prompted European patient groups to call for mandatory surveillance systems for routine vaccines. This would include training for GPs to recognize adverse vaccine reactions (ADRs), a campaign to boost public awareness of direct vaccine side effect reporting by patients and the immediate addition to the hospital patient admission procedure of questions on vaccine status, especially the administration of any recent vaccines.

The World Health Organisation (WHO) has supported European Immunisation Week as a chance to promote widespread vaccination. On 21st April however, the WHO's Global Advisory Committee on Vaccine Safety (GACVS) stated that further investigation is needed into possible links between narcolepsy and vaccination. In 2009–2010, in Finland and Sweden, the Pandemrix swine flu vaccine caused nine times as many narcolepsy cases as expected in children. WHO noted that narcolepsy has never before been associated with vaccines.

EFVV, the European Forum for Vaccine Vigilance, is calling on EU member states, WHO and the EU Environmental Committee for Public Health and Food safety (ENVI) to mandate surveillance systems for vaccines. “We urgently need to establish surveillance systems that analyze diagnosis made at outpatient visits and hospitalizations for at least one year post-vaccinations so that statistically significant links can be identified and assessed for causality,” says Dr Meryl Nass, microbiologist. [1]

The gold standard of double-blind placebo testing (where the placebo is benign) is never applied to vaccines and there is never a control group in vaccine testing.

Professor David Salisbury, Director of the UK Immunization program, has confirmed to EFVV spokeswoman Anna Watson that placebos in vaccine safety tests have always been other vaccines and that control groups were considered unethical in the case of vaccines.

“In the absence of double-blind trials, surveillance in the community is essential as vaccines may not have been tested for interactions with other drugs, or on certain population groups such as pregnant women,” said Ms Watson. “Phase IV trials, known as Post-Marketing Surveillance Trials are vital, especially considering that Adverse Drug Reactions (ADRs) are the fifth leading cause of death in Europe,” she said.

Patients can now report ADRs directly in most European countries but most people are not aware of this. In theory, doctors and health professionals should be encouraged to complete ‘Yellow Cards’ for the Medicines and Healthcare products Regulatory Agency (MHRA) in the UK or to follow equivalent procedures in their respective countries. Vaccines are however considered ‘established medicines’, so doctors are not required to report side effects unless there is a prior association[2] or effects are life-threatening. The result is that many potential side effects from vaccines remain unreported. “If no data is collected, it remains unknown whether vaccination increases the incidence of most diseases, particularly rare diseases. Additionally, GPs have very little training in spotting adverse drug reactions,” said Ms Watson.

Vaccine manufacturers have never been successfully challenged in civil action for damages arising from a vaccine-related injury or death, because legal aid is not available, so market forces are weak in this area. It is the view of the EFVV that the Vaccine Damage Payment Fund and its European equivalents, should be calling for Mandatory Active Vaccine Surveillance to fulfill the responsibility to vaccine safety. Parents, patients and health professionals should be supported in vaccine safety initiatives. As vaccine programmes continue to increase, so should our vigilance say the EFVV.

ENDS

T: Anna Watson UK 020 8541 1501

E: efvv.info@gmail.com for European Forum Vaccine Vigilance central

Notes to Editor

EU Immunisation Week 23-30 April “Prevent, Protect, Immunize” http://eiw.euro.who.int/page/what-is-eiw

Dr. Nass is a board-certified internist who has authored many publications, testified before Congress, and spoken before medical organizations regarding the problems of vaccinations and Gulf War syndrome. New Adverse Reactions from Vaccines – Surveillence needed by By Meryl Nass, M.D.

When there is no prior association, diseases occurring in temporal relationship to vaccination are generally felt to be coincidental. Therefore, they are not generally reported to voluntary reporting systems like the UK Medicines and Healthcare products Regulatory Agency (MRHA) or the U.S. Vaccine Adverse Event Reporting System (VAERS).

Other examples of vaccine problems:

2010 suspension of Fluvax in Australia and New Zealand that “caused two or three hospital admissions due to febrile convulsions for every hospital admission due to influenza prevented,” scientists wrote.

1999 suspension of Rotavirus vaccine that caused 22 times the expected incidence of intussusception as expected (United States).

Currently Gardasil results in an average of 6 times more reports of ADRs and hospitalizations to VAERS (Vaccine Adverse Event Reporting System) than any other vaccine.

The EFVV is a coalition of European support groups and individuals concerned about the safety of vaccines, the lack of information on and public awareness of vaccine adverse effects, the preservation of human health and respect for basic human rights. The group was originally formed in 1998, conducted a six-year research project on the adverse effects of vaccines in Europe, completed in 2006, and organises a bi-annual award for ground-breaking and original independent research into the side effects of vaccines. Delegates currently represent ten different countries: France, Spain, Great Britain, the Netherlands, Belgium, Germany, Italy, Luxembourg, Slovenia and Switzerland.

[1] Dr. Nass is a board-certified internist who has authored many publications, testified before Congress, and spoken before medical organizations regarding the problems of vaccinations and Gulf War syndrome. ‘New Adverse Reactions from Vaccines – Surveillence Needed’ by By Meryl Nass, M.D.

[2] When there is no prior association, diseases occurring in temporal relationship to vaccination are generally felt to be coincidental. , They are therefore notgenerally reported to voluntary reporting systems like the UK Medicines and Healthcare products Regulatory Agency (MRHA) or the U.S. Vaccine Adverse Event Reporting System (VAERS).

ANH Homepage
ANH Vaccine Choice campaign page

Updated: 1 Jun 2011

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: How to Spot a Vaccine Zombie (Satire) [Vd]

Title: How to Spot a Vaccine Zombie (Satire) [Vd]

TheUnhivedMind - June 1, 2011 01:54 AM (GMT)

How to Spot a Vaccine Zombie (Satire)

Zombie apocalypse survival video just released

Mike Adams
May 24, 2011
http://www.naturalnews.com/032489_vaccine_...l#ixzz1NIjcvlNn

(NaturalNews) On the heels of the CDC's recent announcement that Americans should prepare for a zombie apocalypse (http://www.naturalnews.com/032454_z…), NaturalNews.TV has just released a new satire video giving people important tips on how to locate, capture and rescue "walking dead" zombies who have been harmed by vaccines.

The short comedy video is available at:
http://naturalnews.tv/v.asp?v=774BC…

[dohtml]<object width="640" height="390"><param name="movie" value="http://www.youtube.com/v/MTnqoTTPIrY&rel=0&hl=en_US&feature=player_embedded&version=3"></param><param name="allowFullScreen" value="true"></param><param name="allowScriptAccess" value="always"></param><embed src="http://www.youtube.com/v/MTnqoTTPIrY&rel=0&hl=en_US&feature=player_embedded&version=3" type="application/x-shockwave-flash" allowfullscreen="true" allowScriptAccess="always" width="640" height="390"></embed></object>[/dohtml]

In it, Mike Adams, the Health Ranger, explains how vaccines cause neurological damage leading to full-blown "zombie-ism" that can only be cured by eating lots of superfoods and boosting immune function. The video provides how-to advice for luring vaccine zombies into zombie traps where they can be force-fed nutritional supplements until the damaging effects of their vaccines wear off.

Although the video is satire, the facts about vaccines are truly ghastly: Vaccines contain neurological irritants and numerous dangerous chemicals that have no business being injected into the human body: Formaldehyde, thimerosal and aluminum, just to name a few. All three of those are extremely toxic to mammalian nervous systems which is why vaccines transform healthy children into autistic children.

Last week, the CDC.gov website suggested that a “zombie apocalypse” would result in the streets of U.S. cities being flooded with zombies that wanted to eat our brains (http://blogs.cdc.gov/publichealthma…).

But as we quickly pointed out on NaturalNews, the CDC’s advice left out self defense and instructed people to essentially head out into the streets where they would be overrun by zombie attacks with absolutely no weapons to defend themselves. “Never Fear – CDC is ready” announced a subhead in the article.

What the article failed to point out, however, is that the neurological damage caused by vaccines creates zombie-like effects in human brains, including crippling the ability for independent thought and sapping willpower. Vaccines and fluoride, combined with other toxic synthetic chemicals found in foods, medicines and consumer products, actually “zombify” human brains and transform intelligent minds into gullible human followers. From there, television news tells people what to think, what to buy, what to believe and how to vote.

The only truly free minds are the ones who resist contamination from synthetic chemicals altogether. Only from a clean bloodstream, absent synthetic chemicals, can the human brain achieve optimum function and operate at a higher level. That high level of operation is precisely what the U.S. government does not want people to achieve, because then they might attain the presence of mind needed to ask questions about inflation, the national debt, never-ending wars or why TSA agents are reaching down their pants and feeling their genitals (http://www.naturalnews.com/032401_TSA_Texas.html).

Watch How To Spot A Vaccine Zombie to be (hopefully) entertained by a satirical overview of this subject:
http://naturalnews.tv/v.asp?v=774BC5305F12...63D179C90B434FD

Phazon - June 1, 2011 05:15 AM (GMT)

Great video.

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: CDC admits flu vaccines don't work

Title: CDC admits flu vaccines don't work

TheUnhivedMind - May 31, 2011 11:33 PM (GMT)

CDC admits flu vaccines don't work (which is why you need a new one every year)

Sunday, May 29, 2011
by Mike Adams
http://www.naturalnews.com/032558_flu_shots_wear_off.html

(NaturalNews) I'm always amused by the purchasing process of electronics or appliances at big box stores. On one hand, as their sales associate calmly explains to you, whatever product you're buying is such high quality that you'll be extremely satisfied with your purchase. But on the other hand, it's also such a complete piece of junk that you'd be smart to add on a two-year extended warranty so that when the gizmo breaks five seconds after you open the box, you can get a replacement for free.

The CDC and the vaccine industry are fronting a similar bit of contradictory logic. "Our vaccines work so well that they offer almost total immunity from the flu," they claim. And yet somehow they also work so poorly that they "wear off" after a year and require you to be re-vaccinated annually.

This is The Great Big Lie of the vaccine industry: The lie that says you have be re-vaccinated each and every year, often with the exact same strains you were vaccinated with the previous year. The coming winter flu vaccines for 2011, for example, are being manufactured with the same strains as the 2010 flu vaccines.

But if vaccines work so amazingly well as the CDC and the vaccine industry (fraudulently) suggests, then why do you need the same shot year after year?

Well, according to the CDC, "Vaccines wear off."

Vaccines wear off, they say
Yep, that's their cover story. The vaccines "wear off."

But hold on a minute. There's something fishy about this. Because human antibodies normally last a lifetime, remember? That's why you don't get the chicken pox over and over again; because the first time you got the chicken pox as a kid, your body created chicken pox antibodies and those antibodies last a lifetime.

Thus, your immune system offers you lifetime immunity from the chicken pox.

The vaccine industry false tries to claim its vaccines work exactly the same way: They cause the body to produce antibodies against a certain viral strain. But there's something you're not being told about vaccines: They don't really produce the same quality and strength of antibodies that your own body would produce from a natural infection and recovery. That's why the vaccines "wear off" and leave you with zero protection from the very strains they inoculate you against.

In other words, vaccines don't work as advertised. And that's why the vaccine industry has to keep pushing the same vaccine strains year after year. Because, think about it: If vaccines actually worked as intended, they would give you lifetime immunity against whatever strains you were injected with, right? And yet the CDC now openly admits vaccines don't offer that at all:

"This year's flu shot will be a duplicate of last year's because the same flu strains are still circulating," reports the Associated Press in an article about the CDC. "Government health officials are urging nearly everyone to get this fall's flu shot. They say a vaccine's protection can fade significantly after several months." (http://news.yahoo.com/s/ap/20110527...)

Vaccine protection fades after a few months? Well then, vaccines must not actually cause the body to react with producing its own antibodies, because those antibodies, we're told, offer lifetime immunity.

Another way you can confirm this yourself is by remembering your history. Remember when the Europeans came to America centuries ago and killed off masses of American Indians by accidentally giving them smallpox? Well, if the Indians died of smallpox, why didn't the Europeans die of smallpox? (There were no vaccines in the 1600's and 1700's.) The answer is because the Europeans had already been exposed and built up lifetime immunity to the disease.

Thus, the reason the European invaders of North America did not die from smallpox wasn't because they were vaccinated; it was because they had already been exposed to the disease and had built up active immunity against it (by producing their own antibodies which last a lifetime). Thus, the Europeans could be exposed to smallpox over and over again with no symptoms of infection. They were effectively "immune" to smallpox, in exactly the same way a human being living today becomes immune to a winter flu strain by first being exposed to the full strength strain (in the wild) and then building up their own antibodies in an automatic adaptive response.

But don't expect the vaccine industry to educate anyone on how infectious disease and antibodies really work. They're too busy selling annual flu shots to bother with scientific facts.

The flu vaccine manufacturing machine is on high output "Five vaccine manufacturers announced plans to make between 166 million and 173 million doses for the coming season," says the same article mentioned above. That's the highest vaccine manufacturing output for the USA in the history of vaccines.

With all these 170 million (or so) vaccines sitting around by the time the winter rolls around, the CDC is obviously going to have to kick its propaganda and fear mongering into high gear to convince people to buy all these vaccines. This is going to be doubly difficult considering the inconvenient fact that all the people who got vaccinated last year already received vaccines against these same viral strains!

So, in other words, the CDC must now convince 170 million people that last year's vaccine was such a complete failure that they need the exact same vaccines this year -- and somehow this year's vaccine will work better even though it's exactly the same as last year's vaccine. How will they accomplish this?

It's simple: They won't talk much about the fact that this year's flu vaccine is identical to last year's flu vaccine. They'll just repeat their blatant lies about vaccines offering near-100 percent protection against the flu -- an insinuation so blatantly false that the FTC should actually charge the vaccine manufacturers with false advertising.

And the great unknowing masses will, of course, line up to be injected yet again with the same cocktail of viral strains and vaccine preservatives that didn't work for them last year! Because the hilarious truth about flu vaccines is that most of the people who get sick from the flu each year are the same people who were vaccinated against the flu!

Yep, it's the devastating secret of the vaccine industry: Most of the flu victims each year are precisely the same people who took the flu shots. And now you know why that is so -- because the flu vaccine shots simply don't work. Even if you do believe they work at first, even the CDC openly admits -- on the record -- that "flu vaccines stop working after several months."

They fade out like a set of old batteries, in other words. And that right there is proof that flu vaccines don't produce a true antibody response.

The great vaccine marketing con: Annual vaccine shots
The CDC is now engaged in the marketing of annual vaccination of the entire population. That's the game, you see: Convince people they need an annual flu shot just to stay healthy. It's a complete marketing con, of course, but it's necessary to keep the flu vaccine profit machine humming along each winter.

In doing this, the CDC is now running a criminal marketing racket to falsely push vaccines as the solution even though flu vaccines simply don't work. For every 100 people vaccinated against the winter flu, by the way, 99 of them will experience no difference whatsoever in their flu outcomes. Even using the industry's own best evidence, flu vaccines are no more than one percent effective at actually preventing the flu (http://www.naturalnews.com/029641_v...) -- and that's only during the first few months before they "fade out."

One of the CDC's own vaccine scientists -- a man who received millions of dollars in grant money from the CDC -- was recently indicted by a federal grand jury for money laundering and fraud (http://www.naturalnews.com/032216_T...). Check out the NaturalNews diagram called Poul Thorsen's Alleged Web of Fraud to see the complete web of deceit under which the key players of the vaccine fraud industry operate: http://www.naturalnews.com/files/We...

The truth is that the CDC abandoned real science long ago and is now engaged almost entirely in infectious disease fear mongering and the wholesale prostitution of itself to the vaccine industry. The CDC has become to the vaccine industry what infomercial guru Tony Little is to exercise equipment. This is an agency that now functions as little more than the marketing branch of the vaccine giants.

As part of that total prostitution of itself to the vaccine makers, last year the CDC even announced that virtually everyone should get annual flu vaccine shots, including pregnant women!

You can immunize yourself against the winter flu
But here's the other dirty little secret the CDC absolutely does not want you to know: If you skip the vaccine, boost your vitamin D intake, and encounter the flu naturally, you will build your own lifetime antibodies against the infection.

Got that? So the best way to immunize yourself against a particular strain of the winter flu is to dose up on vitamin D, boost your nutritional intake, get healthy and then just go out into the world and stop worrying about exposing yourself to the flu. You'll pick it up somewhere, and if your immune system is functioning well with high levels of vitamin D (that's the vitamin that "activates" your immune response to flu infections), your body will build its own antibodies, and you won't even know it! You will have what's called a "symptomless infection" and won't even know your body successfully fought off the viral invader.

Better yet, because you were exposed to the real viral strain in the wild (and not some weakened strain in a flu vaccine shot), your body will maintain lifetime immunity to that viral strain. And isn't that the goal of immunization in the first place?

Immunizing yourself, you see, works far better than relying on the vaccine industry to immunize you through some artificial means (an injection). Their immunization, it turns out, simply doesn't work reliably. And that's why the sad sellouts and prostitutes of the vaccine industry have to keep pushing their same lame flu shots year after year, with no improvements and virtually zero effectiveness.

And the same ignorant consumers line up year after year to get the same failed flu shots year after year... then they wonder why they still get sick year after year.

Do the math, folks. This is not rocket science. If flu shots worked as well as your own immune response to a natural infection, then you would only need one shot in your entire life for any given viral flu strain. But that, of course, would be bad for vaccine profits. They need suckers to believe in annual flu shots so they can keep raking in the big bucks year after year.

Stay informed! FREE subscription to the Health Ranger's email newsletter Breaking news • Natural cures • Food safety alerts • Food discounts • Herbal remedies • Health freedom Join two million monthly readers. Email privacy 100% protected. Unsubscribe at any time.

Articles Related to This Article:

• Facebook crowdsourced investigation exposes vaccine denials of SIGA Technologies

• Evidence-based vaccinations: A scientific look at the missing science behind flu season vaccines

• Flu vaccines revealed as the greatest quackery ever pushed in the history of medicine

• Vaccine philosophical exemptions: A moral and ethical imperative

• NaturalNews exclusive: International Medical Council on Vaccination refutes vaccine propaganda with myth-busting report

• The great thimerosal cover-up: Mercury, vaccines, autism and your child's health

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: Narcolepsy cases rising after swine flu vaccine

Title: Narcolepsy cases rising after swine flu vaccine

TheUnhivedMind - May 31, 2011 10:40 PM (GMT)

Narcolepsy cases rising after swine flu vaccine

Published: 28 May 11 11:23 CET | Double click on a word to get a translation
http://www.thelocal.se/34044/20110528/

Ninety-three people in Sweden, most of them children, have been diagnosed with narcolepsy since taking the swine flu vaccine Pandemrix last winter, according to figures from the Swedish

In 88 of the 93 cases, the agency has identified a direct correlation between the vaccine and the onset of narcolepsy, a sleep disorder causing extreme drowsiness and daytime sleep attacks.

According to the Swedish Association of Persons with Neurological Disabilities (Neurologiskt handikappades riksförbund - NHR), the agency is examining a further 135 cases involving children and will present its full findings later this summer.

NHR announced on Friday the launch of a 250,000 kronor ($40,000) research grant to facilitate studies of the relationship between Pandemrix, a drug manufactured by pharmaceutical giant GlaxoSmithKline, and narcolepsy.

“We are deeply concerned and have decided that things needs to happen, and quickly,” said NHR chair Kathleen Bengtsson-Hayward in a statement.

A study presented in March by the Medical Products Agency showed that children and adolescents under 20 vaccinated with Pandemrix could be up to four times as likely to develop narcolepsy as those not inoculated.

Since August 2010, at least 12 countries have reported cases of narcolepsy, particularly among children and adolescents, after receiving a swine flu, or H1N1, vaccine.

Figures from Sweden's National Board of Health and Welfare (Socialstyrelsen), show that 31 million people have been vaccinated with Pandemrix in Europe.

According to the WHO, the rates of narcolepsy reported in Sweden, Finland and Iceland were higher than those in other countries.

TT/The Local (news@thelocal.se/08 656 6518)

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: New study claims 83 autism cases caused by Title: New study claims 83 autism cases caused by Description: vaccines

TheUnhivedMind - May 31, 2011 04:21 AM (GMT)

New study claims 83 autism cases caused by vaccinations

May 23rd, 2011 @ 4:30pm
By Nicole Pollard, ksl.com Contributor http://www.ksl.com/index.php?nid=148&sid=15537948

WASHINGTON, D.C. -- Researchers released the most recent news in the autism-vaccine debate at a press conference in Washington, D.C., earlier this month.

A study scheduled for publication in the Pace Environmental Law Review closely examined public information on 1,300 cases in which the National Vaccine Injury Compensation Program compensated families. Significant brain injuries were found in compensated patients as a direct result of vaccinations. Eighty-three cases specifically resulted in autism and are being called, “the tip of the iceberg.”

Parents of vaccine-injured children were present at the press conference along with representatives from the Elizabeth Birt Center for Autism Law and Advocacy. All participants demanded that Congress acknowledge the findings and explain why the NVICP awarded damages for these cases while the government continues to promote the safety of childhood vaccinations.

"The influence of vaccines on a child cannot explain the measurable differences in brain structure and brain function that exist between autistic and non-autistic children." - American Academy of Pediatrics

The study, “Unanswered Questions From the Vaccine Injury Compensation Program: A Review of Compensated Cases of Vaccine-Induced Brain Injury,” has the autism community talking and eager for congressional hearings to address allegations the government has quietly swept many of these cases under the rug to avoid public scrutiny. The study calls the situation nothing short of a cover-up.

Though it cannot be said that the findings scientifically prove a direct correlation between autism and vaccinations, many believe it is a step toward validating what so many in the autism community have said is at the root of Autism Spectrum Disorder. The full effect this study has on the autism-vaccine debate is yet to be seen.

This announcement may seem like a major setback for the medical community. There have been declines in immunizations at times because of the barrage of information about autism via the Internet and outspoken celebrities, but it is not the first time a major study has pointed to vaccines as a trigger for autism. In February 1998, a well-publicized study conducted in England claimed that the MMR (measles, mumps and rubella) vaccination was linked to Autism Spectrum Disorder. The lead author of the original study, Dr. Andrew Wakefield, was later discredited and said to have been accepting money from a lawyer suing a vaccine manufacturer. Additionally, the manner he conducted his research in was found to be unethical, unreliable and impossible to duplicate, according to the UK General Medical Council. Ten of the 13 authors of the study later retracted their claim, but the media frenzy had already begun and many parents have held on tightly to the notion that vaccinations are to blame for this epidemic.

Stan Kurtz became a strong advocate and respected figure in the autism community after his son, Ethan, was diagnosed with autism. In response to the autism-vaccine link and recent findings Kurtz said, "You don't hear stories from parents saying, 'One week before my child had their vaccines, they ended up with autism.' What you do hear is, 'I took my child to the doctor, they got vaccinated and they weren't the same shortly after that.'"

The majority of the medical community and the American Academy of Pediatrics have repeatedly played down the idea that autism is a direct result of immunizations or the components therein. The Immunization Action Coalition has said, “Scientific evidence is ‘overwhelmingly contrary’ to the theory that autism is linked to MMR vaccine, thimerosal, or a combination of the two.” In addition it believes, “The influence of vaccines on a child cannot explain the measurable differences in brain structure and brain function that exist between autistic and non-autistic children.” But many parents are not convinced. Parents of autistic children, who have noticed a significant regression and developmental changes shortly after vaccinations, want answers.

"You don't hear stories from parents saying, 'One week before my child had their vaccines, they ended up with autism.' What you do hear is, 'I took my child to the doctor, they got vaccinated and they weren't the same shortly after that.'" -Stan Kurtz

The autism community is divided on this topic: 50 percent of parents with autistic children blame vaccinations, while the other half believe other genetic and environmental factors were at play. Mique Provost said of her oldest son's autism, "I feel that autism is from a number of things, not from one specific cause. I also think every case is different. In our case, I feel that my son had genetic markers and that the vaccines stressed his little body further, resulting in autism."

Those who are anti-vaccine argue that many children have atypical or underdeveloped immune systems too weak to handle the stress of multiple vaccinations and autism is the result of this overload. But the AAP disagrees saying, “There is no scientific reason for or benefit to separating the vaccines. By separating them, we are putting children (and pregnant women who may be exposed to them) at increased risk by extending the amount of time they go unvaccinated.” Those who support vaccinations emphasize that an infant’s immune system is exposed to thousands of germs simply by breathing. Dr. Ari Brown, author and contributor to the IAC explained, “Even if your child got 11 shots at the same time, he would need to use only about 0.1% of his immune system to respond to the vaccines.”

With a cure for autism yet to be found, Shalayna Tyre of Arizona believes her son and other autistic children will benefit from more public awareness and education. "I just wish people would take the time to understand these children a little more. I would also love for kids to have more of an understanding of children with Autism. Children with disabilities are so often the targets of bullying. It breaks my heart and I wish they were taught to be more compassionate and understanding."

When asked what she would like people to know about her son and autism, Provost said, "Although there is a lot of talk about autism, there are really people behind those numbers. It is a daily struggle for my son and for our family. Just like everyone else, some days are better than others. But would I give anything to have a typical conversation with him? Yes! A million times over. We take it one day at a time in our house. Ideally I would love for him to have some independence. More than anything I want him (and my other two) to be happy."

Speculation about the safety of vaccinations will most likely continue to be a hot topic until all the pieces of the autism puzzle are solved.

The complete study and video of Tuesday’s press conference can both be found at www.ageofautism.com.

Nicole Pollard resides in Canyon Country, CA.

AntiSionist - May 31, 2011 04:49 AM (GMT)

I have to wonder if this is damage control. Look at how they libeled Wakefield in this article. They called him a fraud but Wakefield has been vindicated time and time again.

http://z10.invisionfree.com/The_Unhived_Mi...showtopic=51726

http://childhealthsafety.wordpress.com/200...ing-allegation/

http://childhealthsafety.wordpress.com/200...s-than-answers/http://childhealthsafety.wordpress.com/200...unk-journalism/

http://www.anh-europe.org/news/wakefield-on-wakefield

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: David Cameron takes on aid critics by making

Title: David Cameron takes on aid critics by making Description: vaccine pledge

TheUnhivedMind - May 30, 2011 01:52 AM (GMT)

David Cameron takes on aid critics by making vaccine pledge

Prime minister to promise more money for immunisation despite growing outcry over UK's aid budget

Patrick Wintour, political editor guardian.co.uk, Sunday 29 May 2011 19.49 BST http://www.guardian.co.uk/global-developme...-vaccine-pledge

David Cameron will use a conference in London to promote plans to raise a further $3.7bn (£2.25bn) in global aid to increase immunisation programmes, further antagonising those in Britain who claim he is putting overseas aid before squeezed living standards in the UK.

With his modernising credentials damaged by the row about NHS reforms, Cameron is determined to show that he is committed to a generous UK aid budget, and reassure those on the centre left he is a centrist Conservative. He also believes he can see off the aid sceptics in his own party, mainly from the right.

In his most high-profile intervention on overseas aid since becoming prime minister, Cameron will host the Global Alliance for Vaccines and Immunisation (Gavi) conference in London on 13 June.

The conference, discussed by Barack Obama and Cameron last week, is regarded as vital to efforts to lower child mortality in Africa. In a sign of the scale of pledges being sought, the Obama administration is being asked to give $450m to the programme over three years.

Britain will also announce a substantial extra contribution to help reach the $3.7bn required to scale up immunisation programmes between 2011 and 2015, and save an estimated 4 million children's lives.

The funding will specifically enable Gavi to distribute two vaccines, pneumococcal and rotavirus, tackling the two biggest killers of children in the developing world: pneumonia and diarrhoea. It is thought the vaccines will save more than 4 million lives by 2015. Pneumonia accounts for 20% of all deaths of children under five.

Britain gave £150m to Gavi in March last year, and since 2005 has been the second most generous contributor to the alliance after the Bill and Melinda Gates Foundation.

Gavi was praised by the Department for International Development in a review on multilateral aid published three months ago. Officials at the department were reassured by steps Gavi is taking to be more transparent about the differing costs of vaccines from different producers. Two pharmaceutical industry representatives sit on the board of Gavi.

Germany announced last week that it would give €30m (£26m) to GAVI in 2012, up from €20m in 2011. Cameron made passionate remarks at his press conference at the close of the G8 summit of industrialised nations in France last week, insisting he would not backtrack on a commitment to increase the amount of overseas aid given by DfID. It is the only UK department not facing budget cuts.

Cameron added he would not solve the UK deficit on the backs of the world's poor, and lambasted some other world leaders for forgetting their promises on aid. Some of this passion was driven by the knowledge of what the Gavi conference could achieve next month. He regards practical vaccines that are shown to have tangible results in terms of saving lives as one of the best ways of combating the aid fatigue currently gripping the UK.

Gavi claims it has saved more than five million lives in its first decade of existence.

Alan Duncan, the international development minister, sprung to Cameron's defence telling Sky News that "aid-bashing does not actually get us anywhere. If we were to cancel the aid budget altogether it wouldn't solve all the other problems, so this sort of balancing of the aid budget versus all other problems isn't entirely logical.

"The fact is, if you had a pound, would you give a halfpenny to stop someone dying in the street? The answer is you probably would, and what we are doing is stopping millions of people dying from disease, we are helping educate people and make them healthy."

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: Record Measles Cases In 15 Years, USA

Title: Record Measles Cases In 15 Years, USA
Description: [PROPAGANDA FOR NEW VAC CAMPAIGNS]

TheUnhivedMind - May 25, 2011 06:56 PM (GMT)

Record Measles Cases In 15 Years, USA

Editor's Choice
Article Date: 24 May 2011 - 22:00 PDT
http://www.medicalnewstoday.com/articles/226364.php

In the first four-and-a-half months of 2011, there have been 118 reported cases of measles in 23 US states, says an MMWR report from the CDC (Centers for Disease Control and Prevention) - the highest number since 1996. The authors explained that endemic or sustained measles transmission has not occurred in America since the second half of the 1990s, in spite of infected people coming in from abroad.

Between 2001 and 2008 there were 56 (median - ranging from 37 to 140) reported cases each year. 118 cases in the first 19 weeks of this year is a considerable increase.

89% (105) of the 118 reported cases were linked to importations from abroad - including 34 Americans coming back home and 12 foreign visitors. 40 of the 46 cases come from European and South-East Asian nations. 89% (105) of those infected had never been vaccinated against measles. 47 (40%) of measles cases had to be admitted to hospital, and nine had pneumonia.

The CDC urges people to get vaccinated. The increase in measles importations makes it doubly important to be vaccinated.

Below is a breakdown of reported measles cases according to age:
15% (18) - less than twelve months
20% (24) - 1 to 4 years
19% (23) - 5 to 19 years
45% (53) - at least twenty years

Importations came from the following countries:
Kenya - 1
Nigeria - 1
Pakistan - 1
Jordan - 1
France - 11
France/UK - 1*
France/Italy/Spain/Germany - 1*
Italy - 1
Poland - 1
Romania - 1
Spain - 1
United Kingdom - 3
Dominican Republic - 1 Patient probably caught it from French tourist India - 14
Indonesia - 1
Philippines - 4
Philippines/Vietnam/Singapore/Malaysia* - 1
China - 1
*Infected patient traveled to more than one country and could have become infected in one of those countries.

France has had over 10,000 reported cases of measles so far this year, of which 12 developed encephalitis, 360 severe pneumonia, and six died.

Measles is an extremely infectious disease - up to 90% of exposed susceptible individuals get measles. Susceptible refers to unvaccinated people who have never had measles before. Measles complications can be permanently disabling, and even fatal. Over 100 people died during a 1989-1991 measles resurgence in the USA, out of 55,000 reported cases.

The CDC says that those who do not get vaccinated undermine the herd immunity - they put others in their community at risk. Babies less than 12 months who are not vaccinated yet, plus patients with medical conditions who cannot be vaccinated have a particularly high risk of developing measles complications - they depend on the herd immunity, i.e. if everyone is immunized they are protected.

15% of measles hospitalizations this year occurred with babies aged less than 12 months.

"Measles - United States, January - May 20, 2011"
MMWR May 24, 2011 / 60 (Early Release)

Written by Christian Nordqvist

Copyright: Medical News Today

TheUnhivedMind - May 28, 2011 11:29 PM (GMT)

Heres the same propaganda being spread in the U.K. corporation:

QUOTE

Measles outbreak prompts plea to vaccinate children

By Philippa Roxby
27 May 2011 Last updated at 11:12
http://www.bbc.co.uk/news/health-13561766

Parents in England and Wales are being urged to have their children vaccinated after a tenfold rise in measles cases in the first four months of the year.

The Health Protection Agency reported 334 cases compared with 33 in the similar period last year.

The outbreak is thought to be linked to an epidemic in France, where 7,000 cases have been reported since January - more than in the whole of 2010.

The HPA says it is "crucial" that those at risk are fully immunised.

It says the latest cases are mainly among unvaccinated people under 25 years old and are centred on "small clusters in universities, schools or families or associated with travel abroad".

Worst-hit are London and the South East, with 104 and 102 confirmed cases respectively in the first quarter of this year.

Recently the Health Protection Agency sent out letters to some primary schools and further education colleges in London warning of the risks of taking children who are not fully immunised to mainland Europe.

'Potentially dangerous'

Dr Mary Ramsay, head of immunisation at the Health Protection Agency, warned parents and young adults of the importance of immunisation.

"Although MMR coverage has improved over the last few years, we cannot stress enough that measles is serious and in some cases it can be fatal.

"Measles is a highly infectious and potentially dangerous illness which spreads very easily.

"Whether you stay here in the UK or travel abroad, it is crucial that individuals who may be at risk are fully immunised."

In the UK, two doses of the MMR vaccine are usually given, the first at around 12 months and the second around the time of starting school.

The HPA advises parents to contact their GP as soon as possible if their child is over a year old and has never had the MMR jab.

Two doses of the MMR vaccine are required to provide the greatest protection against measles.

HPA figures show that the number of toddlers getting the MMR vaccination is climbing steadily, but is still far from the 95% uptake rate needed to stop the spread of the disease in the community.

In December 2010, 89.4% of two-year-old children in the UK had received their first dose of the MMR vaccine.

For five-year-olds, the uptake rate had risen to 92.8%.

Controversial research

The vaccination rate had been well below 95% for several years, ever since The Lancet published controversial research about the MMR vaccine in 1998.

The study has since been discredited, but confidence in the combined measles, mumps and rubella vaccine has been slow to return.

In Scotland, there have been 12 confirmed cases of measles between January and April, compared with no cases at all for the same time last year.

Since the start of 2011 Northern Ireland has had one confirmed case of measles.

In France, the figure of 7,000 cases so far this year already exceeds the 5,090 recorded in the whole of 2010.

The World Health Organization said France was taking immediate steps to control the outbreaks by vaccinating infants at nine months and offering the vaccine to all unimmunised or under-immunised people over that age.

Other European countries reporting an increase in cases of measles are Belgium, Denmark, Finland, Germany, Norway, Romania, the Russian Federation, Sweden and Switzerland.

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: HOARD TO BEAT FLU JAB PANIC

Title: HOARD TO BEAT FLU JAB PANIC
Description: [PROPAGANDA]

TheUnhivedMind - May 26, 2011 04:07 PM (GMT)

HOARD TO BEAT FLU JAB PANIC

The Department of Health said it would set up a central reserve of extra jabs this winter

Thursday May 26,2011
By Daily Express Reporter
http://www.express.co.uk/posts/view/248855...t-flu-jab-panic

A STOCKPILE of flu jabs is being set up to prevent a repeat of last winter's fiasco when GPs ran out.

The crisis was sparked after patients who don't usually turn up for the seasonal jab rushed to surgeries amid reports that the virus could be fatal.

But by then the doses had already been given to the worried well by GPs in order to use up their stock.

The chaos forced health officials to release thousands of doses of old swine flu vaccine to offer desperate patients some form of protection.

Yesterday, the Department of Health said it would set up a central reserve of extra jabs this winter to ensure that there were spare doses.

Health Secretary Andrew Lansley said: "A severe flu season places considerable pressure on the NHS and, although it coped well last year, there are areas where I'm determined we can improve.

"Flu can be serious and sadly it can kill. That's why I want to protect as many people as possible – particularly those in at-risk groups – by encouraging them to be vaccinated."

A severe flu season places considerable pressure on the NHS and, although it coped well last year, there are areas where I'm determined we can improve

He wanted to meet the World Health Organisation's target of vaccinating 75 per cent of people in at-risk groups by 2014.

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: Bill Gates pushes for 90 percent vaccination rate

Title: Bill Gates pushes for 90 percent vaccination rate
Description: worldwide [TEUTONIC DEPOPULATION!]

TheUnhivedMind - May 24, 2011 12:28 AM (GMT)

Bill Gates pushes for 90 percent vaccination rate worldwide

Sunday, May 22, 2011 by: Jonathan Benson http://www.naturalnews.com/032475_Bill_Gates_vaccines.html

The infamous Bill Gates is on a crusade to vaccinate the entire world. In a recent speech, the Microsoft guru-turned-humanitarian put pressure on the governments of the world to "prevent four million deaths by 2015, [and] ... ten million deaths" by 2020. He believes this will happen by vaccinating at least 90 percent of the world's population.

Gates has been an outspoken proponent of vaccinations for years. His organization, The Bill & Melinda Gates Foundation, is constantly promoting vaccines anywhere and everywhere it can. The group's website, in fact, says one of its goals is to vaccinate every single child on the planet, claiming that vaccines are "one of the most effective health interventions ever developed" (http://www.gatesfoundation.org/vacc...).

Among his many speeches, however, Gates has given conflicting information concerning the agenda behind his vaccination push. In his most recent speech, he claims vaccines will save lives. But in a speech he gave at a TED conference last year, Gates clearly stated that vaccines and health care were part of an equation to reduce the world's population by 15 percent (http://www.naturalnews.com/029911_v...).

"The world today has 6.8 billion people ... that's headed up to about nine billion," he said to his audience. "Now if we do a really great job on new vaccines, health care, reproductive health services, we could lower that by perhaps ten or 15 percent."

You can watch the actual clip of Gates saying this at the following link: http://www.naturalnews.tv/v.asp?v=A...

So which is it? Do vaccines help to save lives or end lives? When considering that vaccines are loaded with toxic adjuvants and chemical preservatives, many of which are known to cause serious health problems, sterility, and even death, the latter conclusion makes a lot more sense (http://www.naturalnews.com/031820_v...).

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: Autism Leads Rise of Developmental Disabilities in Title: Autism Leads Rise of Developmental Disabilities in Description: U.S. Kids

TheUnhivedMind - May 23, 2011 04:22 PM (GMT)

Autism Leads Rise of Developmental Disabilities in U.S. Kids

By Nicole Ostrow - May 23, 2011 5:00 AM GMT+0100
http://www.bloomberg.com/news/2011-05-23/a...n-u-s-kids.html

Developmental disabilities among American children increased 17 percent in the past decade led by a rise in autism and attention deficit hyperactivity disorder, a U.S. government study found.

The prevalence of the developmental disorders rose to 15 percent of U.S. children, or about 10 million, in 2006-2008, from 12.8 percent, or about 8 million, in 1997-1999, according to the study from the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention. The research is published in the journal Pediatrics.

Researchers said the increase may be due in part to more preterm births and parents having children at older ages. They also said that improvements in screenings, diagnosis and awareness have pushed the numbers higher. About one in six children in the U.S. now have a developmental disability, and that will likely increase demand for health and education services, researchers said.

“Because the prevalence of some of these developmental disabilities is increasing, there’s going to be an increased demand on the health system for these kind of specialized medical services,” Sheree Boulet, the study author and an epidemiologist at the Atlanta-based CDC’s National Center on Birth Defects and Developmental Disabilities, said in a May 20 telephone interview.

Today’s study is the first to document the prevalence of developmental disabilities in U. S. children since 1994, Boulet said.

National Health Interview

The researchers looked at data on children ages 3 to 17 years from the 1997 to 2008 National Health Interview Surveys. The surveys are representative samples of U.S. households and asked parents to report diagnoses of ADHD, mental retardation, cerebral palsy, autism, seizures, stuttering or stammering, moderate to profound hearing loss, blindness, learning disorders and other developmental delays.

Autism, a lifelong and disabling condition caused by abnormal brain development, had the largest increase over the study, rising nearly fourfold to 0.74 percent of children in 2006-2008 from 0.19 percent in 1997-1999, the paper showed. The disorder hinders a person's ability to communicate and engage in social interactions.

They found that the number of children with ADHD rose 33 percent during the period to 7.6 percent from 5.7 percent. The disorder was "chiefly responsible" for the higher overall incidence of developmental disabilities in the U.S., the authors wrote.
Less Stigma

Michael Rosanoff, associate director of Public Health Research and Scientific Review for the nonprofit advocacy group Autism Speaks in New York, said some of the increase in autism could be explained by better diagnosis, more awareness by parents and doctors and less stigma surrounding the condition making parents more likely to report their children having the condition. Still, more studies are needed to identify the environmental factors that may cause autism, he said.

"From this information, the federal government can see that developmental disabilities are more prevalent than previously believed and that resources should be allocated accordingly for dealing with these conditions," he said in a May 20 telephone interview.

The study also found a number of children with moderate to profound hearing loss declined 31 percent.

Boys were more likely than girls to have developmental disabilities, while low-income families and those on public health insurance had a higher likelihood of having children with the disorders, the study found.

Autism varies in severity and symptoms. Those with the condition may have trouble making eye contact, understanding facial expressions, and learning to share and follow instructions. Children with the disorder also may show compulsive interests or behaviors.
Need for Services

Andrew Adesman, chief of Developmental & Behavioral Pediatrics at Cohen Children's Medical Center in New Hyde Park, New York, said families need to speak to their doctors if they are concerned about their children and make sure they get the services they need. Adesman wasn't an author on today's paper.

"Realistically kids aren't going to get better on their own and they need the benefit of services," he said in a May 20 telephone interview. "There is a danger that at a time when numerically there seems to be an increased number of children with problems, many governments are looking to scale back and reduce services. That certainly is undesirable."

More studies are needed to identify preventable causes of the disabilities and the benefits of early services for children with developmental disorders, Boulet said. The CDC also plans a follow-up study in the future to see if the prevalence of these disorders continues to rise.

To contact the reporter on this story: Nicole Ostrow in New York at nostrow1@bloomberg.net.

To contact the editor responsible for this story: Reg Gale at rgale5@bloomberg.net

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: Florida legislature refuses to regulate mercury in Title: Florida legislature refuses to regulate mercury in Description: vaccines

TheUnhivedMind - May 21, 2011 03:33 AM (GMT)

Florida legislature refuses to regulate mercury in vaccines

Wednesday, May 18, 2011
http://www.naturalnews.com/032434_mercury_vaccines.html

An amendment to regulate the use of mercury in vaccines was voted down in Tallahassee, Florida, May 6. The amendment would have made it illegal to buy, sell, manufacture, deliver, import, administer or distribute any vaccine that contained more than 0.3 micrograms of organic or inorganic mercury per milliliter for children younger than age 7 or pregnant women. The amendment was intended to address the concern that mercury, in the form of Thimerosal, is still used in vaccines while mercury is recognized to cause cancer, genetic mutations, miscarriages and birth defects.

The U.S. Public Health Services and the American Academy of Pediatrics called for the removal of Thimerosal from U.S. vaccines licensed since 2001 in 1999 but people are still being exposed to mercury through flu shots, where most doses still are still preserved with Thimerosal. These vaccines are routinely recommended for children and pregnant women. (http://www.prnewswire.com/news-rele...)

Mercury is used as a preservative in multi-dose vials of vaccines. Preservatives are used in multi-dose vials because a syringe needle inserted multiple times can introduce bacteria and fungi each time. Mercury can be avoided by using single-dose vials, which do not require a preservative, since they are used only once. There is also a less toxic alternative to mercury that can be used for multi-dose vials called 2-phenoxyethanol.

Mercury in vaccines?
During the May 6 vote on mercury in vaccines, Senator Alan Hays (R-Umatilla) erroneously claimed mercury had been removed from all vaccines (http://www.

prnewswire.com/news-rele...).

The Centers for Disease Control and Prevention states on its website, "Since 2001, no new vaccine licensed by FDA for use in children has contained Thimerosal as a preservative." But the website later states that some vaccines routinely recommended by the CDC for children younger than 6 years of age can contain trace amounts of Thimerosal and that all multi-dose influenza vaccines do contain the chemical. The government agency does not provide details on what constitutes "trace amounts" but it is clear that mercury has not been removed from all vaccines.

The CDC also claims that Thimerosal is safe and not linked to autism. Its website claims that data from several studies show low doses of Thimerosal in vaccines do not cause harm, and are only associated with minor reactions like redness and swelling at the injection site. It also claims numerous studies have found no association between Thimerosal exposure and autism.

Scientific studies label mercury unsafe and link it to autism
In March 2009, the Governor's Task Force on Autism Spectrum Disorders in the State of Florida issued a report recommending that Florida "explore the prohibition of the purchase and administration of all mercury-containing (e.g., Thimerosal) vaccines." The report also acknowledged, "new, peer-reviewed scientific literature that suggests a causal relationship between mercury exposure from Thimerosal-containing vaccines and autism."

Three recent studies, in particular, show the symptoms of mercury poisoning are nearly identical to those of autism, which strongly suggests that mercury in vaccines is at least a major factor in autism (http://www.naturalnews.com/031678_m...).

Mercury is already a known neurotoxin that causes cancer, damages DNA, alters proper embryonic development, and disrupts the immune system, but researchers at the University of Brazil recently released a study showing that mercury also causes serious brain damage, and is linked to autism and other developmental diseases in children and Alzheimer's disease in adults (http://www.naturalnews.com/031870_f...).

Dr. Jose Dorea and his colleagues at the University of Brazil conducted an extensive, peer-reviewed analysis of various studies and available information in major databases that address the effects of low-dose Thimerosal on neural tissue and behavior. They found conclusively that Thimerosal accumulates in brain tissue, negatively affects brain development, and harms brain cells.

Florida legislators choose lobbyist over health
A prominent Tallahassee lobbyist reported that he had never, in his 20-year career, seen such as swarm of pharmaceutical industry lobbyists descend on Tallahassee in opposition to a bill. (http://www.prnewswire.com/news-rele...)

Ignoring the PHS and AAP report and the science, and siding with the lobbyists, Florida Senator Nan Rich (D-Sunrise), who opposed the amendment, stated, "All the credible evidence out there shows that Thimerosal has nothing to do with autism." He did not address the risks aside from autism that are associated with the chemical. (http://www.prnewswire.com/news-rele...)

Florida legislators criticized
"Putting poison in a baby shot is ludicrous," said Rev. Lisa K. Sykes, President of nonprofit group The Coalition for Mercury-free Drugs. "Especially when we know mercury is an unwarranted vaccine ingredient." (http://www.prnewswire.com/news-rele...)

"The Florida Senators who voted this amendment down are clearly more interested in the well-being of the lobbyists and the pharmaceutical industry than in the wellbeing of Florida's children," she said.

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: Anthrax vaccine: Children targeted for testing

Title: Anthrax vaccine: Children targeted for testing

TheUnhivedMind - May 13, 2011 12:40 AM (GMT)

Anthrax vaccine: Children targeted for testing

May 9, 2011 by ppjg http://ppjg.wordpress.com/2011/05/09/anthr...ed-for-testing/
Marti Oakley

On May 2, 2011, Department of Health and Human Services announced it will buy 3.42 million doses of Bio-thrax a vaccine developed by the military to counter its weaponized anthrax that it also developed. The problem is, the vaccine is known to be worthless in the event of an attack because of the time it takes to become effective (they don't know for sure that it is) and you have to get two doses of the vaccine to get any benefit at all.

"Emergent proudly supports the U.S.government's efforts and unwavering commitment to meet its stated need of 75 million doses of anthrax vaccines," said Fuad El-Hibri, chairman and chief executive officer of Emergent BioSolutions.

It was a great day at BioSolutions. They just unloaded millions of doses of an untested, unproven and most likely worthless white elephant they purchased from the military.

But Biosolutions wants to test their vaccine on kids just the same.

As if the 1 in 110 children suffering from autism and other neurological impairments, along with increased rates of sudden infant death (SIDS) as a result of the 63 forced vaccines foisted upon innocent infants and toddlers under the age of five was not enough and as Gardasil continues to kill and permanently injure young girls, and now boys, along comes Emergent Biosolutions with a brand spanking new idea: Let's test our anthrax vaccine on children!

In what is clearly a profit motivated plan devoid of any sense of morality or ethics, Department of health & Human Services (DHHS) another of those corporate federal agencies which operates devoid of any meaningful oversight, is planning on using a little known provision of 45 CFR-46.407 to allow the use of unapproved, untested and questionable pharmaceuticals of all kinds on children and will now be used to allow Emergent Biosolutions to test their useless and deadly vaccine for anthrax, on children.

While this regulation does at some points require the consent of the child and the parents for testing, it also allows for uninformed consent and readily admits that injury and death could be the result; but this should be expected because it is for the “greater good” or “national security” or some other genocidal jingo.

The use of this vaccine which was developed by those fine folks at Fort Detrick Maryland, the same place they mutated and weaponized several strains of anthrax is totally uncalled for. The vaccine was sold to Biosolutions which stockpiled it and now need to recoup their investment.

What better way to make a huge and unwarranted profit than by selling death in a needle to the government for some mysterious bioweapons threat that would have to generate from right here inside our country.

And how can I make such a claim? Logically, the only way a vaccine for some future disease or infection can be effective is if you know the structure of the disease, in this case weaponized anthrax. Since other countries have developed their own secret, genetically identifiable version of weaponized anthrax, the only way an effective vaccine could be developed for an anthrax attack is if you were the developer of the strain. How else would you know what the vaccine should contain?

Aside from the immorality of even considering testing a deadly vaccine on unsuspecting and vulnerable children is the fact that this vaccine would take 5 or more weeks and 2 doses in order for it to become effective, assuming it is effective. In the interim, DHHS admits that a fair number of children could die or be permanently injured from the testing but this should be viewed as “collateral damage” (my words), anticipated, expected, acceptable levels of death and injury that should not exceed the “normal” levels of deaths and injuries from other medications and vaccines.

My concern now is those children residing in orphanages, institutions and foster care who can and many times are used as income generators between the so-called guardians and the pharmaceutical companies and are essentially treated as disposable property and fit for use in experimentation with untested and unproven vaccines and medications. The most recent instances of this practice to be exposed were in states such as Alaska and Florida where 70-80% of foster children were forced to take psychotropic drugs as pharmaceutical manufacturers contracted with state agencies, doctors and psychiatrists willing to subject the children to the drugs for a fee.

Of course your friendly neighborhood FDA was right in there defending the pharmaceutical companies and encouraging states like Florida to NOT bar the use of kids for test trials of drugs.

No vaccine is needed:

The idea that a vaccine is being pushed for anthrax is absolutely one of the most absurd ideas to come along in quite some time. Cipro is a known and accepted antidote to anthrax. It is effective 99% of the time and can be used if and when an anthrax attack should occur. It is readily available and should be in constant supply across the country if the threat of an anthrax attack is actually possible.

_____

Cipro: From the HSD terror alert website:

Is Cipro approved for anthrax?

Cipro is approved for use in patients who have been exposed to the inhaled form of anthrax.

Is Cipro the only product approved to treat anthrax infections?

No. There are a number of antibiotics that are currently indicated to treat anthrax infections including doxycycline and penicillin. These older antibiotics are readily available. FDA is stressing that any antibiotic should only be used by those who really need it because unnecessary antibiotic use exposes patients to the risks of a drug without any potential benefit.

_____

The 2001 Anthrax attacks here in the US originated from the Fort Detrick, Maryland laboratory. The attacks used a strain which was identifiable as a weaponized form of anthrax developed at FortDetrick; identifiable because of its patented structure, patented as the Ames strain.

This was not a terrorist attack from some unknown, unidentifiable crazy person “somewhere over there”. This terrorist attack originated from inside our own military in order to pump up the drumming up of support for another war and to frighten the American public into thinking there were terrorists all over the country just waiting for the chance to kill us.

Essentially, in my opinion, there are. We just don’t recognize them for what they are because they are American’s; they wear our military uniforms and sit in government.

_____

RESOURCES:

Cipro effective against anthrax —HSD report

http://www.nationalterroralert.com/cipro/

Emergency Use guidlelines

http://www.fda.gov/RegulatoryInformation/G...s/ucm125127.htm

Emergency powers of FDA do NOT include testing on children

http://www.fda.gov/emergencypreparedness/c...m/ucm182568.htm

http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Anthrax

The virulent Ames strain, which was used in the 2001 anthrax attacks in the United States, has received the most news coverage of any anthrax outbreak. The Ames strain contains two virulence plasmids, which separately encode for a three-protein toxin, called anthrax toxin, and a poly-glutamic acid capsule Patent Bibliographic Information: Patent Number 05279962—“Title of Invention: Mutants or Variants of Bacillus thuringiensis Producing High Yields of Delta Endotoxin.” Issue Date: 18 January 1994.

http://patft.uspto.gov/netacgi/nph-Parser?...2&RS=PN/5279962 the Ames strain comes in various sub-types that are distinguishable and separate. This patent was registered as an insect killer but contains the info on the various sub strains.

http://www.ahrp.org/cms/content/view/725/52/

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: FOX NEWS: Feds Paid Millions To Cover Up Brain

Title: FOX NEWS: Feds Paid Millions To Cover Up Brain
Description: Damage And Autism Caused By FORCED Vacci

TheUnhivedMind - May 10, 2011 01:15 AM (GMT)

FOX NEWS: Feds Paid Millions To Cover Up Brain Damage And Autism Caused By FORCED Vaccinations

Posted by Alexander Higgins - May 9, 2011
http://blog.alexanderhiggins.com/2011/05/0...inations-22535/

http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=gAyUuJlRgT4

[dohtml]<object style="height: 390px; width: 640px"><param name="movie" value="http://www.youtube.com/v/gAyUuJlRgT4?version=3"><param name="allowFullScreen" value="true"><param name="allowScriptAccess" value="always"><embed src="http://www.youtube.com/v/gAyUuJlRgT4?version=3" type="application/x-shockwave-flash" allowfullscreen="true" allowScriptAccess="always" width="640" height="390"></object>[/dohtml]

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

23d2d

PLEASE MOVE OVER TO THE NEW SITE:

http://z15.invisionfree.com/The_Unhived_Mind_III/

18 JULY 2011 .. GOLD HITS NEW HIGH OF $1604 AS SILVER RAISES TO $40.38 PER OUNCE. THE OVERT DEPRESSION IS ON, ALL READY FOR THE COMING COLLAPSE BETWEEN OCT 2011 - OCT 2012! THE LIKES OF WHICH HAS NEVER BEEN WITNESSED BEFORE WORLDWIDE, ARE YOU READY? MENTALLY? YOU SURE? GET HARDENED NOW AND PREPARE ASAP.....

THE UNHIVED MIND
This site is dedicated to the truthsayers assassinated such as William Cooper, Jim Arrabito, Alberto Rivera, Joe Vialls, Brian Downing Quig, Phil Schneider etc.

KING 'FARNESE' CARLOS
World War III
The Unhived Mind

THE KNIGHTS OF MALTA
DEUTSCHE VERTEIDIGUNGS DIENST
HOMELAND
DEPARTMENT
AGENCY
CARPATHIA HOSTINGS INC CYBERNAZIS

CARDINAL RATZINGER
And his Oslo Accords
UHM

C.I.A (D.V.D) PREPARE TO
TESLA ATTACK U.K
EXERCISE ORION
SEPTEMBER 2010
UHM

WTC nuclear demolition
Dimitri Khalezov

WATCH OUT MIDDLE EAST
KING JUAN CARLOS IS
IN RUSSIA 24/25 FEB

LATEST INFO

The Unhived Mind Ii->DEPOPULATION->AIDS and the non-existent hiv fraud

Pages: (2) [1] 2

NEW TOPIC NEW POLL

AIDS and the non-existent hiv fraud

		Topic Title	Topic Starter	Replies	Views	Last Action
		Important Topics
		HIV FRAUD HIGHLIGHTED IN THESE VIDEOS [MAKE SURE YOU VIEW THESE ASAP]	TheUnhivedMind	1	1,374	1st November 2009 - 12:14 AM Last Post by: AntiSionist
		MASSIVE ARCHIVE OF AIDS TRUTH	TheUnhivedMind	0	1,613	13th September 2008 - 11:48 PM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		Forum Topics
		Anti-HIV drug made by GM plants begins trials in humans [POISONS FOR NON EXISTENT VIRUS]	TheUnhivedMind	0	28	21st July 2011 - 03:46 AM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		The next round of purpose depopulation starts	TheUnhivedMind	0	42	13th July 2011 - 06:03 PM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind

		Depopulation by ARV of the South	TheUnhivedMind	0	40	12th July 2011 - 12:06 AM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		Mothers angry over hospital's HIV test mix-up [BE CAREFUL WHEN HAVING CHILDREN]	TheUnhivedMind	1	80	1st July 2011 - 06:10 PM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		U.N. wants funds again to commit Genocide under the guise of hiv	TheUnhivedMind	0	97	5th June 2011 - 12:08 AM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		Propaganda claiming to have found a gene in the human body for a non existant virus	TheUnhivedMind	0	104	17th May 2011 - 02:51 AM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		African Trial of Gilead HIV Drug Stopped as No Benefit Shown [CANT KILL WHATS NOT THERE	TheUnhivedMind	0	131	18th April 2011 - 05:35 PM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		GETTING CLOSER TO MANDATORY HIV TESTING [YOU BETTER BEWARE AND STUDY UP!]	TheUnhivedMind	0	174	23rd March 2011 - 02:31 PM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		MERCK FAIL TO COMBAT NON EXISTENT VIRUS	TheUnhivedMind	0	372	14th March 2011 - 07:24 PM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		HIV drug costs $12,000 a year [THIS IS WHY YOU'RE CONNED WITH HIV]	TheUnhivedMind	0	130	28th February 2011 - 05:14 PM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		I won't go quietly [Vd]	TheUnhivedMind	2	262	25th February 2011 - 02:19 AM Last Post by: seekerx
		NANCY TURNER BANKS - THE DEADLY FALSE HIV VIRUS OF INTERNATIONAL GREED [Vd]	TheUnhivedMind	0	152	12th February 2011 - 06:49 AM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		TOMMY MORRISON HELPING TO HIGHLIGHTING JUNK SCIENC BEHIND AIDS	TheUnhivedMind	3	126	12th February 2011 - 05:51 AM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		Speak out, Monsieur le Professeur Montagnier!	TheUnhivedMind	0	74	12th February 2011 - 04:01 AM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		SIDA NONAMETV MENSONGE TRAITEMENT HIV [Vd]	TheUnhivedMind	0	79	12th February 2011 - 03:56 AM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		Human Endogenous Retroviruses and AIDS Research: Confusion, Consensus, or Science?	TheUnhivedMind	0	129	12th February 2011 - 03:52 AM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		Die Epidemie findet nicht statt - auch nicht in Arika [Vd]	TheUnhivedMind	0	87	12th February 2011 - 03:49 AM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		AIDS and homeopathy in Africa [Vd]	TheUnhivedMind	0	76	12th February 2011 - 03:48 AM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		AIDS - Exposing the myths - a video history [Vd]	TheUnhivedMind	0	104	12th February 2011 - 03:48 AM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		The "AIDS" Hoax and Gay Men [Vd]	TheUnhivedMind	0	116	12th February 2011 - 03:47 AM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		Nancy Banks at a conference [Vd]	TheUnhivedMind	0	86	12th February 2011 - 03:46 AM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind

		HIV/AIDS and Goethe's Faust: a pact with the devil [Vd]	TheUnhivedMind	0	66	12th February 2011 - 03:45 AM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		How I fell victim to the AIDS machine [Vd]	TheUnhivedMind	0	83	12th February 2011 - 03:44 AM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		Religion, politics & AIDS in Italy [Vd]	TheUnhivedMind	0	69	12th February 2011 - 03:43 AM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		African population doubled from 400 to 800 million during HIV-AIDS era -Peter Duesberg [Vd]	TheUnhivedMind	0	205	12th February 2011 - 03:42 AM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		AIDS research significantly confused by Human Endogenous Retroviruses (HERVs) [Vd]	TheUnhivedMind	0	64	12th February 2011 - 03:41 AM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		Hindrances to scientific progress and the failings of HIV/AIDS theory [Vd]	TheUnhivedMind	0	75	12th February 2011 - 03:39 AM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		AIDS, Opium, Diamonds & Empire - Dr. Banks [Vd]	TheUnhivedMind	0	87	12th February 2011 - 03:33 AM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		Denialism: TheDeath of AIDS [Vd]	TheUnhivedMind	0	127	12th February 2011 - 03:27 AM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		"Goodbye AIDS! Did it ever exist?" Book launch by Maria Papagiannidou [Vd]	TheUnhivedMind	0	80	12th February 2011 - 03:17 AM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		Rethinking AIDS Calls for Conference in 2011	TheUnhivedMind	0	86	12th February 2011 - 03:01 AM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		Over the Rainbow with Marco Ruggiero	TheUnhivedMind	0	63	12th February 2011 - 02:50 AM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		Global Fund Against Aids cracks down on fraud	TheUnhivedMind	0	72	11th February 2011 - 01:23 AM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		THE HIV TEST FOR ALL IS NOW STARTING TO COME FORTH YOU MUST PREPARE FOR THIS NONSENSE!!	TheUnhivedMind	5	699	12th January 2011 - 12:51 AM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		Stem Cell Transplant Cures Man in Berlin of Non Existent Virus he NEVER had in the first	TheUnhivedMind	1	210	14th December 2010 - 10:51 PM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		Segments from the film AIDS Inc [Vd]	TheUnhivedMind	1	185	6th December 2010 - 02:37 AM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		Leading AIDS Dissident: David Crowe Speaks Out [Vd]	TheUnhivedMind	0	140	6th December 2010 - 02:33 AM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		BIOWEAPONRY GILEAD WISH TO REDUCE GAY POPULATION WITH ARV PREVENTATIVES LEADING TO AIDS	TheUnhivedMind	3	216	26th November 2010 - 07:14 PM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		HIV Hoax movie maker to be interviewed	Moosedog	5	372	22nd November 2010 - 06:05 AM Last Post by: AntiSionist
		Clue to how some 'control' their HIV without meds [YET MORE BUNKUM, MEDS=DEATH!]	TheUnhivedMind	0	223	5th November 2010 - 07:41 PM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind

		US porn industry in a crisis over a non-existant virus due to false positive riddled test	TheUnhivedMind	2	373	18th October 2010 - 12:37 PM Last Post by: Arkham Knight
		More utter propaganda bunkum on hiv being 32000 years old. [THESE CRETINS ARE A JOKE!]	TheUnhivedMind	0	221	17th September 2010 - 09:14 PM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		Example of information on your antibodies	TheUnhivedMind	0	286	3rd August 2010 - 05:26 PM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		Pharmaceuticals contributing to AIDS crisis [Vd] [THERE IS NO DAMN HIV NONSENSE!]	TheUnhivedMind	0	268	30th July 2010 - 12:16 AM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		HIV vaccines cause 50 percent false positive rate in HIV tests	TheUnhivedMind	0	255	24th July 2010 - 02:34 PM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		DRUGS TO FIGHT A NONEXISTANT VIRUS IN MOTHERS	TheUnhivedMind	1	341	19th May 2010 - 05:26 PM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		"Rh-Neg Blood Products Used To Treat HIV/AIDS" [THERE IS NO HIV !]	TheUnhivedMind	0	360	17th May 2010 - 02:24 PM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		AIDS fraud: The Marketing of an Epidemic exposed in House of Numbers exclusive film clip	TheUnhivedMind	0	270	7th May 2010 - 05:11 PM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		Trying to make a vaccine for a virus that doesn't even exist except in peoples minds!!	TheUnhivedMind	0	247	6th May 2010 - 04:46 PM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		Got a made up disease? Your a Terrorist then and thats by those who made it up!	TheUnhivedMind	0	253	21st April 2010 - 05:28 PM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		Drugs for HIV Infection and AIDS Might Prematurely Age Brains	TheUnhivedMind	0	417	5th February 2010 - 03:41 PM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		AIDS: The great medical con, explained by D.Icke [TOOK THIS SIS SHILL LONG ENOUGH!!]	TheUnhivedMind	0	440	12th January 2010 - 05:46 PM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		Are AIDS / HIV tests a hoax?	TheUnhivedMind	1	376	10th January 2010 - 09:26 AM Last Post by: AntiSionist
		Shocking truth about AIDS exposed on World AIDS Day with "House of Numbers"	TheUnhivedMind	1	566	8th January 2010 - 05:04 AM Last Post by: AntiSionist
		The Poisoner WHO gives highly dangerous advice on drugs for non-existance hiv virus	TheUnhivedMind	1	364	30th November 2009 - 06:20 PM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		The Truth about Bird Flu, H5N1, Vaccines and AIDS	TheUnhivedMind	6	1,009	25th October 2009 - 08:11 PM Last Post by: AntiSionist
		AIDS Vaccine Success Claim Is Undermined [IMPOSSIBLE TO MAKE AN AIDS VACCINE!]	TheUnhivedMind	0	354	6th October 2009 - 02:05 PM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		FDA approves new screening test for non existant virus [UTTER BULLST AND QUACKERY!]	TheUnhivedMind	1	342	20th September 2009 - 02:33 PM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		How do viruses work?	TheUnhivedMind	2	437	19th September 2009 - 12:15 PM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind

		HIV HAS NEVER BEEN ISOLATED FROM AIDS PATIENTS (Pages 1 2)	AntiSionist	23	1,677	4th September 2009 - 06:18 AM Last Post by: AntiSionist
		Sometimes the attack dogs get so desperate THEY EXPOSE THEMSELVES BY MISTAKE!	AntiSionist	8	719	4th September 2009 - 06:11 AM Last Post by: AntiSionist
		House of Numbers	TheUnhivedMind	1	363	1st September 2009 - 12:54 PM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		CDC Considers Promoting 'Universal Circumcision [FOR THE WORSHIP OF EL/SATAN/SATURN]	TheUnhivedMind	0	398	26th August 2009 - 04:52 PM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		GP120 PROTEIN IN NOVARTIS'S SWINE FLU VACCINE WILL FLAG YOU AS HIV+ ON QUACK TESTS!	TheUnhivedMind	0	413	20th August 2009 - 03:51 PM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		Yet more spoon fed hiv BULLSHIT!	TheUnhivedMind	0	423	3rd August 2009 - 12:30 AM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		Cambodian government accused of creating 'Aids colony'	TheUnhivedMind	0	321	29th July 2009 - 02:23 PM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		More nonsense based on Saturn worship with hiv	TheUnhivedMind	0	388	18th July 2009 - 12:52 PM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		Lemons Garlic and Oil for HIV is "immoral"	Sylph	1	601	24th June 2009 - 05:22 PM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		CHRISTINE MAGGIORE IS DEAD (Pages 1 2) HIV-AIDS critic died one month ago today	AntiSionist	21	1,866	10th June 2009 - 07:37 AM Last Post by: AntiSionist
		HOUSE OF NUMBERS Another HIV film with dissidents in them	AntiSionist	0	371	28th May 2009 - 08:24 PM Last Post by: AntiSionist
		Scientists want Robert Gallo papers retracted	TheUnhivedMind	4	851	28th May 2009 - 07:55 PM Last Post by: AntiSionist
		Books on the truth of AIDS	TheUnhivedMind	7	523	28th May 2009 - 06:56 PM Last Post by: AntiSionist
		On Quitting HIV Rebecca Culshaw	AntiSionist	2	404	28th May 2009 - 06:54 PM Last Post by: AntiSionist
		Another profitting Fraud hiv test comes forth	TheUnhivedMind	3	406	25th May 2009 - 09:10 PM Last Post by: Wolveshater
		Watch HIV Cell-to-Cell Transfer, Live! DO YOU BELIEVE IT? NOT SURE I DO!	AntiSionist	1	423	18th May 2009 - 06:05 PM Last Post by: AntiSionist
		Professional Profile on Professor Charles Ssali	TheUnhivedMind	1	454	16th May 2009 - 12:00 AM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		HIV DOESN'T EXIST SAYS EXPERT	AntiSionist	9	1,409	15th May 2009 - 07:27 PM Last Post by: AntiSionist
		Interview with Dr. Stefan Lanka, Ph. D Challenging the AIDS information	TheUnhivedMind	0	346	4th May 2009 - 11:54 PM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind

		FAKE MEDICAL RESEARCH	TheUnhivedMind	0	463	15th April 2009 - 01:22 AM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		CREATING MEDICAL STRESS	TheUnhivedMind	0	373	13th April 2009 - 12:48 AM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		"The Infectious Myth" Shattered by David Crowe	TheUnhivedMind	1	479	2nd April 2009 - 03:46 PM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		The Fraud of Western Blot Tests	AntiSionist	3	420	1st April 2009 - 09:36 PM Last Post by: AntiSionist
		What is AIDS Denialism?	TheUnhivedMind	0	403	1st April 2009 - 03:58 PM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		AN URGENT RESPONSE TO: THE ARCHER ENQUIRY	TheUnhivedMind	0	359	1st April 2009 - 03:44 PM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		Manufacturer Disclaimers	TheUnhivedMind	0	334	1st April 2009 - 03:42 PM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		Multiple Causes of AIDS I [VID]	TheUnhivedMind	0	460	1st April 2009 - 03:34 PM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		Dr Banks & Carly speak on the truth behind AIDS	TheUnhivedMind	0	408	20th March 2009 - 04:37 AM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		More utter idiot talk about hiv destruction [I CRAIG HAVE THE CURE FOR HIV]	TheUnhivedMind	0	548	9th February 2009 - 11:37 AM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		Scientists change their views on HIV-AIDS link	AntiSionist	1	433	29th January 2009 - 07:24 AM Last Post by: AntiSionist
		Global AIDS crisis overblown? Some dare to say so	TheUnhivedMind	0	431	1st December 2008 - 02:15 AM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		Strengthening the African DEPOPULATION plan!	TheUnhivedMind	1	457	29th November 2008 - 02:13 AM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		RAPID POISONING OF CHILDREN	TheUnhivedMind	1	557	20th November 2008 - 04:48 AM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		Lee Evans Speaks Out about the HIV Tests [VID]	TheUnhivedMind	0	472	15th November 2008 - 04:53 AM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		Bone marrow transplant	Mo0n5tar	1	392	15th November 2008 - 12:01 AM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		Mbeki blamed for 330,000 deaths	TheUnhivedMind	2	409	11th November 2008 - 01:06 AM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		HIV epidemic in U.S. a crisis, health officials say	Cold	2	517	5th November 2008 - 02:21 PM Last Post by: skr56
		'Universal' FRAUDULENT HIV testing planned [STAY WELL AWAY]	TheUnhivedMind	2	524	30th October 2008 - 02:54 PM Last Post by: Wolveshater
		AIDS as a Biowarfare Weapon J Keith's Biowarfare In America (Ch. 12)	bovvered	1	483	30th October 2008 - 02:48 PM Last Post by: Wolveshater

Showing 100 of 103 topics sorted by last post date in descending order from the beginning Go!

Pages: (2) [1] 2

NEW TOPIC NEW POLL

Open Topic (new replies)

Open Topic (no new replies)

Hot Topic (new replies)

Hot Topic (no new replies)

Poll (new votes)

Poll (no new votes)

Locked Topic

Moved Topic

Search this forum: Enter Keywords Go

- AIDS and the non-existent hiv fraud Go

Mark this forum as read

Hosted for free by InvisionFree (Terms of Use: Updated 2/10/2010) | Powered by Invision Power Board v1.3 Final © 2003 IPS, Inc.
Page creation time: 0.0487 seconds | Archive

The Orsini Skin by Bunthius Zeta Board mods

0

View Full Version: AIDS and the non-existent hiv fraud

51. Trying to make a vaccine for a virus that doesn't 52. Got a made up disease? Your a Terrorist then and
53. Drugs for HIV Infection and AIDS Might Prematurely
54. AIDS: The great medical con, explained by D.Icke
55. Are AIDS / HIV tests a hoax?
56. Shocking truth about AIDS exposed on World AIDS
57. The Poisoner WHO gives highly dangerous advice on
58. The Truth about Bird Flu, H5N1, Vaccines and AIDS
59. AIDS Vaccine Success Claim Is Undermined
60. FDA approves new screening test for non existant
61. How do viruses work?
62. HIV HAS NEVER BEEN ISOLATED FROM AIDS PATIENTS
63. Sometimes the attack dogs get so desperate
64. House of Numbers
65. CDC Considers Promoting 'Universal Circumcision
66. GP120 PROTEIN IN NOVARTIS'S SWINE FLU VACCINE WILL
67. Yet more spoon fed hiv BULLSHIT!
68. Cambodian government accused of creating 'Aids
69. More nonsense based on Saturn worship with hiv
70. Lemons Garlic and Oil for HIV is "immoral"
71. CHRISTINE MAGGIORE IS DEAD
72. HOUSE OF NUMBERS
73. Scientists want Robert Gallo papers retracted
74. Books on the truth of AIDS
75. On Quitting HIV
76. Another profitting Fraud hiv test comes forth
77. Watch HIV Cell-to-Cell Transfer, Live!
78. Professional Profile on Professor Charles Ssali
79. HIV DOESN'T EXIST SAYS EXPERT
80. Interview with Dr. Stefan Lanka, Ph. D Challenging

81. FAKE MEDICAL RESEARCH
82. CREATING MEDICAL STRESS
83. "The Infectious Myth" Shattered by David Crowe
84. The Fraud of Western Blot Tests
85. What is AIDS Denialism?
86. AN URGENT RESPONSE TO: THE ARCHER ENQUIRY
87. Manufacturer Disclaimers
88. Multiple Causes of AIDS I [VID]
89. Dr Banks & Carly speak on the truth behind AIDS
90. More utter idiot talk about hiv destruction
91. Scientists change their views on HIV-AIDS link
92. Global AIDS crisis overblown? Some dare to say so
93. Strengthening the African DEPOPULATION plan!
94. RAPID POISONING OF CHILDREN
95. Lee Evans Speaks Out about the HIV Tests [VID]
96. Bone marrow transplant
97. Mbeki blamed for 330,000 deaths
98. HIV epidemic in U.S. a crisis, health officials
99. 'Universal' FRAUDULENT HIV testing planned
100. AIDS as a Biowarfare Weapon

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: AIDS and the non-existent hiv fraud

101. Exposing Gallo.
102. AIDS vaccine focus shifts after disappointments
103. Get a Nobel Peace Prize for making something up!

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: HIV FRAUD HIGHLIGHTED IN THESE VIDEOS

Title: HIV FRAUD HIGHLIGHTED IN THESE VIDEOS
Description: [MAKE SURE YOU VIEW THESE ASAP]

craig-oxley - October 31, 2009 12:42 PM (GMT)

The Other Side Of AIDS

http://video.google.com/videoplay?docid=-2668901721328615 95#

[dohtml]<embed id=VideoPlayback src=http://video.google.com/googleplayer.swf?docid=-2668901721328615 95&hl=en&fs=true style=width:400px;height:326px allowFullScreen=true allowScriptAccess=always type=application/x-shockwave-flash> </embed>[/dohtml]

HIV = AIDS - Fact Or Fraud?

http://video.google.com/videoplay?docid=-8142733917997460212

[dohtml]<embed id=VideoPlayback src=http://video.google.com/googleplayer.swf?docid=-8142733917997460212&hl=en&fs=true style=width:400px;height:326px allowFullScreen=true allowScriptAccess=always type=application/x-shockwave-flash> </embed>[/dohtml]

Deconstructing The Myth Of AIDS (Gary Null)

http://video.google.com/videoplay?docid=3983706668483511310

[dohtml]<embed id=VideoPlayback src=http://video.google.com/googleplayer.swf?docid=3983706668483511310&hl=en&fs=true style=width:400px;height:326px allowFullScreen=true allowScriptAccess=always type=application/x-shockwave-flash> </embed>[/dohtml]

In 1984 we were told that HIV was the cause of AIDS. In his provocative documentary film, “Deconstructing the Myth of AIDS,” Gary Null, Ph.D., challenges virtually every statement ever made by the American medical industrial complex on the virus - including those of the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention (CDC), the National Institute for Health (NIH) and the Food and Drug Administration (FDA). While presenting the findings of Nobel Prize-winning scientists and leading virologists, the film exposes the political maneuvering, conspiracies and cover-ups that have provided obstacles to the study of this human catastrophe from the start. While presenting the findings of Nobel Prize-winning scientists and leading virologists, the film exposes the political maneuvering, conspiracies and cover-ups that have provided obstacles to the study of this human catastrophe from the start. For example, there are experts who believe that AIDS is the result of multiple factors, including drug use, stress and nutritional deficiency, but that government agencies made a politically strategic decision to de-emphasize these hypotheses and thus discourage certain researchers and their funding. Meanwhile, AZT, an infamously failed treatment for cancer, and now the primary FDA-approved approach to treating AIDS, is highly toxic and can produce the very symptoms of the illness it is prescribed to treat. "Deconstructing the Myth of AIDS" goes beyond medicine and science to question the very foundation of our reliance on government bureaucracies where it concerns matters of life and death

AntiSionist - November 1, 2009 12:14 AM (GMT)

Seen them all at least once. I've watched the Gary Null one twice. Thanks to you Craig, I found all the resources which proved HIV was never isolated and doesn't exist. Kudos.

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: MASSIVE ARCHIVE OF AIDS TRUTH

The Unhived Mind Ii > AIDS and the non-existent hiv fraud > MASSIVE ARCHIVE OF AIDS TRUTH

Title: MASSIVE ARCHIVE OF AIDS TRUTH

craig-oxley - September 13, 2008 11:48 PM (GMT)

http://z13.invisionfree.com/THE_UNHIVED_MI...php?showforum=8

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: Anti-HIV drug made by GM plants begins trials in Title: Anti-HIV drug made by GM plants begins trials in Description: humans [POISONS FOR NON EXISTENT VIRUS]

TheUnhivedMind - July 21, 2011 03:46 AM (GMT)

Anti-HIV drug made by GM plants begins trials in humans

The antiviral was manufactured in GM tobacco with a view to using the same technique to slash the cost of other life-saving drugs in the developing world

Sarah Boseley
guardian.co.uk, Tuesday 19 July 2011 17.22 BST
http://www.guardian.co.uk/science/2011/jul...-drug-gm-plants

An antiviral drug synthesised by genetically modified plants is being tested on a small number of women in the UK to establish its safety, bringing closer the possibility of cheap modern medicines for the developing world.

The drug's developers hope it can be used to prevent HIV infection, but the real breakthrough is that the research demonstrates it is possible for similar molecules – known as monoclonal antibodies – to be produced relatively cheaply in plants to the high standards needed for their use in humans.

The human trial has been approved by the UK licensing body, the Medicines and Healthcare products Regulatory Agency (MHRA), and is taking place in Guildford at the clinical research centre of the University of Surrey.

Pharma-Planta is a project launched seven years ago with the objective of using GM plants to slash the cost of drugs that are hard to produce. The scientists' aim is to increase the availability of these modern medicines – which are often highly effective – in the poorest countries of the world.

Access to medicines in the developing world is extremely limited. The World Health Organization estimates that 23 million infants worldwide do not get adequate basic immunisation and 1.7 million children under five die from vaccine-preventable diseases.

"The driver was to produce these medicines economically and at a level that would satisfy global demand," said Professor Julian Ma from St George's University, London, who is the joint co-ordinator of the European Union-funded project.

Many medicines are synthesised at great expense in fermentation vats containing bacteria or mammalian cells. By contrast Pharma-Planta produced the anti-HIV monoclonal antibody in GM tobacco plants grown in soil in greenhouses in Germany. After 45 days, they were harvested, their leaves were shredded and "highly purified antibodies" were extracted.

The researchers say there is little risk of such GM plants spreading or contaminating other crops because they are contained and would not be grown on anything like an agricultural scale.

Ma said it was "a red letter day" when they received the go-ahead from the drugs regulator. "The approval from the MHRA for us to proceed with human trials is an acknowledgement that monoclonal antibodies can be made in plants to the same quality as those made using existing conventional production systems. That is something many people did not believe could be achieved," he said.

Eleven healthy women have volunteered to take part in the trial and two of them have been given the antibody so far, with a third woman having been given a placebo. The trial is designed only to demonstrate the safety of the antibody, called P2G12, at different dosages. Much bigger trials in women at risk of contracting HIV would be necessary to test whether it could prevent infection.

If it does prove effective, the drug would probably have to be used in combination with other monoclonal antibodies to minimise the chance that the virus developed resistance, as it easily does to antivirals.

The process is between 10 and 100 times cheaper than conventional production systems, said Professor Rainer Fischer of the Fraunhofer Institute for Molecular Biology and Applied Ecology in Aachen, Germany, where the plants were grown.

The most useful monoclonal antibodies, such as the anti-cancer drug Herceptin, are still covered by patents owned by major pharmaceutical companies, but once these expire the new technique could offer a way to make cheap versions available in poor countries.

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: The next round of purpose depopulation starts

Title: The next round of purpose depopulation starts

TheUnhivedMind - July 13, 2011 06:03 PM (GMT)

Boost in fight against HIV

Mark Prigg, Science and Technology Editor
13 Jul 2011
http://www.thisislondon.co.uk/standard/art...-against-hiv.do

AIDS drugs used to treat HIV can also prevent infection among heterosexual men and women, according to the results of two studies conducted in Africa.

The results, described by experts as "huge", could lead to the drugs being used to stop the spread of the disease.

The research involving couples in Kenya, Uganda and Botswana found that giving daily Aids drugs reduced infection rates by at least 62 per cent when compared with a placebo.

Researchers have been so impressed with their trials they have now been halted so the results can be released.

The trial was conducted by researchers at the University of Washington International Clinical Research Center.

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: Depopulation by ARV of the South

Title: Depopulation by ARV of the South

TheUnhivedMind - July 12, 2011 12:06 AM (GMT)

Lack of education fuels HIV epidemic in South

As early as 1991, the late "Big" Jack Johnson warned of AIDS sweeping his native Mississippi Delta.

By Steve Sternberg and Jack Gillum, USA TODAY
Updated: 07/11/2011 4:10pm
By Troy Catchings
http://m.usatoday.com/article/yourlife/49269176

Until his death in March, bluesman "Big" Jack Johnson of Clarksdale, Miss., crisscrossed the troubled terrain of the Mississippi Delta, singing of broken homes and broken hearts.

His songs touched on all the timeless blues themes of poverty, abuse, abandonment and longing. Johnson also took on a newer heartache — HIV/AIDS — that is sweeping through the Delta and much of the rest of the South. And he confronted it head-on.

"Hello, little schoolgirl," Johnson sang, "You better keep your dress tail down. I hear there's a lot of AIDS out here, and it's spreading all around."

When the song was released in 1991, many people still regarded HIV/AIDS as chiefly a problem of gay enclaves in big cities. But a new county-level map of U.S. HIV infection data, by researchers at Emory University's Rollins School of Public Health, along with an analysis of the data by USA TODAY, shows how deeply in three decades HIV also has become entrenched in America's heartland, especially the South.

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: Mothers angry over hospital's HIV test mix-up

Title: Mothers angry over hospital's HIV test mix-up Description: [BE CAREFUL WHEN HAVING CHILDREN]

TheUnhivedMind - July 1, 2011 06:04 PM (GMT)

Mothers angry over hospital's HIV test mix-up

Kiran Randhawa, Health and Social Affairs Correspondent http://www.thisislondon.co.uk/standard/art...-test-mix-up.do
1 Jul 2011

Thirty new mothers at a hospital repeatedly criticised for failing patients were left in fear after a mix-up over HIV results.

They had each been given routine blood tests at Queen's Hospital in Romford. One tested positive for HIV but a later check proved negative. Staff rang the other women nearly three months after the tests to inform them of a possible mix-up.

One of the patients, Rosemary Din, who was given the all-clear, called her ordeal "disgusting".

A spokesman for the Barking, Havering and Redbridge University Hospitals NHS Trust apologised but said it was vital to have the correct information.

TheUnhivedMind - July 1, 2011 06:10 PM (GMT)

Checking pregnant feminines is for a non-existent virus is a way of trapping more people into the depopulation program and grabbing more children. The idea being that hopefully more feminines will show up as a false positive and then the Anti Retro Viral inquisition is started which will depopulate that feminine within a short period of time. Not only that the vermin will insist the child is put on ARV death care and depopulated quick smart too. If the parents sign and create a birth certificate and then do not give the child the death treatment, well the social services is bought in and they remove their product (the child) and place them with a foster family who will give death treatments. Its as simple as that folks. Basically eat correctly and you should have an easy pregnancy and when its time to give birth it should be a home birth and natural. No blood tests, vaccinations nothing must be taken. No birth certificate must be created just a basic record of birth noted on the advise of a notary but never the usual method otherwise thats it they've got your ass.

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: U.N. wants funds again to commit Genocide under Title: U.N. wants funds again to commit Genocide under Description: the guise of hiv

TheUnhivedMind - June 5, 2011 12:08 AM (GMT)

UN urges more funds for early HIV treatment

In India, the rate of new HIV infections fell by more than 50%, according to UNAids

4 June 2011 Last updated at 11:56
http://www.bbc.co.uk/news/world-13652702

The UN Programme on HIV/Aids (UNAids) has called for increased funding for the early treatment of people with HIV.

The head of the agency, Michael Sidibe, said a new study showed it could reduce the risk of HIV transmission by 96%.

He said the challenge was to expand access to drugs, and deal with social factors which stigmatise the disease.

On Thursday, a UN report said there had been a nearly 25% decline in new HIV infections and a reduction in Aids-related deaths during the past decade.

It was published ahead of the 30th anniversary on Sunday of the first official report on Aids by the US Centers for Disease Control and Prevention.

The General Assembly is to meet at UN headquarters to discuss the epidemic next week, with 20 world leaders and more than 100 ministers expected to attend.

An estimated 34 million people were living with HIV at the end of 2010 and nearly 30 million have died from Aids-related causes since 1981, the report said.
'Shunned disease'

In the report published ahead of the anniversary, UNAids said the global rate of new HIV infections had declined by nearly 25% between 2001 and 2009.

In India, the rate of new HIV infections fell by more than 50% and in South Africa by more than 35%; both countries have the largest number of people living with HIV on their continents.

The report found that in the third decade of the epidemic, people were starting to adopt safer sexual behaviour, reflecting the impact of HIV prevention and awareness efforts. But there were still important gaps, it warned, with young men more likely to be informed about HIV prevention than young women.

There has also been significant progress in preventing new HIV infections among children as increasing numbers of mothers living with HIV have gained access to antiretroviral prophylaxis during pregnancy, delivery and breastfeeding.

About 6.6 million people in low- and middle-income countries were receiving antiretroviral drugs at the end of 2010, a nearly 22-fold increase since 2001.

"Thirty years ago this mystery disease was called a gay plague - it was a shunned disease, people were scared about each other," Mr Sidibe said. "Now it's a completely different world - we've been breaking the conspiracy of silence."

However, the report found that at the end of last year nearly nine million people who needed treatment were not getting it, and that treatment access for children was lower than for adults.

And while the rate of new HIV infections has declined globally, the total number of HIV infections remains high, at about 7,000 per day.

The report also noted that there had been an increase in the rate of new HIV infections in Eastern Europe and in the Middle East and North Africa, and that HIV was the leading cause of death among women of reproductive age.
'Game-changer'

UNAids also said that while funding for HIV treatments in low- and middle-income countries had risen 10-fold between 2001 and 2009, international resources had declined in 2010. Many states remain dependant on external financing.

"I am worried that international investments are falling at a time when the Aids response is delivering results for people," Mr Sidibe said. "If we do not invest now, we will have to pay several times more in the future."

He stressed the importance of a recent trial, which found that if a person living with HIV adhered to an effective antiretroviral regimen, the risk of transmitting the virus to their uninfected sexual partner could be reduced by 96%.

"Access to treatment will transform the Aids response in the next decade. We must invest in accelerating access and finding new treatment options.

"Antiretroviral therapy is a bigger game-changer than ever before - it not only stops people from dying, but also prevents transmission of HIV to women, men and children," he added.

Mr Sidibe said the challenge was to expand access to drugs, and deal with social factors that in some countries continue to stigmatise the disease and make women particularly vulnerable.

To do this, UNAids believes an investment of at least $22bn is needed by 2015, $6bn more than is available today. It estimates such funds would stop 12m new HIV infections and 7.4m Aids-related deaths by 2020.

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: Propaganda claiming to have found a gene in the Title: Propaganda claiming to have found a gene in the Description: human body for a non existant virus

TheUnhivedMind - May 17, 2011 02:51 AM (GMT)

Apparent Immunity Gene 'Cures' Bay Area Man Of AIDS

May 16, 2011 12:25 PM
http://sanfrancisco.cbslocal.com/2011/05/1...ea-man-of-aids/

SAN FRANCISCO (CBS 5) — A 45-year-old man now living in the Bay Area may be the first person ever cured of the deadly disease AIDS, the result of the discovery of an apparent HIV immunity gene.

Timothy Ray Brown tested positive for HIV back in 1995, but has now entered scientific journals as the first man in world history to have that HIV virus completely eliminated from his body in what doctors call a "functional cure."

Brown was living in Berlin, Germany back in 2007, dealing with HIV and leukemia, when scientists there gave him a bone marrow stem cell transplant that had astounding results.

"I quit taking my HIV medication the day that I got the transplant and haven't had to take any since," said Brown, who has been dubbed "The Berlin Patient" by the medical community.

Brown's amazing progress continues to be monitored by doctors at San Francisco General Hospital and at the University of California at San Francisco medical center.

"I'm cured of HIV. I had HIV but I don't anymore," he said, using words that many in the scientific community are cautiously clinging to.

Scientists said Brown received stem cells from a donor who was immune to HIV. In fact, about one percent of Caucasians are immune to HIV. Some researchers think the immunity gene goes back to the Great Plague: people who survived the plague passed their immunity down and their heirs have it today.

UCSF's Dr. Jay Levy, who co-discovered the HIV virus and is one of the most respected AIDS researchers in the world, said this case opens the door to the field of "cure research," which is now gaining more attention.

"If you're able to take the white cells from someone and manipulate them so they're no longer infected, or infectable, no longer infectable by HIV, and those white cells become the whole immune system of that individual, you've got essentially a functional cure," he explained.

UCSF's Dr. Paul Volberding, another pioneering AIDS expert who has studied the disease for all of its 30 years cautioned that while "the Berlin Patient is a fascinating story, it's not one that can be generalized."

Both doctors stressed that Brown's radical procedure may not be applicable to many other people with HIV, because of the difficulty in doing stem cell transplants, and finding the right donor.

"You don't want to go out and get a bone marrow transplant because transplants themselves carry a real risk of mortality," Volberding said.

He explained that scientists also still have many unanswered questions involving the success of Brown's treatment.

"One element of his treatment, and we don't know which, allowed apparently the virus to be purged from his body," he observed. "So it's going to be an interesting, I think productive area to study."

Volberding continued, "Knock on wood, (Brown) hasn't had any recurrence now for several years of the virus, and that hasn't happened before in our experience."

As a result, at the San Francisco AIDS Foundation some are now using the word "cure" after so many avoided it for decades.

"You sort of felt like you couldn't say 'cure' for a number of years. Scientists and clinicians and people with HIV alike felt that was a promise that was never going to be realized and it was dangerous to direct a lot of energy toward it," said Dr. Judy Auerbach. "And now things have shifted."

The California Institute of Regenerative Medicine is currently funding stem cell research in the Bay Area based on Brown's case in the hopes of replicating his success for broader populations of people with HIV.

The institute said it plans to begin clinical trials next year.

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: African Trial of Gilead HIV Drug Stopped as No

Title: African Trial of Gilead HIV Drug Stopped as No Description: Benefit Shown [CANT KILL WHATS NOT THERE

TheUnhivedMind - April 18, 2011 05:35 PM (GMT)

African Trial of Gilead HIV Drug Stopped as No Benefit Is Shown

By Drew Armstrong - Apr 18, 2011 5:19 PM GMT+0100
http://www.bloomberg.com/news/2011-04-18/a...t-is-shown.html

Researchers canceled a study in Africa to see whether Gilead Science Inc.'s Truvada pill would help prevent infection from HIV, after finding no benefit by the people taking the medicine midway through the trial.

Of the 56 women in the trial who contracted HIV, half were taking Truvada and half were on a placebo pill, according to a statement by FHI, a nonprofit global health group that sponsored the study. The trial of 3,902 women was halted after an independent data monitoring committee advised that it would be "highly unlikely to be able" to show Truvada's effectiveness in preventing HIV infection in the study population, FHI said.

Truvada combines two anti-HIV medications made by Gilead, Emtriva and Viread, and is currently used to treat people already affected by the disease. A study released last November found that Truvada helped protect gay and bisexual men from getting infected with the AIDS virus.

"While this development was not what we would have hoped for, Gilead believes that antiretroviral therapies remain a promising potential HIV prevention strategy," Amy Flood, a Gilead spokeswoman, said in an e-mail. "We continue to support ongoing studies evaluating the company's antiretroviral therapies as potential preventatives."

The previous study had shown that Truvada, in combination with counseling and condom use, lowered the rate of infection among men who have sex with men. FHI, based in Durham, North Carolina, said the study in African women could have failed because people didn't adhere to the treatment regimen, the drug might not have worked in women or other reasons not known yet.

“At this time, it cannot be determined whether or not Truvada works to prevent HIV infection in women,” FHI said in the statement.

The Bill & Melinda Gates Foundation helped fund the effort. Microsoft Corp. chairman Gates’ organization is dedicated to improving global public health, increasing development and improving education.

Gilead fell $1.31, or 3.1 percent, to $40.39 at 11:54 a.m. New York time in Nasdaq Stock Market composite trading.

To contact the reporter on this story: Drew Armstrong in Washington at darmstrong17@bloomberg.net;

To contact the editor responsible for this story: Adriel Bettelheim at abettelheim@bloomberg.net

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: GETTING CLOSER TO MANDATORY HIV TESTING

Title: GETTING CLOSER TO MANDATORY HIV TESTING
Description: [YOU BETTER BEWARE AND STUDY UP!]

TheUnhivedMind - March 23, 2011 02:31 PM (GMT)

Doubling of UK HIV rate prompts routine testing call

By Michelle Roberts
23 March 2011 Last updated at 01:24
http://www.bbc.co.uk/news/health-12817564

A doubling of new HIV infections in the UK in the past decade is leading experts to tell GPs to offer testing to all adult male patients in some areas.

Health Protection Agency data shows new UK-acquired cases rose from just under 2,000 in 2001 to nearly 3,800 in 2010.

Many of these new cases are among men who have sex with men and it is this group that campaigners hope to target.

The National Institute for Health and Clinical Excellence has launched new guidelines for doctors in England.

Routine testing

NICE says GPs should now offer and recommend HIV testing to all men who register with a practice in an area with a large community of men who have sex with men or an area that has a high prevalence of HIV - meaning more than two diagnosed cases per 1,000 people.

Hospital doctors should follow similar advice for any men admitted to their hospital.
Continue reading the main story
“

Start Quote

These expanded HIV testing policies should be prioritised for implementation as soon as possible”
Dr Valerie Delpech
Head of HIV surveillance at the HPA

Increased testing should help stop the spread of HIV by identifying men at risk, NICE believes.

Men who have sex with men remain the group most at risk of becoming infected with HIV.

New diagnoses in this group alone have increased by 70% in the past 10 years.

There are more than 30,000 men who have sex with men living with HIV in the UK and experts estimate nearly a third of these are currently undiagnosed and unaware that they are infected.

Another high-risk group that would benefit from increased HIV testing, according to NICE, is the black African community living in England.

In 2009, more than 2,000 black Africans were diagnosed with an HIV infection, one-third of all new diagnoses in the UK.

Professor Mike Kelly from NICE said: "HIV is still a serious problem in this country, with a large proportion of people unaware they are infected.

"This new guidance from NICE makes a number of practical recommendations which aim to increase HIV testing by encouraging healthcare professionals to offer it routinely to people in areas where there are a high number of people living with HIV."

This would include parts of large cities like London and Manchester, as well as areas like Brighton and Hove.

Dr Valerie Delpech, head of HIV surveillance at the HPA, said: "These expanded HIV testing policies should be prioritised for implementation as soon as possible.

"The impact of late diagnosis is clearly demonstrated when you look at deaths among people with HIV - three out of five of HIV-positive individuals that die are diagnosed too late to gain the most health benefits from their treatment, like increased life expectancy."

HIV charities said the guidelines were a "vital step forward".

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: MERCK FAIL TO COMBAT NON EXISTENT VIRUS

Title: MERCK FAIL TO COMBAT NON EXISTENT VIRUS

TheUnhivedMind - March 14, 2011 07:24 PM (GMT)

HIV Drug Development Falters as Merck, Bristol-Myers Struggle With Success

By Michelle Fay Cortez - Mar 14, 2011
http://www.bloomberg.com/news/2011-03-14/g...nt-withers.html

Gilead Sciences Inc. (GILD), the world's biggest AIDS-drug maker, revolutionized treatment and helped forge a $15 billion market with a single daily pill attacking the virus with three medicines at once.

Now, Foster City, California-based Gilead and rivals Merck & Co. and Bristol-Myers Squibb Co. (BMY) are victims of that success. Three decades after the discovery of the virus that causes AIDS, there are 31 drugs on the market that have helped turn HIV from a death sentence into a manageable disease in the developed world. Only six were approved after 2004.

"The bar for bringing on a drug in HIV has gotten higher," said George Hanna, vice president of virology for U.S. medical and HIV early development at Bristol-Myers, based in New York. "You can no longer bring to market a drug you're going to have to take three times a day. All of a sudden, we're seeing a lot less in the pipeline."

Medicines created over the years have become safer, more effective, have attacked the virus in new ways and have eliminated the need for as many as 20 pills a day. As drugmakers struggle to top that achievement, millions of HIV patients face the possibility of the virus becoming fatal again if it shifts shape inside cells to outsmart existing therapies.

HIV has been a formidable foe for drug designers, mutating around chemical hurdles placed in its way. The attack begins when the virus attaches to a cell surface receptor and uses a protein to force its way inside. Most existing families of drugs stop HIV from hijacking proteins to enter cells or block its ability to copy itself once inside.

Developing Resistance

Without a steady stream of new medicines to attack the virus in different ways, drug resistance will develop, leaving more patients without a viable treatment, said Scott Hammer, a professor of medicine at Columbia University in New York.

“If we are complacent, resistance will start to spread against the key components of our therapies,” Hammer said in an interview. “We need to be ready for that because we won’t be able to catch up after it happens.”

Gilead generated $6.3 billion from HIV drugs in 2010, capturing more than 40 percent of the market. Atripla, a three- drug combination pill approved in 2006, is the most widely used AIDS medicine. It mixes Gilead’s two-drug medicine Truvada, approved in 2004, with Bristol-Myers’s pill Sustiva.

Pfizer Inc. (PFE) and Merck were the last to introduce new families of medicine for HIV in 2007. Selzentry, the first AIDS drug to block the CCR5 pathway that allows cell entry, generated $128 million last year for New York-based Pfizer and its partner GlaxoSmithKline Plc. (GSK) Merck, based in Whitehouse Station, New Jersey, had 2010 sales of $1.1 billion for Isentress, which inhibits the integrase protein used by HIV to enter healthy immune cells.

Shrinking Pipelines

Intelence, from New Brunswick, New Jersey-based Johnson & Johnson, was the last AIDS drug approved -- three years ago.

At that time, there were seven drugs in the third and final stage of testing needed for U. S. regulatory approval, according to a report by Treatment Access Group, an AIDS activist and research organization. None have made it to the market, and only two of them remain in third-stage testing.

There are about 60 drugs in various stages of development for HIV, down from 100 in 2006, said Courtney Stanton, an analyst in the infectious diseases group at Decision Resources in Burlington, Massachusetts. Ten were discontinued or put on hold in the past year, while seven now are at the end of development, she said.

Recent failures by Merck and Avex Ltd., an Australian biotechnology company highlight the difficulty drugmakers face in coming up with a medicine that advances HIV treatment.
Drugs Abandoned

Merck ended work on vicriviroc, a drug similar to Selzentry, in previously treated patients in January 2010 after it failed to outperform existing therapies. Avexa, an Australian biotechnology company, scrapped apricitabine last May after five years of development. The drug was taken twice daily, putting it at a disadvantage to Gilead's Truvada, one of the best-selling HIV treatments.

The availability of powerful combination treatments in the developed world means the number of people desperate for new drugs and available to participate in studies has plummeted, Decision Resources' Stanton said.

"There are very few HIV patients now who can't find effective treatment," she said in a telephone interview. "And it's become extraordinarily hard to show you are effective in a treatment-experienced HIV patient."

The development process was more productive around the turn of the century. HIV was evading existing treatments, like London-based Glaxo's AZT and Merck's Crixivan, and drug- resistance was spreading. Doctors and patients clamored for additional options, and clinical trials were in demand as the only way to get the newest treatments. A better understanding of the virus gave drugmakers numerous targets.
Longer Studies

Drug studies are also taking more time to complete, said Norbert Bischofberger, Gilead's chief scientific officer. The FDA now wants 48 weeks of data, and will ask companies to keep patients in the study for longer, up from 16 weeks initially, he said. Doctors want to see two or three years of data before putting their patients on a drug. European regulators have proposed extending the studies further to 96 weeks, he said.

"Honestly, that's probably a good thing," Bischofberger said. "It reflects that we have really good regimens."

Gilead is fashioning a new mixture dubbed B-tripla that replaces Bristol's Sustiva in Atripla with Johnson & Johnson (JNJ)'s drug TMC278. It also has a four-drug cocktail in development called Quad that uses all Gilead products. Longer term, Gilead is examining ways they could deliver HIV drugs once a month or even less frequently, as with some contraceptives, he said.

33 Million People

The number of people with HIV continues to grow. Each year, 56,000 Americans are infected with the virus, particularly gay men and minorities, according to the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention. There were 2.6 million new infections globally in 2009, with more than 33 million people living with the virus, according to UNAIDS. Now, the ultimate goal is a cure.

"The profit motives that drove HIV drug development are no longer there because the drugs are so good," said Jacob Lalezari, director of Quest Clinical Research, a San Francisco clinical trial center, said in an interview. “It’s the greatest success of western medicine in our lifetime. And the success of HIV drugs is leading to its own demise.”

To contact the reporter on this story: Michelle Fay Cortez in Minneapolis at mcortez@bloomberg.net

To contact the editor responsible for this story: Reg Gale at rgale5@bloomberg.net

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: HIV drug costs $12,000 a year

Title: HIV drug costs $12,000 a year
Description: [THIS IS WHY YOU'RE CONNED WITH HIV]

TheUnhivedMind - February 28, 2011 05:14 PM (GMT)

Gilead's $12,000-a-Year HIV Prevention Pill Fails to Win Physician Support

By Michelle Fay Cortez and Simeon Bennett - Feb 28, 2011 3:22 PM GMT+0000 http://www.bloomberg.com/news/2011-02-28/g...an-support.html

Gilead Sciences Inc.'s Truvada topped Time magazine's list of medical breakthroughs for 2010 after a study showed it may achieve a goal pursued by scientists for a quarter-century: a pill to prevent HIV infection.

Three months later, the advance has hit a wall. While study findings show the drug prevents HIV in non-infected, sexually active gay men, doctors say they're wary about giving healthy people a $12,000-a-year medicine that has side effects including nausea and kidney damage, and may not be used as regularly as needed. They also say they're not often asked to make the drug available for that use.

"We're not seeing people beating down the doors," said Kenneth Mayer, medical research director and co-chair of The Fenway Institute, a clinic that serves 15,000 people in Boston, including several thousand gay men. While a few patients have asked about using Truvada for prevention, perhaps for their healthy partners, Mayer says he doesn't know any clinic doctor who has prescribed it that way.

The issue is central this week at the Conference on Retroviruses and Opportunistic Infections, or CROI, a meeting for AIDS doctors that began yesterday in Boston. A dozen presentations are scheduled that will examine Truvada's long- term use in uninfected people, its' side effects and safety, the best candidates for it and the potential risk of developing drug-resistance with inconsistent use.
'Powerful Data'

"The study was beautifully done and the data are powerful, but, so far, it raises more questions than it answers," said Martin Markowitz, clinical director of the Aaron Diamond AIDS Research Center in New York City. "People who can't use a condom, are they likely to take a pill every day?" he asked. "And in the real world, who will pay?"

Healthy men who took Truvada regularly and had detectable levels in their blood were 92 percent less likely to get the AIDS-causing virus than those who took the drug sporadically or received a placebo, according to a study published in the New England Journal of Medicine in November.

Overall the research found the medicine cut infection risk by 44 percent in 2,500 gay men who were prescribed it preemptively for one to three years.

Truvada combines Viread and Emtriva, two drugs made by Foster City, California-based Gilead, into a single blue pill. It's been used since 2004 to reduce levels of HIV in people infected with the AIDS-causing virus. Researchers in the study theorized that Truvada, taken preemptively, may prevent HIV from gaining a foothold when it first enters the body, averting infection that requires a lifetime of treatment.

Second Biggest Product

The medicine was Gilead's second-best selling product last year with $2.6 billion in revenue. The company plans to file for U.S. approval as a preventative in the first half of 2011, said Chief Executive Officer John C. Martin in the company's Jan. 25 earnings call.

In November, soon after the study was reported, Robyn Karnauskas, a Deutsche Bank Securities analyst in New York, said the finding may add $1 billion to Truvada's sales. The shares in 2011 have risen 7.6 percent before today, compared with the S&P 500 Pharmaceutical Index, which has been little changed.

Use of the drug, though, has increased only slightly, according to data compiled by Bloomberg.

Between 6,805 and 8,107 new prescriptions were written each week for Truvada from December 1, 2010, to Feb. 19, generating $8.7 million to $10.3 million in sales, the data shows. That's a rise from 5,819 to 7,698 prescriptions, with sales of $6.9 million to $9.2 million, during the same period a year earlier.

'Giant Question Mark'

"In terms of the market potential, it's a giant question mark," said Joshua Schimmer, an analyst at Leerink Swann & Co. in New York, in a telephone interview. "It's essentially a pipeline product of unknown value. A whole lot of data needs to be filled in before we know how big this could be."

Gilead today increased 26 cents, or less than one percent, to $39.27 at 10:00 a.m. New York time in Nasdaq Stock Market composite trading.

Gilead spokeswoman Amy Flood said in a telephone interview the company can't track sales of Truvada for prevention.

During the earnings call, Martin said Gilead doesn't view Truvada's new use as a "significant commercial opportunity." Nonetheless, he said, the company does "see it as an important contribution to management of the HIV epidemic worldwide."

Karnauskas said she based her estimate on the assumption that 5 percent of uninfected gay men would take the drug 30 percent of the time. That isn't happening yet, Mayer said in a telephone interview.
Stigma Attached

"Knowledge of prevention isn't uniform, not everyone understands the results and there is still some stigma associated with anti-retroviral drugs," he said.

The AIDS meeting this week in Boston will also explore the use of other preventatives, which may be used in connection with Truvada in some populations, said Anthony Fauci, director of the National Institute of Allergy and Infectious Diseases, which funded the Truvada study.

There are several methods to reduce the chances of HIV infection, including condoms, circumcision and clean needles for intravenous drug users. Progress is being made with other approaches, including topical gels and other drug regimens that will be also reported on at this week's AIDS conference.

They will likely be used together in different combinations for groups at high-risk for HIV infection, Fauci said in a telephone interview.

'Combination Impact'

"We are starting to become more and more aware that prevention of HIV is not going to be a uni-dimensional phenomenon," Fauci said. "It's almost certainly going to be a combination of things that together will have a major impact."

Researchers are also looking at which population might best be helped by use of Truvada as a preventative. The study results apply only to men who have sex with men. Added trials in intravenous drug users and heterosexuals will be complete starting later this year.

The most likely to benefit, doctors say, may be those who can't be guaranteed safe sex protection including condoms, or those who don't wish to use one. That might include prostitutes in some areas, or the partners of people who already have AIDS.

Most new infections in New York City involve young people, often minorities, who can't afford the $35 per pill price for a drug that must be taken daily, Markowitz said.

Government programs for poor and unemployed people already infected with HIV have waiting lists topping 6,700 people, according to the National Alliance of State & Territorial AIDS Directors in Washington, D.C.

Morning-After Pill

A prevention approach similar to a morning-after pill may have been a better approach, potentially easing problems of cost, long-term risk and the challenge of taking a daily drug, said Kevin Robert Frost, chief executive officer of the New York-based Foundation for AIDS Research. It's unclear how much benefit the study will yield in the real world, he said.

"This may be the most important scientific breakthrough we've had so far to date that we don't know what to do with," Frost said in a telephone interview. "At the end of the day this study may prove valuable for the proof of concept that it represents and not for any specific application."

International health organizations like the World Health Organization and UNAIDS, are now discussing how the approach known as pre-exposure prophylaxis, or PrEP, should be used globally, said Robert Grant, lead researcher in the Truvada study and associate professor of medicine at the Gladstone Institute of Virology and Immunology at the University of California in San Francisco.

Demonstration Projects

The Centers for Disease Control and Prevention is convening panels of experts to discuss how to best roll out wider use of Truvada as a preventative, a strategy they refer to as PrEP. The National Institutes of Health and the Department of Health and Human Services are considering demonstration projects that would establish clinics or programs to offer the pill to high-risk, uninfected men.

Grant said more research is needed to find ways to ensure people take the medicine regularly. Only about half those in the study used the drug consistently, and those who didn't received no protection. Situations in which one partner is HIV positive and the other is not may benefit most, he said.

"In principle, people are thrilled that there are new concepts available," Grant said. "We need to let them have time to find out how to best use it."

To contact the reporters on this story: Michelle Fay Cortez in Minneapolis at mcortez@bloomberg.net; Simeon Bennett in Singapore at sbennett9@bloomberg.net.

To contact the editor responsible for this story: Reg Gale at rgale5@bloomberg.net

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: I won't go quietly [Vd]

Title: I won't go quietly [Vd]

TheUnhivedMind - February 12, 2011 03:02 AM (GMT)

I won't go quietly

http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=ok6qNSevmGI

[dohtml]<object width="640" height="390"><param name="movie" value="http://www.youtube.com/v/ok6qNSevmGI&hl=de_DE&feature=player_embedded&version=3"></param><param name="allowFullScreen" value="true"></param><param name="allowScriptAccess" value="always"></param><embed src="http://www.youtube.com/v/ok6qNSevmGI&hl=de_DE&feature=player_embedded&version=3" type="application/x-shockwave-flash" allowfullscreen="true" allowScriptAccess="always" width="640" height="390"></embed></object>[/dohtml]

Please support this film project. These are untold stories, you will not find in commmercial films or news. This trailer is a start to share new wisdom. In order to show the complete picture the filmmakers need foundings. With your donation, you can help us to create a full length documentary to reach a worldwide audience.

CommanderKeen - February 12, 2011 08:35 PM (GMT)

I always wanted to post this here, but never found it in english. Great that it's there now.

seekerx - February 25, 2011 02:19 AM (GMT)

Excellent video.

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: NANCY TURNER BANKS - THE DEADLY FALSE HIV VIRUS OF Title: NANCY TURNER BANKS - THE DEADLY FALSE HIV VIRUS OF Description: INTERNATIONAL GREED [Vd]

TheUnhivedMind - February 12, 2011 06:49 AM (GMT)

NANCY TURNER BANKS - THE DEADLY FALSE HIV VIRUS OF INTERNATIONAL GREED

http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=CO2ln3soeTg http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=rrzFLH79HQc
http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=aQUBegPDP7w

[dohtml]<iframe title="YouTube video player" width="640" height="390" src="http://www.youtube.com/embed/CO2ln3soeTg" frameborder="0" allowfullscreen></iframe>

<iframe title="YouTube video player" width="640" height="390" src="http://www.youtube.com/embed/rrzFLH79HQc" frameborder="0" allowfullscreen></iframe>

<iframe title="YouTube video player" width="640" height="390" src="http://www.youtube.com/embed/aQUBegPDP7w" frameborder="0" allowfullscreen></iframe>[/dohtml]

October 6th, 2010

This Harvard-trained MD who also has an MBA has recently published her book “AIDS, Opium, Diamonds and Empire”, subtitled “The Deadly Virus of International Greed. Nancy had a wide ranging discussion with Terry Michael and David Crowe for almost an hour.Nancy’s excellent book can be purchased from Amazon, The Book Depository (UK) or the publisher iUniverse. Dr. Banks also maintains a website on medicine and politics at nancybanks.us.

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: TOMMY MORRISON HELPING TO HIGHLIGHTING JUNK SCIENC

Title: TOMMY MORRISON HELPING TO HIGHLIGHTING JUNK SCIENC
Description: BEHIND AIDS

TheUnhivedMind - February 12, 2011 02:59 AM (GMT)

Junk science and AIDS

[dohtml]<img src="http://www.montrealgazette.com/health/4100161.bin" width=620 height=340>[/dohtml]

Boxing lesson: Morrison's fight against blood test a teaching moment for Canadians (Published Feb. 5, 2010)

By TERRY MICHAEL, Freelance February 11, 2011 Comments (6)
http://www.montrealgazette.com/health/Junk...8525/story.html

"What if most everything you think you know about HIV and AIDS is wrong?"

That's the message U.S. boxer Tommy Morrison is sending to Canadian sports fans - and the world-in a confrontation with the Regie des alcools, des courses et des jeux. The gaming board is asking the 42-year-old fighter to take an HIV blood test to qualify for meeting Eric Barrak in a main event Feb. 25 at Pierre Charbonneau Centre.

Regulating a sport that often draws blood, RACJ says Morrison must submit to a test much of the world wrongly believes indicates presence of a pathogenic virus, a string of genetic code in nucleic acid covered in protein. Basing its claimontheworkof Dr. Robert Gallo, the U.S. government 27 years ago announced "the probable cause of AIDS" was indeed such a virus. President Ronald Reagan's Health Secretary, Margaret Heckler, told a press conference April 23, 1984, that immune systems of gay men were collapsing from a retrovirus Gallo claimed to isolate, a virus he said was transmitted through blood during sex.

A researcher at the National Institutes of Health, Gallo's ethics were later the subject of two government inquiries and a major Chicago Tribune investigation of the claim he discovered the "AIDS virus" and "AIDS blood test." When hailed by Heckler as discoverer of HIV, Gallo had published not a single peer-reviewed scientific paper backing his claim. In what might be termed a split decision in boxing, the U.S. and French governments decided in 1987 to share the disputed discovery between Gallo and Dr. Luc Montagnier of the Institut Pasteur -and more importantly, to divide the lucrative profits from the widely used blood test.

That 1984 media event came in a presidential election year, when Reagan was accused of insensitivity to gay men, refusing to utter the newly minted acronym AIDS. Gays embraced the "discovery" offered by the science bureaucrat Gallo, who had been trying with virtually no success for a dozen years to relate his retroviruses to cancer.

A 19th-century germ theory answer to what first was called Gay Related Immune Deficiency was welcomed by the gay community. It made AIDS "everybody's disease," trumping growing evidence it was actually of multifactorial causation, that immune systems were collapsing from: (1) frequent, multi-partner exchange of old pathogens in incestuous urban gay enclaves, causing diseases like gonorrhea and syphilis, heavily treated with antibiotics, which destroy immune-healthful gut bacteria; (2) ubiquitous use of immune suppressive toxins, including alcohol, cocaine, amphetamines and nitrites ("poppers"), which fuelled partying in a small but significant subset of urban gay culture; and (3) the suppressive psychogenic effects of anxiety and stress on naive, youthful gay male immune systems, from blowback by newly politicized religious fundamentalists, pillorying "unclean gay lifestyles."

I write this with first-hand knowledge. I am a 63-year-old gay man, who participated in that "lifestyle" and who witnessed politicizing of medical science while serving as press secretary in the mid-1980s at the Democratic National Committee, the party opposing Ronald Reagan and supportive of gay rights.

With that brief history, I return to Tommy Morrison and the blood-test-about-nothing Quebec regulators are asking him to take. In fact, the test is nothing more than an assay for some blood proteins that can result from 70 different conditions, including pregnancy and flu vaccinations. Morrison tested reactive -the correct term for the meaningless result -- when he had blood drawn by the Nevada boxing commission before a 1996 fight. He later took "the test" several times and was "negative" -but after being placed on highly toxic, "antiretroviral" chemotherapy, drugs still administered to millions of humans, mostly gay men and black Africans, convinced they carry a lethal bug, not just proteins declared by Gallo to be markers for HIV.

Morrison eventually learned the truth about the test and the chemotherapy, which he stopped taking after it almost destroyed his health.

Thousands of us in the worldwide community of dissenters from the single pathogen theory of AIDS understand Tommy Morrison is really looking for more than a fight in Montreal. He is offering an important teaching moment to Quebecers, Canadians, and millions worldwide who are victims of the multi-billion dollar HIV-AIDS Industry.

The HIV-AIDS story is complex. Many of us have devoted years of study to it, and have concluded there is not now and there never was a human immunodeficiency virus. We ask the world to reassess 27-year-old politicized junk science. Canadians can contribute to that fight for truth by opposing injustice being visited on an American athlete who should be allowed to enter a ring Feb. 25 without taking a test about nothing.

Terry Michael is executive director of the Washington Centre for Politics & Journalism.

db45 - February 12, 2011 05:17 AM (GMT)

The whole Magic Johnson thing seems fishy too.

TheUnhivedMind - February 12, 2011 05:49 AM (GMT)

> QUOTE (db45 @ Feb 12 2011, 05:17 AM)
>
> The whole Magic Johnson thing seems fishy too.

Theres nothing fishy about Tommy Morrison except the big pharmaceutical propaganda of hiv-AIDS and their toxic drugs you'll see from the video I will put online once the last part has finished in a minute whats going on with Magic Johnson according to Tommy.

TheUnhivedMind - February 12, 2011 05:51 AM (GMT)

TOMMY 'THE DUKE' MORRISON - HIV IS A FRAUD - FEB 2010

http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=I49Uch2eEBA http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=-AoW5EveumQ http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=FNK2s7BKfvw http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=20YaMR0VZDw
http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=THB8ybzNWlg

[dohtml]<iframe title="YouTube video player" width="480" height="390" src="http://www.youtube.com/embed/I49Uch2eEBA" frameborder="0" allowfullscreen></iframe>

<iframe title="YouTube video player" width="480" height="390" src="http://www.youtube.com/embed/-AoW5EveumQ" frameborder="0" allowfullscreen></iframe>

<iframe title="YouTube video player" width="480" height="390" src="http://www.youtube.com/embed/FNK2s7BKfvw" frameborder="0" allowfullscreen></iframe>

<iframe title="YouTube video player" width="480" height="390" src="http://www.youtube.com/embed/20YaMR0VZDw" frameborder="0" allowfullscreen></iframe>

<iframe title="YouTube video player" width="480" height="390" src="http://www.youtube.com/embed/THB8ybzNWlg" frameborder="0" allowfullscreen></iframe>[/dohtml]

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: Speak out, Monsieur le Professeur Montagnier!

Title: Speak out, Monsieur le Professeur Montagnier!

TheUnhivedMind - February 12, 2011 04:01 AM (GMT)

Speak out, Monsieur le Professeur Montagnier!

Djamel Tahi January, 2010
http://rethinkingaids.com/Content/QA/tabid/169/Default.aspx

A few days ago, a video clip was posted on the Internet, which produced the kind of buzz that is shaking the world of AIDS research. This clip shows a recent interview with Professor Luc Montagnier in which he declares: “We can be exposed to HIV many times without being chronically infected. Our immune system will get rid of the virus within a few weeks.”

These remarks are likely to surprise you when you discover they come from the man who obtained the 2008 Nobel Prize in Medicine for his discovery, in 1983, of HIV, the so–called virus that causes AIDS. Even more surprising – this is not Professor Montagnier’s first such radical statement. In 1990 he declared, on an American television program, that HIV was not the only cause of the syndrome AIDS (he postulated the action of infectious co–factors) and that HIV’s role might only be secondary in the destruction of the immune system of infected people.

At that time, this was equivalent to completely exonerating the virus. His statement unleashed an outcry in the scientific community which started to associate Luc Montagnier with Professor Peter Duesberg, a famous American retrovirologist of the University of California at Berkeley, and leader of a group of “dissident” scientists who, even now, keep questioning any involvement of HIV in causing the syndrome AIDS. In 1993 and 1998, in the context of a documentary film about “dissidents”, the Pasteur Institute’s virologist reiterated this statement, adding that people with a good immune system were protected against HIV infection. So, he was already saying the same thing as today!

But beyond the surprising nature of the French virologist's statements, these remarks should be deciphered so that their (in)consistency gets evaluated. First of all, the steadfast way Luc Montagnier has been, for nearly twenty years, repeating such remarks, reveals that he never believed HIV could actually be the main and unique cause of the syndrome AIDS. Even though he has always condemned the Dissidents' point of view, every new remark he makes brings him a little closer to their hypothesis and moves him away from the official thesis according to which HIV = AIDS. However, Luc Montagnier refuses to be likened to the Dissidents and remains one of the most fervent defenders of the official research on AIDS. His, to say the least, risky and acrobatic performance gives him a position that allows him to swing over from one side to the other depending upon whether progress or doubt is occurring in AIDS research. Such an attitude does not characterize great scientific courage or a very honest attitude towards the millions of people who have been diagnosed as HIV positives and are living in the fear of the disease.

It is very regrettable that Brent Leung, the young American film director who recorded Professor Montagnier's words, did not encourage him to reveal what was behind such assertions. On what scientific studies are they based? Have those studies been published anywhere? We want to know if those people, whose "good" immune system has been able to eliminate the virus, still had traces of the infection. If so and if we believe that Professor Montagnier's assertions are right, there would therefore be millions of HIV–positive people around the world, living in a state of perpetual anxiety of developing AIDS even though they do not have the virus in their bodies! A good many of them follow a treatment whose side effects are extremely toxic and can be detrimental to their health. This information is crucial, and the people who are concerned should be immediately informed so that they are aware of the virus' harmlessness and can stop their treatment as quickly as possible. But what should then be the clinical and biological standards that could allow the determination of whether an infection has actually been neutralized and the virus suppressed? If, on the contrary, these people are HIV–antibody–negative (which should be, to say the least, very surprising), how is it possible to prove they've been in contact with the virus if it has not left any trace of its brief stay?

As we clearly see, this statement by Professor Montagnier is far from being insignificant and casts a serious doubt on many aspects of the AIDS research, such as the syndrome's pathogenesis and aetiology to start with.

NEXUS magazine, which comments on this video clip in its January–February issue (Issue 66, pp 10–11, VIH: les contradictions du Pr Montagnier), contacted Professor Montagnier in order to get some more details concerning his statement. In his answer to the magazine, Luc Montagnier declared that his words had been "taken out of context" and that those people, he was actually referring to, had actually been only transitively HIV–positive for a few months before turning HIV–negative again. It would only have been a few rare cases that he could observe during his research career at the Pasteur Institute. When viewing the mentioned video clip, it appears clear that these assertions are absolutely not “out of context” and nothing suggests that the cases Professor Montagnier is referring to are unusual. He even goes further in the rest of the interview. To the question: “…If you take a poor African who’s been infected and you build up his immune system… Is it possible for them also to get rid of it (the virus)?” Luc Montagnier’s answer is “I would think so”. These assertions, confided with the utmost conviction, do not stop him from going back on his opinions when asked for some details.

Quite obviously, Luc Montagnier hasn’t got any scientific argument to support what he says. Or maybe he cannot reveal his data! For, if he did, the HIV discoverer would once and for all topple into to the Dissidents’ camp. For these, the French virologist’s remarks are a pure delight, as they see (again) in him a weighty ally against a scientific community that always reviled them. But, instead of considering him as being one of theirs, a searcher who has always been ready to change his mind, Dissidents should expose Professor Montagnier’s attitude as well as his lack of conviction regarding the role really played by “his” virus in the syndrome. A virus, whose isolation and characterization, as bio–physicist Eleni Papadopulos–Eleopulos revealed it, remain very questionable. This has brought Eleni Papadopulos and other dissidents to question HIV’s very existence. For their part, leaders of mainstream AIDS research have got used to ignoring the French virologist’s statements whenever they contradicted the established dogma. In the past, their criticisms would limit themselves to cliches, claiming that Luc Montagnier was responsible for his own speech and claiming that they have better things to do in fighting the plague than argue with Montagnier. However, there always has been some kind of embarrassment regarding the former Pasteur Institute’s researcher and his latest statement will only increase their unease.

That is why, today, Professor Montagnier’s remarks have lead to the urgent need for clarification of his position regarding the causation of AIDS. This is the least we have every right to expect from a Nobel Prize laureate in Medicine.

Djamel Tahi
Film director and journalist.
Translated from the French by Pol Dubart.

Nobel Prize’s answer to NEXUS Magazine
With a view of openness and deontology,NEXUS Magazine contacted Professor Luc Montagnier in order to obtain an answer to Djamel TAHI’s article “VIH: les contradictions du Pr. Montagnier” and regarding his statements recorded on the footage that can be seen on Rethinking AIDS website. Here is the answer that NEXUS Magazine editorial office received from Luc Montagnier, and which has been published in the January–February 2010 issue (Issue 66, pp 10–11), following the mentioned article:

"My statement—taken out of its context in a film that glorifies the "Dissidents" and posted on Internet by a website that is searching for polemical debate—is based on observations I made while I was director of the Centre of reference on AIDS virology at the Pasteur Institute: we actually met several cases of persons being transitively HIV–positive for a few months and then turning HIV–negative again.

This is difficult to detect, keeping count of the furtive nature of the infection, but, when applied to AIDS, it simply reflects a general phenomenon that can be found in many viral infections: under the effect of a good immune response, these will disappear after a few weeks.

In the case of HIV, this explains the enormous disparity of prevalence between the North (0,1% in our countries) and the South (5 to 10% in Africa). In southern areas, for a lot of reasons (such as co–infections or malnutrition), the immune system of many Africans is weakened and allows chronic infection to HIV.

These cases of people being transitively HIV–positive do not minimize the dangerous nature of HIV, which remains the key factor in the onset of AIDS, but they suggest that a regression of the epidemic can be obtained in Africa by taking general health measures."

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: SIDA NONAMETV MENSONGE TRAITEMENT HIV [Vd]

Title: SIDA NONAMETV MENSONGE TRAITEMENT HIV [Vd]

TheUnhivedMind - February 12, 2011 03:56 AM (GMT)

SIDA NONAMETV MENSONGE TRAITEMENT HIV

http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=hylBqwHkE-w http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=rZtLycG6lsk http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=rG-CsaQ0yTI http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=pMfCC6IKyN8

[dohtml]<iframe title="YouTube video player" width="640" height="390" src="http://www.youtube.com/embed/hylBqwHkE-w" frameborder="0" allowfullscreen></iframe>

<iframe title="YouTube video player" width="640" height="390" src="http://www.youtube.com/embed/rZtLycG6lsk" frameborder="0" allowfullscreen></iframe>

<iframe title="YouTube video player" width="640" height="390" src="http://www.youtube.com/embed/rG-CsaQ0yTI" frameborder="0" allowfullscreen></iframe>

<iframe title="YouTube video player" width="640" height="390" src="http://www.youtube.com/embed/pMfCC6IKyN8" frameborder="0" allowfullscreen></iframe>[/dohtml]

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: Human Endogenous Retroviruses and AIDS Research:

Title: Human Endogenous Retroviruses and AIDS Research:
Description: Confusion, Consensus, or Science?

TheUnhivedMind - February 12, 2011 03:52 AM (GMT)

Human Endogenous Retroviruses and AIDS Research: Confusion, Consensus, or Science?

http://rethinkingaids.com/Content/RA2009Vi...85/Default.aspx

Human Endogenous Retroviruses and AIDS Research: Confusion, Consensus, or Science?

Etienne de Harven, M. D.

ABSTRACT

Human Endogenous Retroviruses (HERVs) are confounding factors in HIV/AIDS research that cannot be ignored. Evidence suggests that "viral load" may actually be measuring retroviral nucleoside sequences associated with HERVs. HERVs also provide a valid explanation for the presence of retroviruses recognizable by electron microscopy (EM) in the original 1983 publication from the Institut Pasteur, and may account for claims of innumerable "mutations" of the putative HIV pathogen. The interference of HERVs in AIDS research brings into question the subject of study in so-called "AIDS Research," and the very existence of an exogenous HIV pathogen itself.

The HIV Consensus

The hypothesis that the acquired immunodeficiency syndrome (AIDS) is caused by an exogenous retrovirus, the human immunodeficiency virus (HIV), initially proposed in the early 1980s,[1-3] has exclusively dominated AIDS research for the past 25 years, although many investigators have repeatedly stressed the lack of scientifically acceptable verification of this hypothesis. Alerted to the numerous shortcomings of the official retroviral hypothesis by eminent retrovirologist Peter Duesberg,[4,5] a group of AIDS "Rethinkers," founded by molecular biologist Charles Thomas in 1991, called for the "Scientific Reappraisal of the HIV/AIDS Hypothesis" in 1996.

This group (www.rethinkingaids.com) released a mission statement co-signed by thousands of scientists and concerned European Parliament in Brussels, Belgium, when Paul Lannoye, a Belgian member of parliament, organized a public debate on "AIDS in Africa."[27]

Reports by AIDS Rethinkers are readily accessible on numerous websites, the early and most significant ones being www.virusmyth.com, www.rethinkingaids.com, www.theperth group.com, www.sidasante.com, and www.altheal.org.

In spite of innumerable scientific and public conferences and publications by AIDS Rethinkers, many in the medical community either ignore, or bluntly reject the existence of any HIV controversy,[28-30] or claim that AIDS "denialism" undermines AIDS prevention.[31] As a result, the monumental budgets allocated throughout the world to combat AIDS have been, and still are totally and exclusively restricted to HIV research. This can neither be explained nor justified by the lack of alternative hypotheses of AIDS causation, since nonviral factors (chemical, pharmacological, nutritional, and behavioral) associated with the clinical symptoms attributed to AIDS have been well documented and reviewed by others.[32]

The retroviral hypothesis linking HIV to AIDS received a precipitous acceptance, not on the basis of scientifically verifiable data, but based on a so-called "consensus"—a consensus enthusiastically supported by the pharmaceutical industry. This review will focus primarily on the scientific facts (or artifacts) that impact the credibility of AIDS research.

Factors That Gave Apparent Credibility to the HIV Hypothesis

In the extensive HIV/AIDS literature, one finds that the claimed "evidence" that AIDS is caused by HIV-1 or HIV-2 is presumably "clear-cut, exhaustive and unambiguous,"[33] and comprises four

This group (www.rethinkingaids.com) released a mission statement co-signed by thousands of scientists and concerned citizens, including Nobel laureates Walter Gilbert and Kary Mullis. Other well-respected scientists, notably Sonnabend, Stewart, Lang, Papadopulos, Rasnick, and Geshekter[6-12] and distinguished scientific writers such as Celia Farber, John Lauritsen, Neville Hodgkinson, Joan Shenton, Christine Maggiore, Renaud Russeil, Djamel Tahi, Jean-Claude Roussez, and Janine Roberts[13-21] have also described the multiple failings of the HIV hypothesis. Between 1992 and 2000, another group based in London, UK, made highly significant contributions to scientific/public education by publishing Continuum magazine, under the leadership of Huw Christie.[22] A medical team directed by Eleni Papadopulos in Perth, Australia, has also presented information questioning the validity of the HIV hypothesis.[23-25] In May 2000, the controversy concerning HIV and the antiretroviral (ARV) drugs used to treat it became the topic of international inquiry when President Thabo Mbeki of South Africa, convened a debate between 35 academic scientists, "Orthodoxers" as well as "Rethinkers" together.[26] A similar debate took place in 2003 at the "evidence" that AIDS is caused by HIV-1 or HIV-2 is presumably "clear-cut, exhaustive and unambiguous,"[33] and comprises four groups of data: (1) identification of retroviral molecular markers, (2) observation of retroviral particles by transmission EM, (3) claimed efficacy of antiretroviral (ARV) drugs, and (4) epidemiological data.

(1) Identification of Retroviral Molecular Markers

In a long list of presumed HIV molecular markers, the most emblematic one is the enzyme reverse transcriptase (RT).[34,35] Importantly, however, the activity of this enzyme has been readily demonstrated in practically all living cells of the biological universe,[36, 37] making it imperative to verify the purification of viral samples before making any claim for a specific link between RT and retroviruses. Sample contamination by cell debris can, by itself, explain the presence of RT activity. This is of considerable importance because attempts to isolate and purify HIV by sucrose gradient ultracentrifugation of supernatant from supposedly HIV-infected cell cultures have provided samples heavily contaminated with microvesicular cell debris, readily demonstrated by EM.[38,39]

Anti-HIV antibodies are regarded as another class of molecular markers, used in so-called "HIV tests," such as the enzyme-linked immunosorbent assay (ELISA).[40-41] The lack of specificity of this test, however, was clearly documented by C. Johnson[42] who reported, as early as 1996, that almost 70 medical conditions having nothing to do with AIDS or HIV may result in a positive antibody test. These conditions include tuberculosis, malaria, leprosy, hepatitis, blood transfusions, influenza vaccination, multiple pregnancies, and others. Such a lack of specificity came as no surprise to those who were aware that the method used to prepare "HIV" antibodies was based on a circular argument, as discussed early on by Neville Hodgkinson.[43] Moreover, the method initially used in ELISA tests included a 400-fold plasma dilution. Without such high dilution everybody turned out to be "HIV positive," as originally demonstrated by Roberto Giraldo in 1998.[44]

Protein antigens of claimed retroviral origin represent a group of HIV markers used in another "HIV test," the western blot test (WB). The WB test is used to confirm the ELISA test, and is based on the identification by electrophoresis on polyacrylamide gels of 10 presumably HIV proteins, such as p120, p41, p32, p24/25, and others. However, prior successful isolation and purification of HIV would be required to verify that all of these proteins actually originate from HIV particles, a purification that has never been achieved, as recognized by Luc Montagnier himself.[45]

The considerable difficulty in isolating and purifying HIV was recognized, as early as 1993, by Eleni Papadopulos et al., who correctly concluded that without successful HIV purification, the retroviral nature of the "HIV marker proteins" was most uncertain. Papadopulos emphasized that these proteins are most likely cellular, originating from the abundance of cell debris in poorly "purified" HIV samples. The uncertainty and shortcomings of WB testing were already reported in 1991.[46] Soon afterwards, Papadopulos et al. raised the question: "Is a positive western blot proof of HIV infection?"[23] That WB tests are not reliable is evidenced by the variability of the protein criteria required for a "positive" test in different countries. The test is not even approved for diagnostic purposes in Great Britain.

The considerable difficulties experienced in attempts to purify therefore arises: what is actually measured in "viral load" determinations? To date, no satisfactory answer has been provided.

Still, various amounts of claimed retroviral nucleotide sequences are routinely identified and quantified in a patient's plasma. They are interpreted as originating from HIV, and used in the clinical assessment and therapy of AIDS patients. When Luc Montagnier was asked, "What is actually measured in viral load assessments?" during the discussion of a major HIV/AIDS debate in the European Parliament in 2003, his answer was less than clear and convincing.[27] The contradiction remains that genomic retroviral sequences are routinely recognized by PCR, and interpreted as originating from HIV particles, while nobody has actually visualized them by EM. More critical attention should be given to the true nature of these retroviral sequences, the origin of which is at present unclear.

(2) Observation of Retroviral Particles by Transmission Electron Microscopy

All the images of particles supposedly representing HIV and published in scientific as well as in lay publications derive from EM studies of cell cultures. They never show HIV particles coming directly from an AIDS patient.[50] The pictures are always embellished by computerized image reconstruction, with attractive colors and refined three-dimensional effects. The endless, worldwide publication in the media of these elegant artifacts has done much to persuade scientists and lay people alike to accept the existence of HIV as a key part of the orthodox consensus.

Cell cultures have been the major tool that permitted the development of modern virology. Unfortunately, these cultures are frequently contaminated by microorganisms such as viruses and/or mycoplasma, readily identifiable by EM. These contaminants, well known and documented for a long time,[51] frequently made the interpretation of experimental data rather laborious, because to demonstrate the cytopathic effects of a given virus on cultured cells, it would have been much preferable to experiment with "clean" (i.e. virus-free) cells. Unfortunately, such cells are hard to obtain! Actually, it was difficult to study the Friend leukemia virus (FLV) in cell cultures, using murine cells, because EM readily demonstrated that test is not even approved for diagnostic purposes in Great Britain.

The considerable difficulties experienced in attempts to purify "HIV" have never been resolved.[47] Recently, Henry Bauer has reviewed evidence that supports the conclusion that "HIV tests are not HIV tests."[48] "HIV tests" only indicate the presence of antibodies supposedly directed against HIV. They do not indicate the presence of the virus itself.

The question then arises of whether the so-called "viral load" tests are more reliable, as they are based on polymerase chain reaction (PCR) technologies for recognizing and quantifying HIV. This appears highly questionable; Nobel laureate Kary Mullis himself, the discoverer of PCR, has indicated that his method is not expected to provide a reliable result in HIV diagnosis.

A second reason to question "viral load" data is that "viral load" implies the existence of viremia, i.e. the presence of virus particles in the peripheral blood, although no one has ever observed, by EM, one single retroviral particle in the blood of HIV/AIDS patients, even in those patients tagged as presenting with a "high viral load."[49] Moreover, the PCR methods used for "viral load" determination bypass the problems of isolation of retroviral particles. The question it was difficult to study the Friend leukemia virus (FLV) in cell cultures, using murine cells, because EM readily demonstrated that most available murine cell lines were chronically carrying retroviruses!

The 1983 study from Institut Pasteur in Paris[52] is illustrated by an EM (their Figure 2) showing unquestionable budding retroviruses on the surface of human cord blood lymphocytes. The interpretation of this figure by Luc Montagnier and his team, that these retroviruses originated from a pre-AIDS patient, was based on the fact that the cord blood lymphocytes were exposed to the cell-free supernatant of "infected" co-cultures. But the authors did not provide any evidence for "infection" in their co-cultures, nor for the presence of retrovirus particles in the supernatant of these cultures. Therefore, another explanation for the origin of the observed retroviruses on the surface of these cultured cord blood lymphocytes must be sought.

(3) The Claimed Efficacy of Antiretroviral (ARV) Drugs

Drugs such as azidothymidine (AZT), a DNA chain "terminator," as well as non-nucleoside analog RT inhibitors (such as nevirapine) and protease inhibitors (such as ritonavir), are currently used in various combinations such as "highly active retroviral therapy"

(HAART), and repeatedly claimed to be "life saving." Manufacturers of these drugs, however, strongly emphasize their toxicity. Lethal effects of AZT became dramatically evident when mortality of seropositive hemophiliacs suddenly increased sharply in 1987, precisely at the time high dosages of AZT started to be prescribed.[53,54] Hopes that AZT might have preventive value were shattered by the Concorde study, when mortality of AZT recipients was found 25% higher than that of the untreated control group of symptom-free HIV-positive individuals.[55] These important studies have been reviewed by Duesberg,[5] by Hodgkinson,[56] and others. Equally perplexing is that deaths of ARV-treated patients very frequently result from acute liver failure,[57] conflicting with the fact that HIV is not known for liver toxicity, while ARV drugs are.

If the effects of ARV drugs could still be regarded as proving that HIV is the cause of AIDS, one would at least expect some patients to be cured by these drugs. However, not a single case of "cure" has ever been reported. Instead, the clinical evidence points to the high toxicity of ARV drugs and their immunodepressive effects which actually mimic AIDS itself.[5]

Patients with severe AIDS have frequently been reported to be transiently, but remarkably, improved by ARV drugs. Such "Lazarus" type observations have been interpreted as evidence for an antiretroviral effect on HIV, supporting the existence/role of HIV. However, as most of these patients frequently suffer from pneumonia with Pneumocystis carinii, mycosis with Candida albicans, or both, and because protease inhibitors, introduced in antiretroviral therapy in 1996, have marked anticandidal[58] and antipneumocystis[59] effects, this interpretation is questionable at best. When anti-proteases help block such opportunistic infections, this has no direct relevance to HIV, and certainly does not "automatically support the "HIV model."[60]

(4) Epidemiologic Data

Maneuvering for major federal budget allocations, AIDS public health policies have been relying on media amplification of fear.[61,62] Catastrophic prediction of heterosexual transmission of the disease, prophecies of a worldwide pandemic, and reliance on CDC and Fiala in his 1997 book Lieben wir gefährlich? (Do We Love Dangerously?).[68] Safe-sex practices (e.g. condoms) remain essential, however, for the prevention of diseases proven to be sexually transmitted, such as syphilis and gonorrhea.

Certain African countries, such as Uganda and Tanzania, had been regarded as epicenters of an AIDS "pandemic." The lack of evidence supporting this, initially recognized by Philippe Krynen,[69] was clearly documented by Charles Geshekter[70] and by science writers Celia Farber[71] and Neville Hodgkinson.[56] Twenty years later, national census figures have shown spectacular demographic increases in several sub-Saharan countries, clearly demonstrating that their populations had not been devastated, as officially predicted, by a deadly AIDS pandemic of historic proportions.[72]

The most authoritative conclusions presented in 2008 by experienced epidemiologist James Chin, former Chief of the Unit of the Global Programme on AIDS of the World Health Organization (WHO) in Geneva, in his book The Collision of Epidemiology with Political Correctness[73] brought to a close any possible debate on heterosexual AIDS transmission. Chin stated that AIDS was, and still is restricted to a small population of homosexuals and intravenous drug users, and that the heterosexual population is not at risk. Chin's conclusions have raised serious questions on the reliability of WHO statistics.

AIDS epidemiological data have been further confused by several consecutive changes in the official definition of the syndrome, and have failed to support the current HIV=AIDS dogma.

The hypothesis of an exogenous retrovirus "HIV" causing AIDS appears unsupportable by the scientific evidence concerning molecular markers, EM findings, ARV drugs, and epidemiology. However, two intriguing findings deserve further attention: the identification of genomic retroviral sequences in AIDS patients' blood ("viral load") and the EM demonstration of retroviruses in cord blood lymphocytes.[52] Simply concluding that "HIV does not exist" is not sufficient unless alternative, satisfactory explanations for these two observations are found.

Catastrophic prediction of heterosexual transmission of the disease, prophecies of a worldwide pandemic, and reliance on CDC and WHO statistical reports were all linked to the assumption that AIDS was a contagious disease, possibly transmitted in the general population by sexual intercourse.

Renowned epidemiologist Gordon T. Stewart did much, however, to dispel these erroneous predictions. In a letter to The Lancet,[63] he stated "the UK Government is beginning to retreat from its pessimistic certainty about pandemics of heterosexual transmitted AIDS" and exposed to scrutiny "the claim that AIDS has already spread by heterosexual transmission to the general populations."[64] Stewart's conclusions correlate well with the complete absence of HIV among female sex workers not using IV drugs. This "prostitute paradox" (i.e. no increased risk for AIDS among female sex workers) was reviewed from worldwide studies by Root-Bernstein in 1993,[65] and re-emphasized more recently by Etienne de Harven and Jean-Claude Roussez.[66] The lack of evidence for heterosexual transmission of AIDS was clearly presented by Padian et al., who could not observe one single case of seroconversion in a follow-up study of 175 HIV-serodiscordant couples over a period of six years.[67] That heterosexuals are not at risk for AIDS was stressed by Christian two observations are found.

"Viral Loads" and Retroviral Sequences

"Human endogenous retroviruses (HERVs) represent footprints of previous retroviral infection and have been termed 'fossil viruses.' They are transmitted vertically through the germline and are thus inherited by successive generations in a Mendelian manner," stated Nelson et al. in a review entitled "Demystified… Human Endogenous Retroviruses."[74] The molecular basis of HERVs was recognized 20 years ago.[75,76] They appear defective, and rarely produce virus particles. As molecular footprints, they are "in all of us," as recognized by Lower et al. in 1996,[77] and represent approximately 8% of the human genome, actually consisting of nucleotide sequences analogous to the retroviral genome.[78] Expression of HERVs, i.e. particle formation, seems to be a rare event, although it has been observed in placenta[79] and in tumor cell lines.[80] HERV retroviral sequences have also been detected by PCR in the peripheral blood mononuclear cells (PBMC) of healthy individuals.[75] The possible role of HERVs in human pathology (autoimmune diseases and cancers) has received considerable attention,[81] as has the classification of their numerous families.[82]

Since 1996, real-time PCR has been used to claim quantification of a postulated HIV viremia, termed "viral load," in AIDS cases. These methods have been based on the study of patients' plasma samples: initially, samples originated from nuclei of peripheral blood mononuclear cells, and later from low-speed centrifugation pellets of plasma.[83] The various methods applied to the PCR measurement of the so-called "viral load" have one point in common: they all bypass direct isolation of retroviral particles demonstrable by EM. These methods are not expected to isolate, nor concentrate any retrovirus. Moreover, as clearly stated during the South African 2000 conference,[26] not one single particle of retrovirus has ever been seen, by EM, in the blood plasma of any AIDS patient, even in those patients identified as presenting with a high so-called "viral load." That statement, widely publicized, has never been refuted nor challenged.[84]

Human plasma carries various amounts of circulating DNA. Suspected for a long time, this was first demonstrated by modern technologies in 1999, by P. Anker et al.,[85] in the blood of cancer patients. The significance of circulating nucleic acids, as possible molecular markers in the study of cancer, was extensively reviewed in a New York Academy of Sciences conference in 2006.[86] The origin of free circulating DNA is complex, and seems to depend primarily on cell apoptosis. "If the engulfment of apoptotic bodies is impaired or cell death is increased enough to produce substantial amounts of circulating DNA, inflammation would definitely be a problem and autoimmunity would occur frequently in cancer and other conditions involving increased circulating DNA."[87]

Apoptosis and a large spectrum of infectious diseases are constant components of all clinical AIDS cases. Circulating DNA is expected, therefore, in the plasma of all symptomatic AIDS patients. Amounts can vary, as a function of more or less rapid removal of DNA by clearance mechanisms. Apoptotic bodies and/or fragments of PBMC nuclei are certainly expected in low-speed centrifugation plasma pellets, such as those used in PCR "viral load" measurements, and most likely increase the amount of recognizable DNA. Human DNA always contains approximately 8% of retroviral nucleotide sequences. It's no surprise, therefore, that RT-PCR study

Reference to HERVs and/or to circulating DNA can hardly be found in the extensive literature on "viral load" measurements, interference of HERVs, and of circulating DNA being consistently ignored by the HIV/AIDS orthodoxy.

Conclusively, RT-PCR identification, and presumed quantification of so-called "HIV viral load," can easily be explained by the variable amounts of HERV-derived retroviral nucleotide sequences present in the circulating DNA of AIDS patients.

Retroviruses on the Surface of Cord Blood Lymphocytes

In their 1983 Science paper,[52] Barré-Sinoussi et al. failed to demonstrate, by EM, any retrovirus in their co-cultures. Still, the supernatant of these co-cultures has been used to "infect" human cord blood lymphocytes. This theory requires one to subscribe to infection via a virus that is not visible by EM. If the authors had included EM evidence for retroviruses in their co-cultures and their supernatant, their interpretation would have been more convincing. Unfortunately, such data were not provided.

Nevertheless, their Figure 2 unquestionably demonstrates "budding"[89] retroviruses on the surface of cultured human cord blood lymphocytes. Its origin needs to be better clarified.

Cord blood lymphocytes are placenta-derived cells. The human placenta is well known for its high content of HERVs,[78] with EM-recognizable retrovirus particles.[79] Cord blood lymphocytes are, therefore, likely to carry similar HERVs. The 1983 paper[52] demonstrated that HERV particle expression had been successfully activated in cultured cord blood lymphocytes, under culture conditions that included 2g/ml of Polybrene. It does not demonstrate, however, that the EM-observed retroviruses originated from the studied pre-AIDS patient. A long-overdue control experiment would be to study, by EM, cultured cord blood lymphocytes under conditions that would reproduce exactly those used at the Pasteur Institute in 1983. Dourmashkin presented some data addressing this issue in 1992,[90] although his presentation did not satisfactorily

DNA. Human DNA always contains approximately 8% of retroviral nucleotide sequences. It's no surprise, therefore, that RT-PCR study of plasma pellets shows, and amplifies, retroviral nucleotide sequences. Unfortunately, such findings are frequently misinterpreted as originating from hypothetical exogenous "HIV," although, as stated above, not one single retroviral particle has ever been found by EM in plasma samples. Quantifying a presumed "viral load" has, therefore, probably nothing to do with an exogenous "HIV." It simply reflects variable amounts of circulating DNA.

Retroviral sequences in plasma pellets being easily explained by the presence of variable amounts of circulating DNA, one should not, however, expect that these nucleotide sequences would be identical in all cases. Quite to the contrary, since "nucleotide sequences that diverged from co-linearity with the typical retroviral genome (LTR-gag-pol-env-LTR) considerably increase the number of HERV families,"[82] the large number of HERV families resulting apparently from frequent recombinational deletions.[88] Expected variations in the observed nucleotide sequences have, unfortunately, often been misinterpreted as an indication for a high rate of HIV mutations! It seems much more likely, however, that the numerous variations in the observed retroviral nucleotide sequences in circulating DNA reflect the large number of HERV families they originate from, and have nothing to do with presumed "mutations" of a hypothetical HIV.

Institute in 1983. Dourmashkin presented some data addressing this issue in 1992,[90] although his presentation did not satisfactorily resolve the problem, since his cord blood lymphocytes were not cultured under conditions identical to those used at Pasteur in 1983.

The EM observation of typical retroviral particles in the 1983 Pasteur paper can alternatively be explained by the presence of placenta-derived, Polybrene-activated HERVs. However, this EM observation does not support the existence of an AIDS-related, exogenous retrovirus.

Obviously, confounding by HERVs cannot be ignored in the objective analysis of clinical as well as basic HIV/AIDS research.

Discussion

All AIDS Rethinkers are united in the fundamental opinion that HIV is not the cause of AIDS.[91] However, they diverge on the important question of the very existence of the Human Immunodeficiency Virus (HIV).

Some of them[5,11] maintain that HIV is a "harmless passenger virus," while others[23, 25] claim that HIV "does not exist" at all. Since neither of these two positions explains the pertinent observations, an alternative interpretation, compatible with all the available scientific evidence, is needed.

Claiming that HIV is a harmless passenger virus raises at least two critical problems. First, if HIV is "harmless" it cannot be linked to immune deficiency (a very severe pathological condition), as implied in its name. Therefore, the name of the virus should at least be changed in order to fit with a claimed "harmless" character. Secondly, in the general classification of animal virology, very large numbers of viruses are nonpathogenic, as was well illustrated in the 1960s in a special conference, at the New York Academy of Sciences, under the title "Viruses in Search of Diseases." Obviously, all nonpathogenic (i.e. "harmless") viruses are clearly visible under the EM. Pathogenic and nonpathogenic viruses look identical under the EM. In AIDS research, retroviral particles were observed by EM only in complex cell culture systems,[50] never directly in the plasma, nor in the tissues of any AIDS patient.

Claiming simply "HIV does not exist" is not satisfactory either, because it fails to explain the two sets of data discussed in this review, namely the presence of retroviral genomic sequences in the plasma of AIDS patients, and the EM evidence for retrovirus particles in the "historical" 1983 Pasteur paper.[52]

Others have previously emphasized that HERVs cannot be ignored and that they actually represent "confounding factors for human retrovirus discovery."[92] Their role having been confirmed and amplified, this review shows that HERVs, in addition, offer a rational, alternative interpretation for the two above-mentioned problems.

The existence of endogenous human retroviruses has been known for some time, but their interference in HIV/AIDS research has yet to be widely appreciated. Of course, HIV should not be considered an HERV, since the hypothetical HIV is supposed to be an exogenous, infectious microorganism, while HERVs are fundamentally endogenous, non-infectious, vertically transmitted, defective viruses. Still, HERVs have been a "confounding" factor in HIV/AIDS research,[92] and have caused confusion in interpreting the concept of "viral load." Moreover, HERVs put HIV researchers on the wrong track, creating the illusion of continuous HIV mutations—mutations that improperly served to explain the extreme Conflicts of interest: none.

Acknowledgment. The author wishes to express his gratitude to Prof. Gordon T. Stewart (Edinburgh) and to Dr. Christian Fiala (Vienna) for their critical review of the manuscript, and for many constructive discussions on AIDS over the past 15 years.

REFERENCES

1. Gallo R, Salahuddin SZ, Popovic M, et al. Frequent detection and isolation of cytopathic retroviruses (HTLV-III) from patients with AIDS and at risk of AIDS. Science 1984;224:500-503.
2. Montagnier L. Lymphadenopathy-associated virus: from molecular biology to pathogenicity. Ann Intern Med 1985:103:689-693.
3. Essex M, McLane MF, Lee TH, et al. Antibodies to cell membrane antigens associated with human T-cell leukemia virus in patients with AIDS. Science 1983;220:859-862.
4. Duesberg PH. Retroviruses as carcinogens and pathogens: expectations and reality. Cancer Res 1987;47:1199-1220.
5. Duesberg PH. Inventing the AIDS Virus. Washington, D.C.: Regnery; 1996.
6. Sonnabend JA. Caution on AIDS viruses. Nature 1984;210:103.
7. Stewart GT. Uncertainties about AIDS and HIV. Lancet 1989;336:1325.
8. Mullis K. Foreword. In: Duesberg PH. Inventing the AIDS Virus. Washington, D.C.: Regnery; 1996.
9. Lang S. Challenges. New York, N.Y.: Springer Verlag; 1997.
10. Papadopulos-Eleopulos E. Reappraisal of AIDS—is the oxidation induced by the risk factors the primary cause? Med Hypothesis 1988;25:151-162.
11. Rasnick D. Inhibitors of HIV proteases useless against AIDS—because HIV doesn't cause AIDS. Reappraising AIDS, August 1996. Available at: www.virusmyth.com/aids/hiv/drinhibit.htm. Accessed Jul 30, 2010.
12. Geshekter CL. Reappraising AIDS in Africa—underdevelopment & racial stereotypes. Reappraising AIDS, September/October 1997:5. Available at: www.virusmyth.com/aids/hiv/cgreappraising.htm. Accessed Jul 30, 2010.
13. Farber C. Sins of omission—the AZT scandal. Spin, November 1989.
14. Lauritsen J. AZT on trial. New York Native, Oct 19, 1987.
15. Hodgkinson N. African AIDS: true or false? Sunday Times (London), Sep 5, 1993.
16. Shenton J. Positively False—Exposing the Myths around HIV and AIDS. London-New York: IB Tauris; 1998.
17. Maggiore C. What If Everything You Thought You Knew about AIDS Was Wrong? 4th ed. American Foundation for AIDS Alternatives; 2000.
18. Russell R. Enquête sur le SIDA–Les vérités muselées [in French]. Chêne-Bourg/Genève: Editions Vivez Soleil; 1996.

the wrong track, creating the illusion of continuous HIV mutations—mutations that improperly served to explain the extreme difficulty in preparing anti-HIV vaccines. However, difficulties in developing anti-HIV vaccines might not be explained by a constantly mutating HIV, but rather by a lack of exogenous HIV.

As emphasized years ago by Papadopulos,[23] Lanka,[93] and others,[94] there is no scientifically verifiable evidence to confirm the existence of a hypothetical exogenous HIV. However, stating simply that "HIV does not exist" is an incomplete statement that fails to explain the complexity of HIV/AIDS research. To that statement, one should always add that HERVs have heavily interfered with HIV/AIDS research in a way that cannot be ignored. Adequate understanding of HERVs as confounding factors opens the way to a better, more objective analysis of AIDS research.

Finally, the question as to whether HIV exists, or of whether researchers have been studying a harmless passenger virus, is a question that should be subject to open debate and careful consideration of scientific evidence or lack thereof. Alternative explanations for findings should be decided by the scientific evidence, not by consensus. The advancement of our understanding of AIDS demands nothing less.

Etienne de Harven, M.D., Brussels University (ULB), 1953, became a full member of Sloan Kettering Institute, New York, N.Y., in 1968, and is emeritus professor of pathology, University of Toronto, Toronto, Ontario. Contact: pitou.deharven@orange.fr

[18] Russell R. Enquête sur le SIDA–Les vérités muselées [in French]. Chêne-Bourg/Genève: Editions Vivez Soleil; 1996.
[19] Tahi D. Interview with Luc Montagnier—Did Luc Montagnier discover HIV? Continuum, Winter 1997. Available at: www.virusmyth.com/aids/hiv/dtinterviewlm.htm. Accessed Jul 27, 2010.
[20] Roussez JC. SIDA- Supercherie Scientifique et Arnaque Humanitaire [in French]. 2nd ed. Belgium: Marco Pietteur; 2005.
[21] Roberts J. Fear of the Invisible. Bristol, UK: Impact Investigative Media Productions; 2009.
[22] Christie H. Do antibody tests prove HIV infection? Continuum, winter 1997. Available at: www.virusmyth.com/aids/hiv/hcinterviewvt.htm. Accessed Jul 28, 2010.
[23] Papadopulos-Eleopulos E, Turner VF, Papadimitriou JM. Is a positive western blot proof of HIV Infection? Bio/Technology 1993;11:696-707.
[24] Papadopulos-Eleopulos E, Turner VF, Papadimitriou JM. Has Gallo proven the role of HIV in AIDS? Emerg Med 1993;5:5-147.
[25] Papadopulos-Eleopulos E, Turner VF, Papdimitriou JM, Causer D, Page B. HIV antibody tests and viral load—more unanswered questions and a further plea for clarification. Curr Med Res Opin 1998;14:185-186.
[26] Mbeki T. Presidential AIDS Advisory Panel Report. A synthesis report of the deliberations by the panel of experts invited by the President of the Republic of South Africa, the Honourable Mr. Thabo Mbeki, March 2001. Available at: www.virusmyth.net/aids/data/panel/index.html. Accessed Jan 19, 2006.
[27] Lannoye P. Le SIDA en Afrique [in French]. Proceedings of the Colloquium held at the European Parliament, Brussels, Belgium, Dec 8 2003. Embourg, Belgium: Marco Pietteur; 2004.
[28] Fauci AS, Johnston MI, Diefenbach CW, et al. HIV vaccine research: the way forward. Science 2008;321:530-532.
[29] Chigwedere P, Essex M. Aids denialism and public health practice. AIDS Behav 2010;14:237-247.

[30] Moore JP. The dangers of denying HIV. Nature 2009;459:168.
[31] Gisselquist D. Denialism undermines AIDS prevention in sub-Saharan Africa. Int J STD AIDS 2008;19:649-655.
[32] Duesberg P, Koehnlein C, Rasnick D. The chemical bases of the various AIDS epidemics: recreational drugs, anti-viral chemotherapy and malnutrition. J Biosci 2003;28:383-412.
[33] The Durban Declaration. Nature 2000;406:15-16.
[34] Baltimore D. Viral RNA-dependent DNA polymerase in virions of RNA tumor viruses. Nature 1970;226:1209-1211.
[35] Temin HM, Mizutani S. RNA-dependent DNA polymerase in virions of Rous sarcoma virus. Nature 1970;226:1211-1213.
[36] Beljanski M. Synthèse in vitro de l'ADN sur une matrice d'ARN par une transcriptase d'Esscherichia coli. CR Acad Sci (Paris) 1972;274:2801-2804.
[37] Varmus H. Reverse transcription. Sci Am 1987;257:48-54.
[38] Bess JW, Gorelick RJ, Bosche WJ, Henderson LE, Arthur LO. Microvesicles are a source of contaminating proteins found in purified HIV-1 preparations. Virology 1997;230:134-144.
[39] Gluschankof P, Mondor I, Gelderblom HR, Sattentau QJ. Cell membrane vesicles are a major contaminant of gradient-enriched human immunodeficiency virus type-1 preparations. Virology 1997;230:125-133.
[40] Abbott Laboratories. Human Immunodeficiency Virus Type 1. FUVAB FffVI EIA. Abbott Laboratories, Diagnostic Division 66-8805/R5, January 1997:5.
[41] Hodgkinson N. New doubts over AIDS infection as HIV test declared invalid. Sunday Times (London), Aug 1, 1993.
[42] Johnson C. Whose antibodies are they anyway? Continuum 1996:4(3):4. Available at: www.altheal.org/continuum/Vol4no3.pdf. Accessed Jul 28, 2010.
[43] Hodgkinson N. HIV diagnosis: a ludicrous case of circular reasoning. The Business, May 21, 2006.
[44] Giraldo R. Everybody reacts positive on the ELISA test for HIV. Continuum, 1999;5(5):9-11. Available at: www.altheal.org/continuum/Vol5no5.pdf. Accessed Jul 28, 2010.
[45] Tahi D. Interview Luc Montagnier-Did Luc Montagnier discover HIV? Continuum, 1997;5(2):30-39. Available at: www.virusmyth.com/aids/hiv/dtinterviewlm.htm. Accessed Jul 28, 2010.
[46] Mortimer PP. The fallibility of HIV western blot. Lancet 1991;337:286-287.
[47] De Harven E. Problems with Isolating HIV. European Parliament, Brussels, Dec 8, 2003. Available at: www.altheal.org/isolation/isolhiv.htm. Accessed Jul 28, 2010.
[48] Bauer H. HIV Tests are not HIV tests. J Am Phys Surg 2010;15:5-9.
[49] De Harven E. Summary statement. Interim Report of the AIDS Advisory Panel, Pretoria, South Africa, May 2000. Complete report available at: www.altheal.org/africa/aidspanelreport.pdf. Accessed Jul 30, 2010.
[50] Gelderblom HR. Assembly and morphology of HIV: potential effect of [51] Farber C. Fatal distraction. Spin, June 1992.
[52] Clerc O. Modern Medicine—The New World Religion: How Beliefs Secretly Influence Medical Dogma and Practices. Fawnskin, Calif.: Personhood Press; 2004.
[53] Stewart GT. Errors in predictions of the incidence and distribution of AIDS. Lancet 1993;341:898.
[54] Stewart GT. The epidemiology and transmission of AIDS: a hypothesis linking behavioural and biological determinants to time, person and place. Genetica 1995:95:173-193.
[55] Root-Bernstein R. The prostitute paradox. Rethinking AIDS, March, 1993. Available at: www.virusmyth.com/aids/hiv/rrbprostitute.htm. Accessed Jul 30, 2010.
[56] De Harven E, Roussez JC. Ten Lies About AIDS. Trafford Publishing; 2008.
[57] Padian NS, Shiboski SO, Glass SO, Vittingoff E. Heterosexual transmission of human immunodeficiency virus (HIV) in Northern California: results from a ten-year study. Am J Epidemiol 1997:146:350-357.
[58] Fiala C. Lieben wir gefährlich? [Do We Love Dangerously] [in German]. Vienna, Austria: Deuticke Verlag; 1997.
[59] Hodgkinson N. The plague that never was. Sunday Times (London), Oct 3, 1993.
[70] Geshekter CL. Myths and misconceptions of the orthodox view of AIDS in Africa. Ethics & Politics 2007;9:330-370.
[71] Farber C. Out of Africa. Spin, March 1993.
[72] Fiala. C. AIDS in Africa: a call for sense not hysteria. Presentation at RA2009, Oakland, Calif., November 2009. Available at: www.ra2009.org/presentations/Fiala.pdf. Accessed Jul 30, 2010.
[73] Chin J. The AIDS Pandemic—The Collision of Epidemiology with Political Correctness. Oxford, UK: Radcliffe Publishing; 2007.
[74] Nelson PN, Carnegie PR, Martin J, et al. Demystified. Human endogenous retroviruses. Mol Pathol 2003:56:11-18.
[75] Leib-Mosch C, Brack-Werner R, Werner T, et al. Endogenous retroviral elements in human DNA. Cancer Res 1990;50(suppl):5636-5642.
[76] Medstrand P, Lindeskog M, Blomberg J. Expression of human endogenous retroviral sequences in peripheral blood mononuclear cells of healthy individuals. J Gen Virol 1992;73:2463-2466.
[77] Lower R, Lower J, Kurth R. Review. The viruses in all of us: characteristics and biological significance of human endogenous retrovirus sequences. Proc Natl Acad Sci USA 1996;93:5177-5184.
[78] Sugimoto J, Schust DJ. Review: human endogenous retrovirus and the placenta. Reprod Sci 2009;16:1023-1033.
[79] Panem S. C-type virus expression in the placenta. Curr Top Pathol 1979;66:175-189.
[80] Ono M, Kawakami M, Ushikubo H. Stimulation of expression of the human endogenous retrovirus genome by female steroid hormones in human breast cancer cell line T47D. J Virol 1987;61:2059-2062.
[81] Urnovitz HB, Murphy WH. Human endogenous retroviruses: nature, www.altheal.org/africa/aidspanelreport.pdf. Accessed Jul 30, 2010.

[80] Gelderblom HR. Assembly and morphology of HIV: potential effect of structure on viral function. AIDS 1991;5:617-637.
[81] Fogh J. Contamination in Tissue Culture. London-New York: Academic Press; 1973.
[82] Barré-Sinoussi F, Chermann JC, Rey F, et al. Isolation of a T-lymphotropic retrovirus from a patient at risk for acquired immune deficiency (AIDS). Science 1983;220:868-871.
[83] Darby SC, Ewart DW, Giangrande PL, et al. Mortality before and after HIV infection in the complete population of haemophiliacs. UK Haemophilia Centre Directors' Organisation. Nature 1995;377:79-82.
[84] Philpott P. Darby debunked—pro-HIV hemophiliac study actually points toward non-contagious AIDS. Rethinking AIDS 1996;:4(Feb):1-4. Available at: www.rethinkingaids.com/Portals/0/RaArchive/1996/RA9602Darby Debunked.pdf. Accessed Jul 28, 2010.
[85] Seligman M, Chess L, Fahey JL, et al. (Concorde Coordinating Committee). Concorde: MRC/ANRS randomized double-blond controlled trial of immediate and deferred zidovudine in symptom-free HIV infection. Lancet 1994;343:871-881.
[86] Hodgkinson N. AIDS–The Failure of Contemporary Science: How a Virus That Never Was Deceived the World. London, England: Fourth Estate Limited;1996.
[87] Justice AC, Wagner JH, Fusco GP, et al. HIV survival: liver function tests independently predict survival. 14th International AIDS Conference, Barcelona, Spain, July 2002.
[88] Cassone A, De Bernardis F, Torosantucci A, et al. In vitro and in vivo anticandidal activity of human immunodeficiency virus protease inhibitors. J Infect Dis 1999;180:448-453.
[89] Atzori C, Angeli E, Mainini A, et al. In vitro activity of human immunodeficiency virus protease inhibitors against Pneumocystis carinii. J Infect Dis 2000;181:1629-1634.
[90] Philpott P. Might HAART help? Benefits from blocking opportunistic infections, not HIV. Rethinking AIDS 2000;8(9):1-2.

endogenous retrovirus genome by female steroid hormones in human breast cancer cell line T47D. J Virol 1987;61:2059-2062.
[91] Urnovitz HB, Murphy WH. Human endogenous retroviruses: nature, occurrence, and clinical implications in human disease. Clin Microbiol Rev 1996;9:72-99.
[92] Paces J, Pavlicek A, Zika R, et al. HERVd: The human endogenous retroviruses database: update. Nucleic Acids Res 2004;32 Database issue D50:1-7.
[93] Caliendo AM. Methods, interpretation and applications of HIV-1 viral load measurements. Clin Microbiol Newsletter 1997;19:1-5.
[94] Russell A. The Hue Christie Memorial Prize: $100,000 reward for "HIV." Available at: www.altheal.org/isolation/prize.htm. Accessed Jul 28, 2010.
[95] Anker P, Mulcahy H, Chen XQ, Stroun M. Detection of circulating DNA in the blood (plasma/serum) of cancer patients. Cancer Metastasis Rev 1999;18:65-73.
[96] Swaminathan R, Butt A, Gahan P. Circulating nucleic acids in plasma and serum IV. Ann NY Acad Sci 2006;1075:1–353.
[97] Van Der Vaart M, Pretorius PJ. The origin of circulating free DNA. Clin Chem 2007;53:2215-2218.
[98] Belshaw R, Watson J, Katzourakis A, et al. The rate of recombinational deletion among human endogenous retroviruses (HERVs). J Virol 2007;81:9437-9442.
[99] De Harven E, Friend C. Further electron microscope studies of a mouse leukemia induced by cell-free filtrates. J Biophys Biochem Cytol 1960;7:747-752.
[100] Dourmashkin R, Bucher D, Oxford JS. Small virus-like particles bud from the cell membranes of normal as well as HIV-infected human lymphoid cells. J Med Virol 1993;39:229-232.
[101] Stewart GT, Mhlongo S, de Harven E, et al. The Durban declaration is not accepted by all. Nature 2000;407:286.
[102] Voisset C, Weiss RA, Griffiths DJ. Human RNA "rumor" viruses: the search for novel human retroviruses in chronic disease. Microbiol Mol Biol Rev 2008;72:157-196.
[103] Lanka S. HIV: reality or artefact? Continuum, April/May 1995. Available at: www.virusmyth.com/aids/hiv/slartefact.htm. Accessed Jul 30, 2010.
[104] De Harven E. Viral etiology of human cancer: a historical perspective. Haematologica 1998;84:385-389.

PDF: http://www.jpands.org/vol15no3/deharven.pdf

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: Die Epidemie findet nicht statt - auch nicht in Title: Die Epidemie findet nicht statt - auch nicht in Description: Arika [Vd]

TheUnhivedMind - February 12, 2011 03:49 AM (GMT)

Christian Fiala

Die Epidemie findet nicht statt - auch nicht in Afrika

[dohtml]<embed src="http://blip.tv/play/AYH5tnMC" type="application/x-shockwave-flash" width="480" height="300" allowscriptaccess="always" allowfullscreen="true"></embed>[/dohtml]

"Können wir Afrika retten?" fragte die Zeitschrift Newsweek auf der Titelseite bereits 1984 und gab damit eine alte Überzeugung der westlichen Länder wieder, dass Afrika sowieso verloren ist durch Hungersnöte, Kriege, Katastrophen und Tod. Diese Überzeugung wurde zwei Jahre später wiederholt in einem Artikel in der gleichen Zeitschrift. "Afrika, die Katastrophenjahre" war der bezeichnende Titel. Die Weltgesundheitsorganisation WHO bestätigte, dass "im Jahr 1991 schätzungsweise bereits 1,5 Millionen Menschen in Uganda eine HIV Infektion hatten, das waren 9% der gesamten Bevölkerung bzw. 20% der sexuell aktiven Menschen". Ähnliche Berichte wurde in den letzten 25 Jahren laufend veröffentlicht. Die Vorhersagen kündigten einen praktisch unvermeidlichen Zusammenbruch des Landes voraus, in welchem die weltweite Epidemie angeblich begonnen hatte. Heute hören wir interessanterweise kaum noch etwas von Uganda, weil sich alle Vorhersagen als vollkommen falsch erwiesen haben. Das Statistische Amt von Uganda fasst die Situation folgendermaßen zusammen nachdem die Ergebnisse der alle 10 Jahre stattfindenden Zählung der Bevölkerung vorlag: "Die Bevölkerung von Uganda wuchs jedes Jahr im Durchschnitt um 3,4% zwischen 1991 und 2002. Das hohe Bevölkerungswachstum ist im wesentlichen das Ergebnis einer anhaltend hohen Fruchtbarkeit (im Durchschnitt 7 Kinder pro Frau in den letzten 40 Jahren). Der Rückgang der Sterblichkeit, welcher sich in dem Rückgang der Kindersterblichkeit ausdrückt und in der Demographischen Untersuchung von 1995 und 2000-2001 dokumentiert wurde, hat auch zu dem hohen Bevölkerungswachstum beigetragen." In anderen Worten nahm das bereits hohe jährliche Bevölkerungswachstum in Uganda in den letzten 15 Jahren weiter zu. Uganda ist damit eines der am schnellsten wachsenden Länder der Welt. Aber auch in wirtschaftlicher Hinsicht hat sich das Land in der gleichen Zeit sehr stark entwickelt, was die Energie und Entschlossenheit der Menschen in Uganda zeigt, die ihre Lebensbedingungen verbessern wollen. Es ist überfällig, dass wir die offensichtlichen Fakten anerkennen, dass alle Vorhersagen über Aids in Afrika falsch waren, weil diese Vorhersagen auf falschen Annahmen beruhten. Folglich müssen auch alle Budgets neu ausgerichtet werden auf die tatsächlichen Bedürfnisse der lokalen Bevölkerung. Auf der anderen Seite müssen auch alle Organisationen und Individuen zur Rechenschaft gezogen werden, welche zuerst die Hysterie in die Welt gesetzt und dann mit dieser Hysterie sehr viel Geld verdient haben.

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: AIDS and homeopathy in Africa [Vd]

Title: AIDS and homeopathy in Africa [Vd]

TheUnhivedMind - February 12, 2011 03:48 AM (GMT)

Harry van der Zee

AIDS and homeopathy in Africa

[dohtml]<embed src="http://blip.tv/play/AYH4kWsC" type="application/x-shockwave-flash" width="480" height="300" allowscriptaccess="always" allowfullscreen="true"></embed>[/dohtml]

Homeopathy has proven to be a potent and effective system for healing individuals because individualizing each case is the essence of its methodology. Homeopathy's greatest asset, though, appears to be in treatments for specific conditions, such as epidemic diseases and collective trauma. There are impressive historic examples of such specific applications of homeopathy in the 19th and 20th centuries. Also AIDS has been treated with homeopathy in Africa since 2002 with consistent results, especially with a specific remedy, PC1 (www.arhf.nl). For the selection and efficacy of a homeopathic remedy for AIDS the more technical discussion of the mechanics behind AIDS are of less relevance, as in selecting a remedy a homeopath is guided by the common symptoms all patients are suffering from and not by any explanatory model for the condition. Conventional medicine is based on the principle of attacking, in this case the virus thought to be responsible for AIDS, which in the long term results in therapy resistance and as a side effect damages the immune system and compromises the natural healing ability of the organism. Homeopathy is based on supporting the immune system and in the case of AIDS to mobilize it to contain and manage whatever deranges the diseased individual, and it offers a safe, free from side-effects, effective and cheap treatment. Homeopathy, PC1, can be complementary to any other rational approach to AIDS, and even if patients are on ARVs still proves to be effective and considerably reduces the side-effects of ARVs by improving the patient's condition.

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: AIDS - Exposing the myths - a video history [Vd]

Title: AIDS - Exposing the myths - a video history [Vd]

TheUnhivedMind - February 12, 2011 03:48 AM (GMT)

Joan Shenton

AIDS - Exposing the myths - a video history

[dohtml]<embed src="http://blip.tv/play/AYH4kxoC" type="application/x-shockwave-flash" width="480" height="300" allowscriptaccess="always" allowfullscreen="true"></embed>[/dohtml]

Digs into the Immunity Resource Foundation archive and highlights, using clips from this 25 year video collection, the stories, key moments and participants in this historic challenge to a prevailing scientific oligarchy and hostile media establishment. The video clips will take us back to 1986 when Meditel's first documentary on the subject, "AIDS - The unheard voices", was made. The documentary provided a platform for dissenting voices, highlighting Peter Duesberg's rejection of the virus/AIDS hypothesis. The film won the UK Royal Television Society's Award for Journalism. We then dip into a series of subsequent film and video reports featuring the collection of voices raised in alarm at the disastrous consequences of the use of AZT as an antiviral. We recall the momentous Amsterdam Alternative AIDS Conference in 1992, which we believed would end the whole scientific charade -- and feature the ejection of protestors from the Berlin World AIDS Conference in 1993. We reflect the Perth Group's position on whether HIV has ever been isolated, and then move to Africa, highlighting the voices of those who saw "AIDS" appropriating and swallowing up specialties like TB and malaria. Finally, we hear South Africa's former president, Thabo Mbeki, reflect on the censorship and bigotry that surrounds AIDS science.

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: The "AIDS" Hoax and Gay Men [Vd]

Title: The "AIDS" Hoax and Gay Men [Vd]

TheUnhivedMind - February 12, 2011 03:47 AM (GMT)

John Lauritsen

The "AIDS" Hoax and Gay Men

[dohtml]<embed src="http://blip.tv/play/AYH4lkMC" type="application/x-shockwave-flash" width="480" height="300" allowscriptaccess="always" allowfullscreen="true"></embed>[/dohtml]

From the very beginning gay men have been identified with "AIDS"- even before it had a name. Gay men were linked to the "epidemic" though labelling ("gay cancer", "Gay-Related Immune Deficiency"or GRID). They would be targeted for testing and drugging, just as earlier they had been targeted for the marketing of "poppers" (nitrite inhalants) and other "recreational" drugs. Well before the alleged "AIDS virus" acquired its official name in 1986, I and others had dissented from AIDS-orthodoxy in the gay press. Three things were clear: 1) "AIDS" was not a coherent disease entity, and had never been defined rationally, and 2) whatever "AIDS" might be, it was not infectious, and 3) there were good reasons, having nothing todo with a virus, why "AIDS" patients were sick in the ways they were. The "epidemic" must be seen in context: the historic persecution of gay men. Although sex between males is a part of life, something practised enthusiastically in classical antiquity, it has been ruthlessly suppressed since the 4th century AD, when Christianity became the state religion of the Roman Empire. Over the intervening centuries gay men have been imprisoned, tortured, castrated and killed - for violating an Old Testament taboo. The AIDS Hoax carries forward this persecution through psychological warfare and the mass poisoning of gay men with toxic and worthless drugs. Using documents obtained from the Food and Drug Administration (FDA), I demonstrated that the premier "AIDS" drug, AZT (aka zidovudine et al.) was approved for marketing on the basis of fraudulent research. As the FDA abandoned the double-blind, placebo-controlled trial as the gold standard for drug approval, it destroyed the last pretense of evidence-based drug approval. All of the subsequent "AIDS" drugs from nucleoside analogues to protease inhibitors, rode in on the coat-tails of AZT. The reaction of the "gay community", if there is such a thing, has been mixed: great courage and anger, but also victimhood and masochism. The New York Native, which for over a decade provided a voice for AIDS-dissidents, was destroyed through a boycott led by "AIDS activists" controlled by Big Pharma. The Gay & Lesbian Humanist is now the only gay publication that is open to AIDS critics. At present perfectly healthy gay men are receiving bogus "HIV-positive" diagnoses, and are then prescribed drugs which will cause malaise,deformity and death.

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: Nancy Banks at a conference [Vd]

Title: Nancy Banks at a conference [Vd]

TheUnhivedMind - February 12, 2011 03:46 AM (GMT)

Nancy Banks

[dohtml]<embed src="http://blip.tv/play/AYH4%2BDkC" type="application/x-shockwave-flash" width="480" height="300" allowscriptaccess="always" allowfullscreen="true"></embed>[/dohtml]

AIDS, Opium, Diamonds and Empire

It is a mistake to think that wars only concern armies involved in active engagement. Nothing could be farther from the truth. The first engagement is for the mind. The real forces of power wage a psychological and financial war. The dark princes of debt finance have gained leverage over every important social, economic and political institution--including the health care delivery system. This was done by using the obscene profits primarily from the drug trade, but also in the trade of other fungible assets such as diamonds. AIDS, Opium, Diamonds and Empire draws the connections between free market strategies, the destruction of national sovereignty by the process of globalization, and AIDS as one of the health consequences of a neo-Darwinian philosophy. There is a medical-pharmaceutical-industrial complex that was taken over one hundred years ago by the titans of financial capitalism. Their aim was to create profit, not to conquer disease. The AIDS story starts with the British East India Company that created great wealth by pushing opium into China. It finds expression after the events of WWII in the creation of the Bretton Woods Agreement and Vietnam during which massive quantities of opiates found their way to the West. The decision by a state to sell opium and related drugs to its subjects always takes place in situations of political and economic decline. It was known for well over one hundred years that opium and its derivatives are immune suppressors. As the result of the prolongation of the Vietnam War, social upheavals occurred in the expression of sexuality and the acceptance of the casual use of both legal and illegal drugs. AIDS became the cover story for the drug toxicity and oxidative stress of young people in the West and the Bretton Woods Agreement created conditions for environmental degradation and social upheavals in Africa.

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: HIV/AIDS and Goethe's Faust: a pact with the devil

Title: HIV/AIDS and Goethe's Faust: a pact with the devil
Description: [Vd]

TheUnhivedMind - February 12, 2011 03:45 AM (GMT)

HIV/AIDS and Goethe's Faust: a pact with the devil?

[dohtml]<embed src="http://blip.tv/play/AYH5lTQC" type="application/x-shockwave-flash" width="480" height="300" allowscriptaccess="always" allowfullscreen="true"></embed>[/dohtml]

When Aids was first recognised as a syndrome afflicting growing numbers of homosexual men in San Francisco, New York and elsewhere, the initial response among politicians and the media was to regard it as a "gay plague" associated with a fast-track sex-and-drugs lifestyle. Tragically, that perception became an excuse for neglect. As the death toll mounted, gay leaders and their doctors mounted an intense campaign for a more compassionate and active response. When US Government scientists claimed to have identified HIV as the cause, and to have developed a test to detect its presence, there was an all-round sense of relief. Billions of dollars flowed into the fight against "HIV/AIDS". The red ribbon, and HIV science, became iconic of a compassionate, tolerant society. Hodgkinson shows that from the earliest days of AIDS, scientists have presented evidence challenging the specificity of the HIV test, and offering alternative explanations for the syndrome. For the most part, however, these voices have been suppressed by the global scientific and medical communities, which came to regard questioning the HIV theory of AIDS causation as akin to holocaust denial - a crime against humanity. Hodgkinson argues that despite the noble intentions, these feelings and perceptions have corrupted AIDS science in such a way as to damage the lives of millions, including countless gay men. He likens the mistake to that which ultimately causes Faust - also a doctor - to lose his life in Goethe's version of the tragic legend. Once God's favourite human being, striving to learn everything that can be known, Faust is ultimately ensnared by the devil through the joy he experiences from an act of compassion. Goethe's story has a happy ending: Faust dies, but his soul is saved by the "eternal feminine" and taken to heaven. Can there be an equivalent end to the tragic misunderstandings surrounding "HIV/AIDS"?

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: How I fell victim to the AIDS machine [Vd]

Title: How I fell victim to the AIDS machine [Vd]

TheUnhivedMind - February 12, 2011 03:44 AM (GMT)

How I fell victim to the AIDS machine

[dohtml]<embed src="http://blip.tv/play/AYH49zgC" type="application/x-shockwave-flash" width="480" height="300" allowscriptaccess="always" allowfullscreen="true"></embed>[/dohtml]

My story is one of how I fell victim to the AIDS machine and how my husband and I found out the truth surrounding this controversy after I had been taking the HIV drugs for 11 years. I was given an AIDS diagnosis in 1996, based on nothing but a t-cell count. I experienced many side effects from the drugs over the years, ranging from nausea and vomiting, muscle cramps, anemia, insomnia, wasting, and hair falling out. We were continually told by my doctor that these were all symptoms of HIV disease, or having full blown AIDS. My doctor never told us that these symptoms could be medication related. Since stopping all the medications in April 2007, I have been in the process of regaining my health and well-being, and all side effects of the drugs have disappeared. I do have some concerns about any long-term, unseen damage these poisons may have done to me, but I try not to worry about it, as I live my life as healthy as possible. - Karri Stokely

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: Religion, politics & AIDS in Italy [Vd]

Title: Religion, politics & AIDS in Italy [Vd]

TheUnhivedMind - February 12, 2011 03:43 AM (GMT)

Religion, politics & AIDS in Italy

[dohtml]<embed src="http://blip.tv/play/AYH4lWIC" type="application/x-shockwave-flash" width="480" height="300" allowscriptaccess="always" allowfullscreen="true"></embed>[/dohtml]

Department of Experimental Pathology and Oncology. University of Firenze, Italy. The Italian Public Health Service is considered one of the best in the world and life expectancy in Italy is among the highest in Europe; Italian women live to be an average of 84 years old, the third highest in the European Union after Spain (84.3) and France (84.4), whereas life expectancy for men is 78.6 years, second in the European Union after Sweden (79). The estimated number of HIV-seropositive subjects in Italy is about 140.000 ? 150.000. However, since 66% of AIDS patients ignore their serostatus before the diagnosis of AIDS, it is presumable that the number is higher: out of these >150.000 subjects, in the year 2008, 202 people died of AIDS.It is unlikely that such a low lethality is due to early, pre-AIDS, antiretroviral treatment since only 34% of AIDS patients received an antiretroviral treatment before the diagnosis of AIDS. The data from the few regions of Italy implementing a registry of new HIV infections demonstrate that the relative rates of HIV-positive among males and females has remained the same over the years while the supposed mode of becoming HIV-positive changed from ~75% drug-related to only ~5% drug-related, and sexual transmission supposedly increased from less than 10% to ~80%. These data place a very curious constraint on how infection via dirty needles occurred in males and in females respectively. It must have occurred in precisely the same relative manner as sexually transmitted HIV infection occurs in males relative to females. Otherwise the male-to-female ratio for the consequences of HIV, namely AIDS, should have changed. Instead, the male-to-female ratio for the incidence of AIDS has been essentially constant from 1985 to 2008 at ~3.6. All these considerations cast doubts on a relationship of cause and effect between HIV-seropositivity and AIDS; apparently, the Italian Ministry of Health considers the possibility of a dissociation between HIV-seropositivity and AIDS by stating in official directives that the diagnosis of AIDS can be made in the absence of signs of HIV-seropositivity. - Marco Ruggiero

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: African population doubled from 400 to 800 million

Title: African population doubled from 400 to 800 million
Description: during HIV-AIDS era -Peter Duesberg [Vd]

TheUnhivedMind - February 12, 2011 03:42 AM (GMT)

African population doubled from 400 to 800 millions during the HIV-AIDS era

[dohtml]<embed src="http://blip.tv/play/AYKCkU8C" type="application/x-shockwave-flash" width="480" height="300" allowscriptaccess="always" allowfullscreen="true"></embed>[/dohtml]

Based on information from the World Health Organization (WHO) Chigwedere et al. have "estimated" that 1.8 million South Africans were killed between 2000 and 2005 by a new Human immunodeficiency Virus (HIV) epidemic, and that 330,000 of those were lost because "feasible treatments" with anti-HIV drugs were not available. They blamed former president Mbeki and others, who questioned the HIV-AIDS hypothesis, for restricting anti-HIV drugs, specifically AZT and Nevirapine. In view of the paradox that HIV would cause a huge epidemic in Africa, but not in any other continent despite global prevalence since 1985, we ask here what evidence exists for the claims of (1) 1.8 million South African HIV-deaths, and (2) for anti-HIV drugs able to prevent them. 1) Surprisingly we found no specific numbers for South African "AIDS cases" in WHO fact sheets. Based on verifiable statistics from South Africa, the US and the World Bank we found instead that the South African population increased by 3 million between 2000 and 2005, and had grown steadily from 29 to 49 million since the early 1980s when HIV-AIDS presumably begun. The monotonic growth trajectory shows no sudden loss of 1.8 million between 2000 and 2005, although about 25% were HIV antibody-positive. The population of Uganda also doubled since 1980, despite static prevalence of antibodies against HIV. Even Sub-Saharan Africa as a whole increased from 400 to 800 million between 1980 and 2007 despite high prevalence of antibodies against HIV. We conclude that African growth is independent of HIV, because HIV is an inherently nonpathogenic passenger, neutralized by antibody in millions of Africans with or without AIDS. 2) We adduce biological and statistical evidence that anti-HIV drugs, including the DNA chain-terminator AZT and Nevirapine, cause life threatening AIDS-defining and "non-AIDS-defining" diseases, but may have HIV-independent benefits against microbial infections and cancers. Thus restriction of anti-HIV drugs may have saved lives of HIV-positives and allowed normal growth to continue in South Africa.

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: AIDS research significantly confused by Human

Title: AIDS research significantly confused by Human Description: Endogenous Retroviruses (HERVs) [Vd]

TheUnhivedMind - February 12, 2011 03:41 AM (GMT)

AIDS research significantly confused by Human Endogenous Retroviruses (HERVs)

http://scienceandaids.blip.tv/file/4046906

[dohtml]<embed src="http://blip.tv/play/AYH4lGcC" type="application/x-shockwave-flash" width="480" height="300" allowscriptaccess="always" allowfullscreen="true"></embed>[/dohtml]

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: Hindrances to scientific progress and the failings

Title: Hindrances to scientific progress and the failings
Description: of HIV/AIDS theory [Vd]

TheUnhivedMind - February 12, 2011 03:39 AM (GMT)

Hindrances to scientific progress and the failings of HIV/AIDS theory

http://scienceandaids.blip.tv/file/4046801

[dohtml]<embed src="http://blip.tv/play/AYH4k34C" type="application/x-shockwave-flash" width="480" height="300" allowscriptaccess="always" allowfullscreen="true"></embed>[/dohtml]

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: AIDS, Opium, Diamonds & Empire - Dr. Banks [Vd]

Title: AIDS, Opium, Diamonds & Empire - Dr. Banks [Vd]

TheUnhivedMind - February 12, 2011 03:33 AM (GMT)

AIDS, Opium, Diamonds & Empire - Dr. Banks

http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=pWsblWfxc68 http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=L8Ky7ky0jAQ
http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=6BJhPiGhyu4

[dohtml]<iframe title="YouTube video player" width="480" height="390" src="http://www.youtube.com/embed/pWsblWfxc68" frameborder="0" allowfullscreen></iframe>

<iframe title="YouTube video player" width="480" height="390" src="http://www.youtube.com/embed/L8Ky7ky0jAQ" frameborder="0" allowfullscreen></iframe>

<iframe title="YouTube video player" width="480" height="390" src="http://www.youtube.com/embed/6BJhPiGhyu4" frameborder="0" allowfullscreen></iframe>
[/dohtml]

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: Denialism: TheDeath of AIDS [Vd]

Title: Denialism: TheDeath of AIDS [Vd]

TheUnhivedMind - February 12, 2011 03:27 AM (GMT)

Denialism: TheDeath of AIDS

The AIDS dissidents are struggling to bring AIDS into a new light, but they first must break the barrier of the denialist label.

[dohtml]<iframe src="http://player.vimeo.com/video/8446150" width="400" height="300" frameborder="0"></iframe> Denialism: TheDeath of AIDS from nicole z on Vimeo. [/dohtml]

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: "Goodbye AIDS! Did it ever exist?" Book launch by Title: "Goodbye AIDS! Did it ever exist?" Book launch by Description: Maria Papagiannidou [Vd]

TheUnhivedMind - February 12, 2011 03:17 AM (GMT)

"Goodbye AIDS! Did it ever exist?" Book launch by Maria Papagiannidou (April 7-8, 2009)

http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=2CDRaNPqFlY

[dohtml]<object style="height: 390px; width: 640px"><param name="movie" value="http://www.youtube.com/v/2CDRaNPqFlY?version=3"><param name="allowFullScreen" value="true"><param name="allowScriptAccess" value="always"><embed src="http://www.youtube.com/v/2CDRaNPqFlY?version=3" type="application/x-shockwave-flash" allowfullscreen="true" allowScriptAccess="always" width="640" height="390"></object>[/dohtml]

http://www.hivwave.gr/pages/en/bleng.html
http://www.archive.org/details/GoodbyeAidsBookLaunch

Introduction by Janine Roberts, author of the book "Fear of the invisible" and publisher of "Goodbye AIDS! Did it ever exist?". Book launch in Athens, April 7, 2009 Investigative part: Janine Roberts, Lambros Papantoniou Scientific part: Dr. Andrew Maniotis, Dr. Juliane Sacher Human stories: Maria Papagiannidou, Panagiotis Sopiadis Music: Giolanda Danaou, Giannis Andrakakos Highlights of a TV interview, April 7, 2009 Maria Papagiannidou in Exei Gusto, NET, a National Greek television channel A few minutes from the event in Thessaloniki, April 8, 2009

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: Rethinking AIDS Calls for Conference in 2011

Title: Rethinking AIDS Calls for Conference in 2011

TheUnhivedMind - February 12, 2011 03:01 AM (GMT)

Rethinking AIDS Calls for Conference in 2011

Ruggiero Appointed to Board of Rethinking AIDS

http://rethinkingaids.com/Content/QA/tabid/194/Default.aspx

SAN FRANCISCO (Rethinking AIDS) December 20, 2010 - The non-profit scientific organization Rethinking AIDS has set Dec 1, 2011 for a worldwide conference to challenge the mainstream paradigm that AIDS is an infectious disease. The conference location will be Washington, D.C.

Presenters will discuss possible causes for a lowered immune system apart from the single virus theory currently being imposed as a dogma. Medical specialists will discuss alternative treatments for the conditions that may be considered "AIDS" in HIV-antibody-positive people.

The conference will call for a dramatic reduction in AIDS spending. In the context of the national budget crisis, spending on AIDS is disproportionate to the number of patients who have fallen ill particularly as the spending is killing people, not curing them. $25 billion was spent on AIDS in 2010, but the 'epidemic' has never expanded beyond small groups within the gay and drug user communities.

A further focus of the conference will be on challenging the validity of the AIDS HIV tests. It is commonly believed that testing positive for antibodies believed to be from HIV means that the virus is present in the blood of the patient and that the patient has AIDS. Neither is true. But patients are often frightened into taking the dangerous and expensive anti-viral medications.

In other news Rethinking AIDS has added a new member to their board of directors, Dr. Marco Ruggiero, a board-certified medical doctor and clinical radiologist. He is a full professor of molecular biology and genetics at the University of Firenze, Italy where he teaches in the Faculties of Medicine, Sciences (chemistry, biology and biotechnology) and Engineering. He spent two years as post-doctoral fellow at Burroughs Wellcome Co. (Research Triangle Park, NC, USA) in 1984-86, where he had the opportunity to collaborate and publish with Nobel Laureate Sir John Vane.

Dr. Ruggiero subsequently spent three years as post-doctoral fellow at the Laboratory of Cellular and Molecular Biology of the National Cancer Institute in Bethesda, MD, USA, sharing the office with Professor Duesberg as he was visiting the Laboratory. Afterwards, he spent two years as Lab Chief at the Sigma-Tau pharmaceutical company in Milan, Italy.

Dr. Ruggiero became associate professor of molecular biology at the University of Firenze in 1992, and full professor in 2002. The research of Professor Ruggiero deals with the study of the molecular mechanisms responsible for cell transformation, signaling and death in different human pathologies from cancer to AIDS. The results of his research have been published in peer-reviewed, PubMed-indexed, scientific journals and in book chapters.

In a recent talk at an Italian conference, Dr. Ruggiero speaks of present day AIDS as a scandal and a hoax, a creature of the pharmaceutical-medical complex. He stated that the drugs that are used to treat AIDS cause cancer. He claimed billions are uselessly spent in search of a vaccine for AIDS.

Dr. Ruggiero stated that in the past three years definitive evidence has accumulated demonstrating that HIV cannot be considered the sole cause of AIDS. For example, a ten year meta-analysis of anti-retroviral therapy published in the Lancet showed that, although the medicines decreased HIV levels, they did not decrease the rates of AIDS or death. Ruggiero concludes that the virus does not cause AIDS, but instead arises as a result of a lowered immune system, thus reversing the cause-effect relationship between HIV and AIDS.

Dr. Ruggiero referred to Nobel Prize winner Luc Montagnier who stated that someone with a healthy immune system can be exposed to HIV many times without being chronically infected. It is possible for someone infected with HIV to get rid of the infection by naturally building up their immune system, without the use of anti-viral medicines.

Media Contacts:

David Crowe*
President, Rethinking AIDS
Calgary, Alberta, Canada (Mountain time zone)

1-403-289-6609 (office)
1-403-861-2225 (mobile)
david.crowe@rethinkingaids.com

Jason Erb
Media Coordinator
Rethinking AIDS
Waterloo, Ontario, Canada
519-722-5945 (mobile)
jason.erb@rethinkingaids.com

Martin Barnes
Public Relations Chairperson
Rethinking AIDS
Languedoc, France
01133608717021 (mobile)
martin.barnes@rethinkingaids.com

*Rethinking AIDS board member.

Rethinking AIDS: The Group for the Scientific Reappraisal of the HIV/AIDS Hypothesis ("RA" or "the Group") was formed in 1991 to express the concerns of a growing number of renowned scientists and medical doctors about HIV research and the resulting human rights abuses. In 1995, by a letter published in Science, the Group called for a thorough reappraisal of the existing evidence for and against the HIV/AIDS hypothesis and recommended that critical epidemiological studies be undertaken.

Among RA's founders and key members are University of Toronto professor emeritus and former cancer researcher Dr. Etienne de Harven; Harvard microbiologist Dr. Charles Thomas; 1993 Nobel laureate for chemistry Dr. Kary Mullis; Nature/ Biotechnology co-founder Dr. Harvey Bialy; University of California at Berkeley molecular biologist Dr. Peter Duesberg and the late Yale mathematician Dr. Serge Lang, both members of the National Academy of Sciences; physicist Eleni Papadopulos-Eleopulos of the Royal Perth Hospital in Australia; and Glasgow University professor emeritus of public health and World Health Organization consultant Dr. Gordon Stewart.

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: Over the Rainbow with Marco Ruggiero

Title: Over the Rainbow with Marco Ruggiero

TheUnhivedMind - February 12, 2011 02:50 AM (GMT)

Over the Rainbow with Marco Ruggiero

By Celia Farber
http://www.thetruthbarrier.com/essays/40-g...-marco-ruggiero

It was the late winter of 2009 when I met Dr. Marco Ruggiero at the Rethinking AIDS (RA) Conference in Oakland, California. I'd heard of him, seen glimpses of his work, and wondered who he was, in the way I'd grown accustomed to looking at scientists through the War Lens.

Everything about Ruggiero was improbable; A full Professor of Molecular Biology, Department of Experimental Pathology and Oncology at the University of Firenze, Italy, who suddenly appeared on the HIV/AIDS scene as somebody in whom the blood-soaked distinction between orthodox and dissident appeared to have dissolved. He was both. That is to say, he came from extremely mainstream, indeed orthodox channels, yet when he dissented from said orthodoxy on the question of HIV's pathogenesis, he apparently did so not only without trauma, but to the sound of cheering, from his Italian colleagues and peers.

No dissident would indulge me in any conversation about nationality, what it might mean: Italian.

Recall how the Italians in many ways subverted the Nazis in WW2, though they were allies.

It rarely gets said but I will say it: The HIV debate carried unspoken cargo from WW2. By and large, those from countries who experienced fascism most intimately have been those who have stood up against HIV/AIDS fascism most courageously. It means something to them that it does not mean to American scientists.

"Science" carries history, national identity, culture. In America, the scientist has been hammered down so that he does not protrude or interfere with "the business of America."

I was always much more interested in the characters—their moral impulses and yes, feelings—than the scientific minutae. I was interested to study and draw them

What is "science" shucked from the human beings it manifests through?

You tell me.

The advantage of drawing "disssident" scientists is that each is unique. I am not left to draw an army, marching in lockstep with expressionless faces, denouncing open debate.

In 2009, the dissenting scientists organized around Rethinking AIDS were pretty fried, as was I.

Virtually everybody (since 1987) who had objected to HIV code (I call it "code," not "theory") had paid a high price, in some cases, the highest price, for their dissent and it was not exactly a barrel of monkeys to cope with it at this point. My body's response to the abuse and stress (after 20 years) was to develop eventually catatonic depression, pneumonia, and thyroid/adrenal collapse.

The psychosis unleashed in 1999/2000 when Thabo Mbeki registered his first objection to AZT in South Africa had ushered in a reign of professional terror and McCarthyism that left so-called dissident scientists as open prey in a society that would not and could not protect their right to conduct medical inquiry. Instead, so-called "AIDS Treatment Activists" ran media-based persecutions and show trials, as heads rolled, as professors and editors and journalists were blacklisted, slandered, accused of mass murder, and in many cases fired. Editors groveled pitifully for the approval of the illegitimate drug-pushing AIDS mafia, each time they knocked on the door, fulminant, demanding retractions, apologies, firings, and even removals of both documentary film archives, published scientific papers, and even established editors. All these atrocities have transpired in the years of AIDS fascism. Rock stars with flagging careers joined their ranks in hopes of obtaining glory by way of claiming to save the lives of African babies and mothers, who we were meant to believe Mr. Mbeki himself, a venerated anti-Apartheid leader, wished to kill. Incidentally, throughout the Apartheid era, a full 50% of all black South African children were dead by age five from the diseases of poverty.

No matter. The script was written. Good guys and bad guys. Angels and devils. All of science was reduced to a slum, with marauding vandals smashing reputations and collecting scalps, as the mass media obediently rolled over.

I'd not heard of anybody who'd emerged unscathed. It was quite simply career suicide to object, even in the most sober of tones, to any facet of the doctrine—the code.

In addition, an internal civil war had broken out within the dissident ranks in 2008, unleashing previously repressed tribal loathing primarily from one camp which perceived another camp as having gotten everything wrong on the burning question of HIV's isolation and existence. The perceived old guard of dissenters were attacked now from all sides, like Finland in World War 2—caught between the Soviets and the Germans, damned from all angles.

I dragged myself onto the plane to San Francisco in a depressed fog, having promised to turn up, but hoping I could hide in a corner, and generally well past despondency on the ancient prayer of clearing any of this up.

I remember very little. I was conscious only of the need to show a three minute memorial film I had made for my friend Christine Maggiore, who died in late 2008 from renal failure on a drug regimen for treatment of bi-lateral pneumonia.

I listened to Marco Ruggiero's presentation, and it struck me that he was radiating something brand new. I wrote, "good as new," in my near blank notepad. He cheerfully agreed to sit down and talk to me at one of the outdoor cafe tables, together with Dr. Claus Koehnlein, whose disposition remained the same as it had over the years: Steadfast, quiet, and ruefully carrying a burdensome knowledge embodied by his most famous quote, which he has said to many journalists, including me: "Well, we killed a whole generation of AIDS patients with AZT."

Claus they never touched, by the way. He's treated over four hundred HIV positive and/or AIDS patients since the early 80s at his practice in Kiehl, Germany, and has quietly treated them only for those symptoms they manifested, never treated their "HIV," per se. I asked him, as I always do when I see him, how many patients he's lost, and he said, "not many. We lost some but not many."

Ricci Davis was with us, trying to make heads or tails of my brand new video camera, and darting off to find a blue chip which he miraculously returned with.

I turned to Dr. Ruggiero, and once again, got the distinct impression that his energy was unusual. It was bright and intact, unharmed. How could this be? Where were his battle scars? Where was his tale of loss, battery, persecution, dysfunction? Who was he and where had he come from? I prodded, asked, expecting to hear the familiar horror stories. But instead he spoke so brightly and confidently about how not only not "dangerous" these ideas were in Italy, but how appreciated they were. Tanned and serene, like he'd just sailed in, in perfect weather.

I watched him say these things and I was like a child watching a magic man with bubbles coming out of his mouth.

What?

Did he mean to say there was no war, no grubby persecutions of dissenting HIV scientists, in Italy?

Yes.

It was "not a problem," in Italy, he kept saying and you have to hear that as he said it, with a smile, "not a problem een eeetaly."

Really?

Yes, really.

And I just sat there, as the sun set and my tape recorder malfunctioned, and Claus Koehnlein ordered another beer and Marco Ruggiero spoke proudly of Italian scientific standards and values.

I gawked. Are you for real? Like an East German meeting a West German circa 1970, unable to fathom eating oranges or not having your underwear drawers bugged. Can I cross over to this rainbow land if I click my heels?

The meeting ended. I knew that if I ever got my energy back, I wanted to interview Marco Ruggiero.

In the summer of 2010, he attended and presented at both the orthodox and the dissident AIDS conferences in Vienna. He sent me some photos he'd taken of a fashion show in conjunction with the orthodox conference where dresses made entirely of condoms were displayed on the catwalk.

It should come as no surprise to anybody that Dr. Ruggiero has what he calls "combative genes"—his grandfather joined the army as a volunteer to fight Erwin Rommel in WW1, and his great grandmother had a liason with Giuseppe Garibaldi himself. In the Ruggiero home, (his wife is also a scientist) hangs an original letter with a photo, that Garibaldi sent her.

In January, I finally emailed him some questions, and after a few days wait, I got his answers. The true story is even more improbable and remarkable than I realized.

Q: In April of 1984, (I don't know how old you were then) when Dr. Robert Gallo stood before the world at the famous NCI press conference and said his lab had isolated a pathogenic retrovirus that was the "probable" (Heckler) cause of AIDS, what did you think then? *

A: In April 1984 I was getting ready to move as post-doctoral fellow to Burroughs Wellcome Co., Research Triangle Park, NC. I had learned about this “new epidemic” in 1982-83, when I was serving as sub-lieutenant medical officer in the elite corps “Carabinieri”.

In fact I had been trained in non-conventional warfare (nuclear, biological and chemical) and there was interest in learning whether this “new epidemic” could have been of interest for the military both from the point of view of prevention or as a biological weapon. When we learned of Gallo’s claim, we had no opinion at that time and we just recorded his statements. Curiously enough, at Burroughs Wellcome I worked on protease inhibitors, although with objectives other that preventing retroviral replication, and, together with my supervisor, Dr. Eduardo Lapetina, we wrote a paper on protease inhibitors that was appreciated by Nobel Laureate Sir John Vane who communicated it to the National Academy of Sciences of the U.S.; the paper was published in PNAS in 1986 (Proc. Natl. Acad. Sci. USA 83: 3456-3459, l986). In the corridor next to our laboratory, other researchers were working on AZT and similar compounds, and we frequently had meetings discussing the progresses of our research.

Q: Were you trained to think that a) 'retroviruses' existed as a new class of viruses, that B) "they" were benign, that c) they were benign but THIS ONE was pathogenic?

A: During the years of the university as medical student (1974-1980), we received little training about retroviruses that, until that time, were considered little less than microbiological curiosities. I began to learn a little bit more about them when, after the military, I moved to the laboratory of molecular biology of the University of Firenze, directed at that time by Professor Vincenzo Chiarugi, heir of the famed Dr. Vincenzo Chiarugi, one of the founders of modern psychiatry. Vincenzo was interested in retroviruses because of viral oncogenes and thus we began studying these viruses, with particular reference to Harvey's sarcoma virus* harbouring the ras oncogene.

*Harvey murine sarcoma virus: A replication-defective mouse sarcoma virus first described by J.J. Harvey in 1964.

One of the first oncogenes to be defined in cancer research is the ras oncogene. Mutations in the Ras family of proto-oncogenes (comprising H-Ras, N-Ras and K-Ras) are very common, being found in 20% to 30% of all human tumours. Ras was originally identified in the Harvey sarcoma virus genome, and researchers were surprised that not only was this gene present in the human genome but that, when ligated to a stimulating control element, could induce cancers in cell line cultures.

At that time we were all convinced that retroviruses caused tumours and other diseases in animals, but not in humans. At that time we were also very sceptical about HTLV-1 and 2, because these putative human oncogenic viruses did not fit in the retroviral oncogene theory that we embraced at that time. Because of this, we could not understand how, from the molecular point of view (we all were, and I still am, primarily molecular biologists), such a small retrovirus could cause so many damages. In particular, we could not identify the retroviral genes responsible for such dramatic cell damages.

Q: Do you think HIV exists as a unique and exogenous retrovirus?

A: Yes I do. However, as a scientist I rely upon data. If there are data demonstrating that the nucleotide sequence attributed to HIV is homologous to sequences present in the diploid human genome, then I shall have no difficulty in defining HIV as a human endogenous retrovirus. The entire human diploid sequence (at least the sequence of one individual) is freely accessible here: NEW INDIVIDUAL HUMAN DIPLOID GENOME. It will not be difficult for anyone who doubts of the existence of HIV to compare HIV and human sequences in order to find homologies. Such homologies have not been found so far, to my knowledge. However, there is an emerging and fascinating field: the human microbiome project (HMP) (See Also: J. Craig Venter Institute). Maybe HIV could be part of it. If we think about the implications of the HMP, then the very question about the existence of HIV or of myself has to be re-formulated. In fact, so far, I define myself as the organism coded for by my individual sequence ATGGTTAATT … and so on for about 3 billion base pairs. But, from the HMP point of view, I should now define myself as an ensemble of organisms: one of these organisms is the one coded for by ATGGTTAATT. Then there are ten times more cells of other organisms about which we know almost nothing: the entity that calls himself Marco Ruggiero in reality is not ONE organism, but an ensemble of who knows how many. The very question of individual existence is now challenged.

Q: If yes, do you think it is transmitted sexually?

A: With the caveats described above, yes, I do. However, the HMP teaches us that innumerable other micro-organisms will probably be transmitted sexually. For sexual transmission of AIDS (not HIV), please see the data on teenage sex quoted below.

Q: Do you think it "does" anything, cellularly?

A: Yes, as any other micro-organism interacting with our cells. Any retrovirus, harmless or not, by the simple fact of integrating its genome in the human genome, modifies the human genome, adding some information. Because of this, 8% of the human genome is made of retrovirus-like elements/sequences (just to give you an idea, gene sequences coding for proteins, i.e. those sequences that we refer to any time that we speak about the human genome, account only for about 1.5% of the human genome. We could say that we have more retroviral sequences than coding genes, even though such a statement is not completely correct from the molecular point of view). The main question is: does it cause cell death/damage in such a way that a disease arises? In fact, even cell death is not per se pathogenic. As a matter of fact, cell death by apoptosis is a physiological mechanism that protects us from mutations, cancer and a number of other diseases including microbial diseases. Although the evidence for an association between “signs of HIV infection” and AIDS is overwhelming, a cause and effect relationship has been very difficult to prove and such demonstrations are not convincing. I believe that there is no need to remember that the belief, correlation proves causation, is a logical fallacy by which two events that occur together are claimed to have a cause-and-effect relationship. The fallacy is also known as cum hoc ergo propter hoc (Latin for “with this, therefore because of this”) and false cause.

Q: Do you think testing HIV positive means one has been ‘infected?’

A: Any test, by definition, cannot be 100% accurate. Specificity and sensitivity often are inversely related; therefore un-specific diagnoses of HIV-positivity are likely to occur as with any other test. In general, however, once such problems have been resolved, I would say that in the presence of confirmed antibodies and detection of the so-called viral load (although often over-estimated), I would say that an encounter with the virus has occurred. However, this could simply indicate an association between two things that are not necessarily correlated with a cause and effect relationship. If we adhere to the statements of Prof. Montagnier, as I do, then the persistence of signs of HIV infection could simply be an indicator of immune system malfunction. In this interpretation, immune system malfunction is the cause and chronic HIV infection (along with other opportunistic infection) one of the effects, probably not the worst one. In other words, HIV infection could be the symptom of an existing immunodeficiency.

Q: Do you think that "getting rid of" (Montagnier) HIV is the holy grail of restoring immune function in AIDS patients?

A: If we succeed in eliminating the virus by stimulating the immune system without targeting the virus itself, this would demonstrate without any shadow of doubt what I mentioned above. This has been achieved, published in 2009 and never confuted (J Med Virol 81:16-26, 2009). We are now conducting experiments to demonstrate how does this work at the molecular level and some of our data have been published in December 2010 (Cancer Immunol Immunother). There are ongoing clinical trials with GcMAF on HIV-positive and AIDS patients in order to replicate the trials described in J Med Virol. Some of our clinical trials and case reports with GcMAF in HIV+ and AIDS patients will be presented this year at some congress and we shall try to publish them. This approach, however, is not “dissident.” At the XVIII Intl AIDS Conference in Vienna in July 2010, there were communications describing how quitting antiretroviral therapy and shifting to immunotherapy improved quality of life. In one of these communication, the Authors propose an immunotherapy slightly different than the one described in J Med Virol, but using an identical approach. From the Conference of Vienna:

http://www.thetruthbarrier.com/images/stor...-2-ruggiero.gif

Q: Describe the evolution of your thinking about HIV and AIDS, since you entered the field, and also, how these ideas evolved in Italy.

A: From 1984 until 1987, I did not care much about HIV and AIDS. While in the Military, we had determined that this was not a biological weapon and that it was restricted to risk groups (IV drug abusers and a very small percentage of active male homosexuals); by the way, the same scenario is true as of today, and we published it in the Italian Journal of Anatomy and Histology, vol. 114, 97-108, 2009. Please notice that the Italian Journal of Anatomy and Embryology is the official journal of one of the most prestigious Italian and international scientific societies, the Italian Society of Anatomy and Histology, founded in 1929. The journal is peer reviewed and listed in major indexing systems including www.pubmed.org . The journal has no commercial purpose and does not host advertisements. All papers are written in English. All information about the journal can be found here: Italian Journal of Anatomy and Embryology.

In 1987, I was working on intracellular signal transduction, i.e. the study of those signals that control cell proliferation, differentiation and death. I had acquired a certain expertise at Burroughs Wellcome and because of this, I was called to join the Laboratory of Cellular and Molecular Biology of the National Cancer Institute at the NIH in Bethesda. The laboratory was then directed by Dr. Stuart A. Aaronson and we were all working on oncogenes with great success. We were located at the first floor of the building, whereas Dr. Robert Gallo had his laboratory at the sixth floor. Several Italian fellows were working with Dr. Gallo and we often met at parties. In October 1987, just as I arrived at the NIH, Prof. Peter Duesberg was visiting our laboratory and we happened to share the office for some time. Needless to say, I remained fascinated by his logic and I began to be interested again in the aetiology and pathogenesis of AIDS. In a memorable lecture, where people had to stand because the main hall was too crowded, Prof. Duesberg convinced me of the correctness of his hypothesis and ever since I have been striving at finding a truly scientific way to demonstrate it. 24 years later, we think that we have found it. You remember that at time Prof. Duesberg was stating that he was not afraid to inject himself HIV provided that it did not come from Gallo's lab. Therefore, at his farewell party the youngsters prepared a big syringe filled with pink medium, haemostatic lace, alcohol and cotton balls and we teased Peter to go ahead and test his hypothesis. We now know that such an experiment would have been useless and destined to fail. In our paper (Italian Journal of Anatomy and Histology, vol. 114, 97-108, 2009) we report that occupational exposure to HIV is uncommon, and the overall risk of seroconversion after contact with HIV positive blood is extremely low (seroconversion rate, 0–0.42%). It is calculated that, on average 99.7% of health care workers, who are exposed to HIV, will not be infected (Ippolito et al., 1993; Marcus, 1988). In general, most health care professionals found to be HIV-positive have a history of behavioural (male homosexual contact or intravenous drug use) or transfusion exposure (Chamberland et al., 1995). These published statements are for those who propose that dissidents should inject themselves with HIV if they truly believe that it is harmless; well, it has been already done thousands of times with freshly collected HIV-infected blood and it does not work!

Q: Why is it NOT as you say problematic to a career, in Italy, to posit that HIV is not the cause of AIDS? What was it that made the climate safer in Italy than in, say, the United States? You have said you are shocked by the violence perpetrated against HIV dissenters in the U.S. and other countries. Can you elaborate on this a little bit?

A: I guess that there is more than one single answer to the first question. First of all there is the historic precedent of the lack of freedom during the Fascist era. During that era, university professor could not teach freely and their lectures were controlled by the authorities. Because of this, our republican constitution guarantees, in addition to the obvious freedom of speech, a very specific freedom of teaching at the university level. No authority in Italy, including our Prime Minister, should he be interested in the topic, can forbid a university professor to freely teach any kind of theory in his field. And it happens that viruses are among the topics covered by the teaching of molecular biology, as defined and established by the Ministry of the University. As long as I teach a topic that is considered within the definition of my field of expertise, in my case molecular biology, my freedom is total and unquestioned. Of course, during the course of molecular biology I cannot teach, let's say, a novel interpretation of history or religion. As a matter of fact, quite recently a distinguished Italian professor of microbiology, now retired, close associate of Drs. Gallo and Moore, probably upon instigation of the latter, wrote an accusatory letter to the Chief (Rettore) of my University, denouncing my teaching of "unscientific" theories (HIV is not the cause of AIDS). The Rettore (I do not know how translate this term, maybe Provost, in other words the highest authority of the University), wrote him back a three line letter (that he CC'd me) reminding him, as he should have known, that our constitution guarantees freedom of speech and freedom of teaching. And that was it. Period, end of report. Quite different than the accusations, trials and so on that Prof. Duesberg had to endure last year for an identical occurrence.

Here I refer to the differences between U.S. and Italy. In particular I refer to the management of the accusations that led to the investigation on Peter Duesberg by the University of Berkeley in the spring of 2010. Those accusations led to an investigation and to a sort of a trial on Duesberg. Identical accusations led to nothing more than a few line letter here in Firenze. In fact, having failed with Berkeley that decided, after long hearings and discussions, meeting of experts, lawyers and so on, that Peter had not done anything wrong, they tried with me. These are the details: Professor Michele La Placa, retired Professor of Microbiology, strong supporter of Drs. Gallo and Moore (refer to links below), wrote a letter to the Chief (Rettore) of the University of Firenze, denouncing my approach to HIV and AIDS. I did not read the letter that Prof. La Placa wrote to the Rettore, but I received (as cc) the letter that the Rettore wrote him. It reads (verbatim translation).

Italian Society for Medical Virology (SIVIM) Symposium

Unical: conferenza stampa con il Prof. Robert Gallo per primi risultati del vaccino sperimentale sull'HIV

12th International Annual Meeting of IHV - Tropea-Italy, 4-8 October 2010

Dear Professor La Placa,

I acknowledge receipt of your letter of October 16, 2010 (registered with n. 20.10.2010). As far as the substance of your letter is concerned, I cannot but state that, as you should know, freedom of teaching is in our corpus of laws and it is related with the amplest sphere of freedom of expression and communication of thought guaranteed by our Constitution. Such a freedom, by the way, concerns all dimension of free cultural expression of the profession of teaching that is realized within the laws and rules concerning the matter.

Sincerely yours,

Prof. Alberto Tesi,

Rettore dell'Università di Firenze.

It could be that in the U.S., not having experienced a dictatorial regime, you are not equipped to protect your freedom of speech that includes freedom of teaching. Here, freedom of teaching is sacred and unquestioned.

http://www.thetruthbarrier.com/images/stor...-3-ruggiero.gif

Another difference with the U.S. could lay in the fact that AIDS is a very marginal health problem in Italy and no one really cares; therefore, disputes about its causes are considered little more than extravagancies. In our beautiful region of Tuscany there have been fewer than 10 deaths per year of diagnosis in 2008 and 2009 in a population of almost 4 million residents. Teenagers happily practice promiscuous and unsafe sex (43.5% of teenagers had had actual sexual intercourse and 37.9% (males) and 26.4% (females) teenagers reported more than 3 partners. Among female teenagers reporting more than 3 partners, 45% reported using condoms), but AIDS is almost non existing among them. Heterosexuals do not use ARVs (only 17.8% of them had been treated with antiretroviral drugs prior to the diagnosis of AIDS) and as a result virtually nobody dies.

Then, there is a subtler consideration: Anti-Americanism and anti-imperialism are rampant among intellectuals all over Europe. With the advent of the Euro, the bankruptcy of once omnipotent U.S. corporations like GM and Chrysler (saved by Italian FIAT, by the way), the U.S. model of development and way of life ceased to lure Europeans. Any "American" thing is considered an expression of a failed and declining imperialism. Therefore, anyone who defies U.S.-based theories and/or interpretations, is almost automatically granted sympathy in Europe. This holds true for AIDS too. It suffices to say "that American scientist attacks me because my theory undermines his lust for money in association with the never enough vituperated Big Pharma" that any scientist or intellectual will take side on my part. Even though generalizations are wrong, here there is the perception that anything done or said by Americans is done for profit regardless of any respect for human life or values. Among highly despised corporations there are, of course, commercial publishers such as Elsevier.

Our censored article in Medical Hypotheses and all the articles and quotations about it that followed in Science and Nature, made us kind of celebrities here. We were admired for our courage to defy the overwhelming power of the corporations. Even more; we (authors) all proudly list our withdrawn Medical Hypothesis article in our CVs and it is highly valued, for example, when one of us is asking for a promotion (it is not my case because as ordinary professor I am at the vertex of the hierarchical pyramid). Last October Dr. Stefania Pacini (the corresponding author of the Medical Hypothesis paper and, incidentally, my wife) was appointed professor by a commission of Italian professors who evaluated her publications, including Med Hypo.

Another peculiar point concerns the city where I live, Firenze, the city where Galileo lived and worked, not too far from where I am sitting now. In the city of Galileo, the mere mention of the words “censorship in science” is considered blasphemy of the worst type. According to all our colleagues, whether dissidents or orthodox, the act of Elsevier of forcibly withdrawing our paper is considered the worst offence against science; we have been perceived (although vastly undeserving) as moral heirs of Galileo, persecuted because of our scientific hypotheses. As a matter of fact, when the Med Hypo article was published, the press office of the University put it in the home page of the University web site as a most distinguished accomplishment of Florentine researchers.

Similarly, the article by Prof. Bauer and myself was published by the Firenze University Press, i.e. the official publisher of the Florentine University (Above).

Just to let you know, the other day I was at a meeting with other full (ordinary) professors of the University discussing the problems of university teaching in prison (I am the Faculty’s delegate for this project); well, distinguished colleagues of human sciences stated that the authoritarian control over individual freedom was much worse in the American organization of labour (in factories or fast-food chains) that in our prisons. This is what they teach to their students. Whether is this true or not, this is the reality in our Universities. In other words, anything coming from or associated with (U.S.) corporations (such as Big Pharma or commercial publishers), here is automatically considered enemy and to fight them is considered honourable.

These considerations could also answer the second question of yours. The violence against the so- called AIDS rethinkers or dissidents, is simply unconceivable here. Whenever some European learns about it, it is considered a further proof that the so called American way of living as portrayed by Hollywood movies is a delusion and that the harsh reality of American workers, including scientists and philosophers, is much worse now in the U.S. than in Europe. The degree of freedom that we enjoy here is unprecedented. We could elaborate that prohibitionism never solved any problem, most often exacerbated it. We learned this lesson the hard way and now there is total freedom of speech and teaching. Freedom of speech and teaching about HIV and AIDS is here associated with the virtual non-existence of deaths attributed to AIDS; take your conclusions.

Endnotes:

[* Dr. Harvey Bialy, then editor of Nature Bio/Technology is on record as having said: “A pathogenic retrovirus? That’s just more Bob Gallo bull—t. That’ll never fly.]

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: Global Fund Against Aids cracks down on fraud

Title: Global Fund Against Aids cracks down on fraud

TheUnhivedMind - February 11, 2011 01:23 AM (GMT)

Global Fund Against Aids cracks down on fraud

5 February 2011 Last updated at 00:23
http://www.bbc.co.uk/news/world-europe-12371723?print=true

The UN-backed Global Fund Against Aids, Tuberculosis and Malaria has announced it is strengthening financial safeguards following corruption claims.

The fund, with a budget of almost $22bn (£13.6bn), said the new measures would include a panel of independent experts to review financial procedures.

Last week, Germany, the fund's third-largest contributor, said it was suspending its financial support.

Media reports speculate that billions of dollars may have been siphoned off.

The experts will look at the fund's ability to prevent and detect fraud and misuse in its grants.

The fund's executive director, Michel Kazatchkine, said it had "zero tolerance" for fraud and corruption in its grants and was "responding aggressively when instances of fraud or misappropriation are detected".

The body said it would double the budget of its own financial inspectors and hire outside firms to monitor how the fund spends its money.

It said that the misuse of $34m of funds had been discovered by its own investigative unit.

A spokesman for the fund told the BBC last week that the worst instances of fraud had been found in Mali, Mauritania, Djibouti and Zambia.

Last December, the fund confirmed that large sums of money had been misappropriated. An HIV programme in Mauritania lost $4.1m two-thirds of its total grant, for example, eaten up by faked invoices. In Djibouti, $5m disappeared, much of it spent on cars and motorcycles.

The fund is investigating the loss of large quantities of anti-malarial medicines which were stolen and re-sold on the black market.

Its principal donors are the US, France, Germany and Japan.

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: THE HIV TEST FOR ALL IS NOW STARTING TO COME FORTH

Title: THE HIV TEST FOR ALL IS NOW STARTING TO COME FORTH
Description: YOU MUST PREPARE FOR THIS NONSENSE!!

TheUnhivedMind - December 22, 2010 10:33 PM (GMT)

Charities call for routine HIV tests for under 25s

By Brandice Alexander
http://www.bbc.co.uk/newsbeat/12053694

Under 25s should get routine screenings for HIV when in hospital or visiting their GP, say sexual health charities.

New figures show 13,000 people in that age group are infected with the virus in the UK.

Leading sexual health charities like BASSH and NAM Aidsmap have told Newsbeat they want routine HIV tests carried out no matter a person's race, gender, sexuality or postcode.

It's hoped it would help get more people diagnosed earlier.

At the moment only those considered most at risk like sexually active gay men, black Africans living in the UK or drug addicts who share needles, are screened routinely.

Aaron, 25, lives in Birmingham, is happily married with two kids and is HIV positive.

He only found out after he started to feel run down in September 2009.

"I can always remember the day I got diagnosed - the ninth of the ninth '09.

"It started off thinking that I had swine flu and they gave me the Tamiflu tablets."

Aaron had a sore throat and a fever and was showing all the symptoms of HIV but didn't know it.

"It didn't actually come across the doctor's mind to put me in for an HIV test or anything else like that.

"It was only when I started getting a rash below that I was quite concerned and I didn't want my Mrs to find out."

Stereotypes

HIV breaks down the immune system and has no cure - left untreated it can turn into AIDS.

One in four people with HIV in the UK don't know they have the virus.

If the plan was to go ahead, under-25s would be asked to take a test during any GP visit or hospital treatment.

Dr Steve Taylor is leading consultant at Birmingham's Heartlands HIV Service and media spokesman for BASHH (British Association for Sexual Health and HIV).

He told Newsbeat: "One of the reasons that GPs and doctors don't often offer HIV tests is that we have a perception of what someone with HIV looks like.

"The average person on the street, like Aaron, just doesn't feature on the radar."

Aaron says he's thankful he was eventually offered a blood test.

"The doctors put it off by giving me antibiotics, but I thought this isn't right.

"So I called NHS Direct and they actually referred me to get a routine blood test, which I'm happy I did otherwise I don't know where I'd be today."

'Bit of a player'

Being a heterosexual male with a wife and kids, doctors had previously missed the opportunity to test Aaron.

"Back in the day I used to be a bit of a player and sleep with people without protection", he admits.

In November 2009, a pilot HIV screening programme was trialled for up to a year in Brighton and Leicester - both have a large gay population - and in Lewisham in south-east London, which has a large black African population.

The Department of Health is still waiting for a full report from the Health Protection Agency on the trials before deciding what will happen in the future.

The Royal College of GPs says the idea of routine screenings has merit, but that it would need careful planning.

It told Newsbeat: "There is an argument for routine testing of patients in general practice but this would be a significant amount of work and would need to be co-ordinated and funded."

Aaron is living a normal life and takes medication on a daily basis - he's just relieved he didn't infect his wife.

"It was disturbing having to tell my wife that I have HIV.

"I was worried she'd think I was sleeping around.

"It's a miracle that she hasn't got it and I feel pleased that I haven't passed it on."

TheUnhivedMind - December 22, 2010 10:41 PM (GMT)

So folks from this propaganda bunkum you're made to feel like you have a non-existent virus because you feel fatigued and even have a sore throat and a fever. How many people get sore throats and fevers? Especially with todays standards of mouth garbage which some may think is food, is it any wonder the body is run down? So you have a problem in your unbalanced and under nourished body and this problem is one of the triggers for a false positive of over eighty false positives. Now you're told you have HIV and now because its on your medical records you better not have sex with someone without telling them or you'll be thrown in jail. If you're wise you should go and get multiple tests done at different clinics but you'd better be sure not to put yourself in the categories they look for or tell them whats supposed to be wrong with you already. If you do they will simply tick you as having even if you don't flag up. Remember theres no gold standard.

Look folks I'm telling you right now, this is one of the most dangerous areas of the big pharma inquisition on the populace. In the near future tests will be routine and mandatory and you will be given false positives and enslaved to the stigmas of having a disease which doesn't even bloody exist. Whats more you'll be forced to take the chemotherapy DNA killing drugs to remove you off this planet in accordance with the Global 2000 wanting 50% of us all gone by 2050. Have you forgot how they wish to track those pills to make sure they enter your body and poison you? Have you forgot if you enter a hospital as a patient they'll be automatically giving you the medication you don't take at home. If your incapable they may give you those pesky poisons via IV's or whatever they can? Wake up people these are dangerous times in this battle with the Roman Empire wanting us dead as a door nail.

map - December 22, 2010 10:52 PM (GMT)

apparently they have found the cure lol :P

http://z10.invisionfree.com/The_Unhived_Mi...showtopic=47731

TheUnhivedMind - December 23, 2010 02:41 AM (GMT)

Pill chips:

> QUOTE
>
> [dohtml]<object width="480" height="385"><param name="movie" value="http://www.youtube.com/v/mYJIAw7_0ho?fs=1&hl=en_GB"></param><param name="allowFullScreen" value="true"></param><param name="allowscriptaccess" value="always"></param><embed src="http://www.youtube.com/v/mYJIAw7_0ho?fs=1&hl=en_GB" type="application/x-shockwave-flash" allowscriptaccess="always" allowfullscreen="true" width="480" height="385"></embed></object>[/dohtml]

Keith - December 23, 2010 01:55 PM (GMT)

i actually had a dream last night, that i was diagnosed or told that i was HIV positive. the dream pretty much concsisted of me telling my family and everyone around me that there was no way i really have it cuz it's a fraud. and of course they didn't believe me. it was one of those "nightmares" where nobody listens to you--even the ones who used to trust you. it was a short dream. i'm glad the dream didn't make me feel like what the posoin HIV/AIDS medicine does to your body.

TheUnhivedMind - January 12, 2011 12:51 AM (GMT)

Doctors are "reluctant" to test routinely for HIV

By Dr Stephen Taylor
Consultant Physician Sexual Health and HIV, Birmingham Heartlands Hospital
7 January 2011 Last updated at 07:30
http://www.bbc.co.uk/news/health-12127681

The campaign at Birmingham Heartlands Hospital targets those with undiagnosed HIV

About 22,000 people in the UK have HIV - but are unaware they have it.

In this week's Scrubbing Up, Dr Stephen Taylor, consultant physician in sexual health and HIV medicine, argues that lives are being unnecessarily lost because clinicians are reluctant to test for HIV.

I have been fortunate enough in my medical career to see real improvements in the treatment options we can offer our HIV positive patients. In the early 1980s we did not even have a name for HIV; now we have a wide range of anti-retroviral drugs.

We have made huge, rapid steps in our understanding of and ability to combat HIV. A patient properly treated now has a life expectancy of 30 years or more and can live those years as fruitfully and successfully as anyone.

But people still die with HIV. There is no cure and treatment can be tricky. Patients can develop drug resistance and often do not even present themselves to HIV services until very late.

One in four of those infected with HIV does not know they are infected. The people who are dying from HIV now are, in general, those who are diagnosed so far down the road that the effectiveness of our drug regimes are significantly reduced.

There are many reasons for this: prejudice, a lack of awareness and especially a reluctance to test. Education is the key solution to each of these problems. We must correct the many inaccurate assumptions about HIV.

Too many heterosexuals still believe they are not at risk of infection, too many young people are becoming increasingly complacent about a condition they think is under control - and it is simply not true that taking an HIV test adversely affects your insurance premiums or your ability to get a mortgage.

Yet many physicians continue to propagate these messages.

Some 95% of all pregnant women now receive an HIV test as a standard part of their antenatal care. I, and many others in the HIV community, believe this is a courtesy which should be extended to the wider population.

Only through more effective and more widespread testing can we make earlier diagnoses, reduce undetected HIV cases and thus halt onward transmissions. This is a sentiment recently echoed by Anne Milton, the public health minister, at the recent "Time to Test" campaign held at the Royal College of Physicians to mark World Aids Day.

Not only does normalising HIV testing make good clinical sense, but early testing could ultimately build towards achieving the £1.1bn cost savings that could be associated with solid HIV prevention strategies.

However, here is the rub: the cost savings are not immediate. In fact, initially the cost of HIV care will increase as those blissfully unaware that they are infected become an immediate cost pressure for the NHS.

But I maintain that normalising and increased testing has got to be the way forward. Regular testing and getting people on treatment is likely to be one of the most powerful tools we now have to reduce ongoing transmission of HIV and its long-term impacts.

In my own hospital, we are launching a new HIV testing awareness campaign - Saving Lives - in an attempt to reduce undiagnosed infections and prevent avoidable mortality and morbidity.

Its method is simple: to arm clinical practitioners, whatever their discipline or role, with knowledge of the symptoms and signs that HIV can present with and of the necessity of testing for it.

If clinicians work together, and test every patient presenting with "indicator conditions" - not just those people we assume to be more at risk - will we diagnose HIV early, when treatment can do the most good.
Save lives

It is a very scary statistic that today in the UK there are over 22,000 people infected with HIV who are unaware they are infected. We must prioritise diagnosing them, especially as HIV can be symptomless for many years.

So regular blood testing is often not just our best but our only tool in controlling the spread of HIV.

We must therefore target the assumptions of the public and clinicians alike. Accessible public awareness campaigns like "Beer Goggles Johnny" may help get sexual health messages through to resistant demographics.

And if we can integrate HIV testing into patient pathways, and be more proactive in our efforts to get patients on to treatment early, we can continue to make significant progress in our fight against HIV.

The trouble is, talk is cheap. Unless the government, local PCTs and hospital trusts attach an importance and an incentive to encourage testing - be it with a carrot or a stick - I fear testing will not increase and our opportunity to save lives will once again be missed.

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: Stem Cell Transplant Cures Man in Berlin of Non

Title: Stem Cell Transplant Cures Man in Berlin of Non Description: Existent Virus he NEVER had in the first

TheUnhivedMind - December 14, 2010 10:40 PM (GMT)

Stem Cell Transplant Cures HIV In 'Berlin Patient'

The Huffington Post | Carly Schwartz First Posted: 12-14-10
http://www.huffingtonpost.com/2010/12/14/h...t_n_796521.html

On the heels of World AIDS Day comes a stunning medical breakthrough: Doctors believe an HIV-positive man who underwent a stem cell transplant has been cured as a result of the procedure.

Timothy Ray Brown, also known as the "Berlin Patient," received the transplant in 2007 as part of a lengthy treatment course for leukemia. His doctors recently published a report in the journal Blood affirming that the results of extensive testing "strongly suggest that cure of HIV infection has been achieved."

Brown's case paves a path for constructing a permanent cure for HIV through genetically-engineered stem cells.

Last week, Time named another AIDS-related discovery to its list of the Top 10 Medical Breakthroughs of 2010. Recent studies show that healthy individuals who take antiretrovirals, medicine commonly prescribed for treating HIV, can reduce their risk of contracting the disease by up to 73 percent.

While these developments by no means prove a cure for the virus has been found, they can certainly provide hope for the more than 33 million people living with HIV worldwide. Alongside such findings, global efforts to combat the epidemic have accelerated as of late, with new initiatives emerging in the Philippines and South Africa this week.

TheUnhivedMind - December 14, 2010 10:51 PM (GMT)

Notice how the only time the word 'cure' is allowed to be used is when theres quack doctors involved? I doubt this propaganda bunkum above will stick in the media as they will soon reverse it I would imagine. Why? The fraud of HIV is a massive cash cow and a big player in population control by chemical inquisition and especially in the near future. They won't want any kind of supposed cure to be available that would get in the way of the chemical drugging and eventual death from this very drugging. If they do use it as a cure then can you imagine the cost they would charge? They'd make sure only the super-wealthy would be able to purchase the treatment, those who are acceptable to live in the New World Order. The common man will never be able to afford the treatment.

Once again it would all come down to profit and for what? Something that never existed? Please study the multiple false positive quackery PCR tests for the non existent HIV, its a complete joke with no gold standard at all. Now they want healthy people on the deadly chemotherapy ARVs like AZT which will give them the illness. Most people who will sign up to nonsense like this will be up to practices which make them prone to sexual transmitted diseases which the non existent HIV is labeled within. So when the drugs finally slow kill or even quick kill these beings they'll just believe it was their actions whilst being told by doctors an excuse that "well it didn't work for you and doesn't work all the time." Hope you can see the run around, hype and propaganda of this non existent virus being used to control the population.

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: Segments from the film AIDS Inc [Vd]

Title: Segments from the film AIDS Inc [Vd]

TheUnhivedMind - December 6, 2010 02:35 AM (GMT)

http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=J0e4BA_EBnY http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=XXGmdH9dcCo http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=4SJ_J2UY--U http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=Dws4ncNIUTI

[dohtml]<object width="480" height="385"><param name="movie" value="http://www.youtube.com/v/J0e4BA_EBnY?fs=1&hl=en_GB"></param><param name="allowFullScreen" value="true"></param><param name="allowscriptaccess" value="always"></param><embed src="http://www.youtube.com/v/J0e4BA_EBnY?fs=1&hl=en_GB" type="application/x-shockwave-flash" allowscriptaccess="always" allowfullscreen="true" width="480" height="385"></embed></object>

<object width="480" height="385"><param name="movie" value="http://www.youtube.com/v/XXGmdH9dcCo?fs=1&hl=en_GB"></param><param name="allowFullScreen" value="true"></param><param name="allowscriptaccess" value="always"></param><embed src="http://www.youtube.com/v/XXGmdH9dcCo?fs=1&hl=en_GB" type="application/x-shockwave-flash" allowscriptaccess="always" allowfullscreen="true" width="480" height="385"></embed></object>

<object width="480" height="385"><param name="movie" value="http://www.youtube.com/v/4SJ_J2UY--U?fs=1&hl=en_GB"></param><param name="allowFullScreen" value="true"></param><param name="allowscriptaccess" value="always"></param><embed src="http://www.youtube.com/v/4SJ_J2UY--U?fs=1&hl=en_GB" type="application/x-shockwave-flash" allowscriptaccess="always" allowfullscreen="true" width="480" height="385"></embed></object>

<object width="480" height="385"><param name="movie" value="http://www.youtube.com/v/Dws4ncNIUTI?fs=1&hl=en_GB"></param><param name="allowFullScreen" value="true"></param><param name="allowscriptaccess" value="always"></ param><embed src="http://www.youtube.com/v/Dws4ncNIUTI?fs=1&hl=en_GB" type="application/x-shockwave-flash" allowscriptaccess="always" allowfullscreen="true" width="480" height="385"></embed></object>[/dohtml]

TheUnhivedMind - December 6, 2010 02:37 AM (GMT)

AIDS Inc. (Gary Null) (2007)

[dohtml]<embed id=VideoPlayback src=http://video.google.com/googleplayer.swf?docid=-1546322203061765598&hl=en&fs=true style=width:400px;height:326px allowFullScreen=true allowScriptAccess=always type=application/x-shockwave-flash> </embed>[/dohtml]

1:54:09 - 3 years ago

AIDS, Inc. is a film about the multi-billion dollar AIDS industry, and how it profits from continuing fears and misconceptions about the disease. While AIDS grabs the headlines and raises billions of dollars with celebrity endorsements and billionaire endowments, we are no closer to finding a cure than when the scourge first appeared 30 years ago. Could it be that after so many years of research, and so much money being spent, that the entire orthodox medical establishment has been wrong about AIDS, or even worse, has sought to profit on a system that it knew was flawed from the beginning? Doctor Robert Gallo who discovered the HIV virus said that there is no legitimate dissent when it comes to AIDS. But there are more than 5,000 physicians, microbiologists, journalists and activists who disagree and say that we have been misled about the real causes of AIDS and the nature of its treatment. The mainstream media has chosen not to provide an outlet for their opinions. In this important film, documentary filmmaker and health expert Gary Null, traveled to more than 30 countries over an eight year period to seek them out and get their interviews. This is the first film on AIDS that brings the most compelling of their arguments together in one place. Dr. Null blows the lid off the wealthy AIDS industry and shows how greed and corruption have prevented any real progress in fighting the epidemic or its underlying causes. The film challenges the entrenched notion that AIDS or HIV is an African monkey virus that is spread sexually and can be "treated" with harmful drugs. Instead, the film considers the common underlying conditions of the epidemic, such as malnutrition, unclean water, poverty, illness, and poor lifestyle choices. The evidence is damning, and a clarion call to the public that the AIDS Industrial Complex is on the wrong track and has become a spending juggernaut completely out of control. For more information visit www.garynull.com DVD copies are available at www.garynull.com

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: Leading AIDS Dissident: David Crowe Speaks Out

Title: Leading AIDS Dissident: David Crowe Speaks Out
Description: [Vd]

TheUnhivedMind - December 6, 2010 02:33 AM (GMT)

Leading AIDS Dissident: David Crowe Speaks Out

http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=RWoJanKCVDw http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=iTp2PrbFkSQ http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=ER2iojyiXe0

[dohtml]<object width="480" height="385"><param name="movie" value="http://www.youtube.com/v/RWoJanKCVDw?fs=1&hl=en_GB"></param><param name="allowFullScreen" value="true"></param><param name="allowscriptaccess" value="always"></param><embed src="http://www.youtube.com/v/RWoJanKCVDw?fs=1&hl=en_GB" type="application/x-shockwave-flash" allowscriptaccess="always" allowfullscreen="true" width="480" height="385"></embed></object>

<object width="480" height="385"><param name="movie" value="http://www.youtube.com/v/iTp2PrbFkSQ?fs=1&hl=en_GB"></param><param name="allowFullScreen" value="true"></param><param name="allowscriptaccess" value="always"></param><embed src="http://www.youtube.com/v/iTp2PrbFkSQ?fs=1&hl=en_GB" type="application/x-shockwave-flash" allowscriptaccess="always" allowfullscreen="true" width="480" height="385"></embed></object>

<object width="480" height="385"><param name="movie" value="http://www.youtube.com/v/ER2iojyiXe0?fs=1&hl=en_GB"></param><param name="allowFullScreen" value="true"></param><param name="allowscriptaccess" value="always"></param><embed src="http://www.youtube.com/v/ER2iojyiXe0?fs=1&hl=en_GB" type="application/x-shockwave-flash" allowscriptaccess="always" allowfullscreen="true" width="480" height="385"></embed></object>[/dohtml]

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: BIOWEAPONRY GILEAD WISH TO REDUCE GAY POPULATION

Title: BIOWEAPONRY GILEAD WISH TO REDUCE GAY POPULATION
Description: WITH ARV PREVENTATIVES LEADING TO AIDS

TheUnhivedMind - November 24, 2010 04:46 PM (GMT)

Drug 'can greatly reduce risk of HIV infection'

Truvada, which is made by California-based Gilead Sciences, combines two antiretroviral drugs

By Neil Bowdler
23 November 2010 Last updated at 20:13
http://www.bbc.co.uk/news/health-11820963

A drug used to treat HIV-positive patients may offer gay and bisexual men some protection against contracting the virus, the authors of a new study say.

Trials of the combination drug Truvada among nearly 2,500 men suggested it could reduce the chances of male-to-male HIV infection by 44%.

Those using the drug regularly could further reduce the risk of infection, it was claimed.

The study is published in the New England Journal of Medicine.
Pills and condoms

Truvada is the trade name of a drug manufactured by the California-based company Gilead Sciences Inc which combines two antiretroviral drugs, used to treat Aids.

But this new study looks at whether it could be used to prevent HIV infection in the first place.

Almost 2,500 gay or bisexual men were randomly selected in Peru, Ecuador, Brazil, South Africa, Thailand and the United States. Half were given the pill, half were given dummy tablets.

All the men were also given condoms and counselling on safe sex.

What the researchers found after about a year of testing was that the drug appeared to cut male-to-male HIV transmission by 44%, when the group taking the pill was compared with the placebo group.

Those who were took the pill regularly were deemed to have reduced their risk of infection further, by up to 73%, and blood tests were run to confirm this relationship between pill-usage and protection levels.

The research was funded by the Bill & Melinda Gates Foundation, and the federal US body, the National Institute of Allergy and Infectious Diseases (NIAID). The pills were donated by their manufacturer.

NIAID director, Dr Anthony Fauci, conceded more work needed to be done, but called the results impressive.

"This has been done in men who have sex with men. We need to know if we get similar results in women as well as in heterosexual men, which we have reason to believe we will," he told the BBC.

"We also need to get a long term view of were there any toxicities. We didn't see anything that was significant but we need to follow that for a long period of time."
Questions and concerns

The trial does of course raise questions and concerns. Is it possible, for instance, that the results were skewed by greater condom use in the group that took the pill; and won't such findings encourage some men to dispense with condoms altogether in favour of a drug?

There is also the issue of prohibitive cost of Truvada, which retails in the US for around $36 a day, and which makes the drug unaffordable to many possible users.

Dr Fauci argues that the two groups were fully randomised and says that drugs can only play a complementary role in the war on HIV. Condoms and fewer partners, he said, remain the first line of defence.

"We're hoping that if this does become a useable tool in prevention, then the associated counselling will complement the effect of the drug and stop people becoming cavalier about it and say 'now I have a pill I don't have to worry'.

"That's exactly the opposite of what we want to happen. We want to add something rather than have it replace something."

Sir Nick Partridge, chief executive of the Terrence Higgins Trust, called the trial results "potentially significant".

"It's vital that we expand the ways we can prevent HIV transmission, particularly amongst those most at risk," he said in a statement. "This trial proves that HIV treatment will have an impact on prevention, but that it's not ready for widespread use yet.

"Three major hurdles are still going to be its cost, the risks of drug-resistant strains of HIV developing and taking a drug treatment every day."

TheUnhivedMind - November 24, 2010 04:47 PM (GMT)

This will eventually spread to hetro-sexuals and eventually be forced on the populace in the future through frauds likes Obama-care etc.

TheUnhivedMind - November 26, 2010 07:13 PM (GMT)

PERFECT TIMING READY FOR THE PUSH TO GET ALL THOSE CONSIDERED AT RISK ON THESE PREVENTATIVE POISONS WHEN THE DRUGS KILL YOU THEY'LL BLAME YOUR ACTIVITIES THE VERY ACTIVITIES YOU'D BEEN MIND REFRAMED TO DO VIA THE SOCIAL ENGINEERING MEDIA SYSTEM THROUGH CONSTANT PROMOTION AND PORN EVERYWHERE.

QUOTE

A quarter of those with HIV 'unaware they have virus'

Paul Ward was diagnosed with HIV years after becoming infected

26 November 2010 Last updated at 03:23
http://www.bbc.co.uk/news/health-11838218

A quarter of people with HIV in the UK, over 22,000, are unaware they have the virus, experts from the Health Protection Agency have suggested.

The 2009 estimate is based on anonymous blood samples supplied for other reasons but tested and found to be HIV positive.

It is at the same level as 2008's estimate.

The Terrence Higgins Trust said more investment was still needed in prevention and awareness programmes.

The Health Protection Agency said 6,630 people were newly diagnosed with HIV in 2009, down for the fourth year in a row.

The HPA's report also found over half of those were diagnosed after the stage when treatment should have started.

In all, the number of people living with HIV in the UK reached an estimated 86,500 last year.
'Test all'

Dr Valerie Delpech, consultant epidemiologist and head of HIV surveillance at the HPA, said: "We're very concerned that a large number of people in the UK are unaware of their HIV status and that half of all newly diagnosed people are diagnosed late, meaning they may not benefit from very effective treatments."

She called for better access to HIV testing in areas where rates of HIV infection are high.

"Pilot studies have shown that in these areas testing all adults registering at GPs or accessing certain hospital services can make an impact."

"The evidence shows that this testing is feasible to undertake and acceptable to patients. We would like to see this rolled out in areas where HIV infection is more common to reduce the number of people who are unaware of their HIV status and increase the chances of early diagnosis, when treatment is more successful."

The HPA added that those at higher risk of HIV, such as men who have sex with men and black Africans living in this country, should know their status and consider being tested regularly.

Sir Nick Partridge, chief executive of the Terrence Higgins Trust sexual health charity, said: "With more people living with HIV than ever before in the UK it's vitally important we invest in targeted HIV prevention and awareness programmes, particularly for gay men who are most at risk.

"We also need to re-double work to get people to test, to reduce the high numbers of people who don't know that they have HIV for far too long before being tested and prevent needless deaths."

TheUnhivedMind - November 26, 2010 07:14 PM (GMT)

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: HIV Hoax movie maker to be interviewed

Title: HIV Hoax movie maker to be interviewed

Moosedog - November 17, 2010 01:46 PM (GMT)

http://truthbrigade.org/smf/index.php/topi...17.html#msg9417 the producer of this movie exposing the HIV hoax is going to be interviewed on the truthbrigade radio show this friday at 8pm eastern.

http://www.houseofnumbers.com/site/about-h...numbers/trailer

I'll post the archives and will youtube the show later on....

Moosedog - November 18, 2010 07:29 PM (GMT)

Its been a while since I researched this topic and I forgot or never fully understood everything anyway. So some of my thoughts are...

heres a question i have... many people like the perth group say that hiv was never isolated/photographed saying that no virus even exists... this len horowitz guy is saying gallo and the army genetically engineered a virus and gave to people.... so has this gm virus that horowitz is talking about, has it been isolated and photographed?

Does horowitz say that HIV is genetically engineered ?

What virus was given to the gays in nyc, san fran, and la during those free hepatitis vaccines ?

Is the no virus isolated/photographed a smokescreen to hide the military/cdc genetically engineered virus they created?

A couple people I've talked with say that the sv40 was put in those hepatitis vaccines for the gays.... What role does SV40 play in any of this?

I plan to call in to this show on friday or send my questions to christie the host... so i'm trying to understand this all again. If anyone can answer my questions or have any questions of their own please post them and i'll ask them or send them to host. or please listen and call in.

Moosedog - November 20, 2010 02:48 PM (GMT)

heres the interview HIV/AIDS Hoax Exposed with Brent Leung from the documentary "house of numbers"

http://www.americanfreedomradio.com/archiv..._32k_111910.mp3

Halvor - November 20, 2010 09:54 PM (GMT)

You might find material from Jon Rappoport on this topic on interest. He also interviewed Duesberg on his radio show a few months ago.

14april2000 - November 21, 2010 12:15 PM (GMT)

Aids Inc, Scandal Of The Century - Scam

http://www.scribd.com/doc/3329947/-AIDS-In...-John-Rappaport

HIV Myth

John Rappaport talks about AIDS HIV.

[dohtml]<object width="480" height="385"><param name="movie" value="http://www.youtube-nocookie.com/v/0hZR1lIb8CE?fs=1&hl=da_DK&rel=0"></param><param name="allowFullScreen" value="true"></param><param name="allowscriptaccess" value="always"></param><embed src="http://www.youtube-nocookie.com/v/0hZR1lIb8CE?fs=1&hl=da_DK&rel=0" type="application/x-shockwave-flash" allowscriptaccess="always" allowfullscreen="true" width="480" height="385"></embed></object>[/dohtml]

http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=0hZR1lIb8CE

http://www.nomorefakenews.com/

http://jonrappoport.wordpress.com/

AntiSionist - November 22, 2010 06:05 AM (GMT)

There has NEVER been a true photograph of an HIV virus, isolated from a human being. NEVER!

HIV HAS NEVER BEEN ISOLATED FROM AIDS PATIENTS
Posted by Henry Bauer on 2008/01/15
http://hivskeptic.wordpress.com/2008/01/15...-aids-patients/

Echt, ersatz, or fake? “HIV” “virions” budding from a cell! Electron micrographed!
Posted by Henry Bauer on Sunday, 19 July 2009
http://hivskeptic.wordpress.com/2009/07/19...n-micrographed/

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: Clue to how some 'control' their HIV without meds

Title: Clue to how some 'control' their HIV without meds
Description: [YET MORE BUNKUM, MEDS=DEATH!]

TheUnhivedMind - November 5, 2010 07:41 PM (GMT)

Clue to how some 'control' their HIV without medication

By Caroline Parkinson
Health reporter, BBC News
4 November 2010 Last updated at 18:04
http://www.bbc.co.uk/news/health-11692798

Tiny changes to an "alarm" protein which responds to infections may explain why some with HIV can control their condition without drugs.

Around one in 300 people with HIV are "controllers", and scientists want to replicate how their bodies behave.

Writing in Science, US researchers say differences in five amino acids in a protein called HLA-B are key.

But a UK expert said there was still a "long way" to go before a vaccine or a new drug for HIV could be developed.

HIV "controllers" were first identified almost 20 years ago. They are able to suppress viral replication with their immune system, keeping viral load at extremely low levels, without using anti-retroviral drugs.

It was already known that certain genes involved with the HLA system were important for HIV control. But scientists had not identified which genes were involved or how they acted.

Drag and drop

The researchers carried out a genome-wide association study of the genetic make-up of almost 1,000 controllers and 2,600 people with progressive HIV.

Around 300 points were found to be associated with immune control of HIV, all in regions of chromosome six that code for HLA proteins.
Continue reading the main story
“
Start Quote

Knowing how an effective immune response against HIV is generated is an important step toward replicating that response with a vaccine”
Dr Bruce Walker
Massachusetts General Hospital

Scientists were then able to pinpoint specific amino acids and identified the five in the HLA-B protein as playing the key role.

HLA-B is part of the process by which the immune system recognises and destroys virus-infected cells.

Part of the protein called a binding pocket "drags and drops" peptides from inside the virus onto the cell membrane.

These then mark out the cell for destruction by CD8 "killer" T cells in the immune system.

All five of the amino acids identified by researchers are in the binding pocket.

Scientists from Massachusetts General Hospital, Massachusetts Institute of Technology and Harvard University carried out the work.

Bruce Walker of the Ragon Institute at Massachusetts General Hospital, one of the lead authors of the paper, said: "We found that, of the 3bn nucleotides in the human genome, just a handful make the difference between those who can stay healthy in spite of HIV infection and those who, without treatment, will develop Aids.

"Knowing how an effective immune response against HIV is generated is an important step toward replicating that response with a vaccine.

"We have a long way to go before translating this into a treatment for infected patients and a vaccine to prevent infection, but we are an important step closer."

Gus Cairns, editor of HIV Treatment Update of the UK's National Aids Manual, said: "As the researchers say, this research opens the door to the development of a vaccine that could encourage the body to mimic the most effective kind of immune response, or to drugs that could interfere with HIV's ability to infect cells and derange the immune system.

"Nonetheless there is still a lot we don't know about why some genetic variants provide a much less welcoming environment for HIV than others and, although we are becoming clearer about what kinds of specific immune response are effective against HIV, we are a long way from being able to make them happen, or even knowing what we must do to make them happen."

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: US porn industry in a crisis over a non-existant

Title: US porn industry in a crisis over a non-existant
Description: virus due to false positive riddled test

craig-oxley - October 14, 2010 11:08 PM (GMT)

US porn industry in crisis after actor tests positive for HIV

The pornographic film industry in California is in crisis after an actor was diagnosed with HIV.

By Jon Swaine in New York
Published: 12:09AM BST 14 Oct 2010
http://www.telegraph.co.uk/news/worldnews/...ve-for-HIV.html

Public health officials in Los Angeles have said that actors in the pornographic film industry are at higher risk of sexually-transmitted diseases by not using appropriate contraception

Five film companies have suspended production, and others are expected to follow, as medical officials scrambled to track down other actors exposed to the disease.

The identity and gender of the actor involved have not been disclosed.

The infection was discovered by the Adult Industry Medical Healthcare Foundation clinic, which carries out compulsory tests of 1,200 actors every month.

Jennifer Miller, an HIV/STD counsellor at the clinic, said: "We are quarantining and testing all exposed partners to the individual who tested positive."

Steven Hirsch, the founder of Vivid Entertainment Group and Wicked Pictures, said his company had halted production immediately.

"Adult entertainment companies act responsibly, and no one wants to see another person test positive if there's anything they can do to stop it," Mr Hirsch said.

Public health officials in Los Angeles have said that actors in the pornographic film industry put themselves at higher risk of sexually-transmitted diseases by not using appropriate contraception.

Several actors contracted HIV in 2004, prompting similar panic in the multi-billion dollar industry.

Darren James, the actor at the centre of the 2004 outbreak, said the industry had not learned lessons from his case. "They went right back to the same habits," he said in an interview on Wednesday.

In the last known case before this week, a woman also tested positive for HIV after making an adult film last year.

State officials in California were already considering strengthening rules requiring condom use in pornographic films produced in the state.

craig-oxley - October 14, 2010 11:13 PM (GMT)

So what will happen is that they'll either just end up with this woman who'll never have another hiv test other than blood counts. They may get another unlucky being at some point who flags up hiv on the pathetic PCR test riddled with false positives and quackery from start to finish. What will happen next is that these poor people will be put straight on anti-retroviral drugs (ARVs) and well the fun really starts then. Their next set of tests on the cell counts will start to drop and they'll loose weight as the Spleen gets wrecked amongst everything else in the process. They'll eventually die and its called AIDS from the HIV virus haha its a complete joke but everyone falls for it and the lie is kept going, frightening the unintelligent sheople populace who cannot see past their noses. This also includes foolish wishful truth seekers who fall for the disinformation put out by agents and non-agents that this was created in a laboratory by the U.S Military. With simple mind manipulation techniques the military need not create a virus and simple do as I've said above and getting totally away with it. No different to the complete bunkum lies of 9/11 going against physics and common sense but because the populace are told the story by the media well its got to be correct right? Pathetic indeed!

Arkham Knight - October 18, 2010 12:37 PM (GMT)

> QUOTE (craig-oxley @ Oct 14 2010, 11:08 PM)
>
> The infection was discovered by the Adult Industry Medical Healthcare Foundation clinic, which carries out compulsory tests of 1,200 actors every month.

Adult Industry Medical Healthcare Foundation clinic, belongs to the U.S. porn industry lobby.

Go figure what these porn moguls can do, if this said fundation belongs exactly to those who profit from pornography.

This is borderline to mental insanity, rather than stupidity.

This is old americana capitalist conspiracy in it's purest form.

As good as it gets.

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: More utter propaganda bunkum on hiv being 32000

Title: More utter propaganda bunkum on hiv being 32000
Description: years old. [THESE CRETINS ARE A JOKE!]

craig-oxley - September 17, 2010 09:14 PM (GMT)

Monkey Virus That Led to AIDS at Least 32,000 Years Old, Researchers Say

By Rob Waters - Sep 16, 2010 9:22 PM GMT+0100
http://www.bloomberg.com/news/2010-09-16/m...rchers-say.html

The virus that afflicts monkeys and evolved into HIV to cause AIDS in people is at least 32,000 years old and may be as much as 1 million years old, making it far more ancient than researchers previously believed.

Simian immunodeficiency virus, or SIV, was identified 17 years ago as the likely origin of human immunodeficiency virus, which causes AIDS. Researchers had thought the monkey virus was only a few hundred years old, based on DNA studies. The new findings, led by scientists at Tulane University in New Orleans, were based on genetic analysis of monkeys on Bioko Island, which separated from mainland Africa more than 10,000 years ago.

Unlike HIV, the simian version of the virus doesn't cause disease in monkeys. The findings, published today in the journal Science, suggest that it took many thousands of years for the monkey virus to evolve into a form that's not harmful and that HIV also may take some time to achieve a similar transformation. The study also raises the question about what happened in recent times to make the virus lethal to people.

"Something happened in the 20th century to change this relatively benign monkey virus into something that was much more potent and could start the epidemic," Preston Marx, the Tulane researcher who led the study, said in a statement. "We don't know what that flashpoint was but there had to be one."

Marx and his colleagues collected tissue samples from monkeys on the island, found four strains of SIV and compared them to the very different strains found on the mainland. Computer models that assessed the rate of DNA change over time found the virus had to be at least 32,000 years old and probably much older.

To contact the reporter on this story: Rob Waters in San Francisco at rwaters5@bloomberg.net.

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: Example of information on your antibodies

Title: Example of information on your antibodies

craig-oxley - August 3, 2010 05:26 PM (GMT)

Please take notice of the below words of, Dr Khusrav Bajan. He is explaining to you the truth of how your immune system can fight off anything to which it has produced antibodies too. Now why have I bought this up? I've bought this up due to the likes of the phony disinformation propaganda spread about a non-existant HIV. First of all there is no HIV so in truth there cannot even be an antibody. What they do claim is that if you have antibodies to HIV that your system needs anti-retro-viral poisons until these poisons kill you and they can claim AIDS did it. In the future they'll claim that if you haven't got HIV antibodies but then get vaccinated for HIV these vaccine HIV antibodies are protecting you. If you have natural HIV antibodies (impossible) then these are killing you. Its all a complete joke and Dr Bajan has once again confirmed well known research on antibodies as your protectors showing you've fought off a disease and now have protection. I'm not even going to comment on the falsity of H1N1 or the Polymerase chain reaction testing system.

QUOTE

'Vaccinate all women who are expecting'

Published on 08-02-2010 Email To Friend Print Version
http://timesofindia.indiatimes.com/city/mu...how/6245570.cms

There might be no swine flu by 2012, say doctors. But this could be so because by that time, the virus may have mutated into a more potent strain or a majority of the population would have developed immunity to the disease.

In a conference at Nair Hospital on Sunday, doctors from various fields came together to review both the waves of H1N1 pandemic. Given that 553 people in Maharashtra have succumbed to the disease since June 2009, the experts discussed what could be the plan of action in case of a third wave of the disease.

Dr Om Srivastav, head of infectious diseases, BMC said that vaccination should be a must for certain groups of people. "Health care workers, especially those who work in the isolation wards or with H1N1 patients, should take the vaccination. The vaccine should be made mandatory for pregnant women, too; more so for those in their second or third trimesters," he said.

Dr Khusrav Bajan, consultant physician and intensivist at Hinduja Hospital was of the opinion that not everybody needed to be vaccinated. "A person who has completely recovered from the virus need not worry about taking the vaccine. Their immune system would have developed the antibodies to fight the virus," he said.

Though the technology for swab tests has advanced since last year, the panel of doctors agreed that in order to be prepared to fight the disease, the test needs to be up-to-date. "Last year, a patient had to wait for a few days for the swab to be tested. We could decide on the course of action only after the test result came in. It was not enough to know whether it was the influenza A virus. We also needed to know whether it was indeed the pandemic virus. Now, with machines the deliver results in real time, the results are precise and take less time," said Dr Gita Natraj, professor of microbiology at G S Medical College. "We no longer wait for the tests. If doctors feel that the patient shows symptoms of H1N1, he or she is administered oseltamivir," she added.

"It is important for the doctors to know the facts about the disease and train themselves to treat patients more effectively," said Dr Jayanthi Shastri, head of microbiology lab in Kasturba Hospital, who had organised the conference.

Man dies of malaria

A 45-year-old resident of Malad succumbed to malaria on Saturday. This takes the toll of total malaria deaths to 19 in July and the total number of deaths due to monsoon related diseases to 28.

Meanwhile, 20 patients tested positive for swine flu on Sunday. Of the 466 persons admitted to various hospitals, 204 patients had malaria, 54 had gastroenteritis, four were down with dengue and two were suffering from leptospirosis.

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: Pharmaceuticals contributing to AIDS crisis [Vd]

Title: Pharmaceuticals contributing to AIDS crisis [Vd]
Description: [THERE IS NO DAMN HIV NONSENSE!]

craig-oxley - July 30, 2010 12:16 AM (GMT)

Pharmaceuticals contributing to AIDS crisis

26 July 2010

[dohtml]<object width="640" height="385"><param name="movie" value="http://www.youtube.com/v/lN6h7YIGQAc&color1=0xb1b1b1&color2=0xd0d0d0&hl=en_US&feature=player_embedded&fs=1"></param><param name="allowFullScreen" value="true"></param><param name="allowScriptAccess" value="always"></param><embed src="http://www.youtube.com/v/lN6h7YIGQAc&color1=0xb1b1b1&color2=0xd0d0d0&hl=en_US&feature=player_embedded&fs=1" type="application/x-shockwave-flash" allowfullscreen="true" allowScriptAccess="always" width="640" height="385"></embed></object>[/dohtml]

While scientists from around the world gather in Vienna to discuss how to fight AIDS at the 18th International AIDS Conference, there are a lot of AIDS skeptics doubt that official medicine will be able to find a solution. Robert Scott Bell says that the scientists at the conference are wrong because there is no need for drugs to cure this syndrome.

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: HIV vaccines cause 50 percent false positive rate

Title: HIV vaccines cause 50 percent false positive rate Description: in HIV tests

craig-oxley - July 24, 2010 02:34 PM (GMT)

HIV vaccines cause 50 percent false positive rate in HIV tests

Tuesday, July 20, 2010
by Mike Adams
http://www.naturalnews.com/029236_HIV_vaccine.html

It may come as a big surprise to most people, but HIV tests given to people today don't actually test for the presence of the HIV virus. Rather, they test for the presence of HIV antibodies that the immune system creates to defend itself against HIV. And just because you have HIV antibodies doesn't mean you actually carry HIV. In some circumstances, up to 50 percent of HIV positives are false, causing havoc with the lives of those patients who are falsely accused of being "HIV positive."

This startling fact was revealed in a recent study that's being published in the July 21 issue of the Journal of the American Medical Association. It shows that patients who are recruited for HIV vaccine trials often end up testing positive for HIV even though they were only exposed to the vaccine, not the virus.

"Almost half of HIV-negative people who participate in clinical trials for HIV vaccines end up testing positive on routine HIV tests -- even though they're not actually infected" reports US News & World Report.

Some vaccines caused a false positive rate of over 86 percent.

HIV tests lack credibility
What this new study clearly demonstrates is the complete lack of scientific credibility of common HIV tests. It also demonstrates the dangers of getting vaccinated against HIV, because the mere act of receiving an HIV vaccination may cause you to test positive for HIV which, in turn, can have many serious repercussions in your life:

• You may be denied employment because tests show you are "HIV positive."

• You may be denied health insurance coverage or be charged significantly more than others for the same coverage.

• You may be denied residence in other countries, as many countries require HIV tests for prospective new residency.

• You may be falsely accused of having AIDS by health authorities who archive your medical records and use them against you.

• You may be arrested and sent to prison, accused of attempted murder, by sleeping with someone and not telling them you were HIV positive (even though you don't have AIDS).

• You may be denied the opportunity to participate in certain professions or activities (such as sporting events).

• You may be socially stigmatized and thought of as an "AIDS carrier."

• You may be shunned by sex partners or a spouse.

All this could happen to you if you receive an HIV vaccine -- even if you don't carry the HIV virus!

Why HIV and AIDS vaccines are medically unnecessary
We have already established here on NaturalNews that HIV / AIDS vaccines are medically unnecessary. A healthy immune system can fight off HIV in the same way it fights off a cold virus. But don't just take my word for it; listen to the words of Dr Luc Montagnier, the Nobel prize-winning virologist credited with the co-discovery of HIV. He says:

"We can be exposed to HIV many times without being ... infected. Our immune system creates [antibodies] within a few weeks, if you have a good immune system." (http://naturalnews.com/027355_AIDS_...)

Your own body, in other words, can protect itself from HIV exposure with the same technology your body uses to save your life from influenza every year: Your immune system.

HIV vaccines, then, are entirely unnecessary. Vaccines are Big Pharma's way of selling you something you don't need by trying to convince you that you might die without it. And when it comes to AIDS, Big Pharma has done a terrific job of scaring people into pursuing all kinds of unnecessary treatments that only harm their health in the long run.

In this way, the AIDS industry is much like the breast cancer industry... or the prostate cancer industry: Most of what they push onto people is medically unjustified, scientifically unproven and actually harms more people than it helps. But it's great for generating more profits for Big Pharma.

And that's the point of all this. AIDS is just another profit center for the drug industry, and if their vaccines actually cause you to test positive for HIV, that's even better for their profits because some percentage of those people who test positive are probably going to be put on retroviral drugs to treat HIV, and those drugs are massive profit centers for Big Pharma.

Western medicine causes disease instead of curing it
See, what's really fascinating here is that the AIDS industry demonstrates yet again how the medical industry causes the very diseases it claims to be treating. Mammograms -- which claim to "detect" breast cancer -- actually cause breast cancer. So if you get enough mammograms, eventually you'll develop breast cancer and require expensive cancer treatments.

The AIDS industry now works in much the same way: If you get an HIV vaccine, chances are you're then going to test positive for being an HIV carrier, and you'll become an "AIDS patient" who spends your life savings on needless drugs and other expensive treatments for a disease you don't even have!

The psychiatric industry works the same way, too: It actually invents fictitious diseases such as "oppositional defiance disorder" (which means disagreeing with authority) and then tries to put children and adults on mind-altering psychotropic drugs to "treat" that disease.

The more you look into the industries of pharmaceuticals and vaccines, the more you realize the whole business is just full of bunk. Their vaccines don't work, their tests produce false positives and their pharmaceuticals can kill you.

That's why it's so much easier to just take care of your own health, build up a healthy immune system, avoid exposure to toxic chemicals and let your body's miraculous immune system do the job for you.

See this jaw-dropping video clip about the AIDS fraud
Do you still think an AIDS diagnosis is reliable? Did you know that a huge percentage of people who are diagnosed with AIDS were never tested for HIV?

Watch this stunning new video clip from House of Numbers to learn the rest of the story: http://naturalnews.tv/v.asp?v=0B54775A1562...995ECDC5BD9B12D

See more clips or buy the DVD of this remarkable documentary at www.

HouseOfNumbers.com

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: DRUGS TO FIGHT A NONEXISTANT VIRUS IN MOTHERS

Title: DRUGS TO FIGHT A NONEXISTANT VIRUS IN MOTHERS

craig-oxley - May 19, 2010 05:21 PM (GMT)

Pledge to stop mother-to-baby HIV spread

By Jane Dreaper
Health correspondent, BBC News
Wednesday, 19 May 2010 09:23 UKE-mail this to a friend Printable version http://news.bbc.co.uk/1/hi/health/8689901.stm

A campaign is being launched to try to enlist public support to ensure no more children are born with HIV by 2015.

It is the work of the Global Fund, which uses donations from governments to fight HIV, TB and malaria.

The Born HIV Free campaign comes at a critical time, with the fund seeking donations of up to $20bn over the next three years.

It recognises this will be a battle, as governments deal with the aftermath of the Greek financial crisis.

HIV can be passed from mother to child during pregnancy, labour or breast-feeding.

This type of transmission has been almost wiped out in countries such as the UK, because pregnant women who test positive for the virus that causes AIDS can be treated with drugs.

Other measures - such as giving birth by caesarian section - help stop HIV being transmitted to the baby.

But in developing countries, 430,000 children are born with HIV every year.

International effort

The Global Fund already channels more than half of international resources used to prevent mothers passing on HIV.

It believes that the goal of ending this type of HIV transmission by 2015 is achievable - if governments feel they can pledge money with the support of their electorates.

Its executive director, Professor Michel Kazatchkine, said: "We can win this battle against Aids if we get the funding we require.

"This campaign is intended to encourage people to sign up in support of the Global Fund, and to show their leaders that there is strong public support to continue and increase funding for its mission."

Endorsement

The campaign has been overseen by the French first lady, Carla Bruni-Sarkozy, who is an ambassador for the Global Fund.

Her voice urges people to lend their support in a series of films, with music by Amy Winehouse and U2, which are being promoted on the internet.

The logo has adapted the visual imagery of the red ribbon - long associated with AIDS awareness - to symbolise a mother and child.

The US is the biggest donor to the Global Fund. The UK has pledged or contributed $1.1bn since the fund began in 2002. France is the largest European contributor.

The next round of donations will be confirmed at a crucial meeting in October, chaired by the UN secretary-general Ban Ki-moon.

Insiders at the Global Fund are waiting to hear how the new coalition government in the UK will respond to the request for commitments.

They say they have previously had "promising noises" from the Conservatives and Liberal Democrats on global health issues.

The editor of the Lancet medical journal, Dr Richard Horton, said: "An early indication that our government will support the Global Fund is really important.

"It's something that has worked - because the money has been spent on drug treatment and bed nets.

"Another pressing issue is taking a serious look at the Department for International Development.

"There is genuine concern that a lot of money has been spent on development aid - without always getting a clear return.

"There needs to be accountability at this time of financial stringency."

craig-oxley - May 19, 2010 05:26 PM (GMT)

The key to all this is drugs, profit and making sure the being dies of what you've claimed is a virus/dis-ease. There is no HIV virus and this is why I've tried to highlight for a long time how we need to put an end to this dangerous nonsense. The idea eventually is to test everyone for this non existent virus. We all know what will happen when this happens with the false testing thats proven to be about as usual as a chocolate teapot. You'll be forced onto highly dangerous chemotherapy drugs and if you dare to challenge then your child will be removed from you or you'll be forced to follow. Make sure your children aren't registered via a birth certificate otherwise you have no power at all as you've handed your child to the State as soon as the certificate is created. You'll eventually be banned from sexual relationships and a lot more. The HIV Inc is going to be one of the biggest controlling and profiting outfits around in the near future.
[dohtml] [/dohtml]

[dohtml]
[/dohtml]

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: "Rh-Neg Blood Products Used To Treat HIV/AIDS"

Title: "Rh-Neg Blood Products Used To Treat HIV/AIDS" Description: [THERE IS NO HIV !]

craig-oxley - May 17, 2010 02:24 PM (GMT)

"Rh-Neg Blood Products Used To Treat HIV/AIDS"

by Ruth Ellenor Whitty

Ladies and Gentlemen:

This is probably the MOST IMPORTANT BLOG ENTRY I have ever made here on MySpace, AND it may be the most important blog entry you"ll ever READ about Rh-Negative blood.....

Recently, my friend "Nancy" from our Rh-Neg Yahoo Group suggested we start looking at the U.S. patents issued for "RhoGAM," and included a link to a patent search engine.

So on Labor Day 2007, I went to this web site and did a data search for the word "RhoGAM." I was disappointed to find only three patents. I then thought, "Hey, wait a minute, that's only the BRAND name of that serum..."

So I typed in what RhoGAM really is (one of its scientific names):

" Rho(D) immune globulin "
.....•.....
AND I HIT THE JACKPOT!

I Found Some Great New Information For Us! Get ready, because here it is:

Persons with O-Negative blood cannot become infected with, NOR transmit to another person, the HIV/AIDS virus.

AND NOW WE HAVE OUR PROOF, VIA THIS PATENT!!

Since the late 1980s, doctors have been giving patented O-Neg blood products (like RhoGAM) to RH+Positive persons with HIV because our blood SLOWS THE PROGRESSION OF THE VIRUS in these patients!

Source From This First Patent:
"The present inventors have found that Rh antibodies delay the progression of infection with the Human Immunodeficiency Virus (HIV)."

Rh antibodies are infused into HIV+/Rh+Positive patients, and come from only one source: a type O-Negative blood donor.

(Finish reading my blog, then go to this patent link:)
http://www.patentstorm.us/patents/5993812-fulltext.html

Our other friend in the Yahoo Group, "Sandra," then posted this medical report from doctors and research professionals in India, concluding that MOST persons with Rh-Negative blood rarely become infected at all with HIV.

"Similarly there was significantly lower incidence of HIV infection in Rh negative individuals (1.9% as against 5.0% in general population)."

FROM:
http://www.ijdvl.com/article.asp?issn=0378...olume=62;issu...

Now, hang with me for a minute. Don't run off! There's more!

In 2001, a rheumatologist who used to work/teach at the Texas Medical Center's UTMB Health Science Center/School of Medicine told me point blank that I would never contract HIV, nor could I pass it on to someone else, because I have type O-Negative blood and that for some "unknown" reason, the virus cannot "bind" to the cells of this blood type and cause infection.

I thought my doctor was crazy at first. But then, I got curious.....

I began researching all over the Internet on web sites, blogs and chat rooms, looking for persons with HIV/AIDS. I spent MONTHS going all over the world, talking to people, and I could not find ONE PERSON on Planet Earth with HIV/AIDS that was also O-Negative.

So, like an idiot, I e-mailed the CDC and the NIH (National Institute of Health) and asked them what was the deal with O-Negs and HIV..... I figured that they knew everything about this.

Weeks later, the CDC replied that they had no information about the matter, and the NIH people blew me off completely. I posted the CDC e-mail in our archives at the Rh-Neg Yahoo Group.

I think they know a lot, but they are not talking. Hmmmmm... why?

Anyway, back to this patent's scoop:

"RhoGAM" is actually a "brand name." The formula IS made with O-Neg blood (which makes sense, since everyone can accept it, especially other O-Negs). To keep things simple in this message, I will continue to refer Rh(D) immune globulin as "RhoGAM."

U.S. patent 5993812 was issued to these two guys in Canada back on 30 November 1999. They also had a previous foreign patent, which was given to them in 1995.

They ORIGINALLY applied for this U.S. patent in April 1997, so that's OVER TEN YEARS AGO. Which obviously means that these guys were using the RhoGAM "Anti-D immunoglobulin" formula with HIV+ people for some time before 1997.

I printed out on paper all of the patent details (16 pages) for closer review. Here's a quick summary:

The patent states that the "RhoGAM" formula has successfully been given to HIV+ patients (children as well as adults) since 1988 (The Eighties!) to delay the progression of HIV.

The Rh antibodies interfere with HIV's effect on the immune system. It claims that this reduces bacteria and virus infections in those with HIV. It also claims to increase/ maintain T-cell counts. It is NOT a "cure" for HIV or AIDS. It only helps a HIV+ person for so long (2-3 years) before it becomes ineffective, usually after a person takes a major health turn for the worse. Still, 2-3 years means a lot to some people.

BUT GET THIS: the patent says that RhoGAM works ONLY with Rh+Positive patients with HIV. It clearly states that RhoGAM (Anti-D) is INEFFECTIVE in the treatment of Rh-Negative persons with HIV, or for any person that had their spleen removed (regardless of blood type).

For Rh-Negs with HIV, they specifically use "anti-c" antibodies, instead of Anti-D. Weird.

Honestly, this patent is hard for me to completely understand because I'm no mad scientist, but I can tell you that there is something mentioned here about how Rh antibodies can also be produced in the blood of animals for eventual use by HIV+ patients. It didn't say what KIND of animals, but apparently this has happened. What animal's blood is supposedly closest to humans? A cow maybe? However, it is unlikely that Rh-Negatives would be able to use such animal blood, especially the O-Negs.

Anyway, the two men got their patent in the U.S., as well as in Canada and internationally. I wonder if either one of these guys are Rh-Neg? And WHO came up with the idea in the first place to give RhoGAM to an HIV+ person with Rh+Positive blood??

I am conducting further research (yes, there are MORE patents out there using O-Neg blood!), and will post more information later. Until then, PLEASE understand that this information is EXTREMELY IMPORTANT news for us, as well as for any Rh-Neg parents or siblings we have, our Rh-Neg children and the spouses!

I have always "felt" different. Now I know why.

I wonder why doctors and scientists don' t educate people about this? This is world news! And how are these people allowed to patent a product that contains a human blood type anyway?

Yikes! I guess I need to go PATENT MYSELF!

Thank you for your time and consideration. Now go donate some blood!

Sincerely,
Ruth Ellenor Whitty
O-Neg
Houston, TX

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: AIDS fraud: The Marketing of an Epidemic exposed

Title: AIDS fraud: The Marketing of an Epidemic exposed Description: in House of Numbers exclusive film clip

craig-oxley - May 7, 2010 05:11 PM (GMT)

AIDS fraud: The Marketing of an Epidemic exposed in House of Numbers exclusive film clip

Monday, May 03, 2010
by Mike Adams
http://www.naturalnews.com/028707_AIDS_epidemic.html

The global AIDS epidemic being pushed by the AIDS industry is a fraud. Key pioneers from the industry now speak out against "the false marketing of the AIDS epidemic" in an exclusive video clip from the highly controversial documentary House of Numbers (www.HouseOfNumbers.com).

Watch the clip right now at: http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=lfnYciuXeB4

"It was a total fraud."
In this video clip, you'll see Dr Joe Sonnabend, co-founder of amfAR (The Foundation for AIDS Research) explain how the organization committed fraud by hyping up the risk of AIDS in order to get more money from Washington.

"One day one of the networks had received a press release from us, and the press release said that heterosexual AIDS is about to happen, that straight men are going to drop in droves... And I said that's B.S. where'd you get that from? It was a total fraud and scam. It was a fundraising ploy," says Dr Joe Sonnabend. "But it was so efficient that it resulted in a LIFE Magazine cover which said 'No one is safe from AIDS.' ...Once he put out this scare, the money started to flow. It really did."

Brent Leung, director of the House of Numbers film, then asks Dr Sonnabend, "Isn't that ethically wrong to scare an entire population?"

"What do you think?" answers Dr Sonnabend. "You live in this world you know that's exactly what they do."

Watch this too-hot-to-handle interview yourself in this exclusive YouTube clip: http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=lfnYciuXeB4

By the way, do you note the similarity between AIDS non-profit fundraising fraud and the Susan G. Komen for the Cure fundraising fraud we've exposed here on NaturalNews? (http://www.naturalnews.com/028670_Komen_for_the_Cure_fraud.html) For both groups, it's always about the money, and the same thing is true with most other disease non-profit groups.

Also in this clip, you'll see journalist Mark Conlan describing how the Wall Street Journal exposed the fundraising fraud behind the AIDS industry.

Journalist Celia Farber also appears in this exclusive clip, saying, "It's a culture of P.R. A public relations phenomenon. The truth doesn't matter. What matters is the image. ... The reality is that AIDS is over."

AIDS, in other words, is no longer a threat to the world at large, and certainly not a threat to heterosexual men. But the AIDS front groups want to keep spreading fear in order to unlock more fundraising dollars that will pad their own pockets. So the fear mongering continues, the fraud continues and the truth gets swept under the rug.

What truth is that? That the "worldwide AIDS epidemic" is now largely a fictional construct created by the pharmaceutical industry, its non-profit front groups and the CDC to sell AIDS drugs that cause the very immunological suppression blamed on the disease. AIDS drugs, in other words, cause the symptoms of AIDS and thus they become a self-fulfilling prophecy to any person who dares take them.

Finally! Get the House of Numbers DVD for yourself
At long last, House of Numbers may be pre-ordered for its upcoming DVD release. You can reserve your copy of this remarkable, mind-blowing film right now by visiting www.HouseOfNumbers.com

This deluxe edition DVD also features hours of special features and behind-the-scenes footage. Shipped on three DVDs, this deluxe edition includes 24 featurettes covering:

HIV Testing
• HIV Testing 101
• The History and Evolution of HIV Testing
• The Morphing Fine Print of HIV Test Package Inserts
• The Changing Criteria of Western Blot Testing

• False Positives: Causes and Factors
• Deciphering Test Results for False Positives
• Examining the "Gold Standard" for HIV Diagnostic Tests
• HIV Testing in High Risk Versus Low Risk Populations
• HIV Testing Campaigns

A I D S
• The Bangui Definition - A Closer Look
• Bangui Redux: Abidjan and Caracas
• The Growing Family of AIDS Marker Diseases and Indicators
• The Clinicians' Dilemma: Dr. Anthony Fauci and Harrison's Principles of Internal Medicine
• 1993 - CDC Adds the CD4 T-Cell Count Marker
• 1997 - CDC Tables 11 and 12: Addition by Subtraction

"Why I Began Questioning HIV" - Five Skeptic's Stories
• Dr. Kary Mullis
• Rian Malan
• Neville Hodgkinson
• Dr. Rodney Richards
• Dr. Christian Fiala

A Second Look
• Profile: Dr. Robert Gallo
• Profile: Dr. Peter Duesberg
• History of Fabricated Scares and The CDC
• The Incarnation Children's Center: A Cautionary Tale

Reserve your copy now at www.HouseOfNumbers.com

And be sure to check out today's exclusive video clip at:
http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=lfnY...

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

23bec

PLEASE MOVE OVER TO THE NEW SITE:

http://z15.invisionfree.com/The_Unhived_Mind_III/

18 JULY 2011 .. GOLD HITS NEW HIGH OF $1604 AS SILVER RAISES TO $40.38 PER OUNCE. THE OVERT DEPRESSION IS ON, ALL READY FOR THE COMING COLLAPSE BETWEEN OCT 2011 - OCT 2012! THE LIKES OF WHICH HAS NEVER BEEN WITNESSED BEFORE WORLDWIDE, ARE YOU READY? MENTALLY? YOU SURE? GET HARDENED NOW AND PREPARE ASAP.....

THE UNHIVED MIND
This site is dedicated to the truthsayers assassinated such as William Cooper, Jim Arrabito, Alberto Rivera, Joe Vialls, Brian Downing Quig, Phil Schneider etc.

KING 'FARNESE' CARLOS
World War III
The Unhived Mind

THE KNIGHTS OF MALTA
DEUTSCHE VERTEIDIGUNGS DIENST
HOMELAND
DEPARTMENT
AGENCY
CARPATHIA HOSTINGS INC CYBERNAZIS

CARDINAL RATZINGER
And his Oslo Accords
UHM

C.I.A (D.V.D) PREPARE TO
TESLA ATTACK U.K
EXERCISE ORION
SEPTEMBER 2010
UHM

WTC nuclear demolition
Dimitri Khalezov

WATCH OUT MIDDLE EAST
KING JUAN CARLOS IS
IN RUSSIA 24/25 FEB

LATEST INFO

The Unhived Mind Ii->DEPOPULATION->The Aerosol Programme

Pages: (3) [1] 2 3

NEW TOPIC NEW POLL

The Aerosol Programme

		Topic Title	Topic Starter	Replies	Views	Last Action
		Important Topics
		MASSIVE ARCHIVE OF CHEMTRAILS	TheUnhivedMind	0	654	13th September 2008 - 11:49 PM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		Forum Topics
		Morgellons Disease continues to defeat scientists [MORGELLONS DOES MSM]	TheUnhivedMind	0	43	11th July 2011 - 11:59 PM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		Geo-engineering: green versus greed in the race to cool the planet	TheUnhivedMind	0	26	11th July 2011 - 12:48 AM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		A "Nobel Torsion Message" Over Norway?	TheUnhivedMind	0	32	11th July 2011 - 12:01 AM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind

		IHS/MORGELLONS/CHEMTRAILS	Maximiliano	2	312	10th July 2011 - 06:31 PM Last Post by: Maximiliano
		WEATHER MODIFICATION	TheUnhivedMind	0	52	1st July 2011 - 11:21 PM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		CHEMTRAIL RALLY 9th July 2011 DUXFORD, CAMBRIDGESH [Vd]	TheUnhivedMind	0	66	30th June 2011 - 02:44 PM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		The Olgacom Scandal Explained: the connection of New World Order, China, Chemtrails & Big	TheUnhivedMind	0	68	28th June 2011 - 04:05 AM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		DR GARTH NICOLSON - MORGELLON'S DISEASE [Vd]	TheUnhivedMind	0	52	27th June 2011 - 04:05 AM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		Dismantle HAARP Immediately!	TheUnhivedMind	0	84	22nd June 2011 - 01:00 AM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		PROOF! PUBLIC LAW 105-85, bio warfare or populatio reduction funded by the Dept. of Defense	TheUnhivedMind	1	114	21st June 2011 - 01:45 PM Last Post by: Maximiliano
		MORGELLONS : ALTERED BLOOD	TheUnhivedMind	0	47	20th June 2011 - 04:27 PM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		Electromagnetic Pulse Waves	TheUnhivedMind	0	63	20th June 2011 - 03:02 AM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		Strange Rolling Cloud [Vd]	TheUnhivedMind	0	66	20th June 2011 - 02:03 AM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		ES Corporation – The Power of Being Globalist GeoEngineers	TheUnhivedMind	0	26	20th June 2011 - 01:06 AM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		Los Angeles Chemtrail Group Banners the San Diego Freeway [Vd]	TheUnhivedMind	0	35	20th June 2011 - 01:00 AM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		How to Deal With a Chemtrail Debunker	TheUnhivedMind	0	50	20th June 2011 - 12:56 AM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		Chemtrails: CBS INTERVIEWS Roxy Lopez: Our side of the story [Vd]	TheUnhivedMind	0	34	20th June 2011 - 12:56 AM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		Morgellons Victim Jumps to Death in Germany	TheUnhivedMind	0	38	20th June 2011 - 12:51 AM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		The CFR's CIA Controls Evergreen Air – Interview with Clay Douglas [Vd]	TheUnhivedMind	0	29	20th June 2011 - 12:50 AM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		Michael Murphy Discusses Chemtrails-Geoengineering on Coast to Coast AM	TheUnhivedMind	0	26	20th June 2011 - 12:49 AM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		Ryan Dawson of anti-neocons hates HAARP talk He ignores evidence but WE'RE kooks?	AntiSionist	0	80	14th June 2011 - 01:52 AM Last Post by: AntiSionist
		Proof of Chemtrails in 1971! [Vd]	TheUnhivedMind	2	121	12th June 2011 - 12:08 AM Last Post by: slybacon

		MICHAEL MURPHY - CHEMTRAIL SPRAYING OF POISONS [Vd]	TheUnhivedMind	0	85	7th June 2011 - 04:22 AM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		What does Bill Gates, Monsanto, mosquitoes, Xe and vaccines have in common? [Vd]	TheUnhivedMind	1	85	6th June 2011 - 10:59 PM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		1991 game chemtrail subliminals [Vd]	TheUnhivedMind	0	113	6th June 2011 - 03:23 AM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		WEATHER MODIFICATION A COVERT WEAPON OF MASS DESTRUCTION	TheUnhivedMind	0	138	3rd June 2011 - 11:04 PM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		NBC -affiliated KMIR Reports on chemtrail/ geoengineering [Vd]	TheUnhivedMind	0	55	3rd June 2011 - 02:22 AM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		Fox is Marketing 'X-Men: First Class' By Writing Giant X's in the Sky [CONDITIONING]	TheUnhivedMind	0	64	2nd June 2011 - 06:43 PM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		Secret Presidential Chemtrail Budget Uncovered, Congress Exceeds Billions To Spray Popul	TheUnhivedMind	0	98	31st May 2011 - 06:07 PM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		Weather How They Do It [Vd]	TheUnhivedMind	0	90	30th May 2011 - 02:42 AM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		Dementia is an emerging epidemic	TheUnhivedMind	1	135	23rd May 2011 - 01:38 AM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		Govt defends $10m grant for untested rain-making technology	TheUnhivedMind	3	357	19th May 2011 - 10:02 AM Last Post by: Phazon
		The real reason for all the dead microbiologists?	Phazon	0	131	18th May 2011 - 01:35 PM Last Post by: Phazon
		Toxic Levels Of Barium And Aluminum Found In Several Mohave County Arizona Residents	TheUnhivedMind	0	95	17th May 2011 - 05:58 PM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		Zhirinovsky Threatens To Destroy Planet With Secret Tsunami Weapon	TheUnhivedMind	0	171	16th May 2011 - 11:06 PM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		Chemtrails are Now a deadly Fact	TheUnhivedMind	0	102	14th May 2011 - 10:41 PM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		HAARP and Earthquakes [Vd]	TheUnhivedMind	0	108	14th May 2011 - 10:39 PM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		Excellent Video of Chemtrails over Great Yarmouth UK	TheUnhivedMind	0	82	14th May 2011 - 10:38 PM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		The Biggest Crime Of All Time	TheUnhivedMind	0	83	14th May 2011 - 10:37 PM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		Proof of Morgellons Fibers in Chemtrails [Vd]	TheUnhivedMind	0	85	14th May 2011 - 10:35 PM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		Morgellons: Aerobiology and Toxins [Vd]	TheUnhivedMind	0	67	14th May 2011 - 10:34 PM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind

		US Government Takes Down HAARP Website to Conceal Evidence of US Weather Modification and	TheUnhivedMind	0	50	14th May 2011 - 10:32 PM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		HAARP –Chilling Information You Really Need To See [Vd]	TheUnhivedMind	0	92	14th May 2011 - 10:31 PM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		Fiber Sensors in Morgellons [Vd]	TheUnhivedMind	0	61	14th May 2011 - 10:24 PM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		Kandy Griffin of the Morgellons Research Group on Morgellons	TheUnhivedMind	0	73	14th May 2011 - 10:23 PM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		Respiratory illnesses causing big problems	TheUnhivedMind	0	62	14th May 2011 - 10:22 PM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		Morgellons Victim Jumps to Death in Germany	TheUnhivedMind	0	74	14th May 2011 - 10:21 PM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		Secrets in the Sky Airs on ABC Affiliate in Albany NY	TheUnhivedMind	0	60	14th May 2011 - 10:17 PM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		Geoengineering Attacks Plants and Trees in Orange County, California [Vd]	TheUnhivedMind	0	59	14th May 2011 - 10:16 PM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		Millions Spent to Confuse Public About Geoengineer	TheUnhivedMind	0	68	14th May 2011 - 10:14 PM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		Soils of UK and Europe drying out	TheUnhivedMind	0	90	9th May 2011 - 06:16 PM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		US government takes down HAARP website to conceal evidence of US weather modification and	TheUnhivedMind	0	192	29th April 2011 - 03:48 AM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		HAARP's New Weapon. The X-37B Spacecraft [Vd]	TheUnhivedMind	0	175	18th April 2011 - 09:43 PM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		Tweaking the climate to save it: Who decides?	TheUnhivedMind	0	116	6th April 2011 - 10:45 PM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		Chemtrails & Morgellons - Cliff Carnicom [Vd]	TheUnhivedMind	0	171	22nd March 2011 - 04:59 PM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		HAARP cached website discovered! ADMITS weather modification [Vd]	TheUnhivedMind	0	172	21st March 2011 - 10:37 PM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		New Zealand Government Connects Chemtrails to Illness	TheUnhivedMind	1	214	26th February 2011 - 02:05 AM Last Post by: seekerx
		A nanoscale rope, and another step toward complex nanomaterials that assemble themselves	TheUnhivedMind	0	116	26th February 2011 - 12:38 AM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		The Methodic Demise of Natural Earth	TheUnhivedMind	0	119	26th February 2011 - 12:36 AM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		Documented Plans of US Military to Use Weather as a Weapon	TheUnhivedMind	0	131	26th February 2011 - 12:36 AM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind

		Former IRS Agent Joe Bannister Urges Obama & Feds to stop the Genocide Now	TheUnhivedMind	0	157	26th February 2011 - 12:35 AM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		Cargolux Identified As Another Chemtrail Fleet	TheUnhivedMind	0	112	26th February 2011 - 12:34 AM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		Loose Lips Sink Ships and 747s Too	TheUnhivedMind	0	130	26th February 2011 - 12:34 AM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		Teenage Girl to Chemtrail Pilots: I Want the Bloody Mucus and Constant Pain to Stop	TheUnhivedMind	0	139	26th February 2011 - 12:33 AM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		Did Barium from Chemtrails Cause Sudden Death Syndrome in China?	TheUnhivedMind	0	123	26th February 2011 - 12:33 AM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		Study Shows Respiratory Deaths on the Rise	TheUnhivedMind	0	124	26th February 2011 - 12:32 AM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		Chemtrail Polymers Linked to Morgellons Disease	TheUnhivedMind	0	118	26th February 2011 - 12:31 AM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		Suspected Spray Plane Airlines, Airports, and Airfields	TheUnhivedMind	0	140	26th February 2011 - 12:27 AM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		Chemtrails Are Slowly Suffocating Me	TheUnhivedMind	0	123	26th February 2011 - 12:26 AM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		Chemtrail and Morgellons on Italian National TV [Vd]	TheUnhivedMind	0	126	26th February 2011 - 12:25 AM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		Chemtrails Over Ireland	TheUnhivedMind	0	155	26th February 2011 - 12:24 AM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		Video of 4 Chemtrail Planes Fying Side-by-side Over Germany	TheUnhivedMind	0	113	26th February 2011 - 12:23 AM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		Elevated Barium Level Found in Golden Valley, AZ Resident [Vd]	TheUnhivedMind	0	173	26th February 2011 - 12:20 AM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		Ted Gunderson and Anthony J Hilder Talk Chemtrails	TheUnhivedMind	0	116	26th February 2011 - 12:18 AM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		GLORIOUS AVENUE OF CHESTNUT TREES KILLED BY DISEAS	TheUnhivedMind	0	142	24th February 2011 - 02:11 AM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		U.S. Geo-Engineering Budget Exceeds Billions	TheUnhivedMind	0	143	22nd February 2011 - 02:59 AM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		The Father Of Weaponized Weather [Vd]	TheUnhivedMind	0	157	20th February 2011 - 11:55 PM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		Chinese using weather manipulation to combat droug [COMBAT WEATHER WARFARE MORE LIKE!]	TheUnhivedMind	0	142	17th February 2011 - 02:02 AM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		EPA meets with Chemtrail Activist [Vd]	TheUnhivedMind	0	161	11th February 2011 - 10:38 PM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind

		Black Chemtrails [Vd]	TheUnhivedMind	0	163	11th February 2011 - 07:22 PM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		Chemtrails causing Vitamin D deficiency?	Phazon	4	398	31st January 2011 - 01:54 AM Last Post by: Phazon
		Haarp Project Bluebeam 2 [Vd]	TheUnhivedMind	0	224	26th January 2011 - 02:26 AM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		World Chemtrail Awareness Day	TheUnhivedMind	0	136	26th January 2011 - 01:46 AM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		Government, Monsanto, Chemtrails and Food	TheUnhivedMind	0	130	26th January 2011 - 01:40 AM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		Death By Design From Above	TheUnhivedMind	0	141	26th January 2011 - 12:40 AM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		Evergreen Aviation Admits to Chemtrail Contracts with USAF [Vd]	TheUnhivedMind	0	152	25th January 2011 - 06:37 PM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		Legislation Concerning the Criminalization of Toxic Aerosols Upon the People of the Pl	TheUnhivedMind	0	139	23rd January 2011 - 10:46 PM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		FORMER FBI CHIEF SAYS CHEMTRAIL DEATH DUMPS MUST BE STOPPED [Vd]	TheUnhivedMind	0	206	22nd January 2011 - 01:28 AM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		Sudden oak death now threatens more of Britain's trees	TheUnhivedMind	0	168	16th January 2011 - 01:06 AM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		Huge ring appears over Australia, is HAARP involved?	TheUnhivedMind	0	206	16th January 2011 - 12:57 AM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		WEATHER WARFARE TO HINDER COAL TO CHINA [U.S. HAS MASSIVE RESERVES OF COAL!]	TheUnhivedMind	5	312	14th January 2011 - 03:49 AM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		Have scientists discovered how to create downpours in the desert?	TheUnhivedMind	0	207	6th January 2011 - 03:01 AM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		New Years Omen?Thousands Of black birds,Fish Dead	TheUnhivedMind	1	297	3rd January 2011 - 01:47 AM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		The Chemtrail Conditioning Program	TheUnhivedMind	0	203	2nd January 2011 - 03:16 AM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		Weather predictions given on 2nd of Oct 2010 coming true today	TheUnhivedMind	2	223	27th December 2010 - 07:16 PM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		Chinese Weather Manipulation Experiments To Increase [NEVER HEAR OF THE U.S.'s]	TheUnhivedMind	0	234	23rd December 2010 - 04:12 AM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		Weather Warfare: Using Weather as a WMD [Vd]	TheUnhivedMind	0	214	17th December 2010 - 02:47 AM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		Air Force Radar Chaff Farmed from the Milk of Transgenic Goats: Spider Silk [Vd]	TheUnhivedMind	0	246	13th December 2010 - 05:03 AM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind

	The Chemtrail Cover-Up ! Rosalind Peterson [Vd]	TheUnhivedMind	0	367	9th December 2010 - 02:39 AM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind

Showing 100 of 278 topics sorted by last post date in descending order from the beginning Go!

Pages: (3) [1] 2 3

NEW TOPIC NEW POLL

Open Topic (new replies)

Open Topic (no new replies)

Hot Topic (new replies)

Hot Topic (no new replies)

Poll (new votes)

Poll (no new votes)

Locked Topic

Moved Topic

Search this forum: Enter Keywords Go

- The Aerosol Programme Go

Mark this forum as read

Hosted for free by InvisionFree (Terms of Use: Updated 2/10/2010) | Powered by Invision Power Board v1.3 Final © 2003 IPS, Inc.
Page creation time: 0.0499 seconds | Archive

The Orsini Skin by Bunthius Zeta Board mods

0

View Full Version: The Aerosol Programme

51. Millions Spent to Confuse Public About Geoengineer
52. Soils of UK and Europe drying out
53. US government takes down HAARP website to conceal
54. HAARP's New Weapon. The X-37B Spacecraft [Vd]
55. Tweaking the climate to save it: Who decides?
56. Chemtrails & Morgellons - Cliff Carnicom [Vd]
57. HAARP cached website discovered! ADMITS weather
58. New Zealand Government Connects Chemtrails to
59. A nanoscale rope, and another step toward complex
60. The Methodic Demise of Natural Earth
61. Documented Plans of US Military to Use Weather as
62. Former IRS Agent Joe Bannister Urges Obama & Feds
63. Cargolux Identified As Another Chemtrail Fleet
64. Loose Lips Sink Ships and 747s Too
65. Teenage Girl to Chemtrail Pilots: I Want the
66. Did Barium from Chemtrails Cause Sudden Death
67. Study Shows Respiratory Deaths on the Rise
68. Chemtrail Polymers Linked to Morgellons Disease
69. Suspected Spray Plane Airlines, Airports, and
70. Chemtrails Are Slowly Suffocating Me
71. Chemtrail and Morgellons on Italian National TV
72. Chemtrails Over Ireland
73. Video of 4 Chemtrail Planes Fying Side-by-side
74. Elevated Barium Level Found in Golden Valley, AZ
75. Ted Gunderson and Anthony J Hilder Talk Chemtrails
76. GLORIOUS AVENUE OF CHESTNUT TREES KILLED BY DISEAS
77. U.S. Geo-Engineering Budget Exceeds Billions
78. The Father Of Weaponized Weather [Vd]
79. Chinese using weather manipulation to combat droug
80. EPA meets with Chemtrail Activist [Vd]

81. Black Chemtrails [Vd]
82. Chemtrails causing Vitamin D deficiency?
83. Haarp Project Bluebeam 2 [Vd]
84. World Chemtrail Awareness Day
85. Government, Monsanto, Chemtrails and Food
86. Death By Design From Above
87. Evergreen Aviation Admits to Chemtrail Contracts
88. Legislation Concerning the Criminalization of
89. FORMER FBI CHIEF SAYS CHEMTRAIL DEATH DUMPS MUST
90. Sudden oak death now threatens more of Britain's
91. Huge ring appears over Australia, is HAARP
92. WEATHER WARFARE TO HINDER COAL TO CHINA
93. Have scientists discovered how to create downpours
94. New Years Omen?Thousands Of black birds,Fish Dead
95. The Chemtrail Conditioning Program
96. Weather predictions given on 2nd of Oct 2010
97. Chinese Weather Manipulation Experiments To
98. Weather Warfare: Using Weather as a WMD [Vd]
99. Air Force Radar Chaff Farmed from the Milk
100. The Chemtrail Cover-Up ! Rosalind Peterson [Vd]

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: The Aerosol Programme

101. Evergreen Facility Caught on Film: Chemtrail
102. Clippers, "Chemtrails" and the Hallelujah Chorus
103. Spraying the Skies: 1975 U.S. Patent for Powder
104. Geoengineering: Climate Ghouls' 'Plan B'
105. Rosalind Peterson: The Chemtrail Cover-Up
106. CLOUDS OF SECRECY - GOVERMENT CHEMICAL SPRAYING
107. Infowars Listener Calls in About Her 13 year Old
108. Playing God with Planet Earth
109. Fewer robins will be keeping gardeners company
110. WARNING ISSUED OVER U.K. WINTER COUGHS
111. The Real Luciferian Purpose Behind The Chemtrail
112. The Doomsday Machine and the Race to Save the Worl
113. THEY ARE CHEMTRAILING THE CRAP OUT OF LOS ANGELES!
114. What in the world are they spraying? [Vd]
115. Electromagnetics Chemtrails over New Haven [Vd]
116. Geoengineering Moratorium at UN Ministerial in Jap
117. U.N. urged to freeze climate geo-engineering
118. Weather Warfare: Anti-Russian Anticyclone
119. CHEMTRAILS AND MORGELLONS - IT'S WORSE THAN YOU
120. Why Britain has become much less windy
121. Washington's New World Order Weapons Have the
122. HAARP [Vd]
123. Michael Murphy - What in the World are They
124. One-third of Earth's plants and animals now at
125. Geoengineering: “The Horrifying Idea Whose Time
126. Chemtrails , first int. Symposium Belgium [Vd]
127. Atmospheric Geoengineering
128. MONEY FIBERS FOUND IN PERSONS
129. Geo-Engineering: Killing Off The Useless Eaters
130. Chemtrails are Geoengineering the Planet to Save

131. With Magnetic Nanoparticles, Scientists Remotely
132. [vid] Chemtrail Tanker Video From Whistleblower
133. Russian Scholar Warns Of 'Secret' U.S. Climate
134. Have the Chemtrails been stopped?
135. Yahoo chemtrail subliminal [Img]
136. Top US Senator Assassinated As Obama “Weather War”
137. Mass. residents fight aerial insecticide spraying
138. Pakistan Flood: HAARP Used in Pakistan? – Urgent
139. Weather Mod pilots having busy summer
140. Aeroport De Quebec subliminal chems [Img]
141. BT advert with subliminal Chems [Img]
142. Disney Cinderella Chemtrail Subliminal [Img]
143. Chemtrails Billboard [Img]
144. Fifth Ave Chemtrails Subliminal [Img]
145. Chief Golden Light Eagle Condems Chemtrails and
146. Evergreen Air and a Secret Chemtrail Facility
147. Daily Mail gives out disinformation regarding
148. RUSSIAN ROULETTE
149. CALLS FOR MASSIVE CHEMTRAIL SPRAYING SPARK
150. Morgellons Victims Across the US and Europe (Pt1)

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: The Aerosol Programme

151. HAARP INSTALATION IN PERU!
152. "What in the World are They Spraying?" [Vd]
153. How crazy can it get? Scientists propose sun block
154. Eyes Wide Shut: Disease and Death from the Sky
155. Zbigniew Brzezinski, weather warfare and flooding
156. Disinfo Agents Exposed who attack Chemtrail truth
157. Bill Gates pays for ‘artificial’ clouds to beat
158. Chemtrails: on the trail of our assassins [Vd]
159. Chemtrails: The Consequences of Toxic Metals and
160. EXPOSURE TO POLIO VACCINE THROUGH CHEMTRAILS?
161. Chemtrail planes spraying sex hormones?
162. What Are They Spraying Us With? - Pt II
163. DFT and House of Common coverup Chemtrails
164. THE CHEMTRAIL VIRUS 'CRAZIES' SUBLIMINAL [PICS]
165. G. Edward Griffin talks about chemtrails in
166. Debunking Chemtrail Debunkers
167. Flowers losing scent due to climate change
168. What in the World Are They Spraying?
169. Yahoo chemtrail subliminal conditioner
170. Dictyostelium Found In Morgellons Sufferers
171. Starling birds falling out of U.K Sky
172. HAARP created Earthquakes 100% proof [Vd]
173. Speak up or Choke - Chemtrails [Vd]
174. if you still don't believe chemtrails
175. Ionospheric weapons on Australia
176. Study Warns: Carbon Nanotubes Behave Like Asbestos
177. European Parliament acknowledged existence of
178. Geoengineering Conference To Discuss Blocking Sun
179. CRAZIEST CHEMTRAIL PILOT EVER! [Vd]
180. Obama's Current Science Advisor Warned in the

181. Aerosol pollution interferes with thunderstorm
182. Jordan Seeks Help From Thailand To Create Artifici
183. Governments turn to cloud seeding to fight drought
184. Environmental Warfare:Climate Modification Schemes
185. Conspiracy Theory - Jesse Ventura [Vd]
186. Much of UK Population Exposed to Germ Spraying By
187. Smart Dust “MEMS” Chemtrails [Vd]
188. Odd sight this morning
189. [vid] Chemtrail ON/OFF button play
190. [vid] Chemtrails with huge HAARP clouds!? 04/10/09
191. EUROPE: CHEMTRAIL HOLOCAUST (2009) [Vd]
192. Playing Wtih Weather Stirs Debate In China
193. Beijing's first snow of season 'artificially
194. Pilot monitoring the production of chemtrails by
195. Moscow Mayor Promises a Winter Without Snow
196. Secretly recorded convo with chemtrail-pilot
197. Scientists create 'artificial ionosphere' using
198. Aerosols and “cloud lifetime effect” cited as
199. China weather "magic" conjures blue sky for parade
200. Chemtrails, Swine Flu, HAARP, Tesla

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: The Aerosol Programme

201. Weather Modification Office to save Mao's 60th
202. Nerc MST Radar Facility- HAARP Like Facility
203. [vid] Hole punch clouds/ Satellite Chemtrails
204. History Channel Documentary Validates Chemtrails
205. CHEMTRAILS PROJECT HOLOgraphic SUNblock
206. Chemtrails - If YOU don't tell others, who will?
207. Beijing vows rain will not fall on its parade
208. Mysterious Tubular Clouds Defy Explanation
209. No chemtrails in Turkey?
210. HOW TO COMBAT CHEMTRAIL BARIUM INDUCED AARHYTHMIA
211. A link between the Sun, cosmic rays, aerosols, and
212. Cloud ships on course to beat climate change, says
213. Ever Wonder What Blows Out Of A Jet Airplane?
214. Strange New Air Force Facility Energizes Ionospher
215. Former Belgian Mayor Crusades Against Chemtrails
216. History Channel Documentary Validates Chemtrails
217. Should We Geoengineer the Climate?
218. New Morgellons pictures
219. Mysterious, Glowing Clouds Appear Across America's
220. CONTRAILS & MAN-MADE CLOUDS CHANGE CLIMATE, HARMIN
221. Ex-Government Employee talks about CHEMTRAILS
222. Re-Engineering The Earth
223. UFO buzz a Chem Trail Tanker Plane
224. Physician Blasts CDC Over Morgellons
225. Bill Gates Sets Sights On Controlling The Weather
226. Poison Rains Infect Small Town [Vd]
227. WEATHER WEAPON LASERS?
228. Extremely Heavy Chemtrails Over Oregon Coast
229. US Reported In "Panic" After Chemtrail Planes
230. India turns to 'cloud seeding' to make rain

231. First official diagnosis of Morgellons in Italy
232. Louise Mandrell's Husband Diagnosed With Morgellon
233. Scientists Debate Shading Earth As Climate Fix
234. CHEMTRAILS Outrage the Residents of Florence OR
235. Comparative Study of Morgellons Fibers with The
236. Unanswered Chemtrail Questions... As Evidence Mo
237. The pros and cons of geoengineering UK MET OFFICE
238. 'Asperatus' clouds seen across the world
239. Chemtrails Over Reedsport, OR
240. Chemtrails exposed on the Discovery channel
241. Breathing Polluted Air May Wreak Havoc on Our DNA
242. Massive Chemtrail Attack: Public Responds
243. Birds at risk reach record high
244. Digitizing Life, A Theory About the Global
245. Atmospheric Geoengineering is occuring in our sky
246. Prince Talks Chemtrails
247. Chemtrails: The Silent Killer
248. News from the latest Golden Fleece Meeting at Linz
249. Chemtrails - The Latest Assault on Us
250. Toxic Skies Preview - Hollywood does CHEMTRAILS

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: The Aerosol Programme

251. Obama looks at climate engineering
252. Link between global dimming and warming baffles
253. C.F.R Geoengineering PDF file
254. Russian Hologram Bluebeam?
255. Germany becomes one of the first countries to
256. Air Force Releases 'Counter-Blog' Marching Orders
257. Plant diseases threaten woodland
258. Physician Blasts CDC Over Morgellons
259. Planet Earth Weapon by Rosalie Bertell [VID]
260. POSSIBLE PURPOSE AND SCOPE OF THE CHEMTRAIL PROJEC
261. Chemtrails manipulation DNA and Health
262. Chemtrail Cure, Resistance and ways to get rid of
263. Behavioral and Psychological Effects of Chemtrails
264. Hildegarde Staninger Interview - Morgellons [VID]
265. Morgellons Pitcher [VID]
266. Chemtrails and Earth's Geomagnetic Activity A Repo
267. Investigating Chemtrails
268. No Nanoparticles Were Killed Making This Post
269. Te last days of planet Earth: attacck forom the sk
270. Pesticide or Genocide? Human Experimentation on US
271. A new site about chemtrails
272. Chemtrails Over Worthing
273. Air Pollution May be to Blame for Honeybee
274. Ladybug, ladybug, where have you gone?
275. Tim White speaks on chemtrails
276. Catastrophic fall in numbers reveals bird
277. The Dreaded Morgellons Nano lifeform disease
278. Air Force Sprays Mosquitoes

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: MASSIVE ARCHIVE OF CHEMTRAILS

Title: MASSIVE ARCHIVE OF CHEMTRAILS

craig-oxley - September 13, 2008 11:49 PM (GMT)

http://z13.invisionfree.com/THE_UNHIVED_MI...php?showforum=9

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: Morgellons Disease continues to defeat scientists

Title: Morgellons Disease continues to defeat scientists
Description: [MORGELLONS DOES MSM]

TheUnhivedMind - July 11, 2011 11:59 PM (GMT)

Morgellons Disease continues to defeat scientists

Burrowing bugs, delusions or a nervous disorder? Why can't medical scientists get to the bottom of Morgellons Disease.

By Will Storr
7:30AM BST 11 Jul 2011
http://www.telegraph.co.uk/health/8626767/...scientists.html

Nick Mann was convinced that something was burrowing into his skin. The 48-year-old father of two had been for a walk in the beautiful grounds of Abney Park Cemetery, down the road from his home in Hackney, east London.

It was sunny and he'd been wearing shorts and sandals. That evening, his legs began itching. Marks sprang up all over his body. "I just knew something was on me," he remembers. "Something digging or biting into my skin."

Over the coming days, lesions opened up on his body. Running his fingertips over them, he could feel something inside: it felt like spines or fibres, he says. He began to feel tormented. What were these bugs? How many were there? Would he ever be rid of them?

One afternoon, in desperation, Nick stripped naked in his kitchen and determined to dig one out as soon as felt it 'bite'. "I stood there for three or four hours, waiting," he says. "As soon as it did, I went for it with a hypodermic needle. There was one on my nipple."

He pales slightly. "You know, I can't get that out of my head. It was so painful. I dug the needle in and felt it flicking against something that wasn't me. And I just carried on digging and scooping." It took nearly four hours. "At one point my wife came in and saw blood dripping down my leg."

By the end of the afternoon, Nick had dug out three of the mysterious entities from his body. They were so small, he says, you could only see them when they moved. Having managed to transfer them into a jar, he proudly showed his wife. Karen peered into the pot. She could see nothing. Nick, however, knew he was on the verge of discovering what this strange and maddening condition was.

It was back in 2001 that the first modern-day reports of a mysterious "fibre disease" began to emerge from the US. When Mary Leitao's two-year-old son complained of "bugs in his skin" and subsequently broke out in lesions, the worried mother examined him with a toy microscope.

Under the lens, she found bizarre, many-coloured fibres. Leitao christened the condition Morgellons Disease, after a similar bizarre outbreak of "harsh hairs" on children that was reported in the 17th century.

She was compelled to name it herself for a simple, but surprising reason: doctor after doctor dismissed her concerns. They said she was neurotic; that it was a figment of her imagination.

A decade later, Leitao's Morgellons Research Foundation claims to have been contacted by more than 12,000 families from all over the world. All of them claim to have the itch, the lesions and the fibres. But the vast majority of sufferers had been dismissed by medical professionals as being mentally ill, with a condition known as Delusions of Parasitosis, in which sufferers are falsely convinced that they are infested.

Despite this, in 2006, there was enough pressure put on the American government for the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention [CDC] to form a task force to look into the matter. "We're not ready to concede there's a new disease," a spokesman said at the time. "But the volume of concern has stepped up because a lot of people are writing or calling their congressmen about it."

One of the few academics to accept that Morgellons might be real is Randy Wymore, associate professor of pharmacology at Oklahoma State University. "I thought it sounded crazy," he remembers.

"I knew it was thought to be delusional, so I asked some Morgellons sufferers to send samples of the fibres, figuring if it was delusional, they would never show up. But 48 hours later, Fed Ex packages started arriving. I borrowed a microscope to examine them. And they looked a little odd."

Wymore asked agents in the forensics department of the Tulsa police department for a second opinion. "Within about 30 seconds, one of them said, 'Uh, I don't think I've ever seen anything like this'."

The fibres didn't match any of the 85,000 organic substances they had on their files. "I was both shocked and not shocked," recalls Wymore. "I already thought these fibres were kind of unusual, and this just validated it."

Wymore has now been working on the DNA of the fibres for five years. So far, none of the samples he has sent into the laboratory has proved to be anything mysterious. Results have included nylon, cotton, a human hair, a fungal fibre and a rodent hair.

Yet more evidence that Morgellons patients are merely delusional? World-renowned neurologist Dr Anne Louise Oaklander is not so sure. Oaklander, an associate professor of neurology at Harvard Medical School, is an expert in itching. She believes that sufferers might have developed nerve disorders that are being misdiagnosed.

"Morgellons is not a disease with a unifying cause, but a constellation of symptoms that can be caused by different underlying diagnoses," she says. "In my experience, these patients have a severe itch disorder that's unexplained, and because itch is the sensation that we feel when an insect lands on our skin, or grubbing about among the hairs of our body, these patients make a logical conclusion: which is that there must be insects here, causing these insect-like sensations."

She explains that the brain can mistakenly experience the feeling of insects if the nervous system was damaged following shingles and sciatica, or by the growth of spinal cord tumours.

"What often happens, though, is a physician does not find a skin disorder, so jumps to a psychiatric conclusion. But what they should be doing is looking for underlying neurological explanations."

So what all does this mean for Nick Mann? Are the fibres in his skin real? Is he delusional? Or does he have an undiagnosed nerve disorder?

In fact, Nick turned out to be an extraordinary case. While it's common for GPs to diagnose patients claiming to suffer from unexplained itching as delusional, this was unlikely in his case, because Nick himself is a GP.

"I took the three mites I'd caught to our local Homerton Hospital," he says. "A technician mounted one on a slide, put it under a microscope and said 'Beautiful'. Everyone gathered around saying 'Ooh, look at that'."

It was definitely something. But they didn't know what. "They sent it to the Natural History Museum, which identified it within a day," says Nick, "as a Tropical Rat Mite."

Although museum experts doubted the mites could live on the skin, the GP has no doubt that is what they were doing. "What these mites do is go in through the hair follicles and find a blood vessel at the bottom. That's where they sit and that's what the 'fibres' are – their legs folded back."

Nick, who treated himself with an antiparasitic drug to eradicate the infection, can only guess that he picked up the mites walking in the cemetery. Despite the name, they are not exclusive to hot climates.

Nick believes it likely that many patients who claim to have Morgellons are actually infected by Tropical Rat Mites. However, he agrees with Dr Oaklander that this diagnosis is unlikely to explain all cases. "There doesn't appear to be a single explanation for it," he says.

Perhaps the mystery will finally be solved when the Centers for Disease Control release their report. Currently in the peer-review process, publication is thought to be imminent.

Causes and cures: starting from scratch

Itching is a common symptom but can be severe and frustrating. It can be localised, or all over the body and there are numerous causes and various treatments.

Causes

A non-infectious skin condition – eczema, psoriasis or prurigo (fluid filled blisters).

Allergies – nickel, medication, washing powder, cosmetics or food.

An insect or parasite – bites, scabies, head lice, bed bugs or ticks.

Fungal and viral infections, such as measles, athlete’s foot, ringworm and thrush.

Chronic conditions

Some types of cancer, thyroid problems, hepatitis and liver disease.

Hormonal changes in the body during the menopause and pregnancy.

Diagnosis

Visit your GP for a diagnosis if your itching is severe, prolonged or recurring. Seek medical advice if itching is associated with other symptoms, such as breathing problems, inflammation or yellowing of the skin and eyes.

A physical assessment may be able to determine the cause of the itching, but your doctor may also carry out a blood test, skin scraping, swab or biopsy to diagnose the underlying cause of the problem.

Treatment

Treatment will depend on the cause of the itching. Bathing skin in lukewarm water and avoiding skin irritants, such as certain fabrics, tight fitting clothing and perfumed cosmetics.

Medication or creams may be prescribed. Antihistamines may be advisable for insect bites or if an allergy has been diagnosed.

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: Geo-engineering: green versus greed in the race to Title: Geo-engineering: green versus greed in the race to Description: cool the planet

TheUnhivedMind - July 11, 2011 12:48 AM (GMT)

Geo-engineering: green versus greed in the race to cool the planet

Critics fear that manipulating weather patterns could have a calamitous effect on poorer countries

John Vidal
The Observer, Sunday 10 July 2011
http://www.guardian.co.uk/environment/2011...er-manipulation

The alert on the Climate Ark website in January 2009 was marked urgent: "Take action: A rogue science ship is poised to carry out risky experimental fertilisation of the Southern Ocean. This is likely [to be] the first of many coming attempts to begin geo-engineering the biosphere as a solution to climate change. The chemical cargo is likely to provoke a massive algal bloom big enough to be seen from outer space..."

The response was immediate and vitriolic: "You morons," fumed a woman from a Canadian university. "That isn't a rogue ship... it's one of the best marine science research groups in the world. You are no different than anti-science religious fanatics. You seek to keep the world ignorant. May you drown in your lies..."

Professor Peter Liss, then chair of Britain's Royal Society's global environment research committee and himself involved in research to see the effect of iron on phtyoplankton, stepped in: "The [intention] is to find out what role iron plays in marine biogeochemistry. In no way is it an attempt to geo-engineer the planet. Only by knowing the facts can you argue effectively against such geo-engineering proposals. Emotion and opinion will not win the argument; knowledge and understanding will."

Some hope. Geo-engineering – artificial efforts to mitigate global warming by manipulating weather patterns, oceans, currents, soils and atmosphere to reduce the amount of greenhouses gases – evokes ideological, political and financial passions. For those who have more or less given up on UN climate talks, it is, along with nuclear power, the only practical planetary way to avoid catastrophic climate change; for others, it is an irresponsible move into the unknown by the rich world that will inevitably have unintended consequences, most probably for the poorest.

But as attempts to get major economies to agree to reduce emissions through energy efficiency falter, so groups of scientists, universities and entrepreneurs are coming together, patenting ideas and pressing the case with governments and the UN to back experiments as the first step towards wide-scale deployment of a suite of technologies.

From just a few individuals working in the field 20 years ago, today there are hundreds of groups and institutions proposing experiments. They fall broadly into two camps: one aims to remove greenhouse gases from the air and store them underground; the other, more controversially, tries to cool the Earth down by reflecting sunlight from the atmosphere or space in a process known as solar radiation management.

The range of techno-fix ideas is growing by the month. They include absorbing plankton, growing artificial trees, firing silver iodide into clouds to produce rain, genetically engineering crops to be paler in colour to reflect sunlight back to space, fertilising the ocean with iron nanoparticles to increase phytoplankton, blasting sulphate-based aerosols into the stratosphere to deflect sunlight, covering the desert with white plastic to reflect sunlight and painting cities and roads white.

There are serious proposals to launch a fleet of unmanned ships to spray seawater into the atmosphere to thicken clouds and thus reflect more radiation from Earth. Most controversial of all is an idea to fire trillions of tiny mirrors into space to form a 100,000-mile "sunshade" for Earth.

Most are unlikely to be seriously considered but some are being pushed hard by entrepreneurs and businessmen attracted by the potential to make billions of dollars in an emerging system of UN global carbon credits. Research by ETC, the Canadian-based watchdog, shows at least 27 patents have been granted to inventors and assignees including Bill Gates, Dupont, the US government and various corporations. Chemical engineer Michael Markels has four patents, Professor Steven Salter of Edinburgh University and climate change scientist David Keith have two.

"If geo-engineering techniques move towards actual deployment, the existence of patents could mean that decisions over the climate will be effectively handed over to the private sector," says Diana Bronson of ETC.

In what is shaping up to become a deep, ideological division along the lines of pro- and anti-nuclear or GM crops, the scientists, corporates and entrepreneurs are being broadly opposed by environment groups and developing countries, but backed increasingly by the UK and US governments, as well as businessmen such as Richard Branson. And in a strange new grouping, free market environmentalists such as Mark Lynas in Britain, Stewart Brand in the US and Bjorn Lomborg in Denmark have joined high-profile US conservative politicians and thinktanks to say geo-engineering is a step forward.

"Geo-engineering holds forth the promise of addressing global warming concerns for just a few billion dollars a year," said Newt Gingrich, former speaker of the US House of Representatives, in 2008. "We would have an option to address global warming by rewarding scientific innovation. Bring on American ingenuity. Stop the green pig."

How geo-engineering plans to combat climate change. Click here to see a full size version of the graphic

Such people have decided that re-engineering Earth for survival, or for profit, is just an intellectual skip away from what we have been doing for centuries and what has got us into the mess in the first place – cutting down most of the world's forests, converting the savannas, diverting and damming rivers and plundering the seas. With no evidence that mankind is prepared to reduce the emissions of greenhouse gases, it has become necessary to have a plan B, an insurance policy for the situation in which Earth hits a tipping point, they argue.

But to do that requires experiments and money, says Andrew Lockley, moderator of the geoengineering group Google site that brings together many of the world's leading scientists working in different areas. His own area is finding geo-engineering ways to capture methane on a vast scale from melting tundra landscapes.

Lockley says: "We just do not know if a catastrophic methane release could be 50, 100 or 10,000 years away. Different scientists are saying different things. We could be sleepwalking into a climate disaster. What is needed is the support of academe to do further research. We need basic research done on which models might work."

But with most major research institutions scared of the public reaction and hesitating to put money into geo-engineering, it is being left to corporations and billionaire entrepreneurs. Bill Gates has put in $400m (£250m) into two projects and is named in a group of people holding a patent to employ a fleet of vessels to suppress hurricanes through various methods of mixing warm water from the surface of the ocean with colder water at greater depths. Richard Branson's "carbon war room" is backing carbon capture and storage technologies. Behind the scenes, airlines, GM and chemical companies are believed to be cautiously investigating the potential.

Britain now leads the world's public funding, by providing research money and intellectual backing from scientific institutions such as the Royal Society. Last week, the Engineering and Physical Sciences Research Council, a British government funding agency, released over £3m for two geo-engineering research projects.

The most controversial project is for an artificial mini-volcano to block sunlight and lower temperatures. Inspired by the way eruptions can spew particles into the stratosphere dimming the sun and lowering temperatures, the scientists from Bristol, Cambridge and Reading Universities propose to launch a massive balloon system 20-25km into the stratosphere to spray millions of sulphate particles. The prototype will put a balloon just 1km into the sky.

Their work is being mirrored in the California where Philip Rasch, chief scientist for climate science at the Pacific Northwest National Laboratory, a research group with the US Department of Energy, has proposed fleets of aircraft continually spraying tons of reflective sulphur dioxide into the stratosphere. Geo-engineering critics are appalled, saying the diffusion of the sunlight might result in ozone depletion, reduced plant growth, more humidity in the atmosphere, less energy and even potential damage as particles fall to Earth.

"We just do not know how to recall a planetary-scale technology once it has been released. Techniques that alter the composition of the stratosphere or the chemistry of the oceans are likely to have unintended consequences as well as unequal impacts around the world," says Pat Mooney of ETC.

Scientists are also divided on the deployment of planetary-scale geo-engineering but united on the need for research – if only to show that many of the proposed schemes may be rubbish.

"I am actually pretty scared of putting things in space. Some people are planning to do it [but] it is much harder to check what is going on in the stratosphere. We may need to regulate the experiments. We know very little about secondary consequences. To talk about doing it is naive. To do research is different," he says. "The case for experimentation is not the case for going ahead with major implementation. You cannot consider [these things] until you have done the research. Maybe it goes no further. A first step does not presume a second. That would be for politicians to decide."

But the technologists are at many different stages. According to ETC, there are now several groupings, including the pragmatists, such as Branson, Lomborg and the American Enterprise Institute, which argue that geo-engineering is faster and cheaper than carbon taxes and emissions reductions, so just get on with it; and the theorists, such as the Royal Society and the Carnegie Institution for Science in the US which say we must have an emergency Plan B because we are heading for a certain climate catastrophe; meanwhile, businesses such as the Ocean Fertilisation Company and the Biochar Initiative see dollars.

In the background is the military. According to US science historian James Fleming, control of the climate gives the military an advantage and so it seeks to "weaponise" every technology, providing a stream of resources for scientists. Star Wars architect Lowell Wood argued in the 1990s that by spending about $1bn per year, the US could put enough particles in the stratosphere to reduce sunlight by about 1%.

"It is not easy to see how a serious geo-engineering programme could move forward without some degree of military involvement," says Jeff Goodell, journalist and author of How to Cool the Planet.

The immediate battle, though, is being fought in the media, where the scientists are hoping to be hailed as social visionaries, and in the UN and scientific establishments, where they are seeking intellectual underpinning. According to Bronson: "The geo-engineers have worked hard to conquer the western scientific establishment and are now moving into Brazil, India and China because they know that the northern orientation of everything so far is a huge liability."

There is growing awareness that geo-engineering is not going away, adds Bronson. "Many NGOS and social movements in Latin America have started to get involved and interest in south-east Asia and some parts of Africa is growing. Combined with lacklustre climate talks and rising emissions, though, many environmentalists end up with some kind of reluctant endorsement of the 'more research' agenda. Indigenous peoples and farmers' organisations have proved particularly strong in their opposition. Women's groups are also starting to get interested and alarmed."

Above all, it will be the governments of poor countries which are likely to object to any planetary-scale project. Two years ago, all countries except the US agreed to a de facto voluntary moratorium on geo-engineering projects and experiments. Apart from the unpredictability of the science, there was mistrust that western-northern-driven technological solutions to climate change would be fair or equitable. Two weeks ago, 160 organisations from around the world sent an open letter to Rajendra Pachauri, the Nobel prize-winning chair of the UN Intergovernmental Panel on Climate Change, after it had hosted a meeting of geo-engineers in Lima, Peru.

"Geo-engineering is too dangerous to too many people and to the planet to be left in the hands of small group of so-called experts," they warned. "The IPCC has assured us it will go forward carefully in this work. We will be closely following the process."

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: A "Nobel Torsion Message" Over Norway?

Title: A "Nobel Torsion Message" Over Norway?

TheUnhivedMind - July 11, 2011 12:01 AM (GMT)

A "Nobel Torsion Message" Over Norway?

http://www.enterprisemission.com/Norway-Message3.htm

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: IHS/MORGELLONS/CHEMTRAILS

Title: IHS/MORGELLONS/CHEMTRAILS

Maximiliano - July 7, 2011 04:45 AM (GMT)

"The Morgellons Syndrome" is just Delusional Parasitosis... I am convinced that the whole "Chemtrails" Issue is just a vast campaign of psychological and social desestabilization - Brother Maxi Aguaisol.

Hildegarde Staninger Official Webpages

http://1cellonelight.com/

user posted image

http://www.staningerreport.com/

user posted image

NOTICE THE USE OF THE "IHS" ACRONYM OF THE JESUITS!!!

THIS IS NOT AN ACCIDENT!

user posted image

TheUnhivedMind - July 10, 2011 03:46 PM (GMT)

Dear Maximillion usually your information is of great worth but two messages in a row have been very damaging indeed to your usual reputation. To discount the most obvious aerosol programme above our heads by the day is idiotic. Even if a group of people are tied to the Jesuits Templars in some form and selling products does not mean that the programme does not exist. The aerosol programme is very real and stems from the Lawrence Livermore National Laboratory and is tied to The University of California both controlled by The Worshipful Company of Fuellers. I know of someone suffering Morgellon's disease and for you to do exactly what the puppets of The Worshipful Company of Apothecaries do and claim its delusional is disturbing to me. Lets see what you think when you or your family members start to suffer from it. Please get back to me when this occurs if ever, I hope if you're legit that it don't. Finally notice the part reptilian part lion which represents the reptilian genetics mixed with mammal genetics evidenced from the angrogenous beginnings during pregnancy and by our R-complex brain, lymphatic system and skin shedding. I do not believe that this is so much a separate race from ourselves but at most these peoples of blood having more reptilian DNA then we have. I'm sorry if this upsets people but we must face facts that we have reptilian DNA within our bodies at a standard level and then others have more than others. I wouldn't be surprised if the Morgellon's disease is designed to erase those that are undesirable who have more of this DNA seeing as its not so widespread in the populations.

Maximiliano - July 10, 2011 06:31 PM (GMT)

Maximillion? Like... Maxi 1,000,000?

I don't deny the phenomenon, i only say that is an entelechy, like the AIDS.

There are samples of chemtrails, but although they have a micron size has not been proven to be nanomachines as Hildegarde says.

No one has ever even thought of the possibility that this is a global campaign to make us fear and remain in a state of helplessness and fear. That's not even scientifical. Where is the second opinion? Becouse, again, the chemtrails samples only shows that there is composed by heavy metals and plastics. Of course this can cause skin irritation, but the destructive psychological and sociological effects is even greater in comparison.

I don't see the breasts of the lion. And i don't believe in the Annunaki theory becouse deny the Biblical Record of Genesis. Remember, Yahweh killed all the Nephilims.

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: WEATHER MODIFICATION

Title: WEATHER MODIFICATION

TheUnhivedMind - July 1, 2011 11:21 PM (GMT)

WEATHER MODIFICATION

A COVERT WEAPON OF MASS DESTRUCTION

http://watch.pair.com/weather-modification.html

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: CHEMTRAIL RALLY 9th July 2011 DUXFORD, CAMBRIDGESH

Title: CHEMTRAIL RALLY 9th July 2011 DUXFORD, CAMBRIDGESH
Description: [Vd]

TheUnhivedMind - June 30, 2011 02:44 PM (GMT)

CHEMTRAIL RALLY 9th July 2011 DUXFORD, CAMBRIDGESHIRE

http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=czr1sCmOJiY

[dohtml]<iframe width="480" height="390" src="http://www.youtube.com/embed/czr1sCmOJiY" frameborder="0" allowfullscreen></iframe>[/dohtml]

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: The Olgacom Scandal Explained: the connection of Title: The Olgacom Scandal Explained: the connection of Description: New World Order, China, Chemtrails & Big

TheUnhivedMind - June 28, 2011 04:05 AM (GMT)

The Olgacom Scandal Explained: the connection of New World Order, China, Chemtrails & Big Business

June 23, 2011
by alenkaw89
http://olgacomscandal.wordpress.com/2011/0...s-big-business/

[dohtml]<object style="height: 390px; width: 640px"><param name="movie" value="http://www.youtube.com/v/61UAY2OOfFs?version=3"><param name="allowFullScreen" value="true"><param name="allowScriptAccess" value="always"><embed src="http://www.youtube.com/v/61UAY2OOfFs?version=3" type="application/x-shockwave-flash" allowfullscreen="true" allowScriptAccess="always" width="640" height="390"></object>[/dohtml]

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: DR GARTH NICOLSON - MORGELLON'S DISEASE [Vd]

Title: DR GARTH NICOLSON - MORGELLON'S DISEASE [Vd]

TheUnhivedMind - June 27, 2011 04:05 AM (GMT)

DR GARTH NICOLSON - MORGELLON'S DISEASE

Listen to Stan Monteith talk with Dr Garth Nicholson on the dreaded Morgellon's Disease. This broadcast took place on June 16th 2011.

Parts 1-4:
http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=9sTSXgyszn0
http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=g4Vl4xNVQBU http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=yyLaoxXqY9w http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=jDXxyYB3Ejw

[dohtml]<iframe width="480" height="390" src="http://www.youtube.com/embed/9sTSXgyszn0" frameborder="0" allowfullscreen></iframe>

<iframe width="480" height="390" src="http://www.youtube.com/embed/g4Vl4xNVQBU" frameborder="0" allowfullscreen></iframe>

<iframe width="480" height="390" src="http://www.youtube.com/embed/yyLaoxXqY9w" frameborder="0" allowfullscreen></iframe>

<iframe width="480" height="390" src="http://www.youtube.com/embed/jDXxyYB3Ejw" frameborder="0" allowfullscreen></iframe>[/dohtml]

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: Dismantle HAARP Immediately!

Title: Dismantle HAARP Immediately!

TheUnhivedMind - June 22, 2011 01:00 AM (GMT)

Delenda Est Cabal Part 3:
